CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE ORDER No. 107 OF 1916.

January 18, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Richardson and Mr. Justice Beachcroft.

Srimati BASEEMATI DEBI—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

Srimati TARIT BASANI DASSI—PLAINTIFF and CHEDI DOSADH AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) O. XLI, rr. 23, 25, O. XLIII, r. 1 (u)—Appeal—Pleadings and proof, variance between—Appellate Court, whether can raise new point—Remand for taking evidence and decision on new point—Appeal, whether lies.

It is an elementary rule that the determination of causes depends on the allegations made in the pleadings and the proof. [p. 418, col. 1.]

An Appellate Court is not entitled to raise new points involving fresh evidence in appeal and to remand the case for the trial of questions which never occurred to the parties previously. [p. 418, col. 1.]

In a suit brought by the plaintiff to establish her right of way over certain lands belonging to the defendant, the claim was based either on prescription under section 26 of the Limitation Act or on necessity. The Trial Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prove her case. On appeal the Subordinate Judge, although he concurred with the Trial Court in holding that on the evidence on the record the plaintiff had failed to prove that she was entitled to a right of way either on the basis of prescription or on the basis of necessity, went on to discuss the question whether plaintiff had a right founded either on custom or grant or some right to use the way as a village road or as a public road, and remanded the case to the Court of first instance to be re-heard not only on the evidence already on the record but on such further evidence as the parties might desire to adduce:

Held, (1) that the order of remand must be set aside and the suit remitted to the Court of Appeal in order that the appeal to that Court might be finally disposed of with reference to the pleadings and the proof; [p 418, col. 2.]

(2) that although this was not a case in which it was, strictly speaking, open to the Court of Appeal to make an order under rule 23, of Order XLI, Civil Procedure Code, yet as the order appeared to be in form and substance an order under that rule and not under rule 25, an appeal lay against it. [p. 418, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Sub Judge, Hoogly, dated the 10th March 1916, reversing that of the Munsif, Hoogly, dated the 22nd December 1913.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal, for the Respondent, raised a preliminary objection that the appeal was not maintainable as the order of remand complained of was not made under Order XLI, rule 23, but was an order under rule 25 of the same Order from which no appeal would lie.

Mr. S. N. Banerjee (with him Babu Tarakeswar Pal Choudhry), for the Appellant, submitted that although the Court of Appeal below could not make an order under rule 23, still the order was in form and substance made under that rule.

The Trial Court decided the suit on the pleadings and evidence adduced by the parties, but on appeal the lower Appellate Court remanded the case to the Trial Court for deciding the suit on issues which did not and which could not arise out of the pleadings in the case. The Court of Appeal below was not justified in sending back the case for a decision on questions which did not occur to the parties or to the Court at the trial. The question was whether the plaintiff was entitled to a right of way over the defendant's land either on the basis of prescription or on the basis of necessity. The plaintiff having failed to prove his case the Trial Court dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court, while agreeing with the conclusion arrived at by the first Court, should have dismissed the appeal without entering into questions not taken by either party at the trial.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal, for the Respondent.—Plaintiff's case was based not merely on prescription or necessity but also upon grant or some other right to use the way as a village road or as a public pathway. The issue No. 5 referred to in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge was not clearly decided by the Trial Court, so the case was sent back for a decision on that issue in the light of the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. It could not, therefore, be said that the Court of Appeal below sent the case back for deciding a question not raised before the first Court. The evidence on the record was not sufficient for deciding that issue, and, therefore, the Court below was perfectly justified in remanding the case for deciding the issue No. 5 after taking proper evidence.

Mr. S. N. Banerjee replied.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—This is an appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Hoogly, dated the 10th March 1916. The order is an order of remand made in a suit brought by the plaintiff to establish her right of way over certain plots of land belonging to the defendant Srimati Baseemati Debi, the appellant before us. In the trial cases the suit was treated by the learned Munsif and by the parties as a suit to establish an easement over the land in the nature of a right of way acquired by prescription under the provisions of section 26 of the Indian Limitation Act or in the nature of a right of way of necessity. In the Trial Court the plaintiff failed and the suit was dismissed. When the case came before the Court below, the learned Subordinate Judge concurred with the Munsif in holding that on the evidence on the record the plaintiff had failed to prove that she was entitled to a right of way either on the basis of prescription or on the basis of necessity. Looking at the pleadings and the issues I should have thought that when he came to that conclusion, the learned Subordinate Judge would have at once dismissed the appeal and confirmed the decree of the Munsif. Instead of doing this, however, he went on to discuss other questions which do not appear to have occurred to the parties on their legal advisers or to the Court at the trial. He suggested that even if there was no easement made out under the provisions of section 26 or even if the claim in so far as it was dependent on that section was barred by limitation, not having been brought within two years of the time when the right of way was obstructed, nevertheless the plaintiff might have some title founded either on custom or grant or some right to use this way as a village road or even as a public road. If the plaint be read as a whole with reference to the statement of facts to be found there, it is quite clear that the plaintiff based her case either on section 26 or on necessity and on no other ground. The Subordinate Judge refers to paragraph 7 of the plaint, which asserts generally that the plaintiff has acquired an indefeasible right of user to pass and re pass over the plots in dispute and that no one has a right to prevent her by putting up fences or in any other manner. That assertion, however, is merely a summary of the claim as it is put forward in the preceding paragraphs of the plaint. It is quite clear, as I have said, from the preceding paragraphs that the plaintiff's claim is founded either on prescription under the act or on necessity. The learned Judge further refers to issue No. 5 as that issue was framed by the Munsif. The issue runs as follows:—"Has the plaintiff a right of easement of way or of necessity over the disputed land." It may be that reading the issue apart from the pleadings and apart from the allegations of facts on which the plaintiff founded her claim, it would be wide enough to cover questions of grant or custom or dedication. But it is an elementary rule that the determination of causes depends on the allegations and the proof. In one part of his judgment dealing with issue No. 5 the learned Munsif says: "On the whole, the plaintiff's witnesses speak about the public user of the pathway which is not the plaintiff's case." It is plain that the path was not claimed by the plaintiff as a village path or as a public path and the learned Subordinate Judge was not entitled to raise new points involving fresh evidence in appeal and to remand the case for the trial of questions which had never occurred to the parties previously.

It has been suggested by the learned Pleader who has appeared for the respondent that this order of remand made by the learned Subordinate Judge was not an order under rule 23 of Order XLI from which an appeal would lie, but under rule 25 of the same Order from which no appeal would lie. In form, however, the order is an order under rule 23. The suit has been remitted to the Trial Court to be re-heard not only on the evidence already recorded but on such further evidence as the parties may desire to adduce. It may be that regard being had to the terms of rule 23, this is not a case in which it was, strictly speaking, open to the learned Subordinate Judge to make an order under that rule. But whether the order was regularly made or irregularly made it appears to me to be in form and substance an order under that rule. That being so, the order must be treated as an order under rule 23 from which an appeal lies. On this point I am unable to accept the contention of the learned Pleader for the respondent.

The result is that, in my opinion, the order of remand must be set aside and the suit remitted to the Court of the Subordinate Judge in order that the appeal to that Court may be finally disposed of with reference to the observation I have made. In setting aside that part of the judgment of the Subordinate Judge which remands the suit we leave untouched his findings on the rest of the case. It may, therefore, be unnecessary in that Court to do more than to make a decree but, as I have said, it will be for the Subordinate Judge to dispose of the appeal. The appellant is entitled to the costs of this appeal. We assess the hearing-fee at three gold mohurs.

BEACHCROFT, J.—I agree.

Order set aside.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 100, O. XLI, r. 1—Appeal, second—Two decrees in Appellate Court in one case—Appeal, single, whether lies—Court-fee payable.

Where two appellate decrees are passed in one judgment in two cross-appeals arising out of the same case and the appellant in second appeal wants to challenge both of them, he must file two appeals.

FACTS.—In one suit there were filed two appeals in the Court of the District Judge, one by the plaintiff and the other by the defendant. The District Judge decided both the appeals in favour of the plaintiff by one judgment. The defendant preferred an appeal to the High Court and filed only one appeal as against both the decrees in the Court below. The Stamp Reporter submitted that there should have been two appeals, one against each of the decrees in the Court below. He said that an appeal lay from a decree, not from a judgment. Section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure provided that an appeal lay from every decree. In Order XLI, rule 4, he submitted, the Code required an appeal to be preferred in the form of a memo.. of appeal accompanied by a copy of the decree. It would follow from these provisions in the Code that if there were two or more appellate decrees in a case and if the appellant wanted to challenge all of them in second appeal, he would have to file as many appeals as there were decrees. If the appellant was allowed to challenge two decrees by one memo. of appeal the express provisions of the Code would be infringed. Besides there would be a direct loss to the state in the shape of Court-fees, etc. He relied on Chathu v. Kunhamed (1) and Zaharia v. Debi (2).

The Taxing Officer placed the matter before the Taxing Judge for orders.

Mr. Rajendra Prasad, for the Appellant.

ORDER.—Having seen the Stamp Reporter's note I am of opinion that two appeals should be filed. Let the Vakil be informed.

Order accordingly.

Fishery, right of—Ownership of tank, whether carries with it right to fish—Prescriptive right, claim of, by villagers—Burden of proof—Lost grant, doctrine of, applicability of—Presumption—Unreasonableness of right claimed—Pleadings—Finding on point not covered by issue—Evidence taken—Remand.

Plaintiff, the lessee of a Zemindari village, claimed the exclusive right of fishing in a tank situated therein and sued defendants, the ryots, for an injunction restraining them from obstructing him in the enjoyment of such right. Defendants pleaded that they had acquired a prescriptive right to fish in the tank on payment of 'pasivari' cess to the Zemindar. The plea was upheld by the Court, though no specific issue was framed on the point:

Held, (1) that the plaintiff must prove both his title and possession within 12 years before suit; [p. 420, col. 1.]

(2) that proof of plaintiff's ownership of the tank did not relieve plaintiff from establishing that the ownership of the tank carried with it the exclusive right of fishing therein, especially after evidence had been let in by defendants to prove the prescriptive right which they claimed; [p. 420, col. 2.]

(3) that on proof of a prescriptive title by defendants, it was competent to the Court to presume a legal origin for it on the principle of a lost grant; [p. 420, col. 2; p. 421, cols. 1 & 2.]

(4) that defendants' right by prescription could not be negatived on the ground of its being unlimited, unreasonable or without stint; [p. 420, col. 2; p. 422,.col. 1.]

(5) that as evidence was let in by the lower Courts on the question of prescription, it was not necessary to remit the case back for raising an issue and recording a fresh finding. [p. 420, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Principal Subordinate Judge, Sivaganga, in Appeal Suit No. 27 of 1913, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Paramakudi, in Original Suit No. 295 of 1911.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Ayyar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. V. Krishnaswami Ayyar and K. V. Sesha Ayyangar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—In substance the case set up by the plaintiff in this suit was that, instead of exercising his admitted right to collect rent at a fixed rate from the royts of Manjoori village for fishing in the village tank, he had a right to catch the fish himself to the exclusion of those royts who had hitherto been enjoying this privilege, or to lease out the fishery to strangers. In the plaint, after setting out his title, which is based on a seventy years' lease of the village of Manjoori from the Rajah of Ramnad (vide Exhibits A and B), he proceeded to allege that the defendants had obstructed him in the enjoyment of his alleged fishery rights, and to ask for a declaration of his title and for an injunction restraining defendants from interfering with his enjoyment, and for damages.

The District Munsif dismissed the plaintiff's suit, finding on the first issue that the plaintiff was not the exclusive owner of the fishery in the plaint tank. This finding would have been enough for the dismissal of the suit. There were also other issues. The sixth issue raised the question whether the plaintiff or his predecessor-in-title had exclusive possession of the fishery within 12 years before suit. The District Munsif found this issue also against the plaintiff and added that the ryots had, by long enjoyment, acquired a prescriptive right to the fishery, which was a finding that did not arise out of the issue as framed.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff had failed to establish either title or enjoyment within the statutory period and he dismissed the appeal on both grounds.

It is now argued that the lower Courts were in error in requiring the plaintiff to prove possession within 12 years of suit under Article 142 of the Limitation Act, and that the Article of Limitation applicable to this suit being Article 144, the burden of proving adverse possession for over 12 years should have been cast on the defendants.

It is true that the District Munsif has found a prescriptive title to exist in the defendants without an issue being raised on the question and that the Subordinate Judge has not found it at all.

I am of opinion that Article 142 was not appropriate to this suit for a declaration of title and an injunction, and that, if the Courts found that present possession was not with the plaintiff, the proper procedure was to refuse to give a declaration of title under the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, for the reason that the plaintiff was neither in possession nor had asked for possession to be given him.

But on the allegations of fact in the plaint, no question of limitation arose, and the defendants' claim in their statement to have acquired a title by prescription was not put in issue at the trial.

The finding of both Courts on the first point, that of title, was enough to justify the dismissal of the suit, and that being a finding of fact, we cannot interfere with it in second appeal.

I do not think that the mere fact that the plaintiff had taken a lease of the village including the tank and had spent money in repairing the tank, relieved him from the necessity of proving his further assertion that the ownership of the tank carried with it the exclusive right of fishing in the tank, especially after evidence had been let in on the other side to prove that actual enjoyment of the fishery for a long series of years was with the ryots.

I agree with the Subordinate Judge's observation that, even if the plaintiff be the owner of the tank, that position is fully consistent with the ryots having the right of fishery over the same.

The Subordinate Judge, having found "beyond any shadow of doubt that from the earliest period the fishery right in the suit tank is being enjoyed by the ryots subject to the payment of a fixed rent", might very well have found a title to exist in the defendants on the principle of a lost grant; as was done by the Privy Council in Bhola Nath Nundi v. Midnapore Zemindary Co. (1) in respect of a right of pasturage enjoyed by a corporate body of villagers from time immemorial. But I do not consider it necessary to call for a finding on the point, nor do I consider in the circumstances of this case that any question of "reasonableness" arises.

The second appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

KRISHNAN, J.—The point at issue between the parties in this second appeal is whether plaintiff is entitled to take the fish from the Manjoori tank and channel in the Zemindari of Ramnad, excluding the defendants from exercising any right of fishery in them. Plaintiff claimed the exclusive right as the lessee of the Zemindar and brought this suit on the footing that he was in possession and enjoyment of this right and that the defendants, who are the ryots of the Manjoori village, were trying to obstruct him. The main plea of the defendants was that they and their ancestors had been exclusively enjoying this fish "in pursuance of a long established custom" on payment of a settled "pasivari" or fishery cess to the Zemindar, which was included in their pattas. They also pleaded limitation. The lower Appellate Court held that plaintiff had failed to prove his title to the fishery and enjoyment of it within the statutory period of 12 years, applying Article 142 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act to the case, and dismissed the suit on the merits as well as on the bar of limitation.

Plaintiff has appealed to us and has contended that, on the question of title, defendants should have been called upon to prove the right they asserted as the tank in question being within the ambit of the Zemindari, its ownership and possession should have been taken to be prima facie in the Zemindar or his assignee, the plaintiff, and the right to fishery which is only an incident of the right of ownership should also be similarly taken to be prima facie in them. This argument, so far as it goes, is, in my opinion, well founded. But the Subordinate Judge has found that defendants have established on evidence the continued exclusive enjoyment they pleaded. That Judge says in paragraph 2 of his judgment that "ancient documents produced on the defendants' side show beyond any shadow of doubt that, from the earliest period, the fishery right in the suit tank is being enjoyed by the ryots subject to the payment of the fixed rent." In fact it is clear on the evidence that the Zemindar never tried to interfere with the ryots in the matter of fishing and it is only after the plaintiff-lessee came on the scene that attempts were made to so interfere; but all such attempts were frustrated by the opposition of the ryots. On these facts it seems to me there is a clear presumption in defendants' favour of a legal origin of their title. Lord Loreburn, Lord Chancellor, has stated in the case of Harris v. Chesterfield (Earl) (2), cited for the appellants on another point, the law on the question thus: "When long and continuous enjoyment is established, a lawful origin will be presumed if it is reasonably possible. This doctrine has been repeatedly affirmed and in no case better illustrated than in that of Goodman v. Saltash Corporation (3)." The doctrine was applied by the Privy Council in a case of pasturage rights over waste lands claimed by the tenants of a village against their Zemindar. See Bhola Nath Nundi v. Midnapore Zemindary Co. (1).

Although the lower Court has not expressly referred to this doctrine, it has considered the evidence of long enjoyment and thrown the burden on the plaintiff to establish his title in defeasance of the defendants' claim arising from it and I think it is right in the circumstances in doing so, as there is a clear presumption in favour of the legal origin of the defendants' claim. It may well have been the result of a lost grant by a Zemindar or a lost agreement by him with ryots allowing them to take the fish permanently on payment of 'pasivari'.

It was pressed upon us that as the question of presumption of a legal origin was not pointedly raised in the lower Courts, we should send the case back for trial on the point and finding thereon. I do not think it necessary to do so, as the facts required for it were stated by the defendants and evidence all taken and the Courts have given their opinion on that evidence. Issue No. 1 was wide enough to cover the question. It is not stated that there are any new facts to be considered with reference to this point. In similar circumstances their Lordships of the Privy Council disapproved of the course of sending the case for a finding. See the case in Bhola Nath Nundi v. Midnapore Zemindary Co. (1) already cited.

It was next urged that from the very nature of the right claimed here it should be held to be one unknown to law and for which no legal origin could be presumed, and reliance was placed on the case in Harris v. Chesterfield (Earl) (2) above cited. That was a case where "a right by prescription in a que estate for a profit a prendre in alieno solo", viz., the right to take fish in the river Wye at a place where the bed of the river was in the possession of Lord Chesterfield and his co-plaintiff, the river being non-tidal: there, was claimed by certain villagers as appurtenant to their tenements and the right claimed was expressly stated to be without stint and for commercial purposes, namely, to sell the fish in the market. Their Lordships by a majority of one held that such a right was unknown to law and should not be recognised, as the exercise of such an unlimited right tended to the entire destruction of the subject-matter of the right. The reasoning is clearly put in the judgment of Cozens-Hardy, M. R.; see the report of the case of Chesterfield (Earl) v. Harris (4) in the Appeal Court, particularly the observations on page 410. That reasoning was adopted by the majority of their Lordships.

Now such a question as this has not been raised in the present case; and consequently the facts necessary for it have not been investigated. In the first place, it is not clear whether the right claimed here is not a right in gross vested in the ryots of Manjoori village as a body, in which case it may well be that no question of unreasonableness will arise. See the observations of Buckley, L. J., in the same case on appeal in the middle of the page 421. In the next place, assuming the right claimed is one appurtenant to the holdings of the ryots in the village, it does not seem to be an unlimited one, and without stint as in the English case. What the ryots claim is the right to take fish in the manner they have been taking for all these years. Such an exercise of the right has not hitherto led to the destruction of the fish in the tank nor apparently even to its diminution in numbers. There is no reason to assume a different result in the future. If there is excessive fishing the Zemindar may have a right to restrain it, but that is not the question here. I hold that the claim of the ryots cannot be rejected in second appeal on the ground of unreasonableness, as argued. I may observe that, though the rights of fishery in other people's waters are very common in India, particularly in the northern parts, no case has been cited to us from any of the Indian Reports where such a right has been negatived on the ground put forward above. I am therefore of opinion that on the finding of the lower Courts that plaintiff has failed to prove his title, which is a finding of fact on the evidence in the case and which we must accept in second appeal, his claim to disturb the long established practice in the village regarding the fishing in the tank was rightly rejected and his suit was rightly dismissed. It is not necessary to express any opinion on the question of limitation or on any other question raised in the case.

I agree that the second appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 32, 34, 90—Document more than 30 years old—Presumption—Genuineness—Admissibility of document—Objection not taken in trial Court, whether can be taken in appeal—Zemindari papers, value of—Enhancement of rent—Proof.

Where a party producing a document is unable to say who prepared or signed it or where the document itself does not purport to show who prepared or signed it, the mere fact of the document being more than 30 years old does not make it admissible without proof under section 90 of the Evidence Act. [p. 424, col. 1.]

Where a document is admitted in evidence without objection in the trial Court, no objection as to its formal proof can be taken in appeal. [p. 424, col. 1.]

A jamabandi which cannot be admitted as corroborative evidence without independent evidence of the fact of collection of rent at a certain rate under section 34 of the Evidence Act, can be used as independent evidence if it is relevant under section 32 of the Act. But although it would not, as a matter of law, require corroboration, yet the Court is not bound to act upon it without corroboration. [p. 424, cols. 1 & 2.]

Zemindari papers, such as jamabandis, being ex parte papers, ought to be carefully scrutinized before they are held sufficient to make the tenant liable for the rent shown in them. JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—These five appeals arise out of five second appeals heard by Mr. Justice Chapman sitting alone as a Judge of this Court. The litigation commenced with some applications made by the plaintiff landlords under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act against the raiyats of certain villages for assessment of fair and equitable rent. The tenants or some of them set up the defence that they were raiyats either at fixed rents or fixed rates of rent and that, therefore, the landlords were not competent to make any enhancements as regards their holdings and they contended that the entry in the Record of Rights published under section 103 (B) of the Bengal Tenancy Act shewing them to be settled raiyats was wrong. The Assistant Settlement Officer found, so far as the tenants before us are concerned, that the entry in the Record of Rights was correct and that they were not raiyats at fixed rents or rates of rent but settled raiyats whose rents were liable to enhancement. He accordingly assessed rent upon these raiyats allowing an enhancement on account of the rise in the price of food crops and for other grounds. The tenants thereupon appealed to the Special Judge and we are concerned with the four appeals which in the Court of this latter officer were numbered 155, 160, 186 and 187 of 1912. It is necessary to observe that Appeal No. 186 of 1912 covered the cases of two sets of raiyats, the judgment in regard to one set being delivered by Mr. Monahan as Special Judge and the judgment in regard to the other set being delivered by Mr. Macpherson as Special Judge. This in effect makes a total of five appeals before the Special Judge. The tenants succeeded before the Special Judge, who held on grounds which will be considered presently that the entry in the settlement record was incorrect. The landlords then preferred five second appeals to the Calcutta High Court, which were transferred to this Court for hearing.

These second appeals were heard, as I have already observed, by Mr. Justice Chapman who came to the conclusion that the learned Special Judge was wrong and that the landlords had succeeded in rebutting whatever presumption as to fixity was raised by the evidence of the tenants; he, therefore, decreed the appeals before him and restored the judgment of the Assistant Settlement Officer. The present appeals are preferred against the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice Chapman by some of the raiyats who had succeeded before the learned Special Judge.

Before dealing with each appeal separately it is desirable to take up one point which is common to all. Before Mr. Justice Chapman the landlords contended that the learned Special Judge was wrong in deciding that the collection and other papers produced by the landlords before the Assistant Settlement Officer were inadmissible in evidence. Mr. Justice Chapman came to the conclusion that this contention was well founded. In this Court the raiyat appellants attack the judgment of Mr. Justice Chapman on the ground that he has taken an erroneous view of the law. These Zemindari papers are papers produced from the office of the landlords dating from 1202 F. S., that is, two years after the Permanent Settlement. The papers previous to 1861 appear to be unsigned and the plaintiffs are unable to say by what officer or officers they were prepared. The papers subsequent to 1861 appear to bear the signature of certain officers who are or were in the plaintiffs' employ or in the employ of their predecessors.

Let us first examine the contention that the unsigned papers are admissible under section 90 of the Indian Evidence Act. Now section 90 merely allows a party to ask the Court to presume that a document which is more than 30 years old and purports to have been prepared or signed by a particular person was in fact prepared or signed by such person. Further than that the section does not go. It certainly does not contemplate that where a party producing a document is unable to say who prepared or signed it or where the document itself does not purport to shew who prepared or signed it, the mere fact of the document being more than 30 years old makes it admissible without proof. If that was the law, it would be impossible to test the value of such evidence and in cases between landlord and tenant no tenant would be safe. Section 90 of the Evidence Act will not, therefore, assist the landlord.

But the documents both signed and unsigned would be admissible not only as corroborative evidence but as independent evidence, if the landlords complied with the requirements of section 32 of the Evidence Act. It was no doubt necessary for the landlords to establish the antecedent condition that the persons who prepared these papers were dead or could not be found, but the tenants appear to have taken this for granted and the papers were accepted by the trial Court with an endorsement to the effect that they were admitted without objection. In these circumstances it is too late for the raiyats to take the objection that the documents required formal proof. This principle has been affirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Shahzadi Begam v. Secretary of State for India (1), where at page 1074 their Lordships observed as follows:—

"Their Lordships are, however, of opinion that it is now too late for the respondent to take an objection to the admissibility of a document which was received without objection at the trial."

The learned Judge of this Court was, therefore, clearly right in holding that the documents are legal evidence. In Aktowli v. Turak Nath Ghose (2) the question of the relevancy and weight to be attached to similar papers was very fully discussed by their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court and the conclusion arrived at was that although the papers could not be admitted under section 34 of the Indian Evidence Act as corroborative evidence without independent evidence of the fact of collection at certain rates, they could be used as independent evidence if they were relevant under section 32, clause (2). To like effect is the judgment of their Lordships of the Bombay High Court in Rampyarabai v. Balaji Shridhar (3). Their Lordships, however, added a caution in the concluding portion of their judgment as follows:—

"At the same time we wish it to be distinctly understood that though the accounts, which are relevant under section 32 (2), do not, as a matter of law, require corroboration, the Judge is not bound to act on them without corroboration; that is a matter on which he must exercise his own judicial discretion as a Judge of fact. In what I have said I have in no way limited the discretion of the Judge as a Judge of fact in determining whether or not he will act on the accounts without corroboration, the only point being that the law does not require corroboration."

It is necessary, therefore, to consider what weight the learned Special Judge would have attached to the papers if he had held them to be legally admissible. I will proceed, therefore, to deal with each Letters Patent Appeal separately.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 72 of 1917 corresponds to Second Appeal No 1298 of 1915, which corresponds to Appeal No. 186 of 1912 before the Special Judge. When Appeal No. 186 was first preferred in the Court of the Special Judge three holdings were concerned. Mr. Monahan the Special Judge dealt with the case of one of these holdings which was in the possession of the appellant Tirbeni (defendant No. 10 in the Court of the Assistant Settlement Officer), and came to the conclusion that Tirbeni had established the presumption required by section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that the papers of the landlord had not fully rebutted that presumption. With regard to the tenants who were in possession of the other two holdings, namely, defendants Nos. 4 and 13 in the Court of the Assistant Settlement Officer, Mr Monahan decreed the landlord's claim in the absence of the tenants. These tenants thereupon filed an application for review, which came up for hearing before Mr. Macpherson who was the successor of Mr. Monahan as Special Judge. Mr. Macpherson saw good grounds for admitting the review and finally disposed of these two cases by agreeing with Mr. Monahan (though for an additional reason) and holding that the landlord's papers were thoroughly unreliable and that the presumption raised had not been rebutted. The result of this was that out of Special Appeal No. 183 there have arisen two second appeals, namely, Nos. 1298 and 4183.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 72 deals with Second Appeal No. 1298. In this case the raiyats are, as I have observed, defendants Nos. 4 and 13 before the Assistant Settlement Officer. The learned Vakil, for the appellants, urges that although the landlord has succeeded in Mr. Justice Chapman's Court in establishing that the collection and other papers produced by the landlord are admissible in evidence, still as there is a definite finding by Mr. Macpherson that the landlord's papers are thoroughly unreliable the appeal before Mr. Justice Chapman was concluded by a finding of fact and should have been dismissed. This would, no doubt, have been so if the matter had rested there. No doubt the finding of Mr. Macpherson that the landlord's papers were utterly unworthy of credit would altogether do away with the necessity of determining whether or not the papers were admissible under the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act and, therefore, Mr. Justice Chapman's decision that the papers were admissible would not in any way affect the competency of the appeals before him. But the learned Vakil for the landlord before us meets this argument on behalf of the appellants by contending that defendants Nos. 4 and 13 have at the outset failed to establish that there was any presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act in their favour and he shows this in the following way. These two tenants have no rent receipts by which they can establish payment at a fixed rent for 20 years. It is not their case that they have paid at any fixed rate of rent. What they have done is this; they have asked us to look at the landlord's jamabandi of 1277 F. S. and to hold that the rental recorded in the survey and settlement record is identical with the rent recorded in the jomabandi of 1277 F. S. Now this does not appear to be a fact. What appears to be the real fact is that the jamabandi of 1277 shows not only the rent now recorded in the survey and settlement record but an additional sum on account of Company's batta. If, therefore, the tenants contend that their holdings were created at the time of or previous to the Permanent Settlement, then the landlord had prima facie a right to demand Company's batta when sicca rupees were finally converted into Company's rupees. The tenants cannot say that the entry on account of batta is to be disregarded and the amount represented in Company's rupees only is to be taken as the true rent in 1277. If they contend that the amount entered on account of batta is an abwab, then they are in the dilemma that they must admit that their holding was created sometime subsequent to 1836 when the sicca rupee was finally declared not to be legal tender. The conclusion at which I have arrived is that the jamabandi of 1277 must be taken as a whole and the entry there must be taken to mean that the rentals payable by these tenants were not identical with the rents recorded in the survey and settlement record published in or about 1911. If that is so, then the basis upon which the tenants claim to be entered as raiyats at fixed rents or rates of rent completely disappears; and this is admitted by the learned Vakil for the appellants who says that if he is not entitled to pick out that part of the entry which relates to Company's rupees in the jamabandi of 1277 then he is unable to raise the presumption in favour of his clients. Therefore, the decision of the Assistant Settlement Officer in regard to these two tenants was correct and the decision of the learned Special Judge cannot be sustained, irrespective of the fact whether or not the landlord's collection papers were admissible in evidence. If the landlord's papers are not admissible the tenants are unable to shew the payment in 1277 at the rate which they claim to have paid. If the landlord's papers are admissible then the entry must be taken as a whole, and it does not support the case that in 1277 the rent recorded in 1911 was the rent of the holding. It is to be observed that the Special Judge Mr. Macpherson was of opinion that although Company's batta may have been entered in the jama-bandi of 1277 still in the absence of direct evidence to shew that Company's batta was in fact realised the tenant is competent to maintain that his real rent in that year was exclusive of Company's batta. The reply to this is that the rate of rent is not dependent upon the quantity collected. The landlord may be unable to collect his full rent but if his papers are complete and if they do in fact shew that the full rent was inclusive of batta, then it is immaterial whether or not the batta was collected. The full rent, therefore, in the case of defendants Nos. 4 and 13 was the rent inclusive of batta and does not, therefore, agree with the rent shown in the survey and settlement record. That being so, Letters Patent Appeal No. 72 must be dismissed with costs. Mr. Justice Chapman's judgment restoring the judgment of the Assistant Settlement Officer in regard to these two tenants must be affirmed. The tenants have failed to raise any presumption and the question of the admissibility of the papers does not arise.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 75, which corresponds to Second Appeal No. 4183, relates to the raiyat Tirbeni (defendant No. 10) who was the other tenant concerned in Appeal No. 186 of 1912 before the Special Judge. His case is also identical so far as concerns the question of presumption with that of the tenants in Letters Patent Appeal No. 72. In this case also the tenant had recourse to the jamabandi of 1277 for the purpose of establishing a uniform payment of rent at the rate of Rs. 210. Now the jamabandi shews that the rent in 1277 was Rs. 210-15-0, with Company's batta Rs. 14-13-0. The Record of Rights shews the rent to be Rs. 210-15-0. In my opinion the rental in 1277 F. S. must be taken to be Rs. 210-15-0, plus Rs. 14-13-0, which is greatly in excess of the amount shown in the Record of Rights and, therefore, I must hold that Tirbeni has failed to establish a statutory presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Letters Patent Appeal No. 75 must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

As regards the costs the respondents having succeeded and the appellants having failed upon the merits as well as on the ground of admissibility the landlords will be entitled to their costs.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 74 arises out of Second Appeal No. 2845 of 1913, which corresponds to Appeal No. 160 of 1912 before the Special Judge Mr. Monahan. In this appeal the judgment of Mr. Justice Chapman as regards the admissibility of the Zemindar's papers must be upheld and, therefore, the only question is whether the appeals must be remanded or whether there was any finding by the Special Judge which concluded the second appeal before Mr. Justice Chapman. Now in this case there is a finding by Mr. Monahan to the following effect:—"Thus the above jama-bandis of 1235 and 1237 taken in conjunction with the sharahwar jamabandis would be sufficient, in my opinion, to rebut the presumption in favour of fixity of rent provided that these jama-bandis can be accepted as evidence." Mr. Monahan decided that the papers were not admissible at all, but he was of opinion that if they were legally admissible then they were sufficient to rebut the presumption raised by the raiyats. There is no question that a prima facie presumption was legally raised. The only question is whether landlords had by their evidence rebutted that presumption. In view of the very deliberate finding recorded by Mr. Monahan it is impossible for us to accept the contention of the learned Vakil for the raiyats appellants before us that Mr. Monahan did not take into consideration the collection papers at all or at any rate that he did not take into consideration all the collection papers and that he recorded his finding only upon the evidence which was in his opinion admissible. I cannot give his judgment this construction. I think it was his intention to provide for the contingency of the Appeal Court holding that he was wrong upon the question of the admissibility of the documents and he, therefore, took the precaution of recording what would be his finding if the Appeal Court came to the conclusion that the jambandis and other papers were admissible. Therefore, Mr. Justice Chapman having decided that the jamabandis were admissible, it was competent for him to decree the appeal forthwith and to order enhancement according to the rates found by the Special Judge. This he has directed to be done in the concluding portion of his judgment, which is as follows:—" I would, therefore, reverse his (Special Judge's) judgment in appeal and direct that the decree be drawn up in accordance with the rents, which it is apparent from the learned Special Judge's judgment he would have settled if he had admitted the jamabandi papers as evidence." Our order, therefore, will be that the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice Chapman be affirmed and the appeal of the tenants before us be dismissed with costs.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 73 corresponds to Second Appeal No. 482, which corresponds to Appeal No. 155 of 1912 before Mr. Monahan. In this case the question of the admissibility of the Zemindars' papers having been decided in his favour, the only question is whether Mr. Monahan's finding disposed of the matter in dispute in second appeal. It appears that Mr. Monahan, after holding that the papers were not admissible, does not come to any clear finding as to whether they would have established the Zemindars' case if his finding on the point of law had been otherwise. His judgment is not altogether satisfactory and I am not certain that he had a clear conception in his mind as to the nature of the proof which it was necessary for the Zemindars to adduce in order to rebut the presumption created by the production of 20 years' receipts by the raiyats shewing payment of a uniform rental. In my opinion. the proper course will be to remand this case to the Special Judge in order that it may be dealt with according to law after consideration of the Zemindars' papers which, agreeing with Mr. Justice Chapman, we hold to be admissible in evidence. The Assistant Settlement Officer assumed that these papers were genuine. There appears to have been some argument before him as to whether they were forgeries but he did not accede to the argument of the tenants on this point. Mr. Monahan the learned Special Judge appears also to have taken for granted that the papers were genuine, The only question which was argued before him was whether they were admissible in evidence according to law. It will not be open, therefore, when the case goes back on remand, for the tenants to argue that the papers are not genuine. The only question which will be open will be as to what these papers prove and whether they do in fact entitle the landlords to say that they have rebutted the presumption which the tenants have raised. That is to say, the learned Special Judge will have to consider what credit is to be attached to these papers. He may be of opinion that these papers are not of any value whatever but that is a matter entirely for him. It is needless to refer to the caution which is given in Gopal Mundul v. Nobbo Kishen Mookerjee (4), to the effect that Zemindari papers being ex parte ought to be very carefully scrutinised before they are held sufficient to make the tenant liable for the rent shown in them. Every case in which the Zemindar seeks to obtain enhancement upon the strength of his papers must depend upon its own facts. The learned Assistant Settlement Officer appears to have applied himself only to a consideration of the rates of rent disclosed in the papers of the Zemindars. As has been observed by Mr. Monahan, a change in the rates would not necessarily shew a change in the gross rental paid by a tenant who pleads uniform payment for 20 years, and it would be quite possible for a Zemindar to re arrange the rates from year to year without affecting the gross rental paid. The learned Vakil for the Zemindars, respondents before us, however, asserts that he will be able to shew from his papers that there is not a single tenant in the village here in question who was a tenant at the time of the Permanent Settlement who has not at some subsequent time paid a different rent for the same area in two successive years. If he can shew this, that will throw back the onus upon the tenant to establish that although his rental has changed that rental still includes a part of the rental paid upon the original area held at the time of the Permanent Settlement. It is impossible for us to dispose of the matter finally, although it is eminently desirable that this litigation should be ended as quickly as possible. I think, therefore, although in my opinion, the course is extremely unsatisfactory, that the only order we can make is that the appeal should be allowed and that the case should be sent back to the Special Judge in order that he may come to a finding upon the question of fact, namely, whether or not the presumption raised by the raiyats has been rebutted by the landlords, after giving due weight to the evidence adduced by both parties and to the observations made in this judgment. Neither party will be permitted to adduce additional evidence.

As regards costs although the tenants succeed in obtaining a remand, it is to be observed that they might have obtained the same result in the Court of Mr. Justice Chapman if they had brought to his notice the judgment of Mr. Monahan in this case. The fact appears to be that they brought to Mr. Justice Chapman's notice only one judgment, namely, the judgment in the Appeal No. 180 of 1912. The other judgments were apparently completely ignored and I am quite certain that if the judgment of Mr. Monahan in Appeal No. 160 of 1912 had been brought to the notice of Mr. Justice Chapman, he would not have restored the judgment of the Assistant Settlement Officer but would have remanded the case to the Court of the Special Judge for a decision upon the merits, in other words, he would have taken the very course which we have now taken. In these circumstances the appellants will not be entitled to any costs in this Court.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 76, which corresponds to Second Appeal No. 3440 of 1913, which corresponds to Appeal No. 187 of 1912 before Mr. Monahan. In this case also there is no conclusive finding by Mr. Monahan in favour of either party. The same remarks apply to this appeal as to Letters Patent Appeal No. 74. For the same reasons this appeal must be decreed and the case remanded to the Special Judge for disposal in accordance with law after due regard to the judgment of this Court. No additional evidence will be allowed. The appellants having failed to bring to Mr. Justice Chapman's notice the judgment of Mr. Monahan in Appeal No. 187 of 1912 before him they will not be entitled to any costs.

In each of the Appeals Nos. 72, 74 and 75 the costs awarded to the respondent landlords will be assessed at 3 gold mohurs.

Appeals Nos. 72, 74, 75 dismissed;
Appeals Nos. 73, 75 allowed;

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 278 OF 1916.
August 24, 1917.
Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Phillips.

VELLAYAPPA MOOTHAN—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
KRISHNA MOOTHAN AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 57, 61, 62, 115, 120—Hindu Law—Joint family—Partnership of some members, claim by, against family for moneys advanced—Limitation—Cause of action, when arises—Barred debt, whether can be recovered—Set-off, claim by way of, whether allowable—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VIII, r. 6, O. XXX, r. 9—Party, whether can be both plaintiff and defendant.

A suit by some of the members of a joint Hindu family who constitute a partnership against the family for advances made to it out of the partnership funds is governed by Article 120 of the Limitation Act. [p. 431, col. 1.]

The claim cannot be enforced in an action for partition after it has become barred either by way of equitable set-off or as an item in the account of dealings between the family and the partnership or by treating the liability of the family as assets or property to be brought into hotchpot at the time of division [p. 432, col. 1.]

VELLAYAPPA MOOTHAN v. KRISHNA MOOTHAN.

Where the members of the partnership who sue are themselves the managing members of the family, Article 107 of the Limitation Act would apply. [p. 431, col. 1.]

The rule of procedure observed by the common law Courts in England that the same individual, even in different capacities, cannot be both a plaintiff and a defendant is not applicable to India as Order XXX, rule 9, really contemplates suits between the same individuals in different capacities. [p. 430, col. 2; p. 431, col. 1.].

A suit lies by one firm against another firm notwithstanding that the firms have common partners The proper prayer in such a suit ought to be for the taking of the accounts of both partnerships, if necessary for adjusting the rights of the partners, and for the grant of just and equitable reliefs which arise on the facts. [p. 430, col. 2.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—A Hindu joint family cannot be treated as of the nature of a partnership firm and a claim of some of the members who are members of a separate partnership firm against the joint family cannot be treated as the claim of one partnership against another partnership firm The partnership, by lending to the joint family possesses an immediate cause of action against the latter and it can sue the other members of the family alone as defendants praying for proper equitable reliefs. [p. 430, col. 2; p. 431, col. 1.]

Per Phillips, J.—Relief by way of set-off is, strictly speaking, confined to a defendant and a plaintiff who invokes the aid of the Court against a defendant is not entitled to any equity as against him. [p. 433, col. 1].

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the District Judge, South Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 965 of 1914, preferred against that of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Malabar, at Palghat in Original Suit No. 41 of 1913.

Mr. P. S. Narayanasami Ayyar for Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Ayyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Respondents.

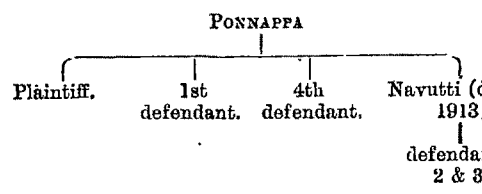
JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The plaintiff is the appellant here and the suit was a suit for partition. The genealogical tree is as follows:—



There was a prior suit (Original Suit No. 27 of 1906) brought by the 4th defendant which was decreed, but that decree was not executed as, by a private engagement, his claims were satisfied. Hence the plaintiff sues for $\frac{1}{3}$rd share in the properties left (after so satisfying the 4th defendant's claim), the 1st defendant being entitled to another $\frac{1}{3}$rd share and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 being entitled to the remaining $\frac{1}{3}$rd share. The litigation was, however, complicated by the plaintiff claiming (among others) one further relief which arises out of the following facts:—The plaintiff, the 1st defendant, and the 2nd and 3rd defendants alone carried on a partnership trade for their separate benefit. This trade was carried on even during the lifetime of the plaintiff's father Ponnappa and of 2nd and 3rd defendants' father Navutti. Ponnappa died about August 1906. For his funeral expenses, the partnership consisting of the plaintiff, the 1st defendant and the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 spent monies belonging separately to the partnership. When the partnership dissolved in 1911, the amount alleged on the above account to be due to the partnership by the joint family estate fell to the share of the plaintiff among the partners. The plaintiff claims in this suit to recover, from the 1st defendant and the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, 2/3rds of this amount which forms item No. 1 of the D schedule to the plaint, the remaining 1/3rd being due to himself (as the assignee from the firm) by himself (as one of the three sharers of the joint family). The value of this relief, that is for the recovery of the 2/3rds of the debt due by the joint family to the partnership business, is Rs. 567-12-7. The lower Courts disallowed the plaintiff's claim for this relief as also for a minor relief valued at Rs. 68-5-4 relating to items Nos. 2 to 4 of B1 schedule. This second appeal relates to these two matters, but there is nothing in the appeal so far as it relates to items Nos 2 to 4 of B1 schedule. The second appeal is, therefore, at once dismissed so far as it relates to that matter.

The ground on which the lower Courts disallowed the plaintiff's claim to recover 2/3rds of the amounts spent out of the partnership funds for the necessities of the joint family is that the amount was spent so long ago as in 1906, and the claim for its recovery was barred by limitation, the suit having been brought in 1913.

Mr. Narayanasami Ayyar for the appellant before us contended (a) that the claim was not barred by limitation because the cause of action arose only at the dissolution of the partnership in 1911, (b) that, though his claim to recover the shares of the 1st defendant and of the 2nd and 3rd defendants in the money spent may be barred, the plaintiff was entitled, in effecting a partition of the joint family properties, to have allotted to him properties exceeding the value of the shares allotted to the other 1/3rd share by the amount due to the partnership by such sharers.

As regards contention (a), I do not see how the date of the dissolution of the partnership can give a cause of action against the joint family which cause did not exist before. The right of the members of the partnership firm in the monies taken out of the firm had nothing to do with the rights and liabilities of the joint Hindu family, of which the members did not solely consist of the partners of the firm but included others. Mr. Narayanasami Ayyar argued on the basis of the two decisions in Rustomji v. Sheth Purshotamdas (1) and Kashinath Kedari v. Ganesh (2) that the partnership, consisting of the plaintiff, the 1st defendant and the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 (four in number), could not have brought a suit against the joint family consisting of the plaintiff, the 1st defendant, the father of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and the 4th defendant (six in number), because the plaintiffs' four names would also have to appear as the names of four of the six defendants in such a suit and that, therefore, the only course for the members of the partnership was to have treated the loan as an item to be taken into account in their favour against the other co-parceners of the joint family when the joint family members separated from one another.

In the first place, these two decisions were given in 1901 and 1902 under the old Civil Procedure Code. Jenkins, C. J., says at page 612 [Rustomji v. Sheth Purshotamdas (1)]: "This is in accordance with the doctrine that where an individual is a common partner in two houses of trade, no action can be brought by one house against the other house upon any transaction between them while such an individual is a common partner. In illustration of this, we may refer to Bosanquet v. Wray (3)." This doctrine is founded on the elementary rule of procedure too often disregarded in this country that the same individual, even in different capacities, cannot be both a plaintiff and a defendant to one and the same action. But the learned Judge proceeded to say: "While, however, at Common Law this rule led to the result we have indicated, the Courts of Equity surmounted this difficulty. Though they observed strictly the rule that a man cannot be both plaintiff and defendant, they did not allow it to stand in the way of doing justice between the parties for provided all interested were before the Court either as plaintiffs or as defendants, they adjusted and determined their rights. This is aptly exemplified in Luke v. South Kensington Hotel Co. (4)." I think that the reasoning in the above decision does not lead to the result that no suit at all could be brought in which a decision could be arrived at as regards the claim by a firm consisting of A and B as partners against a firm consisting of A and C as partners even under the old Procedure Code. All that seems to have been decided was a matter of procedure that A should not figure both as plaintiff and defendant and that the suit should be so framed as regards parties that this irregularity does not occur, while further taking care that all the three partners A, B and C in both firms are made parties to the suit. The proper prayer in such a suit ought to be for the taking of the accounts of both the partnerships, if necessary for adjusting the rights of the partners, and for the grant of just and equitable reliefs which arise on the facts. Further I do not think it is allowable to treat a Hindu joint family as of the nature of a partnership firm (the shares and the numbers of the members interested in the family properties not depending upon contractual relations but upon the rules of Hindu Law) or to treat the claim of a few of the members (who are members of a separate partnership firm) against the joint family as the claim of one partnership against another partnership firm. Even if this could be done, a partnership by lending to the joint family does possess an immediate cause of action and though the former rule of procedure might not have enabled it to bring a suit in the form of an ordinary suit for the recovery of the entire amount of the loan (with the members of the firm ranged as plaintiffs and the same members and the other members of the joint family as defendants), there was nothing to prevent the members of the partnership firm from utilising that cause of action to bring a suit ranging the other members of the family alone as defendants and praying for proper equitable reliefs. Even if any of the Articles 57, 61, 62 and 115 of the 1st Schedule of the Limitation Act does not apply to such a suit, the residuary Article 120 would apply to it and the firm should have brought the suit within 6 years. No such suit within 6 years of 1906 was brought and hence the claim based on the loan of 1906 seems to have been clearly barred in 1913.

Again if all three members of the firm are treated as managing members of the family, Article 107 of the Limitation Act would apply. That Article is as follows:—"By the manager of a joint estate of an undivided family for contribution in respect of a payment made by him on account of the estate." This shows that a managing member is entitled to sue for contribution in respect of a payment made by him and is not bound to sue for or wait till partition to get his claim against the joint family adjusted. In the cases in Aghore Nath Mukhopadhya v Grish Chunder Mukhopadhya (5) and Tirupatiraju v. Rajagopala Kristnama Razu (6) the suit was brought after division in the family for contribution in respect of the moneys recovered by a creditor from the person who was joint family manager. Again, the new Civil Procedure Code of 1908 (which came into force on the 1st January 1909) by Order XXX, rule 9, allows a suit by one firm against another notwithstanding that the firms have common partners. Hence, the plaintiff could have brought his suit against the joint family even as an ordinary debt claim (and not for contribution or other equitable relief) on 1st January 1909 and this suit brought in 1913 is barred on this ground also.

Reliance was placed by Mr. Narayanasami Ayyar on the decision in Ramdhari Singh v. Parmanund Singh (7) and on a passage in Mayne's Hindu Law, section 470, for his contention that the plaintiff's claim is not barred by limitation. In the case in Ramdhari Singh v. Parmanund Singh (7) the plaintiff and the defendants were joint heirs of one R. S. Singh. The plaintiff was entitled to 1/6th share in the estate of R. S. Singh, the defendants being entitled to 5/6th share. A sum of Rs. 7,000 and odd belonging to the estate was in deposit in a Court. The plaintiff sued for the recovery of 1/6th of that amount (nearly Rs. 1,300). Defendants (among other defences) claimed to set off plaintiff's 1/6th share of the expenses incurred by the defendants on the sradh ceremony of one of R S. Singh's widows. The learned Judges in their judgment at page 1187* make the following observations on the defendants' claim of set-off: "There remains the second item, the expenses of sradh. The learned Judge in one part of his judgment seems to have held that there was no agreement on the part of the plaintiff to pay a share of such expenses, but in another place he says as follows:—'The plaintiff alleges that the amount of cash found was over Rs. 4,000 and certain amounts were allotted for sradh and other expenses and only the balance divided. The defendants allege that all that was found was divided and they undertook the sradh expenses on the plaintiff agreeing they should recoup themselves from the moneys in deposit, etc., now in suit. All these questions have to be gone into and many others.' It seems to us, therefore, that the learned Judge has not come to any positive finding upon the alleged agreement on the part of the plaintiff to pay a share of the sradh expenses. Besides apart from any agreement, the plaintiff is liable to contribute his share of the sradh expenses." The amount, however, which may be found on enquiry into the above matter, cannot be called an 'ascertained sum.' But the sum need not be ascertained in an equitable set-off. * * * We think it inequitable to give a decree to the plaintiff for his share of the assets realised, and drive the defendants to claim against the plaintiff the amount which might have been spent on account of the sradh under an agreement with the plaintiff, or the reasonable expenses of the sradh apart from any agreement, more specially when a fresh suit may be barred by limitation, and when the defendants have paid Court fee upon the whole amount claimed by them" So far as I could see, the learned Judges admit that the claim of the defendants for contribution if made in a suit by the defendants against plaintiff might be barred by limitation and all that they hold is that as defendants they are entitled to claim a set-off of the contribution due to them by the plaintiff in respect of the sradh expenses.

The passage in Mayne's Hindu Law (see page 654, 8th Edition) is as follows:—"But, of course, advances made to any member for a special private purpose, for which he would have no right to call upon the family purse, or to discharge his own personal debts, contracted without the authority of the other members, or alienations of the family properties made by an individual for his own benefit would be properly debited against him in estimating his share."

This passage does not directly relate to the question now under consideration. It relates to the converse case, where a member of a joint Hindu family as an individual member gets an advance of money from the joint family funds for his individual separate benefit, the case before us being one where some members have themselves made an advance to the joint family. In the former case, the money advanced might be treated as joint family funds in the hands of the person to whom the advance was given which, therefore, ought to be brought into hotchpot at division. No question of limitation would then arise as regards such property. In the converse case before us, the joint family's liability to an individual member or individual members cannot be treated as assets or property to be brought into hotchpot at division. I must further remark, as regards the passage in Mayne's Hindu Law, that the authorities quoted in support of the proposition of law laid down in that passage, viz., the decisions in Konerrav v. Gurrav (8), Ramanna v. Venkata (9) and Damodardas Maneklal v. Uttamram Maneklal (10), cannot be said to fully support the said proposition laid down so broadly. I think, that, if the advance was made, say, by a father to one of his sons out of the joint family income in the father's hands without any intention to make the son liable to account for the advance at division and without any agreement to that effect between the father and the son it may be an act of partiality on the part of the father, but I do not think that, after three years, the joint family or any of the other sons can call the favoured son to account for the advance.

Mr. Narayanasami Ayyar relied also on certain passages in Freeman on Co-Tenancy, sections 505 and 512, and contended that, in suits for partition between the co-sharers, Courts of Equity have got unlimited powers to do justice between the co-sharers. I was at first impressed with this argument, but after the best consideration which I have been able to give to it, I do not think that, where a Statute Law (in this case Article 107 of the Limitation Act) expressly treats a debt due even to the manager of the joint Hindu family as one to be sued for by him just as if he was a complete stranger and, if not, to have his remedy barred, it is permissible (apart from an agreement, express or implied) to defeat the intention of the Legislature by allowing it to be treated as an item of account or as a debt to be discharged from the joint family funds when partition takes place, it may be, after several years. Of coruse, the creditor member of the family, whether a manager or a junior member, may, before his debt is barred, take it out of any family money which came to his hands before his debt is barred, but he cannot do it after his claim for recovery is barred.

In the result, the second appeal is dismissed with costs.

dissolution of partnership, plaintiff alone became entitled to the assets of the firm. In his present suit for partition plaintiff seeks to recover the funeral expenses out of the joint family funds, although admittedly the claim, if treated as a debt, would now be time-barred. Plaintiff pleaded a separate oral agreement under which he is entitled to recover the funeral expenses, but it has been found that this agreement is not true and consequently it cannot be relied on here.

It is first contended that the firm consisting of plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 to 3 could not have sued the joint family of which they are members, because they would have been bringing a suit against themselves, although in a different capacity. Whatever may have been the Common Law of England on this point, the rule of procedure, that the same individual, even in different capacities, cannot be both a plaintiff and a defendant to one and the same action, has not been strictly followed by Courts of Equity, as is pointed out by Jenkins, C. J., in Rustomji v. Sheth Purshotamdas (1), and is certainly not applicable to this country as is shown by the provisions of Order XXX, rule 9, of the Code of Civil Procedure, which clearly contemplate suits between the same individuals in different capacities. The trading firm of which the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 to 3 were partners could, therefore, have sued the joint family of which they were also members. Rule 9 no doubt places some restriction on execution of decrees obtained in suits between firms having one or more partners in common, but we are not now concerned with that question. I hold, therefore, that plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 to 3 could have brought a suit for the funeral expenses against their joint family, even if it be assumed that members of a joint family are partners in a firm, and that such a suit is now time-barred. It is then contended that plaintiff can claim the funeral expenses by way of set-off in partitioning the family property, although his right to sue for them as a debt is barred by limitation. The right to set-off, strictly speaking, is confined to a defendant and if plaintiff makes a claim by way of equitable set-off, it is not very clear how the plaintiff who has invoked the aid of the Court against defendants, is entitled to any equity as against them. It is urged that he is so entitled because he has a legal right to demand partition. That is quite true, but there is no obligation on him to make such a demand and, consequently, when he moves the Court to enforce his rights to a share in the family property against the other defendants he is hardly entitled to claim something more than his share by way of equitable set-off. I, therefore, agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

SHAMSHER SINGH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Appeal, second—Judgment based on conjectures and presumptions, whether liable to be set aside—Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), s. 59—Succession to occupancy holding—Burden of proof.

A judgment based on mere conjectures and presumptions is liable to be set aside in second appeal. [p. 434, col. 2]

Where on the death of an occupancy tenant his collaterals claim to succeed to the tenancy, the onus lies on them to establish affirmatively that the common ancestor occupied the land. In such a case conjecture cannot be accepted as a substitute for proof. [p 434, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 16th April 1916, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 1st class, dated the 24th February 1915, decreeing the claim.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain and Lala Rup Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The contest in this case is between the landlords on one side, and the collateral of the husband of Musammat Gopal Kaur, who in her capacity as widow was in possession of the land as an occupancy tenant, on the other. The pedigree-table shewing the relationship between the plaintiff and Ishar Singh, the deceased husband of Musammat Gopal Kuar, is set out in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, and the only question for determination is whether the common ancestor, Dal Singh, ever occupied the land. The onus admittedly lies on the plaintiff who claims the occupancy rights as the collateral of Ishar Singh and it is for him to establish affirmatively that Dal Singh was in occupation of the land.

I have given my careful consideration to the documents having a bearing upon the question in issue, and reached the conclusion that there is absolutely no evidence to shew that the common ancestor occupied the land. The earliest information we possess about the land is contained in a muafi file of 1847, which shews that Dal Singh's son Ram Singh gave the land in dispute to his brother's widow Musammat Man Kaur first by way of maintenance and then as muafi also. On Musammat Man Kaur's death the land reverted to Ram Singh, and then came into the possession of the latter's son, Ishar Singh, who was declared to be the occupancy tenant in 1872. On the demise of Ishar Singh his two widows Musammat Attar Kaur and Musammat Gopal Kaur possessed the land, and the dispute has now arisen upon the death of the surviving widow Musammat Gopal Kaur.

Now, the learned District Judge holds that it may be presumed from the history of the village and the mutation orders referred to above that Ram Singh's father Dal Singh occupied the land, and that it is for the landlords to rebut this presumption. The history of the village merely shews that Dal Singh's father Gurdit Singh came to this part of the country and acquired some sort of ruling powers, but it contains no information whatsoever with respect to the property in dispute which, it is to be observed, is the only land held by the family in this village. The documents relied upon by the learned District Judge do not contain the slightest indication that Ram Singh's father had anything to do with the land, and it is a mere conjecture that any person other than Ram Singh was originally in occupation thereof. The learned District Judge thinks that if the land had not been ancestral it would not have come back to Ram Singh on the death of Musammat Man Kaur; but the explanation is simple enough. Ram Singh was the donor of the property and it reverted to him on the death of the donee. If his other brother, Diwan Singh, had been a co sharer with him in the paternal estate, there is no reason why he should not have succeeded to the land equally with Ram Singh.

I asked the learned Advocate for the plaintiff-respondent whether he could draw my attention to any fact which would be incompatible with the theory that Ram Singh and not his father was the first person to occupy the land, but he expressed his inability to do so. Indeed, the theory of Dal Singh's occupation of the land rests upon a mere conjecture and it has been pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council that conjecture cannot be accepted as a substitute for proof, vide Atar Singh v. Thakar Singh (1).

I observe that the oral evidence has not been referred to by the learned District Judge and a perusal thereof shews that it cannot possibly be of any use with respect to an event which took place more than 70 years ago.

For the aforesaid reasons I hold that the plaintiff, upon whom the onus rested, has failed to produce any evidence to discharge that onus, and that the judgments of the lower Courts, which are based upon mere conjectures, must be set aside. Accordingly, I accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

TILOCHAN GOND—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

C. P. Laws Act (XX of 1875), s. 5—'Hindu,' meaning of—Hindu Law, applicability of—Apostacy, effect of—Gonds, whether Hindus—'Sudra', who is—Burden of proof—Stare decisis, doctrine of—Wrong application of law, effect of.

Apostates from the Hindu religion cease to be Hindus and where such apostacy takes the form of conversion to a religion which in itself regulates the devolution of property, e. g., the Muhammadan religion, then, except on proof of a well-established custom to the contrary and that only in regard to inheritance and succession, the convert becomes subject to the law of his adopted religion. [p. 439, col. 1]

The term 'Hindu' in section 5 of the Central Provinces Laws Act, 1875, refers to persons who profess some form of the Hindu religion, whatever be the branch, school, sect, off-shoot or denomination to which they may belong, but it does not extend to persons who have never professed any form of the Hindu religion or to those who have been converted from it to some entirely different religion. The word would apply to dissenters and non-conformists but not to apostates. Thus a Jain is a Hindu but a Brahman converted to Buddhism or Islam is not. [p. 440, col. 1.]

The Gonds in the Central Provinces are not Hindus and they are not governed by the Hindu Law except when it is adopted by any family, sect or branch among them. [p. 440, col. 2; p. 443, cols. 1 & 2.]

Every Hindu, properly so called, who does not belong to one or other of the three regenerate classes is a Sudra, and to him the Hindu Law relating to Sudras applies of its own force, but no non-Hindu can be a Sudra, any more than he can be a member of any of the regenerate classes. Since a Gond is not a Hindu at all he cannot be brought within the category of Sudras. [p. 442, col. 1.]

Although the Hindu Law is primarily a personal law, it has also become attached to localities, and, therefore, a Hindu must be presumed to be governed by the law of the locality where he resides. [p. 442, col. 1.]

A man does not become a Hindu by calling himself one, nor is the adoption by a non-Hindu of usages resembling some parts of the Hindu Law a sufficient ground for applying the whole of that law to him en bloc, in the same way and to the same extent as if he were a Hindu. [p. 443, col. 1.]

In the case of a family which is not originally Hindu but which has adopted Hinduism, the burden of proving that the family is governed in a particular matter by the Hindu Law is upon the person who asserts that it is so governed. [p. 445, col. 1.]

An unconscious application of wrong law cannot set up a principle of stare decisis merely because it has been left unchallenged for a few years owing to the ignorance of the people affected by it. [p. 443, col. 2.]

Appeal from the appeal decree of the Divisional Judge, Chhattisgarh Division, in Civil Appeal No. 3 of 1916, dated the 1st March 1916:

Mr. M. V. Bose, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Respondent.

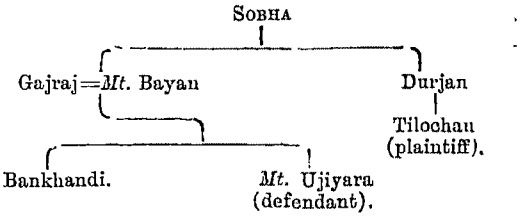
JUDGMENT.—The following genealogical tree will facilitate comprehension of this judgment :—



The parties are Gonds domiciled in the Bemetara Tahsil of the Drug District, but to which sub-division or sect of the Gond tribe they belong cannot be ascertained from the record. The property in dispute is an 8-annas share of the village Amlidih in the Bemetara Tahsil. It is the case of the plaintiff that the whole village once belonged to Sobha; that on the death of Sobha it devolved first on his sons, and then on his grandsons Bankhandi and Tilochan: that the grandsons effected a partition, after which each of them held an 8-annas share in severalty, that Bankhandi died about 22 years before this suit and his half share was inherited by his mother Musammat Bayan: and that on her demise, which took place on the 13th August 1914, the plaintiff became entitled to the share as the reversioner of Bankhandi but that the defendant had wrongfully possessed herself of the same and obtained mutation of names in her favour. On these allegations the plaintiff brought the present suit to recover the share.

It has been found that the village of Amlidih was once the property of Sobha—that Bankhandi and Tilochan partitioned it after it had devolved on them—that on Bankhandi's death his share was inherited by his mother, who held it till her death on the 13th August 1914. These facts are now beyond dispute.

But it is manifest that the plaintiff claims to apply the Hindu Law of the Mitakshara to this case. If that law applies, he is beyond doubt the present owner of the share in dispute. But the defendant has pleaded that the family are Gonds and not Hindus, and that the Mitakshara does not govern the devolution of the estate.

The first Court took it to be a matter beyond discussion that inheritance in the family of the parties is governed by the Mitakshara as interpreted by the Benares School—that being the Hindu lex loci in the Central Provinces. It, therefore, gave the plaintiff a decree. The lower Appellate Court considered more closely the defendant's plea as to the personal law applicable, and ruled that, prima facie, the Mitakshara applied, and the onus lay on the defendant to prove that it was otherwise; and that she had failed to establish any custom at variance with the law. The decree of the first Court was, therefore, confirmed. The defendant has now made this second appeal, and again it is urged that the Mitakshara does not govern inheritance in her family: that it lay on the plaintiff to prove that he is the heir in preference to the defendant to the estate which belonged to the defendant's mother; and that he has failed to discharge that burden.

It will be seen that the main issue in the case relates to the onus of proof. On the one hand, is it to be presumed, until the contrary is shown, that inheritance among the Gonds generally, or at least among Gonds of the class and locality to which the parties belong, is governed by the Hindu Law? Or, on the other hand, is it the case that Gonds are non-Hindus who must be proved to have adopted the Hindu Law as their own before it can be applied to them? If the former is the correct point of view, then this appeal must fail. If the latter is the right standpoint from which this case should be approached, then this appeal must succeed.

The decision of the question before me has been rendered difficult, (1) by uncertainty attaching to the significance of the words 'Hindu' and 'Sudra'; (2) by the conditions arising out of apostacy and dissent on the part of tribes, sects, and families of Hindu origin, whose abandonment of the Hindu orthodoxy in religion has been accompanied by the adoption of customs at variance with the personal law of Hindus; and (3) by the fact that tribes, communities, and families, non-Hindu in origin, by imitation and assimilation due to a long association with Hindus, have so far accepted the Hindu Law as their own that the British Indian Courts have habitually applied it to them in the same way as if they were Hindus.

The policy of the British Government has always been directed towards the preservation of the personal laws and customs of each and every one of the diverse races inhabiting India, and successive legislative enactments have been brought into force from time to time to maintain and give effect to that policy. The original Statute was 21 Geo. III. C. 70, the preamble whereof stated "that the inhabitants should be maintained and protected in the enjoyments of all their ancient laws, usages, rights and privileges;" while the Act provided that "inheritance and succession to lands, rents and goods and all matters of contract and dealing between party and party shall be determined in the case of Muhammadans by the laws and usages of Muhammadans, and in the case of Gentus by the laws and usages of Gentus; and when only one of the parties shall be a Muhammadan or Gentu, by the laws and usages of the Gentu." Apparently the word 'Gentu' was used to denote the non-Muhammadan inhabitants of this country much after the manner in which Gentiles were distinguished from the Jews of Palestine in ancient times. The significance of the word was discussed in Lopes v. Lopes (1), where it was referred to as "the Portugal idiom for Gentiles," and held to signify 'Hindus'—"in a large and liberal sense of that term." From this decision we learn that an even more general phrase, "India Natives," was once employed by British legislators and that a charter of 1726 "contains the earliest trace (in Royal Charters) of a reservation to the natives resident in our territories in India of their laws and customs." The above Statute (21 Geo. III, C. 70) applied only to Bengal, but the same provisions were made for Bombay and Madras by 37 Geo. III, C. 142, 40

(1) 5 B. H. C. R. O. C. J. 172 at pp. 183—186.

Geo. III, C. 79 and 4 Geo. IV, C. 71. The principle enforced by these Statutes has been embodied in subsequent enactments of the Government of India, until now every part of British India has legislative preservation of the personal laws and customs of its people.

In a very recent case, Rani Bhagwan Kuar v. Bose (2), their Lordships of the Privy Council made the following remarks:—

"A long series of legislative provisions have been enacted for the purpose of securing to the people of India the maintenance of their ancient law, amongst others in matters of inheritance and succession, and many minor enactments have been passed to facilitate the administration of the laws so preserved. The object and principle of this legislation has been throughout to enable the people of various races and creeds in India to live under the law to which they and their fathers had been accustomed, and to which they were bound by so many ties.

"The framers of the earlier Acts, regulations, and charters had a less detailed acquaintance than we have now with the diversities of creed and of religious law existing in India. They were familiar with two great classes, Muhammadans and Hindus, each with its own law bound up with its own religion. They thought no doubt that they were sufficiently providing for the case by securing to Muhammadans the Muhammadan Law, and to Hindus (or Gentus as they were sometimes called) the Hindu Law. In process of time it became more and more clearly understood that there were more forms than one of the Muhammadan Law, and more forms than one of the Hindu Law, and the Courts, acting in the spirit which prompted the legislation, have applied the law of each school to the people whose ancestral law it was. In the same way it came to be known that there were religious bodies in India which had, at various periods and under various circumstances, developed out of, or split off from, the Hindu system, but whose members have nevertheless continued to live under Hindu Law. Of these the Jainas and Sikhs are conspicuous examples. Their cases had to be considered by the Courts and in dealing with them a liberal construction was always placed upon the enactments by which Muhammadans and Hindus were secured in the enjoyment of their own laws."

The share of the Central Provinces in these legislative enactments for the preservation of personal laws is represented by the Central Provinces Laws Act, 1875 (XX of 1875). Sections 5 and 6 thereof provide as follows:—

"5. In questions regarding inheritance, special property of females, betrothal, marriage, dower, adoption, guardianship, minority, bastardy, family-relations, Wills, legacies, gifts, partitions or any religious usage or institution, the rule of decision shall be the Muhammadan Law in cases where the parties are Muhammadans, and the Hindu Law in cases where the parties are Hindus, except in so far as such law has been by legislative enactment altered or abolished, or is opposed to the provisions of this Act:

"Provided that when among any class or body of persons or among the members of any family any custom prevails which is inconsistent with the law applicable to such persons under this section, and which, if not inconsistent with such law, would have been given effect to as legally binding such custom shall notwithstanding anything herein contained be given effect to.

"6. In cases not provided for by section 5, or by any other law for the time being in force, the Courts shall act according to justice, equity and good conscience."

It will be convenient to notice here certain other British Indian enactments which have a bearing in matters of inheritance and succession in British India.

Act XXI of 1850 (which by Act XIV of 1897 was given the short title of "The Caste Disabilities Removal Act, 1850" and has sometimes been referred to as "The Lex Loci Act") provides as follows:—

"So much of any law or usage now in force within the territories subject to the Government of the East India Company as inflicts on any person forfeiture of rights or property, or may be held in any way to impair or affect any right of inheritance by reason of his or her renouncing or having been excluded from the communion of any religion, or being deprived of caste, shall cease to be enforced as law in the Courts of the East India Company, and in the Courts established by Royal Charter within the said territories."

This enactment was extended to the whole of British India by the Local Laws Extent Act, 1874 (XV of 1874) and to the Scheduled Districts of the Central Provinces by Notification in the Gazette of India, 1879, Part I, page 771.

In the Indian Succession Act, 1865 (X of 1865), the following provisions are relevant:—

"2. Except as provided by this Act, or by any other law for the time being in force, the rules herein contained shall constitute the law of British India applicable to all cases of intestate or testamentary successions."

"331. The provisions of this Act shall not apply to intestate or testamentary succession to the property of any Hindu, Muhammadan, or Buddhist; * * * * * *"

"332. The Governor-General of India in Council shall from time to time have power * * * to exempt from the operation of the whole or any part of this Act, the members of any race, sect, or tribe in British India, or any part of such race, sect, or tribe, to whom he may consider it impossible or inexpedient to apply the provisions of this Act, or of the part of the Act mentioned in the order. * * *"

Under the last of the above provisions Native Christians in Coorg, Jews in Aden, and certain aboriginal races in Assam have been exempted from the operation of section 2 by Notifications issued respectively in 1868, 1886 and 1887: but no exemption of any persons in the Central Provinces outside the categories of Hindus, Muhammadans and Buddhists has so far been made by Gazette Notification.

The Parsi Intestate Succession Act (XXI of 1865), however, exempts Parsis from the law of intestate succession embodied in Act X of 1865.

Turning now to a closer consideration of sections 5 and 6 of Act XX of 1875, it seems to me that the purpose of the Legislature was to provide for (h) preservation, as far as practicable, of the ancestral domestic law of each and every class of the inhabitants of the Central Provinces by placing the entire population under three main heads which may be named (1) Muhammadans, (2) Hindus and (3) Others. The law thus set up may be summarised as below:—

For all classes.—The Statute law, so far as it applies, is the paramount authority.

For Muhammadans.—Muhammadan Law
For Hindus —Hindu Law
} subject to modifications created (1) by statutory law and (2) by valid custom.

For Others.—Personal law, if any, subject to Statute Law and valid custom; and failing any established law or custom, an application of the principles of equity, justice and good conscience as understood by the British Indian Courts.

The questions immediately before me may be stated thus:—

"(1) Are the parties to this suit Hindus within the meaning of that term in section 5, Act XX of 1875? If not

"(2) By what law or custom is the decision of this case to be governed?"

As pointed by the Judicial Committee in the case above cited the Indian Legislature has used the term 'Hindu' in a much wider sense in some enactments than in others. In some it has always been interpreted to include Jains and Sikhs; in others (e. g., the Hindu Wills Act, 1870) it is used to signify Hindus other than Jains and Sikhs. Indeed the history of Indian legislation suggests a progressive reduction of the term 'Hindu' to its proper limitations. We first see the term "India Natives." Then we get "Muhammadans and Gentus" to represent the whole Indian population. Next we have it explained that Gentus do not include people of European origin such as the Portuguese, and the word is taken to be synonymous with Hindus as denoting non-Muhammadan Asiatics domiciled in India. Soon after we see Buddhists removed from this general category: and about the same time some dissenters from the orthodox Hindu religion are distinguished by special denominations—Jains and Sikhs—from other Hindus.

This treatment of the subject introduces complexity and doubt into the interpretation of the word 'Hindu' for juristic purposes at the present day. The customary significance of the word in popular parlance is even more uncertain. In Trevalyan's Hindu Law at pages 18 and 19 the expression 'Hindus' is defined as including not only the persons who profess what is called the Hindu religion, but also such of their descendants as have not openly abjured that religion. That implies that apostates from the Hindu religion cease to be Hindus: and it seems to be accepted now, as a rule of law, that, where such apostacy takes the form of conversion to a religion which in itself regulates the devolution of property, e. g., the Muhammadan religion, then, except on proof of a well-established custom to the contrary, and that only in regard to inheritance and succession the convert becomes subject to the law of his adopted religion: Abraham v. Abraham (3), Mahomed Sidick v. Haji Ahmed (4), Raj Bahadur v. Bishen Dayal (5), Bai Machhbai v. Bai Hirbai (6), Rashid Karmali v. Sherbanoo (7).

Dr. Gour in his comprehensive work on the Law of Transfer in British India, 4th Edition, Volume I, at pages 28 and 29, in dealing with the question who are Hindus, writes;

"Although the term 'Hindu' is popularly understood the comprise only such people as follow the Hindu religion, or rather its ceremonial observances, a wider class of people are subject to Hindu Law. And while it may truly be said of a Hindu, nasciter non fit, still it is often difficult to reconcile the juristic conception of the term with its popular notion."

It seems to me that some of this difficulty is due to a confusion of the question who is a Hindu with the question who is subject to the Hindu Law. I shall endeavour to keep these questions distinct in this judgment.

Mr. G. C. Sastri in his work on Hindu Law does not give us any express definition of a Hindu; but the whole tenor of the treatise shows that the learned author applied the name to those persons only who profess the Hindu religion.

In West and Buhler's Hindu Law, though the extent of the operation of the Hindu Law is dealt with fully, there is no express definition of the word 'Hindu'; but here also the expression seems to have been used throughout in a theological sense.

There is a certain amount of case-law in support of the view that the word Hindu is denominative of a religion and not of a race. I need only refer to the following remarks of Parsons, J., in Dagree v. Pacotti San Jao (8):

"There is no race of Hindus. It is not the inhabitants of Hindustan who are Hindus, but those only of them who profess a religion which is called the Hindu religion. Just so there is no race of Muhammadans or of Buddhists, or of Christians. An argument that a Christian, who has adopted the Muhammadan religion, is nevertheless still a Christian, is on the face of it an absurdity; but it is as good an argument as one that a Hindu, who has been converted to the Christian religion, is still a Hindu."

Where a religion is so inextricably entwined with the secular law of inheritance and succession as is the case with what is accepted in British India as the Hindu Law, it is impossible to suppose that the British Indian Legislature intended by enacting such provisions as we find in section 5, Act XX of 1875, to apply the term "Hindu" in a wider sense to the people than to the law, and, by a divorce of legal conceptions from religious doctrines, to make the Hindu Law apply of its own force to races, tribes and families who are wholly outside the extreme limits of the Hindu religion.

Upon the best consideration that I have been able to give the matter I am of opinion that the view propounded by Parsons, J.,

(3) 9 M. I. A. 195 at pp. 242, 243; 1 W. R. P. C. 1; 1 Suth. P. C. J. 501; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 10; 19 E. R. 716.

in the above Bombay case is correct, and I, therefore, hold that the term "Hindus", in section 5 of the Central Provinces Laws Act, 1875, refers to persons who profess some form of the Hindu religion whatever be the branch, school, sect, off-shoot or denomination to which they may belong; but that it does not extend to persons who have never professed any form of the Hindu religion or to those who have been converted from it to some entirely different religion. The word will apply to dissenters and non-conformists, but not to apostates. Thus a Jain is a Hindu, but a Brahman converted to Buddhism or Islam is not.

The next question I have to consider is whether the Gonds of the Central Provinces are Hindus, within the meaning of that term in section 5, Act XX of 1875, for on the answer to that question depends the reply to the further question whether the Hindu Law applies of its own force to matters regarding inheritance and succession among them. For a proper solution of the problem some historical and ethnological research has been necessary. All the existing bibliography is not available to me, but I have consulted Hislop's Papers on the Aboriginal Tribes of the Central Provinces, 1866, which is the leading treatise on the subject, Steele's Law and Custom of Hindu Castes, 1868, Therring's Hindu Tribes and Castes (1879), Russell's Tribes and Castes of the Central Provinces (1916) and The Story of Gondwana (1916) by the Right Reverend Dr. Eyre Chatterton, Bishop of Nagpur; and from these works I have extracted the following information.

The Gonds constitute the principal tribe of the Dravidian family, and are perhaps the most important of the non-Aryan or forest tribes in India. Census operations carried out in 1910-11 revealed that there were 3,000,000 Gonds in India at that time, of whom no less than 2,300,000 were domiciled in the Central Provinces. These figures indicate the necessity for an authoritative decision by this Court on the question of the domestic law applicable to these people.

Such information concerning their ancient history as is available leaves no room for doubt that in origin they were a people entirely distinct from the Aryans, to whom we owe the existing Hindu Law and religion. At what time, or under what circumstances, the Gonds first became domiciled within the area which has been called Gondwana after them, are pre-historic facts whereof the knowledge has now been lost in the fading horizon of the ever receding and unmeasurable past. But sufficient indications remain to sustain the hypothesis that the original emigrants to Gondwana belonged to the Dravidian family then settled in the South of India; and though Russell suggests that the immigration may have taken place after the Aryan invasion which brought what is now called Hinduism into India, the better view seems to be that it preceded it. The Bishop of Nagpur at page 6 of his book writes:

"Those who know Risley's work on The People of India will remember that the earliest and most numerous of the seven reaces to which he would trace the present people of India is the Dravidian race. It is to this race, 'the ancient Britons of India' * * * that the Gond belongs."

"Where those Dravidian Koitors dwelt before they settled in the plains and uplands of the Central Provinces, is a question which cannot now be answered. * * * * The more probable view, however, is that the Gonds were an uncivilized branch of the Dravidians who in early times moved up from the Deccan into the Central Provinces, where they made their home in company with other aboriginal tribes, Kols, Korkus and Bhils. Here they lived their primitive life in the ways they loved best. * * * * Then with the coming of the Aryans into India the beginnings of a larger and more civilized life dawned for Gondwana * * *."

Further on in his interesting work the Bishop refers to a passage in the Epic of the Ramayana showing that the highly civilized Aryans of those days regarded the Gonds as 'Shapeless and ill-looking monster," and as "base-born wretches" who "perpetrate the greatest outrages." In all the works we find the Gonds with a pantheon of Gods almost wholly different from those of the Hindu mythology, and with some habits, rites and ceremonies which would be wholly repugnant to Hindu ethics and Brahminical doctrines.

All these circumstances make it clear that the origin of the Gonds was Non-Hindu even using the term Hindu in the wide significance given to it by the Judicial Committee in Rani Bhagwan Kuar v. Boss (2). And it cannot be said that these aboriginal people, natives of the once isolated tracts of dense forest and extended hills named Gondwana, have even now been so affected and transformed by the ethnical and social changes which have taken place under the successive invaders of India—Aryans, Scythians, Mongols, and Latins—as to have become merged in the general Hindu population. In the case of Gobra v. Man Singh (9), S. A. No. 219 of 1877 decided by this Court on the 30th August 1877, the learned Judicial Commissioner Mr. (afterwards Sir Charles) Grant (who compiled the Central Provinces Gazetteer of 1871 containing a notice of the Gonds) wrote:—

"The plaintiff's father and mother belong to the Gond race, who come even below the lowest Hindu races in social standing; and as illegitimacy is held not to be a bar to inheritance among Hindu Sudras, such a modified form of it as would arise from a left-handed marriage (as in this case) can scarcely be regarded as creating any disability among races even more careless of the social law and ceremony."

It is manifest from this passage that so recently as 40 years ago Gonds were regarded by the highest judicial authority in these Provinces as something apart from, and even lower than, Hindu Sudras.

It was argued before me that the Gonds of these Provinces are Sudras. It is necessary to examine that contention and dispose of it. Though the text-books and commentaries of Hindu Law deal with Sudras, I have been unable to find any generally accepted definition of that expression beyond this that it refers to Hindus who do not belong to the twice-born classes. The Hindu Law divides Hindus into the following four divisions or castes:—

(1) the Brahmins or priestly caste;
(2) the Kshatriyas, or warrior caste;
(3) the Vaisyas or agricultural caste;
(4) the Sudras, or menial castes.

Various definitions of the Sudra, more or less of conjectural kind, have been put forward. Thus in the 8th Edition of Mayne's Hindu Law, at page 107, a foot-note (which also appeared on page 92 of the 7th Edition) reads:

"I take the Sudras as representing aborigines in early time, but I am aware there is much controversy on the point."

There is not even the semblance of authority to be found for this assumption in any of the Hindu text books. In Gopal Narhar Safray v. Hanmanta Ganesh Safray (10) Westropp, Chief Justice, stated that the Hindu Law regards Sudras as slaves. This statement is strongly controverted by Mr. G. C. Sastri in his book on Hindu Law, at page 151. He evolves a definition of his own for which he claims authority from certain texts cited by him. According to this view every Hindu is born a Sudra: but if by birth he is also a Brahman, a Kshatriya or a Vaishya, he can become regenerate by learning the sacred literature. If such an one fails to attain knowledge of the Vedas, he remains a Sudra. The learned author is constrained to admit the existence of a text which forbids to Sudras the privilege of studying the Vedas; but makes no attempt to explain the inconsistency which arises if the three superior castes are to be considered as within the category of Sudras unless they learn that which Sudras are forbidden to read. The idea that a Brahman begins life, and may end it, as a Sudra is novel and revolutionary. Mr. Sastri claims authority for it chiefly from a text of Manu (Chapter II, 168) which he translates thus:—

"That twice-born man who, without studying the Vedas, applies diligent attention to anything else, soon falls even when living, together with his decendants, to the conditions of a Sudra."

It will be observed that the text refers in express terms to a "twice-born man", and does not sustain Mr. Sastri's view that the second birth is postponed until after the Vedas have been learned. To my mind it contains nothing but a pious warning to every Hindu of the regenerate classes that, if he neglects the study of the sacred literature, he and his descendants will fall to the level of Sudras: not that they will become or remain Sudras, but in ignorance and consequent degradation will resemble Sūdras.

But Mr. Sastri's conception of a Sudra

seems the most correct so far as it assumes every Sudra to be a Hindu by birth and religion: and I am of opinion that every Hindu, properly so called, who does not belong to one or other of the three regenerate classes, is a Sudra; and that to him the Hindu Law relating to Sudras applies of its own force, but I think that no non-Hindu can be a Sudra any more than he can be a member of any of the regenerate castes. Since a Gond is not a Hindu at all, it follows that he cannot be brought within the category of Sudras.

But the finding that the Gond is not within any definition, juristic or popular, of a Hindu does not conclude the matter. Dr. Gour in his said work, Volume I, at pages 28 and 29, has set out instances, supported by case-law, in which the Hindu Law has been followed in matters relating to inheritance and succession, by persons who are not Hindus by caste or religion. In dealing with this branch of the subject it is necessary to distinguish between (2) those who by origin, birth and creed have always been non-Hindu.

(1) apostates and dissenters from the Hindu religion, and

The former class have been subjected to a considerable amount of legislative and judicial treatment, and the published case-law regarding them has not always been uniform and consistent. But with them I am not now concerned. Here I am presented with the case of a tribe which has always been non-Hindu. How far, if at all, should inheritance and succession in this tribe be governed by the Hindu Law? In this connection it is necessary to bear in mind that although that law is primarily a personal law, it has also become attached to localities: and that, therefore, a Hindu is presumed to be governed by the law of the locality in which he resides: Ram Das v. Chandra Dassia (11), Fanindra Deb Raikat v. Rajeswar Das (12), Jugo Bundhoo Tiwaree v. Kurum Singh (13), Balaji v. Musammat Maina Bai (14). The contrary view taken in Shridhar v. Maina Bai (15) seems to have been overruled. This Court has laid down that the Mitakshara of the Benares School is the Hindu lex loci in the Central Provinces: Hira Lal v. Musammat Jani Bai (16), Dearao v. Sakhu (17). It is immaterial now whether that law is based on immemorial local customs which Brahmanism found, adopted and shaped (as conjectured by Mr. Mayne in his Hindu Law), or is of divine origin as believed and claimed by Mr. Sastri and other Hindu commentators. The fact stands out beyond all dispute that the Mitakshara, as now accepted and applied, is saturated with Brahmanism and Hindu religious doctrines constitute the warp and woof of the principles and order of inheritance and succession contained in it. No doubt in some cases the religious element is entwined with legal conceptions which are not peculiar to Hindus, but are found in many other systems of law, e.g., the heirship of a son to his father; but in other doctrines we find principles which are peculiar to the Hindu religion, indicating with reasonable certainty that in such matters the secular law followed out of the religion. The exclusion of the sister from the line of heirs, and the reversion of an estate held by a woman to the heirs of the last male holder after her death, are matters of that kind.

Now I am not unmindful of the advantage, in the administration of justice, of having a settled lex loci and of applying it to as many as possible of the inhabitants domiciled within the area of its operation. It may be open to doubt whether, as a matter of sound policy, every fragment of custom ought to be sought out and preserved. A wider and more uniform customary law may be more consistent with moral and material progress than an indefinite segmentation into slightly varying usages which causes perpetual doubt and difficulty in necessary transactions. But the legislative mandate is clear and conclusive. The usage of the country is the law of the people, and the Courts of British India stand bound by Statute and practice to preserve and apply to each class, tribe, caste and family the ancestral personal law thereof, unless it has been substituted by some other law or valid usage. It seems to me that it would be as incongruous to apply to the wild Gonds of the Central Provinces the peculiar principles of the Hindu Law as, their Lordships of the Privy Council considered [in Rani Bhagwan Kuar v. Lose (2)], it would be to govern inheritance among the Sikhs by the Indian Succession Act, 1865. Mr. Mayne, in his above work, enjoins much caution in applying Hindu Law to non-Brahminical tribes. Mr. Sastri, at page 363 of his treatise, gives a clear opinion that a person who is from birth a non-Hindu, cannot be subject to the personal law of the Hindus. That opinion appears to me to be correct.

There are races, tribes, communities, and families, non Hindu in origin, who have adopted some of the usages, both religious and secular, of the Hindus with whom they have been associated for centuries. It is natural that this imitation or assimilation should take place, more particularly in such domestic matters as the order of inheritance and succession, among tribes who have no written personal law of their own. But a man does not become a Hindu by calling himself one; nor is the adoption by a non-Hindu of usages resembling some parts of the Hindu Law a sufficient ground for applying the whole of that law to him en bloc, in the same way and to the same extent as if he were a Hindu. These considerations have apparently been overlooked by some commentators and by most of our subordinate Courts, who seem to have regarded the Hindu Law as a common law of the land, applicable to all cases which are not shown to be outside it. It is natural that such Courts, as at present constituted in these provinces, should have been led, by the presence at their elbows of a written Code of Law, to apply it beyond its scope to cases not governed by it, and that legal practitioners should have helped this error in cases where no other known system is apparent. Indeed it is a consummation devoutly to be desired that as many as possible of the diverse races and tribes occupying this vast country should be brought under a common law of inheritance and succession; but the time for that is not yet.

The Gonds in these provinces have not avoided the Hindu influences to which they have been subjected for centuries. Some branches of the tribe—notably the Raj Gonds—have closely imitated Hindu customs, have adopted Hindu names, have taken to wearing the sacred thread, and offer funeral cakes to the dead after the manner of regenerate Hindus. To many of these the local Courts have applied, without question by the parties and as a matter of course, the Mitakshara Law in cases relating to inheritance and succession. But an unconscious application of wrong law cannot set up a principle of stare decisis merely because it has been left unchallenged for a few years owing to the ignorance of the people affected by it: and the circumstance that in some cases our Courts may have treated as Hindus families of Gonds who have not adopted the Mitakshara as their personal law, ought not to affect the decision of this case, where the question of the law to be applied has been expressly raised. Moreover, an issue as to customary law must be decided according to the particular facts of each case as it comes up. There are many classes of Gonds, widely differing from one another in habits and status: and it does not follow because a family of Raj Gonds in the Jubbulpore or Mandla Districts have become so Hinduised as to justify the application of the Mitakshara in determining disputes as to inheritance and succession among them, that the same course would be proper in the cases, say, of Madias and Dhurs of Chhattisgarh, or the Koyas or Gaitas of the Chanda District.

The case of Sultan Shah v. Dan Chunder Shah (18) came before this Court from the Betul District. The parties were Raj Gonds of a family converted to Islam in the days of Mogul rule. The lower Appellate Court having decided the case according to Muhammadan Law, the plaintiff appealed to this Court on the ground, inter alia, that the parties being Raj Gonds were governed by the Hindu Law in matters of marriage, inheritance and succession. Ismay, Judicial Commissioner, rightly treated the question as one of fact, and sent back the case for a finding, and eventually disposed of it by a judgment from which I make the following extract:—

"It is now found that the parties are governed by the Hindu Law as regards inheritance. This finding is objected to on the grounds that the onus was on the appellant to prove that the parties are not governed by Muhammadan Law and that the evidence to prove the custom is legally insufficient.

"I am not at all prepared to say that the onus was on the appellant. It may no doubt be laid down as a general rule that in questions of succession and inheritance the Hindu Law is to be applied to Hindus and the Muhammadan Law to Muhammadans, [Jowala Buksh v. Dharum Singh (19)], but there are many cases in which the universality of a custom superseding the law has been recognised. The Khojahs and Cutchi Memons have always been regarded as Hindus converted to Muhammadanism, but it has been constantly held that in the absence of proof of special custom they are governed by the Hindu Law of inheritance. Similarly it has been held by this Court (Civil Rulings—Hindu and Muhammadan Law) that the isolated Muhammadan communities who have for some two centuries dwelt amongst Hindus on the Satpura plateau have allowed their law of succession to be influenced by Hindu practice.

"In the present case the parties are Raj Gonds whose ancestors adopted the religion of Muhammad in the days of Aurangzeb. Notwithstanding their conversion they still marry into Gond families, and the presumption that they recognize the Muhammadan Law of succession, if any such presumption can be said to exist, must be singularly weak. The village share now in dispute passed from husband to widow, and on the widow's death, from father to daughter in direct accordance with the rules of Hindu Law.* * * * It must be borne in mind, that in comparison with Bhils, very few Gonds embraced the religion of Muhammad." The late Mr. Hislop, who was eminently qualified to write on the subject, notes as follows:

'The only instance that has come to my knowledge is that of Bakht Buland the Rajah of Dewagarh who was converted to Islam when on a visit to Aurangzeb at Delhi. Still his descendants, though adhering to the change of creed, have not ceased to marry into Gond families, and hence the present representative of that regal house is not only acknowledged by the whole race about Nagpur as their head and Judge, but is physically regarded as a pure Raj Gond.' (Essay on the Hill Tribes of the Central Provinces, page 5).

It is manifest that the decision of Ismay, Judicial Commissioner, rested on the facts of the particular case before him, and that it affords no authority for any presumption that all Gonds are governed by the Hindu Law. Indeed there was no question before the learned Judicial Commissioner whether Gonds are Hindus who are originarily amenable, as such, to the Hindu Law. It was found as a fact that, despite its conversion to the faith of Islam, the family had habitually governed itself by Hindu Law in matters of marriage, inheritance and succession. Under such circumstances that law was correctly applied, for clear proof of usage will outweigh all but Statute Law: Abraham v. Abraham (3), Muthusami Mudaliar v. Masilamani (20).

There is clear authority for the view that the onus of proving that a non-Hindu family has accepted the Hindu Law rests on him who alleges it. In Fanindra Deb Raikat v. Rajeshwar Das (12) their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down that in the case of a family which is not originally Hindu, but which has adopted Hindusim, the burden of proving that the family is governed in a particular matter by the Hindu Law is upon the person who asserts that it is so governed. The ratio decidendi seems to be that the adoption by a family of some parts of a law foreign to it does not raise any presumption in favour of its adoption of other parts thereof. We have seen that a Gond family may adopt Muhammadan religion without adopting the Muhammadan Law of inheritance. Similarly a Gond family may adopt the Hindu Law of marriage without accepting the Hindu Law of adoption or survivorship.

(19) 10 M. I. A. 511; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 189; 19 W. R. 1036.

(20) 5 Ind. Cas. 42; 33 M. 342; 7 M. L. T. 17; 20 M. L. J. 49.

In the present case, by setting himself up as the owner of the property in suit, the plaintiff necessarily rests on two rules peculiar to the Mitakshara Law of inheritance, namely, (1) that on the death of Musammat Bayan the estate did not descend to her daughter but reverted to the heir of her son the last male holder, and (2) that the defendant, being the sister of that propositus, is excluded from inheritance. The burden of proving that these rules apply to the family of the parties lies heavily on the plaintiff. Owing to misapprehension of the law in the Courts below the onus of proof was misplaced on the defendant. It seems just to give the plaintiff an opportunity of proving his allegations, and the case must, therefore, go back.

It may be well to note that the rules of inheritance relied on by the plaintiff must be proved to be in force in their family by such evidence as the Courts usually require to justify them in giving effect to a custom. If the custom is not proved the suit must fail. It will not be necessary to decide what other law or custom of inheritance may be applicable. The defendant is in possession of property which has descended to her from her mother, and the plaintiff can only succeed if he establishes a better title. And in this connection it may be well to point out that evidence of occurrences in the family which are not peculiar to Hindu Law will not suffice to raise a presumption that the family has adopted that law. The devolution of property from father to son, or the equal division by several heirs of an estate inherited jointly from a common ancestor, are incidents common to all systems of inheritance. But evidence of adoption, of succession by survivorship to the exclusion of females, of reversion to the heirs of the last male holder taking place on the determination of an intervening female estate, of the exclusion of sisters from inheritance and other such matters peculiar to the Mitakshara having taken place in the family would sustain the plaintiff's case.

For the above reasons the appeal is allowed; the decree of the lower Appellate Court is reversed under Order XLI, rule 23 of the Civil Procedure Code, its decision on the preliminary point as to the law governing the parties being held to be erroneous. The case is remanded for a fresh decision on the merits with advertence to the above remarks. The appellant will be given the usual refund certificate. Other costs here and hitherto will abide the result.

Appeal allowed.
Case remanded.

APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 401 OF 1915
AND RULE No. 49 OF 1916.
December 10, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Justice Teunon and Mr. Justice Newbould.

RAM LAL MANDAL AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS NOS 9 TO 11—APPELLANTS
versus
ASUTOSH MANDAL AND OTHERS PLAINTIFFS AND OTHER DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 15, 19 (b)—Execution in case of cross-claims under the same decree.

Plaintiff, a co-sharer landlord, brought a suit for rent impleading several persons as defendants to the suit, of whom defendants Nos. 1 to 14 held a dual position being tenants and co-sharer landlords, Nos. 15 to 21 were purely tenants and Nos. 22 to 41 were co-sharer landlords. All the co-sharer landlords were made pro forma defendants. A decree was made for Rs. 76 and odd in favour of the plaintiff and for Rs. 380 and odd in favour of the co-sharer landlords, the pro forma defendants. The pro forma defendants Nos. 34 to 38, who were also tenants defendants Nos. 1 to 5, applied for execution of the decree against the defendants Nos. 7 to 21 for Rs. 285 and odd, which was the whole balance of the decree passed in favour of the pro forma defendants, Rs. 95 and odd having been realized in a previous execution proceeding:

Held, that such an execution was maintainable, but the Court under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 19 (b), of the Civil Procedure Code should first ascertain what amounts were due from each party to the other and thereafter allow execution to proceed for the difference, making such order as it deemed necessary for protecting the interests of the persons who had not joined in the application for execution. [p. 447, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, 24-Parganas, dated the 16th June 1915, reversing that of the Munsif, 3rd Court, Alipore, dated the 17th March 1915.

FACTS.—A suit for rent was instituted by a co-sharer landlord whose interest was 2 annas and odd gandas, making a large number of men as parties defendants. The suit was against 41 persons, the first 14 defendants were tenants and co-sharer landlords, defendants Nos. 15 to 21 were purely tenants, defendants Nos. 22 to 41 were co-sharer landlords. The suit was decreed and the plaintiff became entitled to Rs. 76 as rent and Rs. 96 as costs. The pro forma defendants co-sharer landlords became entitled to Rs. 380. The plaintiff executed his decree and realised his share. The present execution was by defendants Nos. 1 to 5, who were pro forma defendants Nos. 34 to 38.

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose (with him Babus Sarat Chandra Roy Choudhury), for the Appellants.—The persons applying for execution are executing the decree against the defendants Nos. 7 to 21, i.e., excepting themselves and defendant No. 6. The question now is whether such an application is maintainable. They are now executing for Rs. 285 from all the tenants defendants. Order XXI, rule 15, does not allow such an execution. The nature of the decree imposes a condition that one decree-holder can execute the decree against other decree-holders, but some of the decree-holders cannot execute a portion of the decree, otherwise Order XXI, rule 19, would be nullified. They cannot leave out Rs. 95 and take execution for Rs. 285.

Babu Samatul Chandra Dutta (with him Babu Satish Chandra Mukherjee), for the Respondents.—The executing Court cannot go behind the decree.

The decree must be executed as it has been passed by the Court. But the Court will have to act according to the provisions of Order XXI, rule 19, Civil Procedure Code.

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an application for execution. It appears that a co-sharer landlord brought a suit for rent against tenants 21 in number and made his co-sharers parties to the suit. They were defendants Nos. 22 to 41. In the result there was a decree in favour of the plaintiff against defendants Nos. 1 to 21 for the sum of Rs. 76 10 karas and in favour of the pro forma defendants Nos. 22 to 41 against the same tenants, defendants Nos. 1 to 21, for the sum of Rs. 380 3 gandas and 2 karas. In the present proceedings the pro forma defendants Nos. 34 to 38 have applied for execution in respect of a sum of Rs. 285 and odd annas against defendants Nos. 7 to 14 or according to the Munsif, against Nos. 7 to 21.

In this appeal in view of the provisions of Order XXI, rules 15 and 19, two objections have been taken. It is contended in the first place that the applicants should have prayed for execution of the whole decree made in favour of the defendants Nos. 22 to 41, that is to say, for execution in respect of the sum of Rs. 380 odd annas. But as a matter of fact the sum in respect of which the respondents-decree-holders have applied for execution represents, we are now informed, the whole balance of that decree now outstanding, credit having been given for a sum of Rs. 95 and odd annas realized by execution on a previous application. This objection, therefore, necessarily fails.

The second objection taken arises out of the fact that of the defendants against whom the decree has been made, defendants Nos. 1 to 14 hold a dual position. As defendants Nos. 1 to 14 they are tenants, and reckoned as pro forma defendants Nos. 28 to 41 they are co-sharer landlords. The decree that has been made is in fact in favour of defendants Nos. 1 to 14 and 6 others and is also made against themselves and 7 others. The result is that just as defendants Nos. 7 to 14 against whom execution is being taken and defendant No. 6 owe something to the executing decree-holder defendants Nos. 34 to 38 (who are also tenant defendants Nos. 1 to 5), so defendants Nos. 1 to 5, that is, the executing decree-holder defendants Nos. 34 to 38 also owe something under this decree to decree-holder defendants Nos. 27 to 41, who are in fact also tenant defendants Nos. 6 to 14. It would seem, therefore, that under Order XXI, rule 19 (b), both parties being entitled to recover sums of money each from the other, the respective amounts due from each to the other should first have been ascertained and execution thereafter proceeded for the difference, the Court under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 15, making such order as it deemed necessary for protecting the interests of the persons who had not joined in the application. When the application goes back to the first Court the executing Court will take evidence and ascertain, if the parties are not agreed, what sum or share is in fact now payable under the decree by the executing decree-holders (defendants Nos. 34 to 38, otherwise defendants Nos. 1 to 5) to the other decree-holder defendants and after deducting that sum from the whole amount now due from the defendants Nos. 1 to 21 will realize the balance so ascertained.

We now learn that the money claimed, Rs. 285 odd, has already been paid into Court. In that case the executing Court will proceed to apportion it among the decree-holders on determination of their shares.

With these observations we dismiss this appeal, and as we consider that the appellants-defendants Nos. 9 to 11 are substantially in the wrong we direct that they do pay the costs of this appeal. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

The appeal having been disposed of, the connected Rule No. 49 of 1916 is discharged.

Appeal dismissed;
Rule discharged.

LAKSHMANA PATTAR AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS NOS. 2 AND 3—RESPONDENTS.

Mortgage—Redemption, suit for—Burden of proof—Admission of party, effect of—Amendment of plaint—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 60.

In a suit for redemption of a mortgage, the plaintiff has to prove, ordinarily, that there is a subsisting mortgage capable of being redeemed. The rule, however, is subject to exceptions. Where the defendant admits the existence of the mortgage, the onus is shifted to him to prove that he subsequently acquired an irredeemable right. [p. 448, col. 2.]

A plaintiff in a redemption suit may be permitted to amend a plaint which is based on a specific mortgage and claim a decree on the defendant's admission. [p. 448, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, South Malabar at Palghat, in Appeal Suit No. 454 of 1915, preferred against that of the District Munsif, Alatur, in Original Suit No. 218 of 1914.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Iyer, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. P. M. Menon, K. V. Madhavan Nair and P. V. Parameswari Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's allegations are that a Nair Tarwad was the jenmi of the plaint property, that it was mortgaged to the ancestors of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, that the said persons sub-mortgaged it to a person not before the Court who transferred his rights to the 3rd defendant, that the 3rd defendant subsequently purchased the jenm right from the Nair Tarwad and gave the plaintiff a second mortgage in 1912 (Exhibit H). He sues to redeem the first mortgage. He does not give the date of the first mortgage, but relies upon the admission of the ancestor of the 1st and 2nd defendants contained in Exhibit A and upon the statement of the 2nd defendant contained in Exhibit L. In Exhibit A, while granting a sub-mortgage, the ancestor mentioned that the property was held by him under a kanom from the Nair Tarwad. In Exhibit L, which was a statement filed in proceedings taken by the plaintiff under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act, the 2nd defendant stated that the amount due and payable to him under the mortgage was not the amount deposited in Court. How far this admission is evidence against the 1st defendant and to what extent the 2nd defendant himself is bound by it are questions for the Appellate Court. The case for the defendants is that the mortgage sought to be redeemed is not subsisting and that the burden is on the plaintiff to prove that there is a redeemable mortgage.

The District Munsif held that the suit was not barred by limitation, but that as the plaintiff failed to prove the mortgage sued on, he was not entitled to a decree.

On appeal, the Subordinate Judge held that the burden of proving that the mortgage sought to be redeemed is subsisting was on the plaintiff and that as he failed to prove that fact, the suit was rightly dismissed.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the respondent, has placed before us certain considerations which, if we were hearing the appeal, might have considerable weight with us. The 3rd defendant is certainly in a position to throw light on the date and nature of the mortgage and it may be that the plaintiff ought to have summoned him to produce the mortgage-deed, if it exists but that is a matter to be considered by the Appellate Court.

On the point decided by the Subordinate Judge we are unable to agree with him. As we read Exhibit L, the 2nd defendant admitted that at that time there was a mortgage capable of being redeemed. If the defendants have acquired an irredeemable right subsequently, they ought to prove it. [See Dip Singh v. Girand Singh (1) and Daia Chand v. Sarfraz (2).]

Mr. Menon sought to support the decision on the authorities cited in the judgment of the District Munsif. The proposition enunciated in Krishna Pillai v. Rangasami Pillai (3) is that where a plaintiff fails to establish the specific mortgage sued on, he should not be given a decree on a mortgage to be spelled out from documents or pleadings to which the defendant was a party. This view was followed in Vasudevan Nambudri v. Krishna Pisharoti (4) and in Kalliani Amma v. Narayanan Nambiar (5). As a general proposition there can be no objection to this statement of the law: but there may be exceptions. The plaintiff might have been under a bona fide mistake and might have been led into the error by the conduct of the defendants. In such cases notwithstanding his failure to prove the specific mortgage, he may be permitted, by allowing him to amend the plaint, to claim a decree on the admission of the defendant. [See Paykat Manakkal v. Theyyankaran (6) and Kadakamvalli Sankaran Mussad v. Mokkath Ussain Haji (7).] In no case may a plaintiff who has fabricated a document be allowed to obtain a decree on the admission of the defendant.

But in the present case both the plaintiff and the defendant had but one mortgage in their minds. See Exhibit L. The only question was whether that mortgage was subsisting or has become irredeemable. In this class of cases, the point for consideration is on whom does the burden of proof lie to prove that it is subsisting. Ordinarily on the principle that the mortgagee must be aware of the date of the transaction to which he or his predecessor was a party, the burden of proof will lie on the defendant. What quantum of evidence may displace this burden will depend on each case. [See Khiali Ram v. Taik Ram (8).] The view taken by the Subordinate Judge is, therefore, wrong. We must set aside his decree and remand the appeal to him for disposal according to law. Any application for fresh evidence must be made to him. Costs will abide the result.

Appeal allowed;
Case remanded.

Merchant Shipping Act 57 and 58 Vict., C. 60, s. 686—"Natural born British subject", whether includes subject of Native State—Admiralty Offences (Colonial) Act (12 & 13 Vict, C. 96), s. 1—"Sea", meaning of—Penal Code Act XLV of 1860, s. 4—Jurisdiction—Offence committed on high seas by subject of Native State, whether cognizable by British Indian Courts.

The expression "natural born British subject" in section 686 of the Merchant Shipping Act does not include a natural born subject of a Native Indian State. [p. 449, col. 2.]

The word "sea" in section 1 of the Admiralty Offences (Colonial) Act means only that part of the sea over which the Admiral or Admirals has or have jurisdiction, that is to say, territorial waters [p. 450, col. 1.]

British Indian Courts have no jurisdiction to try a subject of a Native Indian State for an offence committed on board a ship belonging to a subject of a Native State outside territorial waters. [p. 450, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—The present matter has been referred to us by the Sessions Judge of Kanara in the following circumstances.

A subject of the State of Junagadh in Kathiawar was arrested in Bombay and accused of committing a serious offence on a ship belonging to a Junagadh subject on the high seas some eighteen miles or thereabouts from the coast of the Kanara District. Having been arrested in Bombay the accused was taken to Karwar. He was placed before the First Class Magistrate there and on the point being raised that Magistrate held that he had jurisdiction to enquire into the case. The Sessions Judge, however, doubted whether these proceedings were founded on any jurisdiction and has submitted the case to us for our orders.

If we find that the Kanara Courts have not jurisdiction, we shall have so to express our opinion and leave it to the Magistrate to discharge the accused. It cannot be doubted that some Court somewhere has jurisdiction to try this offence. And seeing that the accused is a subject of the Junagadh State and that the ship on which the alleged offence is said to have been committed belongs to a subject of that State and has not been registered as a British ship, we thought it proper to give notice to the Junagadh State. Mr. Taraporevalla has appeared as Counsel to represent the State and has put before us an interesting argument. But though, as I have said, there must be jurisdiction somewhere to try this offence, what we have to consider is whether the Courts of the Kanara District have such jurisdiction. The case is certainly not provided for either by the Code of Criminal Procedure or the Indian Penal Code. The offence, if any, committed is not territorially an offence under the Indian Penal Code, nor is it an offence which is made triable by any of the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. We must, therefore, look elsewhere for a foundation for jurisdiction if such jurisdiction exists in the Kanara Courts. We have looked elsewhere, under the assistance afforded us by the Counsel for the Junagadh State on the one hand and the Government Pleader on the other and we have undoubtedly derived great assistance from their arguments.

The most natural enactment to turn to in the first instance is no doubt the Merchant Shipping Act, which is 57 & 58 Vic. C. 60. The pertinent section there is 686 which tells us that if the ship were a British ship, no doubt British Courts would have jurisdiction. British ship is defined in section 1 of the same Act and indubitably the ship in this case cannot be a British ship unless the owner of that ship comes under the head "natural born British subject"; for he does not come under any of the other heads. We do not think that the expression "natural born British subject" in the Merchant Shipping Act can be read to include a natural born subject of the Junagadh State. So far as our researches have gone, we can find no suggestion in any case dealing with the Statute Law relating to, or the written law of, British India which brings a natural born subject of the Junagadh State within the meaning of the expression "natural born British subject."

Whatever meaning these words might bear in international or diplomatic matters, it seems to me that we must treat them when used in the Merchant Shipping Act as having the meaning which appropriately attaches to them for the purpose of the written law of this country. In that view they cannot include a natural born subject of the Junagadh State.

Then we have been referred to the Admiralty Offences (Colonial) Act of 1849, 12 & 13 Vic. C. 96. It was suggested, when this matter was first argued before us, that within the words of that Statute we could find justification for saying that the Courts in the Kanara District had jurisdiction. The words of that Act in clause 1 refer to a jurisdiction in regard to offences committed upon the sea and also to offences committed in any haven, river, creek or place. It also refers to the jurisdiction of the Admiral or Admirals and the question arises as to whether the word "sea" there used means only that part of the sea over which the Admiral or Admirals has or have jurisdiction or whether it means the sea generally. If it means the latter, then seeing that the accused was found in India, the Courts would have jurisdiction to deal with him. But if the word "sea" therein used means only that part of the sea over which the Admirals have jurisdiction, then the Court would not have jurisdiction in this particular case; for Admirals have jurisdiction over the sea within territorial waters and a ship at a distance of eighteen miles from the coast is undoubtedly outside territorial waters. Personally I have no doubt that the word "sea" as used in this Statute means that portion of the sea over which the Admiral has jurisdiction, for two reasons, firstly, the Act is described as an Act to provide for the prosecution and trial in Her Majesty's Colonies of offences committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiral. That description implies that the Act is dealing only with places or with so much of the sea as the Admiral has jurisdiction over. That is the first reason. The second reason is this: that the jurisdiction given by this Statute to Colonial Courts, which jurisdiction has been extended to India by an Act of 1860, 23 & 24 Vic. C. 88, is a conferred jurisdiction. The intention, it seems to me, quite plainly is that Colonial Courts, and within that expression we must include Indian Courts, shall have conferred upon them the same jurisdiction as British Courts possess in British territory to which British Statutes relate. Such jurisdiction in Britain is discussed in the case of Reg. v. Keyn (1), and there can be no doubt after reading that case that the Admiral's jurisdiction in Britain does not extend as regards the open sea beyond territorial limits, which are some three miles from low water mark. If that is the only jurisdiction of the Admiralty Courts in Britain and if the Statute 12 & 13 Vic. is intended to extend such jurisdiction to Colonial Courts, then it is quite impossible to suppose that this Statute gave to Colonial Courts jurisdiction in the matter of offences committed on non-British ships on the high seas outside the territorial limits. These two reasons seem to me to show satisfactorily that we cannot find a basis for jurisdiction in the Kanara Courts in virtue of this Statute, 12 & 13 Vic. C. 69.

I have now exhausted all the sources which were suggested to us as a possible foundation for jurisdiction in the Kanara Courts, and I cannot myself think of any other source. The conclusion to my mind is quite inevitable that the Kanara Courts have no jurisdiction in this case. I do not think it is in any way necessary to proceed to consider what Court or Courts has or have jurisdiction.

The order that we must make, therefore, is that the First Class Magistrate in Kanara has no jurisdiction to deal with this alleged offender and that he should make an order discharging him.

The case is one which I have decided according to a somewhat narrow but, as it seems to me, a correct view of the law relating to jurisdiction. But the case suggests that the matter is one both of theoretical and practical importance, and I think the judgment of this Court should be sent to the Government of Bombay so that if they are so minded, they may address the Government of India on the subject with a view to determining whether legislation of any kind is necessary for the purpose of regulating jurisdiction in cases of this kind.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 425—Mischief—Cutting down trees without impairing value—Offence—Landlord and tenant—Tenant, right of, to cut trees—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 28—Tenure-holder, whether entitled to cut trees.

A permanent tenure-holder is entitled to cut down trees situate within his tenure. He can only be prevented from doing so by the landlord showing a custom contrary to the right of the tenure-holder. [p. 453, col. 2.]

Whatever the tenant, whether he be a tenure-holder or a lessee, has grown upon the land that belongs to him. [p. 453, col. 2.]

Where there is a dispute between the parties as to the ownership of a tree and one of them cuts it down, the case is beyond the cognizance of a Criminal Court and outside the scope of section 425 of the Penal Code. The cutting down of a tree does not amount to mischief unless it destroys or diminishes the dignity or value of the tree. [p. 454, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Banka, dated the 22nd June 1917.

Mr. Lalit Mohan Ghose, for the Petitioners.

Mr. G. C. Pal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT:—This is an application against the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Banka, dated the 22nd June 1917, convicting the petitioners under section 426 of the Indian Penal Code.

The petitionor No. 2 is the servant of petitioner No. 1. The conviction is in respect of a bar tree said to have been cut by the petitioners in Mauza Ghutia. The plaintiff's master is the mukarraridar of this village. The accused No. 1 was recorded in the Survey Record of Rights as malguzar istamrari lekin mukarrari nahin. The Record of Rights was finally published in 1917. The plaintiff's master, Jamna Prasad, disputed the correctness of this entry as to the status of the petitioner No. 1 under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but the Assistant Settlement Officer by his decision of October 14th, 1909, dismissed the claim of Jamna Prasad and upheld the entry in the Survey Record.

The basis of the claim of Jamna Prasad was that the petitioner No. 1 had only a lease of the village for a temporary period and that he was only a mustajir, or lessee, and had no right to remain in possession of the village after the expiry of the lease. He wanted a note to that effect to be made in the Survey Record of Rights. The entry in the Record of Rights amounts to a recognition of petitioner No. 1 as a permanent tenure-holder.

The Assistant Settlement Officer came to the conclusion that the petitioner was in possession of the village by virtue of a patta executed in his favour in 1262. This patta is referred to in the judgment of the Magistrate as Exhibit A. By this patta the petitioner obtained right and possession over the village with the trees and the jungles situate therein. The petitioners claimed before the Assistant Settlement Officer that they had been cultivating the lands of the village and had reclaimed jungles. This was accepted by the Assistant Settlement Officer and it was further held that the subsequent kabuliyats said to have been executed by the petitioners did not affect their title, which was corrected by the original lease of 1262. Two of these kabuliyats have been referred to in the judgment of the Assistant Settlement Officer as Exhibits 2 and 3, namely, the one dated 24th Paus 1305 and the other 20th Kartik 1315. The latter one was an application made by the petitioner to Jamna Prasad for permission to cut down two sal trees for the purpose of using the timber thereof in the house which was being constructed by him. The trees are said to be situate in Ranicharna and in the orchard of Kuli Roy of Singahua. There is no mention of Ghutia in this application and it is not known, therefore, whether the application at all related to any trees in the village in question. The decision of the Assistant Settlement Officer was upheld in appeal by the District Judge of Bhagalpur on 30th March 1910.

In or about the year 1913 Jamna Prasad brought a civil suit against Sukh Lal and others for recovery of Rs. 120, price of six sal trees said to have been cut and removed by the defendants from the Bahera jungle. The suit was dismissed by the Munsif by his judgment of the 19th February 1914, upon the ground that it was not proved that the trees were at all cut by the defendants. It was in that case alleged by the plaintiff's witnesses that one Biranchi cut the trees. The Munsif held that Biranchi was not a defendant and therefore the plaintiffs could not obtain any decree in that case. The Munsif, however, upon issue No. 3, which runs as follows: "Are the tenants of the plaintiff to take wood from his jungle without payment of any price under any custom," held that the defendants could not take wood without payment of price. Before discussing this issue, the Munsif prefaced it by saying that it is unnecessary to decide it inasmuch as the suit of the plaintiff was dismissed upon facts. The judgment of the Munsif has also been referred to in the judgment of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate in this case.

The above is in short the history regarding the dispute between the parties as to the status of the petitioner No. 1 in the village and as to the petitioners' right in the trees situate in that village.

The present occurrence is said to have taken place on the 16th February 1917. It is said that the petitioners cut a branch of a bar tree. Jamna Prasad the plaintiff lodged an information before the Police On 6th March 1917 the Magistrate declined to issue warrants against the petitioners upon the ground that he felt "doubt if the branches had been cut dishonestly" by the petitioners and held a judicial enquiry. On 5th April 1917 he looked into the survey papers referred to above and other evidence adduced by the complainant and after hearing both the parties passed the following order:—

"It appears that the bar or bargad tree with respect to which am offence is said to have been committed stands on a piece of holding belonging to Jhajhu Mahto. The holding is in Mauza Tona Pathar, which is within the mustajri of the accused Sardar Singh. The complainant's master Thakur Jamna Prasad is the mukarraridar of the Mauza. In the Survey Records it is not mentioned in whose possession the bargad tree is. In the absence of any evidence in the Survey Records to the contrary the tree may be said to be in the holding of Jhajhu Mahto or his representative. The tree does not bear any fruit which is taken by anybody. It is extremely doubtful that the mukarraridar is in the possession of a tree standing on the holding of another. It is questionable as to whether the tenant, or the tenure-holder (the accused) or the superior landlord (the complainant's master) is in actual possession of the tree the branches of which have been cut. I cannot, therefore, hold that the accused who is the tenure-holder dishonestly cut the tree from the possession of the mukarraridar and so no cognizable offence is made out. Enter non-cognizable section 426, Indian Penal Code."

Nine days after the above order on the 14th of April the complainant filed a complaint before the same Magistrate. In his statement on oath recorded by the Magistrate on the back of the complainant's petition he admitted that "information was lodged at the Thana but as the case did not proceed I have come to complain." The Sub-Divisional Magistrate straightway upon that complaint ordered the accused to be summoned under section 426, Indian Penal Code. The complainant stated to him that the matter did not proceed on the information given to him by the Police. The Magistrate had upon a judicial enquiry come to the conclusion that the possession of the tree was not proved to be with the complainant and there was no dishonest intention of the accused in cutting away the tree. I do not know why in the face of his own finding the Sub Divisional Magistrate thought it fit upon the complainant's petition in respect of the same occurrence to issue summons against the accused persons. It is also not known whether the Magistrate looked into his former order at all, or in the course of the hearing of the present case whether his attention was ever drawn to it. In the judgment in revision the Sub-Divisional Magistrate does not make any reference to his order of the 5th April 1917 referred to above and surely it was expected that he would either before summoning the accused, or in the judgment, give reasons for his taking a different view from what he had taken at the earlier stage of the case. I am, therefore, entitled to infer from this that if the Magistrate had known of his other order refusing to take cognizance of the offence he would not have summoned the accused in this case. The cutting of the tree is admitted. The question before the Magistrate, therefore, was as to whether the cutting of the tree constituted mischief under section 425, Indian Penal Code. All that the Magistrate finds is that the accused knew that they had no right to cut the tree and, therefore, they acted dishonestly in doing so. This finding is based upon the judgment of the Munsif referred to above of February 1914 and upon the kabuliyat of 1305 and upon the application made by the petitioner No. 1. The two latter documents may be dispensed with summarily. The first document has been already held by the Assistant Settlement Officer as not sufficient to destroy the right of the petitioner which he had got in the village by virtue of the patta of 1263. The application, as already said above, does not refer at all to this village and even if it did, we do not know the circumstances under which that application was made and it cannot possibly take away the right that the petitioner had in the village and in the trees situate therein.

The only document of any importance is the judgment of the Munsif. This judgment referred to jungle Babera and to which the petitioners were not parties at all. It has not been at all contended by the learned Vakil for the respondent that the judgment is at all binding upon the petitioners. At the best the judgment may be admissible evidence under section 13 of the Evidence Act, as an instance of a transaction in which the custom was set up by one of the interested parties.

The question here is whether the dispute that arose between the petitioner and the opposite party in the survey and thereafter as regards their respective rights in the village has at all been settled by any competent Court. The judgment of the Munsif is not at all binding and cannot be taken as finally settling the dispute. The Assistant Settlement Officer's judgment upheld by the Special Judge under section 106 is a judgment inter partes It decides once for all the status that the accused had in the village. The status was that of a permanent tenure-holder. The right of the permanent tenure-holder cannot be disputed as regards the trees situate within the tenure. In the case of an occupancy raiyat under section 23 of the Bengal Tenancy Act a tenant is entitled to cut down the trees. He can only be prevented from doing so by the landlord showing a custom contrary to the right of the tenant. The principle underlying this section applies with greater force in the case of a permanent tenure-holder. It is not for me at this stage to say anything as to the view that was taken by the Munsif in that case, but it is sufficient to say that the onus of the custom lies upon the landlord. The tree in question stands upon plot No. 1090, khata No. 79, and the entry is ghair ma rua malguzar. The word malguzar is important, for the entry against the name of the petitioner is malguzar istumbari. The entry, therefore, means that No. 1090 was recorded as being in the khas possession of the petitioner as a tenure-holder thereof. No tree has been shown as standing in this particular plot in the Survey Record-of-Rights. This is explained by the petitioners by saying that the tree in question was planted on the land subsequent to the Survey Record of Rights which happened in 1907. The complainant has not in this case shown that the tree was planted by him. We have to accept the Survey Record as correct. There was no tree in existence and even supposing for a moment that the right of the mukarraridar was in respect of the tree, he can possibly have no right in the trees that were planted by the man in possession of the land so long as the lease of the petitioner continues. It is not at all the case of the other side that the lease has expired. Only the status is disputed. Whatever the tenant, whether he be a tenure-holder or a lessee, has grown upon the land, that belongs to him This fact of the case has not at all been noticed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. The question is one which could not be decided in any Criminal Court. It is obvious from the history of the dispute between the parties that after the survey the parties are trying to assert their right over the trees in the village and to drive the opposite party to the Civil Court. A Criminal Court should, therefore, be careful in giving any advantage to any of the parties over his adversary.

The learned Magistrate admits that the petitioner is in possession of the village. He claims the trees as belonging to him and he has a right to cut the trees. The opposite party has ample opportunity to go to a Civil Court and establish his right. The case is similar to that of Shakur Mahomed v. Chunder Mohun Sha (1). I will borrow the language of that decision on the particular point, for it seems to me that every word of it applies to the present case:—

"Now, as bamboo is a thing which is grown to be cut, the cutting and removing it does not amount to its destruction or other injury defined above. If there be any dishonest intention, the act of the offender in causing a wrongful loss to the complainant would amount to theft, and not mischief; but it seems to me clear from complainant's own statement and certain documents filed by the accused that there is a dispute regarding the title to the land on which the bamboos said to have been cut and removed were situated.

"On these grounds, I think, the order of the Deputy Magistrate convicting the accused of mischief is wrong in law, and should be set aside."

I have taken pains to give in this judgment at the very outset the facts to show that there is a dispute between the parties. I, therefore, hold that the case was beyond the cognizance of the Criminal Court and outside the scope of section 425. This is enough to set aside the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate.

There is one thing more which to my mind goes to show that the conviction should be set aside. The facts found by the Magistrate were such as do not warrant any conviction under section 425. He does not at all find that the cutting of the tree in question did at all destroy or diminish the dignity or value of it. The petitioner is said to have cut it for the purpose of fuel. If the branch of the tree was fit for fuel, then there was no mischief done to it although theft may have been committed by taking it away from the possession of the complainant's master. There is no finding upon this point. The attention of the Magistrate was not at all directed to this. The above authorities as well as the case of Miras Chowkidar, In the matter of (2), where it was held that the cutting of paddy would not constitute mischief unless it diminished its utility or value on account of its being not ripe, are on all fours with the present case.

Upon the above grounds I set aside the conviction and the sentence and the fine, if paid, be refunded.

Conviction set aside.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 197, 209, 210—Offence committed by vatandar patil—Sanction to prosecute, necessity of—Proceedings started before sanction, validity of—Commitment to Sessions, considerations governing—Government resolution whether binding on Magistrate.

Where a Magistrate took cognizance of an offence committed by a vatandar patil, without the previous sanction required by section 197 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and proceeded to record the whole of the evidence without being aware that any such sanction existed:

Held, that the whole of the proceedings were without jurisdiction and must be regarded as totally invalid [p. 455, cols. 1 & 2; p. 456, col. 1.]

When a Magistrate comes to consider whether he shall or shall not commit a case to the Court of Session, he has to consider the gravity of the offence, the punishment with which in his opinion it ought to be met and the section under which he charges the accused person. He may consider any special difficulties in the case, or that it is a matter of some peculiar public importance, and other matters, such as the wishes of the parties. But a Magistrate must not determine this important matter, whether he is to commit the case or to try it himself, solely by the wish of the parties and the terms of a Government resolution. No resolution whatever that the Executive Government has issued can properly control or determine the discretion of a Magistrate in such a matter; for the Government have no authority whatever to interfere with this discretion, which is imposed on the Magistrate by the law and must be exercised by him. JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—We understand that the accused person in this case, who is charged with harbouring an offender and receiving a bribe from him and who has been committed to the Court of Session at Dharwar, is a vatandar patil and consequently that he could not be prosecuted except with the sanction provided by section 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It is on this understanding that the judgment of this Court is based.

We start, therefore, with this, that a previous sanction was under section 197 essential to confer jurisdiction on the Magistrate to take cognizance of the offence. Now as a matter of fact he took cognizance of this offence and proceeded some way with his enquiry before any sanction was signed by the sanctioning officer. For he began to take evidence in the case on the 5th of April and the sanction was not signed until the 12th. So obviously there was no previous sanction. The defect becomes still more glaring when we learn, as happens to be true in this case, that the sanction itself was not placed on the record of the case until the 2nd of May, which was the very day on which the order of commitment to the Court of Session was made. Nor do the papers in the case give any justification for supposing that the sanction actually came into the hands of the Magistrate before the 2nd of May. So that although the law requires a previous sanction, the Magistrate had taken cognizance of the case and proceeded with it without that sanction and he had, so far as we can gather, proceeded to record the whole of the evidence without being aware that any such sanction existed. It is unfortunate but it seems to us that this being so, the whole of these proceedings are without jurisdiction and must be regarded as totally invalid.

It follows that the commitment to the Court of Session is invalid and that it must be quashed, and we make that order making it clear that the whole of the proceedings must start again from the very beginning if further proceedings are to be taken against this present accused.

We have not, it will be observed, dealt with the particular points on which the Additional Sessions Judge referred this case to us. They are points of interest and his statement of them is clear and forcible. It is not essential no doubt that we should express any opinion on them, but one of these points is of such importance and arises frequently enough to make it desirable to say something. That point is based on this: that the Magistrate committed this case to the Court of Session for reasons which appear in his own words as follows:—"The case is not exclusively triable by the Sessions Court, but the accused is a vatandar and relying on Government Resolution No. 8350, dated the 15th of December 1915, Revenue Department, both the parties pray for the committal of this case and I have no hesitation in doing so." It appears to me that when a Magistrate comes to consider whether he shall or shall not commit a case, he has to consider the gravity of the offence; the punishment with which in his opinion it ought to be met and the section under which he charges the accused person. He may no doubt properly consider any special difficulties in the case or that it is a matter of some peculiar public importance, and no doubt other matters also might enter into his consideration, such as the wish of the parties. But a Magistrate must not determine this important matter, whether he is to commit the case or to try it himself, solely by the wish of the parties and the terms of a Government Resolution. No resolution whatever that the Executive Government has issued can properly control or determine the discretion of a Magistrate in such a matter; for the Government have no authority whatever to interfere with this discretion, which is imposed on the Magistrate by the law and must be exercised by him.

SHAH, J.—I agree that the order of commitment should be set aside. It is not denied in this case that a sanction under section 197, Criminal Procedure Code, is necessary. The sanction was granted by the Collector on the 12th April, and it was produced before the Committing Magistrate on the 2nd May. The proceedings had already commenced before the 12th April, and the order of commitment was made on the 2nd May. Therefore the proceedings before the Committing Magistrate including the order of commitment must be set aside. This will be without any prejudice to any proceedings that may be properly taken hereafter against the accused.

In this view of the case it is not necessary to consider the point raised by the Additional Sessions Judge as to the form of sanction. As regards the other ground upon which this order of commitment is liable to be set aside, I desire to add that it was the duty of the Magistrate to determine under the Code of Criminal Procedure on entirely judicial considerations whether the accused should be committed to a Court of Session or not. In the present case he has taken into consideration a Government resolution and expressed no opinion of his own in committing the case to the Court of Session. It is not necessary for me to state in detail what he may properly consider in committing the accused to a Court of Session. That is a question, with which the Committing Magistrate has to deal on the evidence in the case. It is necessary to point out that it is not open to him to take the Government Resolution into consideration in dealing with the question. This case affords an illustration of the manner in which such a resolution is apt to be used. It is also necessary to point out that section 60 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act (III of 1874), to which the Government Resolution relates, cannot be used as a ground for committing any case to a Court of Session. The section gives certain powers to the Government to deal with the vatan, when a representative vatandar or any deputy or substitute appointed by him is convicted by a Criminal Court not inferior to a Court of Session of any offence referred to in the section. That would indicate that when a person of the above description is properly committed to, and convicted by, a Court of Session, the Government may exercise the powers conferred by the section. The question whether a particular case should be committed to a Court of Session should be decided by the Committing Magistrate without any reference to the section or to the Government resolution relating to the section, just as the question of conviction must be decided without any reference to it.

The powers of Government under section 197, clause (2), of the Code of Criminal Procedure stand altogether on a different footing and my remarks have no application to any directions which may be properly issued under that clause. It is not suggested that the Government have specified the Court before which a trial is to be held in this case under section 197 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code.

LUCHMI SINGH—ACCUSED—APPELLANT

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 463, 464, 467, 471—Forgery—Burden of proof—Criminal trial—Prosecution, duty of.

It is not sufficient in the case of the trial of an accused in a criminal cause for the Crown merely to establish a prima facie case of guilt. They must establish, so far as they can, by every reasonable means in their power, evidence to support the facts proving conclusively the guilt of the accused. [p. 459, col. 1.]

In order to establish that a document is forged, the prosecution must give conclusive evidence to establish that the document is a false document within the meaning of section 464 of the Penal Code, and further that it was forged by the accused with one of the intents mentioned in section 464. [p. 462, col. 1.]

In a charge of forgery it is for the prosecution to prove that the document is a forged one and that the accused did forge it, and not for the defence to prove that the document is a genuine one. [p 462, col 2.]

Appeal against the judgment of the Assistant Sessions Judge, Saran, dated the 3rd July 1917.

Mr. Gour Chandra Pal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Fakhruddin, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

ATKINSON, J.—The accused Luchmi Singh was charged with an offence under section 471 read with section 467 of the Indian Penal Code and separately with an offence under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code, in respect of which charges the accused was put on trial and was convicted on each charge by the Assistant Sessions Judge of Saran on the 3rd July 1917. The learned Judge sentenced the accused to five years' rigorous imprisonment on each charge, the imprisonment to run concurrently in all cases. From that conviction the accused has filed an appeal to the High Court and he asks that on a consideration of the evidence and the facts of the case the convictions and sentences recorded against him may be set aside and the appeal allowed.

The facts out of which the prosecution arose may be very shortly stated. On the 16th April 1912 a man called Brij Mohan is alleged to have borrowed a sum of Rs. 200 from the accused Luchmi Singh for which he gave a hand-note to the accused dated the 16th April 1912. Brij Mohan appears to be an illiterate man, and the note appears to have been executed on his behalf by one Murath Thakur. The money was borrowed for a special purpose, as alleged by the accused, namely, to discharge some pressing debt due for the purchase of tobacco leaves. The borrower Brij Mohan promised to pay back the money within a very short time, that is to say, within a month or a month and a half, from the date of the loan. He failed to do so and on the 9th December 1912 Luchmi Singh, the accused, instituted proceedings on foot of the aforesaid hand-note against Brij Mohan. Apparently no appearance was entered to these proceedings by Brij Mohan ; with the result that an ex parte decree was obtained against him on the 31st January 1913.

On the 29th December it does appear that Brij Mohan instructed a Vakil practising in Chapra to file a petition on his behalf asking for time. Up to this stage no legal form of appearance by Brij Mohan to resist the suit instituted by Luchmi Singh was made. However, the Court did grant the application of Brij Mohan and the case was allowed to stand over for two days.

On the 31st of January 1913, when the case was called on for disposal, there was no appearance in person or by deputy for Brij Mohan and accordingly the Court granted a decree ex parte. In the month of August 1913 it became necessary for the decree-holder to have his decree transferred from Chapra to the district in which Brij Mohan lived for execution. On the 5th of August execution of this decree was taken out; and subsequently, on the 8th of August 1913, Brij Mohan was arrested in pursuance of the decree. After his arrest he was taken from the village where he lived to Chapra and he stated to the Munsif that he intended to impeach the entire transaction on which the ex parte decree was founded. He said that in fact he never borrowed money from Luchmi Singh; and that the hand-note was not a genuine document and that in fact he had no money transactions at all to any extent with Luchmi Singh; and that he was willing to deposit the security for the amount for which the ex parte decree had been obtained to secure his release. Accordingly Brij Mohan was released, on his depositing as security the amount of the debt sought to be recovered, which was considerably over Rs. 200 inclusive of interest; and immediately afterwards he instituted proceedings in the month of September 1913 to set aside the ex parte decree. That suit was No. 170 of 1913 and the plaint is dated the 8th of September 1913.

The suit was defended by Luchmi Singh, who contended that the hand-note was a genuine note; and that the money sued for was due; and that Brij Mohan was his debtor for the amount claimed in the previous suit and that there was no ground whatsoever for impeaching the transaction or the judgment which he had obtained ex parte on the 31st of January 1913, the plaintiff being properly served with necessary notices and all proper legal steps having been taken to justify his decree. After much discussion the learned Munsif was pleased on the 13th of June 1914 to set aside the ex parte decree which was obtained by Luchmi Singh against Brij Mohan on the 31st January 1913. Following that result Brij Mohan applied to the learned Munsif on the 2nd of February 1916 for leave to sanction the prosecution of Luchmi Singh under section 116, Indian Penal Code. It is right to observe that a considerable time—two years—elapsed between the date that the Munsif pronounced the decree setting aside the ex parte decree granted on the 31st of January and the 29th of May 1916, the date when the sanction for prosecution was eventually granted by the District Judge. It is a very remarkable fact that such a long space of time should be allowed to elapse between the date of the Munsif's decree setting aside the ex parte decree and the date when the application was made for leave to sanction the prosecution. It tends to some extent to show want of bona fides in support of the case put forward by the prosecution. However, the fact is that the learned Munsif on the 29th of May 1916, he having heard the case and being familiar with the case, declined and refused to give sanction for the prosecution of this accused Luchmi Singh.

The matter was taken on appeal before the District Judge who adopted a different view, and directed a prosecution of the accused exercising his powers under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and ordered Luchmi Singh to be prosecuted under sections 209 and 210, 193 and 371/476, etc.

Mr. Justice Roe on appeal to him held that the learned Judge had no jurisdiction at all to direct a prosecution under sections 209 and 210, but he upheld the direction for the prosecution of the accused under sections 471 and 193 of the Indian Penal Code.

These are the circumstances under which the present prosecution is brought. The judgment of the learned Assistant Sessions Judge who tried this case is not satisfactory. I think it is wanting very much in legal form; and shows an absolute want of judicial discretion. The case for trial was a simple one. The real and vital point in issue was whether or not the hand-note, dated the 16th April 1912, was or was not a genuine hand-note. A considerable mass of evidence was given in this case, which was irrelevant and unnecessary; and a considerable amount of time was wasted in taking evidence which was quite beyond and outside the scope of the obligation which was upon the prosecution to prove. The learned Public Prosecutor who appeared in this case endeavoured to frame the prosecution upon the following lines.

He alleged that the hand-note originally sued for was a deliberately false hand-note; and that the proceeding which was instituted on foot of that hand-note was a designed conspiracy manufactured to harass Brij Mohan. He alleged that Brij Mohan had a row or a dispute with a man called Kedru Singh, that Kedru Singh out of malice towards Brij Mohan entered into a conspiracy with Luchmi Singh and Balak Singh and two other men to institute a false case against Brij Mohan founded upon a false hand-note, and the learned Judge has gone out of his way irrespective of the evidence to try and wring from these facts a suggestion of a conspiracy to support the case put forward by the prosecution. In my opinion there was no evidence whatsoever to justify the learned Judge's conclusion based upon heated and intemperate premises which prejudiced the learned Judge's mind and deprived him of a sound discretion in giving a fair trial to the accused. To my mind there is no evidence of any fact from which the inference of conspiracy to defraud Brij Mohan can be inferred or legitimately drawn in support of the case put forward by the prosecution. Utter violence has been done to this aspect of the case by the learned Judge; and he has by reasons of his conclusions allowed his mind to be prejudiced in fairly determining the real issue for trial, namely, whether the hand-note of the 16th April 1912 was genuine or not; whether money was or was not due on that hand-note; and whether Luchmi Singh used that hand-note in any judicial proceeding knowing it to be a forged document.

Mr. Fakhruddin on behalf of the prosecution candidly admits that on reading the evidence he fails to find any corroboration of Brij Mohan's evidence. The prosecution and the learned Judge seem to have thought that when Brij Mohan denied that he made any hand-note, or that he ever borrowed money from Luchmi Singh, or that he ever took money from Luchmi Singh, or that any financial transaction of any kind ever took place between Brij Mohan and Luchmi Singh, that that was the end of the obligation and onus of proof that was cast upon them. With great respect to the learned Public Prosecutor who appeared in this case, I say that he totally misconceived his duty and the requirements of the law. It is not sufficient in the case of the trial of an accused in a criminal cause for the Crown merely to establish a prima facie case of guilt. They must establish, so far as they can, by every reasonable means in their power, evidence to support the facts proving conclusively the guilt of the accused.

In this case there has been a breach of duty on the part of the Crown in the discharge of the onus of proof that rested on them inasmuch as they have examined one witness, and one witness only, in support of the case, who is not reliable even so far as his evidence is concerned. The evidence of Brij Mohan is unreliable and there is abundant evidence on the record to show that this witness is untrustworthy and untruthful. It was the clear duty of the prosecution to call at least the person who was alleged to have signed the hand note on behalf of Brij Mohan; and also the person who was present with him and signed the vakalatnama on his behalf on the 29th January 1913. Murath Thakur was the person who signed the hand-note as the agent of Brij Mohan. Every witness for the defence alleged in the second trial before the Munsif that Murath Thakur signed the hand-note at the request of Brij Mohan; and in the face of this evidence the Crown did not think worth while to consider what evidence this Murath Thakur could have given or to call him as a witness. In my opinion the duty was cast upon the Crown and not upon the defendant to prove that Murath Thakur did or did not sign on behalf of Brij Mohan. In addition it would have been material also for the purposes of this case, if the suggestion put forward by the Crown was true that the whole business was the result of a conspiracy; and that Brij Mohan never appeared to instruct the Pleader on the 29th January to get an adjournment; and that the person who did appear was some person personating Brij Mohan at the suggestion of Kedru Singh. Two important witnesses in support of the prosecution case have been failed to be produced by the Crown. Therefore, we are left with nothing in this case save the negative evidence of Brij Mohan uncorroborated by any document in the case which would tend to support the evidence he gave. The documents in the case rather go to contradict the evidence given by Brij Mohan than to support it.

There is a large body of evidence of at least 7 to 8 witnesses adduced on behalf of the defence, and that evidence has not been challenged or impeached on cross-examination and that evidence gives the most positive contradiction to the evidence of Brij Mohun. The success of this prosecution must depend upon accepting or rejecting the evidence of Brij Mohan.

How does Mr. Fakhruddin put the case on behalf of the Crown? He admitted that the sole issue was whether or not the hand-note was made and that question, as I have said before, must stand or fall by the evidence of Brij Mohan. In arriving at a conclusion he asked us to be guided by the probabilities of the case, which he suggested might be as follows:—

1. Did Brij Mohan ever borrow money from Luchmi Singh?

2. Even if he did borrow, would he not pay back the money rather than be sued?

3. Did he require money very urgently to buy tobacco leaves?

4. Even if he wanted to buy tobacco leaves, could he not have sent a man from his house on his return home with money to make the purchase that he wanted to?

5. Was it likely that if he was served with a summons that he would not have resisted the suit, and

6. Was it likely that having gone to see his Pleader on the 29th January, he would have returned home the next day not to return?

It is contended that Brij Mohan did not require this money in April 1911. He is alleged to be a well-to-do man; but I do not think that he is in any sense an exceptionally well-to-do man. However, the fact is that Brij Mohan came to the district where Luchmi Singh lived, that is 60 miles away from his home, to purchase tobacco leaves and he went to Murath Thakur who is an agent in that district. He made a large expenditure, more than he had cash with him by Rs. 200 and wanted money. Murath Thakur came with him to Luchmi Singh who was in the company of another person at the time, and he tells his version of what happened in a very graphic way. What was the substance of the conversation? Brij Mohan said to Luchmi Singh:—"I want money at the present moment, can you lend me money?" The answer was given in the presence of three persons who were wholly disinterested in the case, directly or indirectly. Luchmi Singh said, "Yes, I would advance you money at $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent." Thereupon Brij Mohan said: "$2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. is too high, make it 2 per cent." "Very well," said Luchmi Singh, "I will give you money to-morrow. Please come with the stamp paper and we will carry through the transaction"

In conformity with that arrangement as deposed to, Brij Mohan turned up at 10 o'clock the next day at the house of Luchmi Singh and then in the presence of some 5 or 6 persons this transaction was alleged to have taken place, and the evidence is that at least four of the witnesses who were present there saw the writing of the note; and that the same was signed by Murath Thakur on behalf of Brij Mohan and the money being given by Luchmi Singh to Brij Mohan. The learned Judge has throughout his judgment ignored this evidence entirely. Is this evidence to be disbelieved? Is this evidence to be held doubtful merely because it has been given by witnesses called for the defence? The Assistant Sessions Judge has given no weight to the evidence of the defence, nor has he attached any degree of importance to it, though that evidence has not been impeached. It is a monstrous thing that the learned Judge should believe the case of conspiracy, without evidence to support it, and at the same time ignore all the evidence of the witnesses put forward by the defence. There is no reason or sense in allowing this judgment to stand; and it would be all the more monstrous to do so in the face of the absolute manner in which the learned Judge has ignored the weight of evidence adduced on behalf of the defence. The accused has been tried in a manner that was most improper and unfair. We see very cogent reasons why the entire sentence should be set aside, and the accused acquitted.

Whether Brij Mohan wanted the money or not; or whether there was any necessity for his borrowing money has not to be decided. Undoubtedly it appears to us that some transaction in the nature of making a note took place. What confirms this? Brij Mohan goes to his Pleader on the 29th January, in company with Manbaran Thakur, and he gave his Pleader instructions as to what to do; and the Pleader did that and then he waited for his client to come back, but the client never came back and the Pleader then wrote a letter addressed to the place where his client lived, and that letter was posted through his clerk and the letter must have been received by Brij Mohan. The suggestion put forward by the prosecution is that Brij Mohan never in fact appeared before the Pleader, that he was personated by somebody else. This somebody was instigated by Kedru Singh to personate Brij Mohan according to the prosecution; and it is also suggested that Kedru Singh managed to intercept and receive the Pleader's letter; and that he or some one on his behalf also wrote the post card in reply to the Pleader which has been produced. If it is believed that this card came from Brij Mohan himself, then there is really in fact an end of the whole case put forward by the prosecution on behalf of Brij Mohan.

Mr. Fakhruddin said that he believed that the card came not from Brij Mohan but from some person personating Brij Mohan, viz., Kedru Singh. Now which is the most likely to be true? Either the card came from Brij Mohan or it came from Kedru Singh personating him. There is every reason to believe that it came from Brij Mohan and there is nothing to suggest that it came from Kedru Singh as his personator. Why all this evil motive was ascribed to Kedru Singh, though he was not an accused person, I do not know. He never lent the money in question.

This evil motive was suggested because Brij Mohan was his tenant and had some dispute with Kedru Singh owing to Brij Mohan's refusing to make some contribution towards the marriage of Kedru Singh's daughter in the shape of ghee, etc. I fail to see why the refusal of this contribution, if made, should create such a bad feud between Kedru Singh and Brij Mohan as to induce and prompt Kedru Singh to join in a conspiracy to get a third party to bring a maliciously false suit against Brij Mohan. I do not think the feud suggested between Brij Mohan and Kedru Singh was such as would induce Kedru Singh to take any such action as is suggested that he did take. We are not concerned with this aspect of this case. These topics have been laboured by the learned Judge irrespective of the real issue for trial in this case.

As to the post card, it was certainly posted in the district where Brij Mohan lived, who is an illiterate man, but no attempt to prove the authorship of the card has been attempted if it be not the post card of Brij Mohan. The Criminal Investigation Department could have been asked to trace the author of the post card and their report would have helped us to decide this case. As the case stands, we think the Crown case is irresistibly weak; and the evidence on the record induces and coerces us to believe that the post card is a genuine document and that it was written by Brij Mohan or by somebody on his behalf to his Vakil. It alleges that he owes the money to Luchmi Singh; and that he is willing to pay it off if he gets time; and he is willing to do whatever he can to make some satisfactory settlement with Luchmi Singh. And the post card also contains the admission that Brij Mohan instructed a Pleader to apply for time on his behalf and to get time to enable him to raise money to pay the debt due as soon as possible. If one believes that Brij Mohan was the author of this post card and that it is genuine, the Crown case disappears.

I have reviewed the evidence in detail. I have indicated what was the nature of the evidence adduced on behalf of the defence evidence. We are not concerned as to whether the plaintiff was duly served or not. We are here for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the case put forward by the Crown is supported by evidence—evidence which in the view of reasonable men would appear to show that the accused person was guilty. I must say that reading and faithfully considering the evidence I have no hesitation in saying that the evidence does not support the case put forward by the Crown.

One important matter, and very important matter, I want to refer to. The learned Judge has said that Brij Mohan stated that Kedru Singh was the son-in-law of Luchmi Singh and that Luchmi Singh was the brother-in-law of Balak Singh. Much comment has been made upon this point by the learned Judge. The learned Judge has worked upon it to an astonishing degree and from it he has inferred that the accused and all his people have joined in a conspiracy. I do not think there is much in this point, save that it supplied food to strengthen the learned Judge's mind that the case was one in which Kedru Singh and others formed themselves into a body of conspirators to bring a false suit against Brij Mohan.

Brij Mohan said he never came to know anything about Kedru Singh until the suit was instituted. Immediately afterwards he swears in a deposition before the Court that he had known these people for about 20 years. This is a downright lie. First he stated that he did not know of their relationship. Then he said he knew them for 20 years and said positively that he was present at the marriage of Kedru Singh which took place 20 years before. It is little matters of this kind that one has to look at for the purposes of crediting the uncorroborated evidence of one witness.

One other matter requires attention and that refers to Brij Mohan's statement that he never dealt in tobacco leaves, that he never had any transaction of that kind and that he dealt in money-lending business only.

Seven or eight witnesses were examined on behalf of the defence who proved beyond doubt that Brij Mohan did business in buying tobacco leaves up to the year 1911; and that even immediately before the hand-note transaction took place Brij Mohan dealt in tobacco leaves. Now who are these witnesses? They are the people with whom Brij Mohan used to deal in the purchase of tobacco leaves, either in buying or in selling tobacco leaves.

I have reviewed the evidence in detail and I am not satisfied that the learned Judge was right at the conclusion at which he arrived based upon the uncorroborated testimony of a complainant. I feel that the Crown has not discharged the onus of establishing the guilt of the accused. Therefore, we think it is improper and wrong to allow the conviction in this case to stand. Accordingly we set aside the conviction and acquit the accused.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—I do not think I am called upon to go into details in this case as the matter has been very fully dealt with by my learned brother. Suffice it to say that the prosecution in this case has failed to establish clearly the charge against the accused.

The only issue in this case is whether the hand-note in question is forged or not. In order to establish this issue the prosecution must give conclusive evidence to establish that the document is a false document within the meaning of section 464, and further that it was forged by the accused with one of the intents mentioned in section 463.

The learned Assistant Sessions Judge at the very outset of the judgment lays down a proposition for his consideration which, I think, was upon a misconception of the manner in which the criminal prosecution should be viewed. The learned Judge says:—"In a case like the present, however, the prosecution can give negative proof only to establish a prima facie case and it is for the defence to prove affirmatively that the document in question was really executed by the person by whom it purports to have been executed." The defence has no obligation of any kind as suggested in the latter portion of the passage quoted above. It is not for the defence in a charge of forgery to prove that the document was a genuine one. It is for the prosecution to prove that the document was a forged one and that the accused did forge it. In the civil case out of which this prosecution arose the issue no doubt was whether the hand-note was genuine or not and whether it was or was not executed by Brij Mohan and whether the money that was said to have been borrowed on the hand-note was really borrowed by him or not. It was then incumbent upon the plaintiff who is the accused in this case to establish that the document was a genuine one and as he failed to do so, the learned Munsif dismissed the suit and set aside the decree that was obtained ex parte upon the basis of that hand-note. As I have said above the table is turned and the onus is now upon the prosecution. The hand-note in question purports to have been executed by Brij Mohan, the body of it is said to be in the hand-writing of one Balak Singh and the signature of Brij Mohan is by the pen of one Murath Thakur. Brij Mohan in his evidence in order to prove that the document is a forged one says:—"I do not know Murath Thakur, I have never seen him, and I never asked him to sign any hand-note in my behalf." As regards Balak Singh he says "I never asked him to write the document in question." From the statement of Brij Mohan quoted above, it is clear that Murath Thakur and Balak Singh are necessary and primary witnesses to give information as to whether Murath Thakur did sign the document at the request of Brij Mohan and whether Balak Singh did write it at the request of Brij Mohan. Murath Thakur has not been examined in this case. It is impossible to hold upon the evidence of Brij Mohan alone that the prosecution has succeeded in proving that Murath Thakur did not sign the document in question at the request of Brij Mohan. No reason has been assigned, and nothing has been brought on the record, to show why Murath Thakur was not examined by the prosecution at any stage of the case. The prosecution has failed in its duty to place before the Court the best evidence available, and as such has failed to establish the guilt against the accused. I, therefore, agree with the views of my learned brother that the accused in this case should be acquitted and the conviction set aside.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 341—Wrongful restraint—Joint owner locking up shop—Civil dispute—Procedure.

One of two joint owners of a shop leased it to the complainant without the consent of the other joint owner, whereupon the latter put her lock on the shop. The complainant accused her of wrongful restraint:

Held, that the accused had committed no offence.

Obiter dictum.—Even if the action of the accused could be construed as coming within any of the penal provisions of the Penal Code, yet the matter in dispute was so plainly a civil dispute that a Magistrate would not only be justified, but would be acting in a very desirable way, if he dismissed the complaint as being an abuse of the process of a Criminal Court.

Criminal application for revision from conviction and sentence passed by the First Class Magistrate at Ahmedabad.

Mr. T. R. Desai, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—We think that this is quite plainly a bad conviction. The accused, who, according to the facts found, is one of two joint owners of a shop, put her lock on the shop. Without her agreement the other joint owner had leased the shop to the complainant; and the complainant has accused the present applicant that she has wrongfully restrained him because she has put her lock on to the shop and thereby prevented him from entering the shop.

There are two observations I should like to make on this case. The first is that even if the action of the applicant could be construed as coming within any of the penal provisions of the Penal Code, yet the matter in dispute is so plainly a civil dispute that I think any Magistrate would have been not only justified, but would have been acting in a very desirable way, had he dismissed such a complaint as being an abuse of the process of a Criminal Court. But on the facts here proved it cannot, it seems to me—and this is my second observation—be truly said that what the applicant has done can possibly come within any of the penal provisions of the Code. She has affixed her lock to a house of which she is the joint owner, and how that can conceivably amount to wrongfully restraining a supposed tenant, who is not her tenant, from entering the shop, I cannot understand.

I am quite clear, therefore, in my own mind, that this conviction must be set aside and that the fine, if paid, must be ordered to be refunded.

SHAH, J.—I am of the same opinion.

Conviction set aside.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 110 (f), 117—Security for good behaviour—Proof—General repute—Evidence.

Where it is alleged against a person, even in a proceeding under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, that he on a certain occasion committed a particular offence, that fact must be proved by relevant evidence. It is not at all the same thing as proving by evidence of general repute that a man is a habitual offender. [p. 464, col. 1.]

The fact that a person is so desperate and dangerous as to render his being at large without security hazardous to the community is not one which can, under section 117 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, be proved by evidence of general repute. [p. 464, col. 2.]

INDAR v. EMPEROR.

Criminal revision from an order of the District Magistrate, Farrukhabad.

Mr. A. H. C. Hamilton, for the Applicants.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Indar, Jhabbu Lal and Bhopal, a father and two sons, have been required by a Sub-Divisional Magistrate to give security to be of good behaviour for a period of one year under the provisions of section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. An appeal against that order has been dismissed by the District Magistrate. The case is before me on an application for revision in respect of these two orders. I have been through the record and I am quite satisfied that the orders complained of are illegal, on more than one ground, and cannot be affirmed. The order of the District Magistrate is perfectly clear and straightforward and shows beyond possible doubt the grounds upon which the prosecution of these men for bad livelihood has proceeded and the order against them passed. There was a dacoity at the house of one Ram Dayal, in the course of which the said Ram Dayal was murdered. Information was forthcoming to the effect that this dacoity had been organised by Indar, and that he and his sons, Jhabbu Lal and Bhopal, had taken part in it. The three men were placed on their trial along with others, charged with having taken part in this dacoity and in the murder of Ram Dayal. They were acquitted by the Sessions Court. The present proceedings are an attempt to prove by hearsay evidence what the prosecution were unable to prove by direct evidence at the Sessions trial. The learned District Magistrate says quite frankly that he is satisfied by the evidence on the record that Indar, Bhopal and Jhabbu Lal had got up the dacoity at the house of Ram Dayal. There is practically no legal evidence to this effect on the record. If it is alleged against a person, even in a proceeding under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, that he on a certain occasion committed a particular offence, that fact must be proved by relevant evidence. It is not at all the same thing as proving by evidence of general repute that a man is a habitual offender. Moreover, in the present case the preliminary order drawn up by the Magistrate shows clearly that the prosecution were not prepared to undertake to prove, by evidence of general repute or otherwise, that these men were habitual robbers or habitual receivers of stolen property. The case against them was that they were so desperate and dangerous as to render their being allowed without security hazardous to the community. This is not a fact which under section 117 of the Code of Criminal Procedure can be proved by evidence of general repute. I do not say that in a proceeding of this sort evidence of general repute may not be offered in support of an allegation that a person against whom proceedings have been taken is habitually a robber or habitually commits extortion, and that the Court may not be asked at the same time to consider whether this evidence of the man's general repute, read in connection with direct evidence establishing definite facts against him, may not justify a conclusion that he is a desperate and dangerous character and within the scope of clause (f) of section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. If, however, it is intended to conduct a prosecution on these lines, the accused should have fair notice of the fact in the preliminary order drawn up against him. The form of the preliminary order passed in this case clearly shows that those responsible for the conduct of the prosecution were not prepared to ask the Court to find that these men were habitual robbers or habitual receivers of stolen property. For all these reasons I am quite satisfied that the orders complained of cannot be sustained. I set aside the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and discharge Indar, Bhopal and Jhabbu Lal. If they have furnished the securities required, their sureties will be discharged and their own recognizances cancelled. If they are in custody for failure to furnish security, they must be at once released.

Order set aside.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, r. 10 (2)—Addition of parties—Heirs of original tenant, whether can be added as parties defendants in rent suit brought against one of them.

In a suit for recovery of arrears of rent instituted against one of the heirs of the original tenant whose name was recorded in the landlord's sherista, the remaining heirs of the tenant were on their application added as parties to the suit:

Held, that although the added defendants were not strictly necessary parties to the adjudication of the question arising between the plaintiff and the original defendant, yet they were not improperly added as parties to the suit. [p. 466, col. 2.]

Basli Bibi v. Hanif-ud-Din, 6 Ind. Cas. 570, 12 C. L. J. 267, followed.

Rule against the order of the Court of the Munsif, Dhubri.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Sir Rash Behari Ghose (with him Babu Debendra Nath Bagchi), for the Petitioners.—The Rule was directed against an order directing that the opposite parties should be joined as parties defendants to this suit, which is a suit for the recovery of arrears of rent. The opposite parties are strangers to the suit and applied to be made defendants on the ground that they were co-owners in the tenant's interest. The allegation of the opposite parties is that they are also the successors of the original tenant, and the tenancy has devolved upon them together with the defendant who has been sued for the recovery of rent and whose name has been registered in the landlord's sherista in place of the original tenant deceased. If they are not made parties to the suit their interest in the tenancy will be prejudiced.

Order I, rule 10, sub rule (2), of the Civil Procedure Code deals with the addition of parties. The plaintiff is not bound to add the opposite parties as defendants because he is not seeking any relief against them. The law laid down in McCheane v. Gyles (1) applies to the facts of this case, and on the authority of that case the plaintiff can very well contend that the order of the learned Munsif directing the addition of parties should be set aside as having been passed without jurisdiction.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Choudhury (with him Babu Jnanendra Mohan Das), for the Opposite Parties.—Order I, rule 10, sub-rule (2), of the Civil Procedure Code provides that the Court may, at any stage of the proceedings either upon or without the application of a party, order that the name of any person who ought to have been joined as a party to the suit or whose presence before the Court may be necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit be added as a defendant. Both the Munsif and the Subordinate Judge have found that the added defendants are necessary parties to this suit, and that irreparable loss will be incurred by them if they are not added as defendants, because the defendant No. 1 who has been sued upon is in collusion with the plaintiff-landlord and has consented to the enhancement of rent and to allow the holding to be treated as a non-occupancy holding, although in reality the holding is an occupancy holding.

No doubt, the decree will not be binding upon them, but the inevitable result of that would be to lead to a multiplicity of suits. The property may be put up to sale in execution of the decree so obtained by the landlord, and they will, in that case, be obliged to launch into expensive and ruinous litigation to protect their interests. The whole proceeding, as will appear from the judgments of the Courts below, is collusive and is meant to defraud the added defendants and to deprive them of the rights and interests which they have acquired in the holding by right of succession.

The case in Basli Bibi v. Hanif-ud Din (2) is an authority for the proposition that all the heirs of the deceased registered tenant should be made parties in a suit for recovery of arrears of rent. The case of Dwarka Nath v. Kishori Lal (3) also indicates the circumstances under which addition of parties should be allowed. On the authority of those cases there is not the least doubt that the order of the Courts below is a just and proper one.

Then again, under Order I, rule 10, sub rule (2), the Court has jurisdiction to exercise discretion in the matter of addition of parties, and in the exercise of their discretion the Courts below have found that having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case the defendants other than the defendant No. 1 should be added as parties. The order is an interlocutory order, and the Courts below have exercised their discretion properly, and so it is not open to revision under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. Refers to Chandi Roy v. Kirpal Roy (4).

Sir Rash Behari Ghose in reply.—If the opposite parties are not necessary parties, then the decision of the Courts below can be interfered with in revision. The presence of the added defendants is not necessary for the adjudication of any question that can arise in the rent suits between the plaintiff and the defendant No. 1, because they cannot be bound by any decree to which they are not parties. Under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, the High Court can revise an interlocutory order if there is any illegality or irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction by the lower Courts.

JUDGMENT.—These 15 Rules arise out of 15 suits for arrears of rent instituted three in the Court of the Subordinate Judge and twelve in the Court of the Munsif of Goalpara. The suit is brought by the admitted landlord and as instituted was against one of the heirs of the original tenant, a person of the name of Taripat who died in 1316. The heirs other than the original defendant being eight in number, two sons of Taripat and six female heirs applied that they should be added as parties to the suit. Their application was opposed by the plaintiff mainly apparently on the ground that the original defendant, the eldest son of Taripat, was the person whose name was recorded in his sherista. But in dealing with the application of the remaining heirs the Courts below have found that they are in fact heirs of Taripat and are in possession equally with the first defendant in the holdings in question. On these facts we are unable to distinguish these cases from the case of Basli Bibi v. Hanif-ud-Din (2), and though speaking for myself I am not prepared to say that the added defendants were strictly necessary parties to the adjudication of the questions that arise between the plaintiff and defendant No. 1, yet in view of the decision to which we have referred we are unable to say that the Courts below have exercised their discretion improperly by adding the co sharer tenants of the holdings as parties to these suits. In this view these Rules are discharged with costs. We assess the hearing fee at the aggregate sum of five gold mohurs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 13, 20, scope of—Partnership, suit against—Absence of one partner from British India, effect of—Deduction of time as against absentee defendant—Legal representatives of deceased partner, position of—Release by one partner, whether binds other partners—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 43, 241, 263—Entries in debtor's books, whether payments.

Entries in the account books of a debtor cannot be treated as payments of interest within the meaning of section 20 of the Limitation Act. [p. 467, cols. 1 & 2.]

In a suit against a partnership firm for moneys due on accounts, the plaintiff is entitled to a deduction of the time during which any of the partners was absent from British India, but such absence will save limitation only as against the absentee partner and not as against those who were within jurisdiction. [p. 469, col. 1.]

PALANIAPPA CHETTIAR v. VEERAPPA CHETTIAR.

The legal representative of a deceased partner does not continue to be a partner after the latter's death for purposes of winding up. He only becomes a lender in respect of any business that might be carried on by the surviving partners. If no business is carried on, he is a tenant-in-common with the surviving partners in respect of the assets of the business. [p. 470, col. 1.]

It is open to one of the partners of a firm to release a partnership liability. [p. 469, col. 2.]

After the death of one of the partners the surviving partners have power to release a claim. [p. 469, col. 2.]

If the release is fraudulent, the other partners can avoid it and seek to recover their share of the released debt The right, however, is personal to the partners, and the legal representative of a deceased partner is not entitled to it. [p. 470, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Ramnad, in Original Suit No. 72 of 1910.

Mr. Patanjali Sastri for Mr. A. Krishnasami Ayyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. Desika Chariar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit was found by the Subordinate Judge to be barred by limitation. The suit loans were taken on 28th December 1903 and 20th January 1904, but the suit was not instituted till 3rd November 1909.

Appellant's first contention may be briefly disposed of. His Vakil argues that in accordance with a usage of the trading community to which the parties belong, there was an automatic renewal at the end of every 3 months, the accrued interest being added to the principal and the total being treated as a fresh loan. There are entries in defendants' accounts which might be consistent with such a usage, but no evidence whatever has been adduced to show its actual existence. No such contention appears to have been raised in the lower Court as far as can be seen, and in paragraph 14 of his judgment the Subordinate Judge says these quarterly entries were made according to custom merely with a view to record exactly the amount of liability. In the absence of evidence of the usage this plea must be rejected.

It is next urged that these entries in defendants' accounts should be treated as payments of interest within the meaning of section 20, Indian Limitation Act. This position is equally untenable. Entries in the debtor's account books cannot be treated as payments. Vide Ichha Dhanji v. Natha (1). Appellant relies on Kariyappa v. Rachapa (2), but the ruling in that case is clearly against him. There is nothing to show that similar entries were made in plaintiff's own books: and the entries in the books of the debtor firm could in no circumstances be a complete answer to a suit brought by a creditor for recovery of the amount due to him.

The entries are not signed and so cannot be treated as acknowledgments under section 19, Indian Limitation Act.

The last argument of Mr. Patanjali Sastri on the question of limitation is entitled to far more weight. He argues that as the 1st defendant was not in British India for 6 years from 1903 to 1908, the plaintiff's cause of action was suspended during that period under section 13 of the Limitation Act, not only against the 1st defendant but also against defendants Nos. 6 and 8. Before disposing of this question of law, we must deal with a preliminary objection raised by the respondents to its consideration. It was argued on their behalf that this exemption from limitation was not specifically pleaded in the plaint, and that consequently the appellant is not entitled to be heard on it. We asked the learned Vakils whether, in view of the fact that the question was considered at length by the Subordinate Judge, there are any grounds for holding that they were prejudiced by the procedure adopted by the lower Court. In answer, we were told that if this point had been mentioned in the plaint and raised in the issue, the defendants could have pleaded that under the law of Epoh, the suit was barred by limitation altogether. We are unable to understand why this plea should not have been put forward, even though the exemption under section 13 of the Indian Limitation Act was not specifically raised in the plaint. Having regard to the fact that the plea of limitation can be disposed of upon the admission made by the defendant himself, and having also regard to the fact that the question was considered by the lower Court, we think we should not be justified in refusing to hear the appellant on this point. Before proceeding further we may say that the deposition of the 1st defendant is clear and unambiguous that between 1903 (we shall take the end of 1903) and December 1908 he was not in British India. On this evidence there can be no doubt that if the 1st defendant were the sole defendant, the suit will be in time.

The question argued by the learned Vakil for the appellant has two aspects. One is, whether the plaintiff is entitled to claim a reduction of time as against all the defendants by the fact that one of them was absent from British India, and the other, whether the plaintiff is not entitled to deduct the time at least as against the particular defendant who was not resident in India. These questions are not covered by any Indian authority. Mr. Patanjali Sastri drew our attention to some English cases bearing upon the Statute of Queen Anne. The language of that Statute is not very different from the one we have to construe. In Fannin v. Anderson (3) Lord Denman, Chief Justice, held that if one of the defendants were absent in a foreign country, the plaintiff was entitled to have the period of absence deducted in his favour as against the particular defendant and his co-promisors. This was followed by Jervis, C. J., in Towns v. Mead (4). The other learned Judges who sat with him expressed no opinion on the question. These two cases were quoted with approval in Roddam v. Morley (5). Prima facie, therefore, the extreme contention of the learned Vakil for the appellant would seem to derive support from these decisions; but, on examining them, we are of opinion that the plaintiff is not entitled to deduct the time of absence of the 1st defendant as against the other defendants. Mr. Shephard in his Commentary on the Indian Limitation Act points out that, under the English Law, if a co-obligor who is within the jurisdiction is sued, it is open to him to demur to the trial of the action on the ground that the other co-obligors should also be proceeded with at the same trial. Reference may be made in this connection to the well-known case of King v. Hoare (6). Having regard to section 43 of the Indian Contract Act which declares that co-promisors are jointly and severally liable, such a plea will not be available in India. Secondly, it is stated in Fannin v. Anderson (3): "The plaintiff cannot bring the absent defendants into Court by any act of his: and, therefore, if he be compelled to sue those who are within 6 years, without joining those who are absent, he may possibly recover against insolvent persons, and lose his remedy against the solvent ones who are absent." That again is not the rule of law which obtains in this country. See Muhammad Askari v. Radhe Ram Singh (7) and Moolchand v. Alwar Chetty (8). It is doubtful whether the principle mentioned by Lord Denman, C. J., is good law now even in England. See Bullen and Leake's Precedents of Pleadings, note A, at page 614 and Leake on Contracts, page 684 (6th Edition). In this treatise the law is stated in these terms:—"A judgment recovered against one of the joint obligors of a bond merges a joint liability on the bond, and is a bar to an action against the others; but if the obligors are bound jointly and severally, the judgment against one, without satisfaction, is no bar to an action against another upon his several liability, whilst any part of the debt remains due." A third ground upon which the English decisions proceed is pointed out in Darby and Bosanquet on Limitation, and that is that the principle of the cases decided under the Statute of James which applies to one of several plaintiffs residing abroad should govern the construction of the Statute of Queen Anne as well. None of the above special grounds are applicable to India. Moreover, the language of section 13 of the Limitation Act does not lend itself to the extreme contention of the appellant. Although the singular 'defendant' would include the plural 'defendants' the contention would necessitate our reading into the section some words like these, namely: "If there are more defendants than one and any one of them happens to be out of British India." We see no reason for adopting such a construction. We must, therefore, hold that the absence of the 1st defendant would not entitle the plaintiff to count the period of his absence in his favour as against defendants Nos. 6 and 8.

On the other hand, we think that the alternative contention of the learned Vakil for the appellant is well-founded. As we stated already, under section 43 of the Indian Contract Act the liability of co-promisors is joint and several. Section 249 of the Contract Act enunciates the same principle as regards partners. Consequently the plaintiff could sue for the whole of the amount the 1st defendant alone; and he would be entitled under section 13 of the Limitation Act to deduct the time during which the latter was absent from British India. The fact that in the suit thus brought, the plaintiff has impleaded defendants Nos. 6 and 8 is no ground for rejecting the claim as against the 1st defendant also. No violence will be done to the language of section 13 of the Limitation Act by holding that as against the absentee defendant alone the plaintiff is entitled to the deduction of time during which he was away from British India. The fact that he could have sued his co-obligors who were within British India is not a ground for holding that the claim against the 1st defendant is barred by limitation. See Abdul Khadir v. Ahammad Shaiwa (9). We must, therefore, hold that the appeal so far as defendants Nos. 6 and 8 are concerned fails and must be dismissed. The appeal also fails as against defendants Nos. 3, 4, 5, 7, 9 and 10 who are members of a joint family with defendants Nos. 6 and 8. We must now proceed to hear the appeal against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on the merits.

This appeal as against respondents Nos. 1 and 2 coming on for hearing the Court made the following

(9) 30 Ind. Cas. 423; 38 M. 419.

JUDGMENT.—On the 2nd question argued by Mr. A Krishnasami Ayyar, the facts are these:- The father of the plaintiff was a partner with defendants Nos. 3, 6 and 8 in the Epoh Firm, which we shall denominate as the creditor firm. Defendants Nos. 3, 6 and 8 were also partners with the 1st defendant in the Singapore Firm which we shall call the debtor firm. The plaintiff's father died in 1903. During the course of the winding up of the creditor firm, defendants Nos 3, 6 and 8 lent the debtor firm a certain sum of money. The present suit is to recover the plaintiff's share of that loan. The question whether the plaintiff can maintain a suit against a firm which consists of some of his own partners need not be decided, as we agree with the lower Court upon another point.

By Exhibit I, the debtor firm entered into a deed of composition with the outside creditors of that firm. The main provisions of that document are that the 1st defendant should pay a certain sum of money to pay off these outside creditors and that he should be released from liability to his partners for any moneys advanced by them. The arrangement come to appears to us to have been bona fide and reflects credit on the partners, in that they agreed to forego their own rights with a view to pay off those who had lent monies to the firm. We are unable to agree with Mr. A. Krishnasami Ayyar that by such an understanding, defendants Nos. 3, 6 and 8 secured any personal advantage to themselves. We agree that moral turpitude need not be brought home to them [see Nocton v. Ashburton (Lord) (10)], but we think that the arrangement was a business-like one and was entered into for the purpose of securing the best interests of the debtor firm. The question, under these circumstances, is whether the release of the 1st defendant is impeachable by the plaintiff. That one partner can release a partnership liability is well established. See Lindley, page 180. That after dissolution by the death of one of the partners, the surviving partners still have the right of releasing a claim is clear from section 263 of the Contract

(10) (1914) A. C. 932; 83 L. J. Ch. 784; 111 L. T. 641; 30 T. L. R. 602.

Act. Vide also Motilal Bechardass v. Ghellabhai Hariram (11).

Mr. A. Krishnasami Ayyar put forward the ingenious argument that after the death of one of the partners, his legal representative continues to be a partner for the purpose of winding up. We are unable to accede to this proposition. Under section 241, the legal representative of a deceased partner will become a lender in respect of any business that might have been carried on by the surviving partners. If no business is carried on, then the legal representative will be a tenant-in-common with the surviving partners in respect of the assets of the business. Vide Story on Partnership, section 346. That the principle of section 45 of the Contract Act is applicable to partners was decided in Motilal Bechardass v. Ghellabhai Hariram (11) and we agree with this proposition. The argument that by section 263 of the Contract Act, the legal representative of a deceased partner is by implication a partner is opposed to the language of the section. Clause 2 of section 29 of the English Partnership Act was relied on. That only shows that if during the winding up, the partner makes a secret profit, he is accountable to the legal representatives of the deceased partner for it. That section is no authority for the proposition contended for by the learned Vakil. Piercy v. Fynney (12), Veerasami Naicker v. Ibramsa Routher (13) and Baikunta Nath v. Hara Lal (14) lay down that if a release by one of the partners is fraudulent, the other partners can avoid it and seek to recover their share of the released debt. The legal representative is not entitled to such a right which is personal to the partners. We are therefore of opinion that the release of the 1st defendant is binding on the plaintiff. If he has been damnified by the conduct of defendants Nos. 3, 6 and 8, his remedy is to sue them for damages. As we have held that the claim against the defendants Nos. 3, 6 and 8 is barred by limitation, this matter need not be pursued any further.

The decision of the Court below is right and we dismiss the appeal with the costs of defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

Appeal dismissed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 278 OF 1917.

January 31, 1918.

DHARAMDEO SINGH—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

RAM PRASAD SAH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 27 (b)—Specific performance of contract, suit for—Subsequent bona fide transferee for value—Burden of proof.

A party pleading an exception must prove the exception. [p. 471, col. 1.]

Where in a suit for specific performance of a contract the plaintiff proves his prior contract, the burden of proving a subsequent bona fide transfer for value without notice under section 27 (b) of the Specific Relief Act lies on the party alleging it. [p. 471, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Saran, dated the 24th November 1916, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Saran, dated the 6th October 1915.

FACTS.—The plaintiff sued for specific performance of a contract for sale of land. The findings of the Court of Appeal were as follows:—"Thus I consider that the letter also has been satisfactorily proved and it proves the existence of the previous contract as alleged by the plaintiff. .....The next point to be considered is whether the subsequent purchasers had notice of the previous contract..... Altogther I consider that the plaintiff has failed to prove that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had notice of the previous contract."

Messrs. Lakshmi Narayan Singh and Rajendra Prasad, for the Appellant, submitted that the onus of proving that the defendants were bona fide purchasers for value without notice of the plaintiff's prior contract and that they had paid their money without such notice was on the defendants and the Court below had erred in throwing the onus on the plaintiff—Himatlal v. Vasudeo Ganesh (1) and Tiruvenkatachariar v. Venkatachariar (2).

[ROE, J., referred to Gudur Ranga Reddi v. Gundala Pitchi Reddi (3)].

Messrs. Kulwant Sahay and Nirsu Narayan Sinha, for the Respondents, replied.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the last question in issue No. 5 seems to us to have been decided upon an erroneous view of the burden of proof. That issue runs:—If so, whether such contract can prevail against the defendant's sale-deed? The answer to it is to be found in section 27, clause (b). The contract would prevail except against a transferee for value who has paid his money in good faith and without notice of the original contract. It is, we believe, well settled that a party pleading an exception must prove the exception. We, therefore, remand the case to the lower Appellate Court for a decision upon the evidence upon the record of the following issues:—

(a) Have the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 put before the Court a prima facie case which, if unrebutted, would show that they were transferees for value who have paid their money in good faith and without notice of the original contract, and

(b) If such a prima facie case has been put before the Court, have the plaintiffs succeeded in rebutting it either by cross-examination of the defendants or by direct evidence of their own?

Let the record be returned with the findings upon these issues before the Easter Vacation.

Case remanded for findings.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 52, scope of—Lis pendens, doctrine of, applicability of, to parties ranged on same side—'Any other party', meaning of—Purchases at auction sale, applicability of doctrine to.

The doctrine of lis pendens contained in section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act is applicable only as between opponents with regard to alienations made by any one of them during suit and it cannot be extended to parties to the suit who are ranged on the same side and between whom there is no issue for adjudication. The section does not bar a transferee from one of the parties pending suit from raising an issue which his transferor and transferees from his transferor after decree are at liberty to raise. [p. 473, col. 1.]

The expression 'any other party' in the section means any other party who can be said to be arrayed on the opposite side to the party alienating owing to the existence of some issue between them upon which the Court is called to adjudicate in the suit, which may thus be regarded as a contentious suit between them in which each of them requires the protection of the doctrine against alienations by the other. [p. 472, col. 2.]

The doctrine of lis pendens is an extension of the doctrine of res judicata and makes the adjudication in the suit binding on alienees from the parties pending the suit, just as the law of res judicata makes the adjudication binding on parties to the suit and on alienees from them after decree. [p. 473, col. 1.]

The doctrine of lis pendens applies to purchases at auction sales in execution of decrees against parties to the suit as well as to private alienations by the parties. [p. 472, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—Manguntha Bhandari filed a suit, Original Suit No. 114 of 1898, for a declaration that the sale deed of the suit properties which he had executed in favour of the 1st defendant in that suit and this was not binding on him, and for a further declaration that the mortgage for Rs. 2,000 executed by the 1st defendant in favour of the 3rd defendant in that suit, the father of the present plaintiffs, was not valid and binding on him. The real question was the validity of the sale under Exhibit D as, if that was upheld, the plaintiff had no concern with the subsequent mortgage by the vendee, the 1st defendant, to the 3rd defendant, the father of the present plaintiffs. The 1st and 3rd defendants in that suit made common cause and succeeded in upholding the validity of the sale under Exhibit D, subject to the plaintiff's lien for unpaid purchase-money. The 1st defendant in his written statement admitted his mortgage to the 3rd defendant, and as there was no contest about the mortgage, what the High Court apparently decided was that the plaintiff was entitled to a charge on the property for his unpaid purchase-money in priority to the 3rd defendant's mortgage. While this suit Original Suit No. 114 of 1898 was pending, the present 2nd defendant, by Exhibit H dated 18th December 1899, acquired the 1st defendant's interest in the suit properties at a sale in execution. It is well settled that the doctrine of lis pendens applies to purchases at auction sales in execution of decrees against parties to the suit as well as to private alienation by the parties, and the question before us is whether the 2nd defendant's purchase from the 1st defendant pending the suit was subject to the result of the suit and whether the result of the suit was to preclude the present 2nd defendant as alienee from the 1st defendant from disputing the validity of the mortgage executed by the 1st defendant to the 3rd defendant, the father of the present plaintiffs, in the present suit which they have brought to enforce it. That again raises the question whether the alienation by the 1st to the 2nd defendant pending suit is affected by the doctrine of lis pendens as embodied in section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act. As there was absolutely no contest on the point between the 1st and 3rd defendants in that suit, it seems clear that the present case is not within the English doctrine as to lis pendens which is intended to protect the parties to litigation against alienations by their opponents pending suit. This is clearly explained by Lord Cranworth in Bellamy v. Sabine (1), where he observes that lis pendens affects a purchaser, "not because it amounts to notice, but because the law does not allow litigant parties to give to others, pending the litigation, rights to the property in dispute, so as to prejudice the opposite party." Later on he observes, "pendente lite neither party to the litigation can alienate the property in dispute so as to affect his opponent," and in Faiyaz Husain Khan v. Prag Narain (2) Lord Macnaghten, delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee in a case governed by section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, referred to this as the 'correct mode of stating the doctrine.' If then the English doctrine and the principle on which it rests is only applicable as between opponents with regard to alienations made by any one of them during suit, does the language of section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act compel us to apply the doctrine as between parties to the suit who were ranged on the same side and between whom there was no issue for adjudication? The section provides that "during the active prosecution of a contentious suit or proceeding in which any right to immoveable property is directly and specifically in question, the property cannot be transferred by any party to the suit or proceeding so as to affect the rights of any other party thereto under any decree or order which may be made therein." It is not, I think, putting an unduly restrictive construction on the section to say that "any other party" whose rights are not to be affected means any other party who can be said to be arrayed on the opposite side to the party alienating, owing to the existence of some issue between them upon which the Court is called to adjudicate in the suit, which may thus be regarded as a contentious suit between them in which each of them requires the protection of the doctrine against aliena-

To hold otherwise would have strange and incongruous results which cannot have been contemplated by the Legislature. The law of lis pendens is an extension of the law of res judicata and makes the adjudication in the suit binding on alienees from the parties pending suit, just as the law of res judicata makes the adjudication binding on the parties to the suit and on alienees from them after decree. Now it is well settled that the bar of res judicata does not arise between defendants in a suit unless there is an active contest between them. Consequently the issue as to the validity of the mortgage would not be res judicata as between the present plaintiffs, the representatives of the 3rd defendant in the former suit, and the 1st defendant in that suit and this, or between them and the 2nd defendant, if the alienation by the 1st defendant to the 2nd defendant had been made after the decree instead of during the pendency of the suit. It would be indeed incongruous if the effect of section 52 were to bar a transferee from one of the parties pending suit from raising an issue which his transferor and transferees from his transferor after decree are at liberty to raise. In these circumstances I think we are justified in placing a restrictive construction on the language of section 52 so as to avoid this incongruity and to bring the section into line with the English Law, more especially as the observations of Lord Macnaghten already referred to seem to support this interpretation. This is the construction put on the section by Oldfield, J., with whom I agree.

This is sufficient to dispose of the appeal but, as some reliance has been placed on the fact that the decree of the High Court in Second Appeal No. 323 of 1902, on appeal from the decree of the District Judge in Appeal Suit No. 299 of 1900 affirming the decree of the District Munsif in Original Suit No. 114 of 1898, contains a declaration of the validity of the mortgage Exhibit I by the defendant to the 3rd defendant subject to the plaintiff's claim for Rs. 1,000 for unpaid purchase-money which it is said amounts to an adjudication on the question, I may state that this declaration is not, in my opinion, an adjudication between the 1st and the 3rd defendants in that suit. In their judgment, Exhibit E, the High Court expressly directed the decree of the lower Court to be modified by the insertion of this declaration, "as between the plaintiff and the 3rd defendant," and accepted the findings of the lower Court, one of which was that the mortgage by the 1st defendant to the 3rd defendant was fraudulent and without consideration (paragraph 5). It is not easy to reconcile their acceptance of this finding with the declaration they granted of the validity of the mortgage as between the plaintiff and the 3rd defendant. But, as already pointed out, in the result of the suit the plaintiff was not concerned with the validity of the mortgage, seeing that it was postponed to his claim for unpaid purchase-money and that he had failed to set aside his sale to the 1st defendant; and probably all that was meant was that the mortgage, which the 1st defendant, the mortgagor, did not dispute, was to be subject to the plaintiff's lien for Rs. 1,000 for unpaid purchase-money. In the result I agree with Oldfield, J., and would allow the Letters Patent Appeal with costs and make the order proposed by him.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 66—Extension of time, application for, after expiry of period—Court, power of, to allow extension.

SARADA CHARAN BASAR v. JURO RAM MANDAL.

It is open to a Court to grant an extension of the time limited by section 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, even where the application for extension is made after the expiry of the period prescribed by the section. [p. 574, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Khulna, dated the 15th April 1916, reversing that of the Additional Munsif at that place, dated the 25th September 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal, for the Appellants:—The decree-holder-appellant applied for the execution of the decree passed under section 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The judgment-debtor then applied for extension of time to pay off the decretal amount. The first Court disallowed the application for extension of time, but on appeal the lower Appellate Court allowed the application and granted further time within which the money due under the decree was to be paid. My submission is that as the application for extension of time was made after the expiration of 15 days mentioned in section 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and after the decree for ejectment had become absolute, the lower Appellate Court was wrong in allowing extension of time. Extension of time can be granted if it is applied for within 15 days limited by section 66 but not after that. See Sunkur Singh v. Huree Mohun Thakoor (1). Moreover, the application to extend the time was made to the executing Court which cannot extend the period of 15 days to save the judgment-debtor from the alternative consequence of ejectment. The decree must be executed as it stands, and the executing Court, to which the application for extension of time was made, cannot go behind the decree.

Babu Satindranath Mukherjee, for the Respondent:—The Court has power to extend the time though the application was made after the expiration of 15 days. See Rao Banee Ram v. Prannath Shaha Koyal (2).

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal in reply.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of proceedings in execution of a decree for rent made under the provisions of section 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The order for ejectment could, therefore, not be carried into effect until after the expiry of the 15 days allowed for payment by the second sub-section of the section which we have cited. The decree was made on the 24th May. The order was drawn up and signed on the 31st May. The arrears should, therefore, have been paid on or before the 15th June. As a matter of fact the amount was not so paid into Court, and on the 5th August the decree-holder applied for execution. Notice was issued upon the judgment-debtor, and on the 7th September he appeared and applied for extension of time, it being his case that he had no notice of the decree and that no notice of the application in execution was served upon him. The first Court found no reason to extend the time and accordingly rejected his application. Against that order the tenant judgment-debtor preferred an appeal to the District Judge of Khulna, and at the hearing of the appeal the learned Subordinate Judge extended the time by a period of one week from the date of his order. We are informed that the payment has been made in accordance with the terms of that order, against which the decree-holder now appeals.

His main contention is that inasmuch as before the 7th September, on which date the judgment-debtor made his application for extension, the period of 15 days had already expired, it was no longer open to the Court to enlarge the time. In support of this contention he refers us first to the case of Sunkar Singh v. Huree Mohan Thakoor (1), in which it was held under the corresponding provisions of Act X of 1859 and Act VIII of 1869 that no extension of the period of grace could be granted. But under the law as contained in those two enactments the Court had no power, or at least was not expressly given the power, to extend the statutory period. Under the present Act by virtue of sub-section (3) of section 66 the Court is expressly authorized and empowered to enlarge the time. The appellant has next sought to distinguish the case of Bodh Narain v. Mahomed Moosa (3), in which it was held that under the provisions of section 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the provisions of section 244, now section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it was open to the executing Court to extend the time, on the ground that there the application by the judgment-debtor was made before the expiration of the statutory period. That no doubt is so, but the reasoning which led the Judges to the conclusion at which they arrived would equally support an extension granted on an application made after the statutory period had expired. We also find that in section 148, Civil Procedure Code, the principle that the Court may enlarge a period prescribed or allowed even though the period originally fixed may have expired has been expressly recognised, and we further find that even under the old Rent Act in the case of Rao Banee Ram v. Prannath Shaha Koyal (2) an extension of time was granted though the statutory period had expired before the application for enlargement was made. We can see no reason why the power of the Court to extend or enlarge the period allowed by law should be restricted in the manner suggested by the appellant. In so far as the exercise of the Appellate Court's discretion is concerned, we are of opinion that for the extension of time the learned Subordinate Judge has given sufficient reason and has exercised his discretion in a proper manner. He points out that the decree here in question was an ex parte decree and there is nothing to show that it was in fact brought to the notice of the judgment debtor until the proceedings in execution were taken. Further, as the learned Subordinate Judge has pointed out, in making the decree the first Court had omitted to specify, as he should have specified, the amount of the arrear and of the interest due.

(1) 22 W. R. 460.
(3) 26 C. 639; 3 C. W. N. 628; 13 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1010.

For these reasons we dismiss this appeal with costs. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 110—Leave to appeal to Privy Council—Subject-matter of suit, value of—Property directly or indirectly involved—Interest on arrears, whether can be added.

Plaintiff brought a suit to recover arrears of pension from September 1911 to July 1912 together with interest thereon and valued his suit at Rs. 5,445. His suit was dismissed by the first Court but was decreed by the High Court. The defendant applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council:

Held, (1) that the subject-matter of the suit was not above Rs. 10,000, nor did the decree involve a claim to or question respecting property of the value of Rs. 10,000: [p. 476, col. 2; p. 477, col. 2; p. 478, col 2; p. 479, col. 2.]

(2) that in determining the value of the subject-matter of the suit the interest payable until realisation of the decree could not be added to the amount claimed, nor could the arrears of pension accrued due since the decree be taken into consideration; [p. 476, col. 2; p. 478, col. 2.]

(3) that no question respecting future payment of the pension was involved in the decree; [p. 478, col. 2; p. 479, col. 1.]

(4) that the value of the properties to be attached in execution of the decree could not be said to have even an indirect connection with the decree. [p. 478, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—In this case the defendant applies for a certificate that the case complies with the requirements of section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure and is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. The facts may be shortly stated. The plaintiff Babu Shiv Saran Lal was appointed in 1902 to act as Manager of the Dumraon Raj by the late Maharani Beni Prasad Koeri, who under her deceased husband's Will had a life-interest in the estate. In 1906 the Maharani executed an ekrarnama in favour of the plaintiff granting him a pension of Rs. 500 per month from the date when he should retire from the management of the estate. The Maharani died in December 1907. After some litigation the first defendant the Maharaja Kesho Prasad Singh succeeded in proving his title to the estate. In March 1908 the plaintiff ceased to be Manager of the estate and was paid his pension until September 1911, when the first defendant obtained possession of the Raj. In August 1912 the plaintiff instituted the present suit claiming the pension from September 1911 to July 1912 and interest on unpaid arrears. He failed before the Subordinate Judge of Shahabad, but on appeal to this Court he obtained a decree against the first defendant for Rs. 5,445 together with interest at 6 per cent. per annum until realisation. By the terms of the decree it was ordered that the decree should be executed only against the property of the late Maharani in the hands of the first defendant and which had not been duly administered by him. The judgment was based upon the findings that although she could not bind the estate, the Maharani as tenant for life had power to dispose of her own acquisitions and that these did not form part of the estate at her death and that there was prima facie evidence to shew that the first defendant came into possession of property, both moveable and immoveable, which the late Maharani might have disposed of if she pleased. There is no finding either as to the exact value of such property, although there was evidence to shew that it was considerable, amounting to some lakhs of rupees, or as to whether it had been duly administered by the first defendant. It was but faintly argued that the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit amounted to Rs. 10,000 within the meaning of the first paragraph of section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code, but it was contended that the decree of this Court involves directly or indirectly a claim to or question respecting property of that amount or value within the meaning of the second paragraph of the section. It was urged in support of the second contention that the decision arrived at by the judgment from which the defendant seeks to appeal involves a claim to have the accrued and future instalments of pension paid out of the Maharani's estate and as the instalments which are now due but still unsatisfied amount to considerably more than Rs. 10,000, the requirements of the second part of the section are fulfilled. In my opinion neither of these contentions can succeed. The first can be shortly dealt with. The plaint does not claim anything beyond the sum of Rs. 5,445 made up of pension and interest to July 1912 and further interest until realisation. No claim is made for a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to furture pension or to a charge on the property for such pension, although it is true there is a general claim for any other relief to which the plaintiff may be entitled without specifying its nature. That interest payable until realisation cannot be added in ascertaining the amount of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance was definitely determined in the case of Moti Chand v. Ganga Prasad Singh (1), where their Lordships of the Privy Council rejected this contention and refused leave to appeal. But two decisions of the High Court at Calcutta were referred to where a claim for future mesne profits was allowed to be taken into consideration in estimating the amount of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance although the addition of mesne profits at the date of the decree in such Court did not bring the total up to the appealable amount. [See Dalgleish v. Damodar Narain Chowdhury (2) and Basanta Kumar Roy v. Secretary of State (3).] How far these decisions are consistent with the principle which guided their Lordships in Moti Chand v. Ganga Prasad Singh (1) (ubi sup.) or how far their authority may have been shaken by the more recent decision of the Madras High Court in Subramania Aiyar v. Sellammal (4), it is not necessary to determine. It is sufficient to say that in the present case the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance amounts to nothing more than the sum claimed and there is no claim for mesne profits or anything analogous thereto. It follows, therefore, that the case does not fulfil the requirments of the first paragraph of the section.

The second contention, viz., that the case fell within the second paragraph of the section led to some argument before us as to the class of cases to which the second paragraph of section 110 is meant to apply. The case of Subramania Aiyar v. Sellammal (4) (ubi sup.) was relied on by the respondent who opposed the application. In that case the subject-matter of the suit including mesne profits in the Court of first instance was under Rs. 10,000, but by the addition of mesne profits for the period between the institution of the suit and the date of the petition for leave to appeal to his Majesty in Council the value of the subject-matter in dispute exceeded that amount. It was there decided, in a judgment reviewing at length the earlier decisions, that the second paragraph of the section applied only to cases involving some claim or question to or respecting property other than that in respect to which the claim is brought and which may be taken into account therewith in making up the appealable value, or that it may possibly also apply to cases involving claims incapable of a money valuation such as claims to easements and the like, but apart from this, if nothing beyond what is in one of the judgments in that case described as the object-matter in dispute is involved, the first paragraph of section 110 alone applies. This decision was at variance with the view expressed by Sir Francis Maclean at the end of his judgment in Dalgleish's case (2), although this part of his judgment was not necessary for the determination of the case, he having already held that the first paragraph of the section had been complied with. Were it necessary for us to choose between these authorities. I should be inclined to give more weight to the reasoned decision of the Madras High Court than to the dictum of Sir F. Maclean in the earlier case, but a further point which, in my opinion, concludes the case against the petitioner was raised and argued before us.

It was contended by the respondent that the petitioner had failed to shew that there was any property of the value of Rs. 10,000 or upwards in respect to which any claim or question was involved, as the petitioner's case was and always had been that there was no property belonging to the late Maharani in his hands and not only administered against which alone under the form of the decree the respondent's claim could be executed. In the petition praying for a certificate that the case fulfils the requirements of the section, the grounds of appeal are set out and under the headings (n) to (s) the petitioner disputes the contention that any property of the late Maharani came into his hands or that she ever had any separate property. It seems to me that whether any property such as that mentioned in the decree exists is a matter at present undecided and one which can only be finally determined in the execution proceedings now pending, in which proceedings the petitioner is vigorously contesting the existence of such property and has all along refused to pay the decretal amount, although his application to stay execution pending the appeal to His Majesty in Council has on a previous occasion been rejected by this Court. In these circumstances I think that even if the second alternative in section 110 is applicable, the petitioner has failed to show that the decree involves a claim or question to or respecting property of the requisite amount of value. The petition will, therefore, be dismissed with costs. Hearing fee five gold mohurs.

MULLICK, J.—I agree that leave should be refused, but as both sides have sought to draw an analogy from certain cases relating to mesne profits I think it is necessary to make some reference to them. The first case on which the defendant petitioner for leave relies is Dalgleish v. Damodar Narain Chowdhury (2). There the plaintiff sued for recovery of possession of land of the value of Rs. 5,400 and claimed mesne profits till possession was delivered. The suit was decreed in favour of the plaintiff and in the execution proceedings he put in a claim for mesne profits for over Rs. 30,000. The defendant appealed to the High Court, and the execution proceedings were stayed. The appeal was allowed and the plaintiff applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. It was contended that the case did not fall within the first part of section 595 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, which corresponds to section 110 of the present Civil Procedure Code, because although the claim in the appeal exceeded Rs. 10,000 the value of the subject-matter of the suit was below that sum. Maclean, C. J., and Holmwood, J., held that mesne profits could be taken into account in estimating the value of the subject matter of the suit. They also expressed the opinion that even if the first part of section 596 was not applicable, still the decree involved directly or indirectly some claim or question to or respecting property of the value of Rs. 10,000 or upwards within the meaning of the second clause of section 596.

The defendant next draws our attention to Basanta Kumar Roy v. Secretary of State (3). That was a suit for possession of land with mesne profits. The value of the land as stated in the plaint was Rs. 6,156. In the application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council mesne profits and interest down to the date of the High Court decree were estimated at Rs. 5,607. It was admitted that the value of the matter in dispute on appeal was over Rs. 10,000, but it was contended that the value of the subject-matter in the Court of first instance was less. Jenkins, C. J., in holding that mesne profits and interest thereon could be taken into account in estimating the value of the subject-matter of the suit made the following observations: —

"Seeing that under the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882, the Court could provide in the decree for the payment of mesne profits in respect of the property from the institution of the suit until the delivery of possession or until the expiration of three years from the date of the decree with interest, such mesne profits and interest can, I think, be legitimately regarded as part of the subject-matter of the suit."

The applicability of the second part of section 596 of the Civil Procedure Code was not considered.

On the other hand, the plaintiff relies on Subramania Aiyar v. Sellammal (4). There the value of the land was under Rs. 10,000 but by the addition of mesne profits the value of the matter in dispute at the time of the application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council exceeded Rs. 10,000. The Court held that mesne profits could not be added for the purpose of calculating the value of the subject-matter of the suit. The Court also observed that the second part of section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code did not apply and that the decree for mesne profits could not be said to involve directly or indirectly some claim or question to or respecting property of value exceeding Rs. 10,000.

There is, therefore, a clear conflict between the views of the High Courts of Calcutta and Madras, but in my opinion it is unnecessary for the disposal of the application now before us to decide which of these views is correct.

Here the first question is whether the value of the matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty is Rs. 10,000. Admittedly it is not, even if interest up to the date of the High Court decree is taken into account. But it is suggested that in calculating the value of the matter in dispute on appeal as well as the value of the subject-matter of the suit we should include arrears of pension which may have become due since the trial Court's decree with interest thereon. In my opinion this suggestion cannot be accepted. I think it is quite clear that the subject matter of the suit was only the specific and ascertained sum of Rs. 5,445 due on account of arrears of pension and interest thereon. The suit did not in any way concern itself with any future arrears of pension. The plaintiff made no claim for them and it is not known whether he intends to bring future suits in respect of them. How then can anything which the plaintiff does not claim and which has not and could not have been given by the decree be the subject-matter of the suit or be in dispute on appeal? No analogy can be drawn from the practice of the Calcutta High Court in respect of mesne profits which the Civil Procedure Code compels the Court to grant if claimed in the plaint.

At the same time I prefer not to rest my decision on the view of their Lordships of the Madras Court and I am satisfied without any reference to the decision in Subramania Aiyar's case (4) that the present application does not come within the first part of section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The next question is whether the decree involves a claim directly or indirectly to property of the value of Rs. 10,000. It is contended that the decree involves a claim to subsequent arrears of pension which have by now amounted to more than Rs. 10,000. The answer to this is that the decree does not involve either directly or indirectly a claim to anything more than the sum decreed and the interest thereon. According to the decided cases it might have been otherwise if the plaintiff had brought suits for these subsequent arrears, but it seems clear that while such suits are in gremio futuri the second part of section 110, Civil Procedure Code, does not apply.

The next question is whether the decree directly or indirectly involves a question respecting property of the value of Rs. 10,000. It is contended that it does, because the arrears of pension which have become due subject to the decree are the property of the plaintiff just as much as the arrears already decreed. The reply to this is that such arrears do not become the plaintiff's property till he has obtained a decree from Court or till the defendant has admitted liability for the same.

Finally it is contended that the decree involves indirectly the question whether property of the value exceeding Rs. 10,000 is liable to attachment in execution of the decree. The answer to this is that it has not been found by any Court whether the defendant has in his hands any property of which attachment can be made in execution of the decree. That matter was expressly left open in the appellate judgment of the High Court, and the defendant's case before us is that he has no such property in his hands. Moreover, the question as to what properties can be attached in execution of the decree cannot, in my opinion, be said to have even an indirect connection with the decree itself. The decree-holder may attach property or may not; if he does attach property the value of such property may be over Rs. 10,000 or it may not. It does not necessarily follow that any question as to title to property is directly or indirectly involved in the relief which the Court has here given to the decree-holder.

In this view of the case it is unnecessary to discuss the correctness of the opinion which has been expressed in Subramania Aiyar's case (4) to the effect that the property referred to in the second part of section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code must be property other than the subject-matter of the suit. Such a view might, I apprehend, lead to difficulties in drawing the line between property which is the subject matter of the suit and property which is not. In my opinion the Legislature has expressly enacted the second clause in wide terms, so that each case may be dealt with upon its own facts.

In the present case, giving the words of the second part of section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code the most liberal construction, it does not seem to me possible to say that the decree involves a claim to or question respecting property of the value of Rs. 10,000.

Mr. M. D. Deva Doss, for the Respondents in S. A. No. 1406 of 1916 and for the Petitioners in C. R. P. No. 800 of 1915.

JUDGMENT.—We are unable to uphold the judgment of the learned District Judge. He is apparently of opinion that the promissory note given by the plaintiff can be supported on the theory that the promise by the father is binding on the son as a pious obligation. If the father himself could have repudiated the promise, the son cannot be placed in a worse position. Therefore, the real question is whether the original promise by the father is enforceable.

Notwithstanding the adverse criticism of Sir Frederick Pollock on Kedar Nath Battacharji v. Gorie Mahomed (1), we are not prepared to differ from the statement of the law therein contained. The fact that a similar promise in England may not be enforced by the Courts of law is not conclusive of the question, as definition of consideration in the Indian Contract Act is wider and more comprehensive than is accepted in the English Courts. Kedar Nath Bhattacharji v. Gorie Mahomed (1) has been accepted as good law in Abdul Aziz v. Masum Ali (2) and we are prepared to follow these rulings. But before applying them the necessary facts have to be ascertained.

It may be, as argued by Mr. Deva Doss, that the defendant was himself induced to pay money towards the charitable purposes on the faith of the plaintiff's promise. In that case according to the definition of the term consideration, the plaintiff's promise will be enforceable. The definition taken by Leake from the well-known case of Carlill v. Carbolic Smoke Ball Co. (3) will be equally applicable to such a promise. This is what Leake says: "The consideration required to support a promise has been defined as consisting of any damage, or any suspension or forbearance of his right or any posibility of a loss occasioned to the plaintiff by the promise of another, although no actual benefit accrues to the party undertaking." It may also be found that the daily services have been performed by the defendant, relying on the promise of the plaintiff. The learned Counsel for the respondent has stated that his client has paid interest believing that the promised subscription will come in. If that detriment has been suffered the promise of the plaintiff will be enforceable.

The District Judge has not expressed any opinion on these questions of fact. We must reverse his decree and direct him to dispose of the appeal in the light of the above observations. The decree of the Subordinate Judge in Small Cause Suit No. 1575 of 1913 must also be reversed, because that case cannot be disposed of independently. We transfer the Small Cause suit to the District Judge. He will dispose of that suit in accordance with his conclusions in the appeal. Costs in both the second appeal and the civil revision petition will abide the result.

Appeal allowed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1703 OF 1915.

HARIDAS DEY—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

KAILASH CHANDRA BOSE AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, rr. 4, 33—Appellate Court, power of, to vary decree in favour of persons who do not appeal—Arbitration—Reference on application of some of the parties, validity of.

Except under Order XLI, rule 4, Civil Procedure Code, an Appellate Court cannot vary a decree of a lower Court as regards its adjudication on the rights and liabilities of the parties who have not joined in the appeal and who are not parties to the litigation in the Appellate Court. [p. 482, col. 2.]

Order XLI, rule 33, Civil Procedure Code, does not apply to a person who is not a party to the appeal. [p. 482, col. 2.]

Quære.—Whether an order of reference to arbitration made by the Court on the application of the plaintiff and one of the defendants is legal?

Appeal against the decree of the Officiating Sub-Judge, Dacca, dated the 23rd April 1915, modifying that of the Munsif, 1st Court, Dacca, dated the 17th of December 1914.

HARIDAS DEY v. KAILASH CHANDRA BOSE.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

A preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the Respondents by Babu Dwarka Nath Chakravarty that no appeal lay in the case, because the suit was referred to arbitration and the decree which had been passed was in accordance with the award of the arbitrator.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury (with him Babu Sasadhur Roy, Junior), for the Appellant.—The whole question turns upon Order XLI, rule 33, Civil Procedure Code. Moreover, the decree of the Munsif was in accordance with the award. So the Subordinate Judge in appeal had no jurisdiction to set aside or vary the decree made by the Munsif. As the decree appealed from did not proceed on any ground common to all the defendants, and the non-contesting defendants Nos. 1 and 3 to 7 did not prefer any appeal against the decree of the Munsif, the Subordinate Judge had no power to set aside the judgment of the Munsif so far as it related to these non-contesting defendants who did not join in the appeal to the Subordinate Judge. I also submit that the reference to arbitration was not legal. Out of the seven defendants only one defendant No. 2 joined with the plaintiff in applying to the Court for an order of reference to arbitration.

Babu Upendra Lall Roy (with him Babus Dwarka Nath Chakrabarty and Prokash Chundra Pakrashi), on behalf of the Respondents (defendants Nos. 3 to 7).—The decree passed in this case was not in accordance with the award. Only one witness was examined by the Munsif on behalf of the plaintiff, but this witness did not prove the plaintiff's title to the land in the suit. How could the Munsif pass a decree declaring the plaintiff's title and ordering delivery of possession to the plaintiff as against the defendants Nos. 1 and 3 to 7 who did not join in the application for reference to arbitration and who were not, therefore, bound by the award?

[HUDA, J.—You did not appeal against the Munsif's decree, and as the appeal preferred by defendant No. 2 did not proceed on any ground common to all the defendants, how could the decree made by the Munsif against your clients be set aside by the Appellate Court?]

When defendant No. 2 preferred an appeal in the lower Appellate Court, my clients defendants Nos. 3 to 7 were not made parties and I submit that the decree which was made by the Munsif did not affect my clients at all, as the decree was not against all the defendants but against the defendant, obviously meaning thereby the defendant No. 2 who alone contested the suit, and who alone joined the plaintiff in the application for reference to arbitration.

[FLETCHER, J.—But the Privy Council has held that a decree must be read along with the judgment. The use of the singular word "defendant" is a clerical mistake for defendants.]

[HUDA, J.—The word in the decree is a Bengali word * * * (pratibadi) which does not necessarily mean a single defendant.]

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury, in reply.—The reference to arbitration was illegal so the arbitrators had no jurisdiction to make the award. The plaint shows that the plaintiff's cause of action was common against all the defendants. The question is, did all the parties interested in the suit agree that the matter in difference between them shall be referred to arbitration? The defendants Nos. 1 and 3 to 7 did neither agree nor sign the application for reference to arbitration. Therefore, I submit that the entire arbitration proceedings were illegal and the award made on the illegal reference was void and of no effect. He referred to Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (1) and Joy Prokash Lall v. Sheo Golam Singh (2).

[FLETCHER, J.—The award is all right; if there was any illegality in the award, objection ought to have been taken at the proper time after the award was filed. The Privy Council case in Ghulam Khan v. Mohamad Hassan (1) is quite distinguishable and does not apply here. Under the present Civil Procedure Code no appeal lies from a decree which is in accordance with the award.]

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge of Dacca, dated the 23rd April 1915, modifying the decision of the Munsif of the same place. The plaintiff

(1) 29 C. 167; 6 C. W. N. 226; 29 I. A. 51; 12 M. L. J. 77; 4 Bom. L. R. 161; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 154; 25 P. R. 1902 (P. C.).

(2) 11 C. 37; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 782.

brought the suit to recover possession of a plot of land on the ground that the pro forma defendants who were his burgadars had been dispossessed by the defendant No. 2 and the defendants Nos. 1 and 3 to 7 all acting together. One defendant only, namely, the defendant No. 2 contested the suit, and, therefore, it seems to have been assumed that under the terms of the Civil Procedure Code the plaintiff and the defendant No. 2—were the only parties who were interested in the matter and accordingly those two parties—the plaintiff and the defendant No. 2 agreed to refer the matter to arbitration. The arbitrators had made their award. The award was presented to the Court and no objection within the time allowed by the Indian Limitation Act was preferred against the award so made. The case then came on for final disposal before the learned Munsif and the learned Munsif—whether it was noticed by the parties before or not I do not know and it does not matter—proceeded in this way: First of all, he recorded evidence as against the non-appearing defendants and then he decreed the suit in the terms following. The suit be decreed in accordance with the award of the arbitrators in so far as it relates to the plaintiff's title to the land, that the plaintiff's title to the land be declared and that he do recover possession of the disputed land as against the defendants. It is quite clear that it was a good order which all the defendants were bound to obey, namely, to deliver possession of the land to the plaintiff in accordance with the judgment of the learned Munsif. Thereupon the defendant No. 2 alone preferred an appeal to the learned Subordinate Judge. The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the appeal of the defendant No. 2, but set aside the judgment of the learned Munsif so far as it related to the non-contesting defendants who had not joined in the appeal to the learned Subordinate Judge. Now, we have an appeal and a cross-objection.

The cross-objection was preferred by the defendant No. 2, who was one of the parties who went to arbitration. His case can be very shortly disposed of. He lodged no objection against the award made by the arbitrators and, in accordance with section 16 of the Second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, the Court passed a decree. It is not suggested that the decree so made is in excess of the award, nor it is suggested that it is not in accordance with the award. The provisions of the existing Code of Civil Procedure clearly prohibit questions as to the validity of the decree after it has been passed, except in cases where the decree is in excess of or is not in accordance with the award. That being so, whatever may be one's own views with regard to the order of reference made in the suit between the plaintiff and the defendant No. 2, it is much too late now to question the validity of the decree passed on the award. The cross-objection of the defendant No. 2 must accordingly be refused.

The appeal of the plaintiff may also be disposed of in an equally short way. The non-contesting defendants were directed by the learned Judge of the primary Court to deliver over possession of the land to the plaintiff. They preferred no appeal against that order and it was not competent to the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court in the appeal to which the non-contesting defendants were not parties to vary the decree of the first Court in the manner he did as regards them. It is suggested that he had power under Order XLI, rule 33, Civil Procedure Code. That obviously is not so. That section does not apply to a person who was not a party to the appeal. These non-contesting defendants were not parties to the litigation in the lower Appellate Court. Obviously, on first principles, the learned Judge in that Court could not vary the decree of the Court of first instance as regards their rights and liabilities as adjudicated on by that Court. The appeal must, therefore, be allowed to this extent that the decree of the lower Appellate Court, in so far as it concerns the defendants Nos. 1 and 3 to 7, must be set aside and the decree of the Court of first instance as regards them will be restored. The appellant will be entitled to realize his costs in this appeal from the defendants Nos. 1 and 3 to 7. The appeal as against the defendant No. 2 will be dismissed. The defendant No. 2's costs in the appeal and the plaintiff's costs in the cross-objection will be set off one against the other and neither of these two parties will be entitled to claim anything against the other.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I agree.

Per Abdur Rahim, J.—A deed cannot be treated as void for undue influence merely because it is unreasonable or its terms are prejudicial to the donor or his kinsmen. If the deed is true and a well-understood and voluntary act of the donor, no legal objection can be taken to it merely on the ground that it is such as would not be expected from a man of ordinary prudence. Undue influence is not a matter always capable of direct proof, and must depend, in its very nature, on the conclusions to be drawn from the entire circumstances in which the transaction had its origin. [p. 484, col. 2.]

Per Oldfield, J.—The proof of undue influence may be either direct, though that cannot be insisted on, or indirect with reference to the opportunities for and disposition to the exercise of influence on the one side and the result of its exercise, as indicated by the merits of the transaction, the acceptance of false representations and the entertainment of false beliefs on the other. This appeal coming on for hearing on the 17th, 18th, 19th and 22nd October 1917 and having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—The appellant, who is a minor, instituted the suit by her next friend, her father, to recover certain properties from the respondent-defendant, her husband. Her title is based on a deed of gift executed by Krishna Kampti, the adoptive father of the respondent, who died on the 17th April 1909. The defence on the merits, broadly speaking, was of two-fold character. Firstly, that the alleged deed of gift was executed under the undue influence of the appellant's father who procured it by means of misrepresentation and fraud and secondly, that the contemplated gift was never completed according to law and was in fact revoked by Krishna Kampti before it could be completed.

Krishna Kampti, who was possessed of considerable properties, moveable and immoveable, was an inhabitant of a village called Karingan in the South Kanara District. He adopted the defendant when he was only 9 months old and until shortly before the date of the transaction in question, the defendant and his first wife lived in the same house with Krishna Kampti and his wife on the best of terms. The defendant, however, had no child though he was nearly 39 years old and his wife about 33. Krishna Kampti, who was 70 years old in 1908, being concerned that his son had no issue conceived the idea of marrying him to a second wife. The defendant was much attached to his first wife and did not want to marry again; but he was at last prevailed upon to marry the plaintiff who was at the time a girl of 11 years, she being the daughter of Krishna Kampti's wife's brother, one Ramayya Shanbhogu. The case of the defendant is that this Ramayya Shanbhogu had much influence over Krishna Kampti, that even before the marriage actually took place, he had formed designs with regard to Krishna Kampti's properties and that it was he who by means of misrepresentations and unfair devices succeeded within a few months of the marriage in alienating his father's affections from him and misleading his father to execute documents, the effect of which on his own and the family's interest he did not fully realize. The plaintiff's marriage with the defendant was brought about on the 9th March 1908, and according to custom, she came and lived in the house of the husband for a few days. Then she went back to her father's house; 10 or 15 days afterwards, the defendant was asked to go and fetch her. The case of the plaintiff is that instigated by his first wife, he refused to do so and thereupon the old man Krishna Kampti was very angry and in order to coerce the defendant to submission or to punish him and to make provision for the plaintiff, decided upon making a gift of his share of the immoveable properties to her. He consulted his lawyers (the 2nd and 3rd witnesses for the plaintiff), and upon their advice had a deed of partition drawn up and also a deed of gift of the immoveable properties which fell to his share. The defendant's version of what occurred was that it was the plaintiff's father who persistently maligned him to the old man and by means of various false representations and insinuations worked upon the mind of Krishna Kampti to such an extent that he did not in fact know what he was about. The defendant says that he did not refuse to bring the plaintiff back to his house when asked by his father, but only delayed doing so as his first wife's father was seriously ill and he wanted to see him, that in fact it is not the custom for immature girls of the plaintiff's age to live in the husband's house but that, among Hindus of his caste, girls before the attainment of puberty live mostly in their father's house. He says that there was nothing unreasonable in what he did and his conduct could not give offence to any reasonable man. It may be that Krishna Kampti, in compelling the defendant to marry a second wife in the lifetime of his first wife to whom he was evidently much attached and afterwards taking offence at the hesitation or delay displayed by the defendant in bringing the plaintiff back from her house when asked to do so, was acting arbitrarily and harshly. But if the alleged gift to the plaintiff was a true, well-understood and voluntary act of Krishna Kampti's mind, no legal objection can be taken to it merely on the ground that it was such as would not be expected from a man of ordinary prudence. An owner of property is entitled to dispose of it as he pleases and the validity of his disposition does not depend upon whether it is prejudicial to himself or to his relatives and heirs.

The point for consideration is whether the defendant has proved that in making the alienation in question, Krishna Kampti's mind was unduly influenced and dominated by the plaintiff's father. This is not a matter always capable of direct proof and must depend by its very nature on the conclusion to be drawn from the entire circumstances in which the transaction had its origin. The motive of the gift, its nature, its effect on the donor and his family, the state of the mind of the donor, whether he acted upon any misrepresentations or misconceptions, the benefit which the person who is alleged to have dominated the will of the donor derives by the act, how the donor regarded the act when removed from the influence of the person for whose benefit the gift was made, what independent and competent advice he had and whether the persons advising him knew of the influence he was acting under, these are some of the circumstances which have to be borne in mind in ascertaining whether the transaction is vitiated on the ground of undue influence. Krishna Kampti, as I have said, was entirely happy in his family relations until the marriage of the plaintiff with the defendant. The defendant charges the plaintiff's father with having broached the idea of this marriage and on the evidence, I am inclined to the opinion that the plaintiff's father was mainly instrumental in bringing it about. He professes in his evidence that in fact he was reluctant to give his daughter to the defendant but gave in under the pressure of Krishna Kampti. He, however, knew or must have known that the defendant was much attached to his wife and was unwilling to marry a second time. Under these circumstances when the plaintiff's father showed readiness to give the plaintiff, a very young girl, in marriage to the defendant, it seems to me that his act must have been influenced by some strong motive, and the more so if, as I think, he actively suggested the idea to Krishna Kampti. Krishna Kampti was, generally speaking, an intelligent man, and managed his properties himself, which apparently he substantially improved, and also the household affairs. He was much respected in the neighbourhood by reason of his position and wealth.

But it is argued on behalf of the respondent that about the date of the transaction under consideration his natural faculties and the strength of his mind must have undergone deterioration. This, it is contended, is evident from all that he did from the inception of these transactions in April 1908 till his death on 17th April 1909 as evidenced by the various documents executed by him during this period. I cannot but hold that there is force in this argument.

All along the relations between him and the son were of the most friendly character. The respondent was perfectly obedient to him, in fact he married the plaintiff simply to please him much against his own inclinations. The only cause of quarrel suggested by the appellant is that the respondent showed hesitation in bringing back the appellant a second time to the house after marriage. I believe the case of the respondent that this was not because he did not want to live with the appellant but because it is not customary for a bride of immature age to live in the house of the husband. Krishna Kampti himself could have had no apparent object to serve by insisting on the respondent bringing the appellant back to the house, for she was too young for connubial intercourse. No doubt, it is likely that the respondent's first wife did not like his marrying the plaintiff, and one reason why the respondent hesitated to comply with his father's wishes was to avoid unnecessary domestic unpleasantness. It is contended on behalf of the respondent that the appellant's father wanted to bring about a quarrel between the respondent and his father in order to accomplish the object he had in view, namely, to get hold of Krishna Kampti's properties.

It is clear from the statements in Exhibit I that the respondent was charged with the intention to marry a third wife and to adopt a stranger boy. The respondent says that he had no such idea and there was no such talk. Who is then responsible for the story? Krishna Kampti himself was not interested in inventing it and so it was in all probability the appellant's father who made these false representations to Krishna Kampti, for no one else is suggested as being interested in doing so. The appellant herself was too young to conceive such a plan. The respondent, according to the evidence, had no enemy and as the events showed, the only person who could have been interested in causing a breach between him and his father was the plaintiff's father.

To begin with, therefore, we have the fact that the motive for these transactions was supplied from outside by means of false representations and insinuations. If Krishna Kampti's mind had retained its original vigour, it is impossible to conceive that he would not have taken some steps to ascertain the truth of these representations or that simply because the respondent did not evince promptness in getting the appellant back to the house, he would have taken the extreme step of alienating his entire share in the family immoveable properties. In his reply to Exhibit P by which Krishna Kampti notified his intention to the respondent to partition the family properties, the respondent as early as 9th May 1908 asserted that the appellant's father (he is alluding to him as "our relatives and friends who make a show of being our well-wishers") had, for sometime, been trying, by various means and from interested motives, to poison Krishna Kampt's mind against him. The marriage of the appellant with the respondent took place only in March 1908. We find that a month or so later Krishna Kampti, who had hitherto been an affectionate father to the respondent, was so infuriated with him that he determined to give away half the family properties to a young girl of eleven years, reserving for himself and his wife, his partner in life for more than 30 years, the barest maintenance. The respondent, it seems to me, must have had good reasons for stating in May 1908 that this state of things was brought about by unfair and insidious means by plaintiff's father.

By the deed of gift, following upon the deed of partition on the 23rd May, he purports to give away to the plaintiff the bulk of what he possessed, on the ground that the respondent had been disobedient to him and that he did not care to have anything to do with such a person. He presents the deed for registration on the 1st June. The documents were not immediately registered, as the Sub-Registrar was not sure if the stamp was sufficient and made a reference to the District Registrar. Four days after presentation, however, and within three weeks of the execution, this very Krishna Kampti put in a petition to the Sub-Registrar asking for a return of the document on the ground that he did not want them to be registered. It is clear that by this time he was no longer under the influence of the appellant's father and that the real state of facts was explained to him by the respondent and his friends, so that he began to realise that he had been misled. The documents were not returned because the appellant's father gave notice of his intention to file a suit for compulsory registration and obtained an injunction. On the 9th June 1908 he executes a document called Tahanamah, an agreement between himself and the respondent by which he treats the entire property as still joint, states that there was no necessity for alienating any portion (alluding apparently to the deeds of partition and gift) and undertaking on his part not to alienate any property. He states in so many words that he was old and had lost his peace of mind latterly owing to the disobedience of the respondent and that he had at the instigation of the relations of the appellant executed those documents. He obtains an undertaking from the respondent that he would not discard the appellant or marry a third wife or adopt any boy who does not belong to the family of certain dayadis. This shows that he had not yet been able to shake off entirely the effect of the representations that must have been made to him to the effect that the respondent wanted to discard the appellant by marrying a third wife and to adopt a stranger boy. I may mention that the respondent was so much attached to his first wife that he did not want to marry the appellant at all; and the suggestion, therefore, that he intended to marry a third wife, must have been entirely baseless and must have been, as I have pointed out, made by some interested and scheming person, in all probability by the appellant's father who was taking steps to compel registration of the document and filed a suit in the District Court of South Kanara (Original Suit No. 44 of 1908) for the purpose. Krishna Kampti filed a written statement in this suit in November 1908. There he plainly states that the plaintiff's father, taking advantage of his old age, represented to him that the respondent had been wilfully disobedient to him, that he wanted to abandon the appellant to marry a third wife and to adopt a stranger boy, that when he was under the influence of these false representations the appellant's father prevailed upon him to execute a deed of partition and a deed of gift and that for these reasons he did not want that those documents should be registered. The learned Advocate for the appellant argues that these allegations of misrepresentation, undue influence and fraud were untrue, and inserted at the instance of the respondent. But I have already tried to show that the representations alluded to are in fact false and must in all likelihood have been made by the appellant's father. At the least, it is clear that the old man was ready to make any statement suggested to him by the persons who happened to be about him at the time.

The next document is of 20th March 1909, that is to say, four months after the filing of the written statement. It is called a "deed of rectification". It is clear that by that time Krishna Kampti had come again under the influence of the appellant's father and his friends. In this document the appellant's father finds it advisable to content himself with much less than under the deed of gift. The most important modification is the curtailment of the absolute gift in favour of the plaintiff to a gift of an estate for life and the fixing of a maintenance for his wife, but on the other hand the management of the property is made over to the appellants's father and two other persons, one of whom is a clerk of the Pleader who drafted the document. The reason given by Krishna Kampti for not retaining the management in his own hands is that he was weak in health, Furthermore it clearly indicates consciousness on the part of the appellant's father himself that the deed of gift was not a completed document or one which could stand scrutiny in a Court of Law. It was on the basis of this document that the suit for compelling registration was compromised. Krishna Kampti entirely resiled from his own written statement and consented to have the deed of gift registered, subject to considerable modifications or amendment as so called under Exhibit F. This took place about a fortnight before he died. The appellant's father apparently did not leave him alone till the date of his death. On that very day he carried the old man, while he was suffering from fever and must have been in quite a prostrate condition, from his house in the village to Amtur, about 2 miles or so distant, and there in the house of a stranger a Will was executed. In this Will it is stated that the respondent, although he promised to behave obediently, had again become disobedient and therefore all the rest of his property, moveables and cash, whatever had not been disposed of by the so-called deed of rectification was disposed of in favour of the appellant.

This is the history, as proved by documents, of the last year of Krishna Kampti's life. Upon these facts, apart from the oral evidence, I should not have the least hesitation in holding that the man's mind had become enfeebled, that the various documents in favour of the appellant were got up when his mind had been poisoned by the influence exerted and the means adopted by the appellant's father. He worked upon the mind of Krishna Kampti by making all sorts of false representations and suggestions to him with a view to secure the property for his minor daughter of which he would, in the circumstances, have entire control and management.

The internal evidence furnished by the documents themselves is strongly corroborated by the circumstances under which the deeds in question were executed and registered. For this purpose it is important to bear in mind the situation of the different villages mentioned in the evidence. Karingan, which is the residence of Krishna Kampti and the respondent, lies within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar of Buntwal, only 3 miles distant. The appellant's father resides at Puttur, which is 8 miles distant from Karingan. Puttur is within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar of Vittal. Vittal and Buntwal are in the opposite directions of Karingan. Buntwal which is the proper registration office for Karingan is, as I have said, 3 miles distant while Vittal, where the Sub-Registrar within whose jurisdiction, Puttur is, is 8 miles from Karingan. From Vittal to Puttur is 10 miles. Exhibits A and B, instead of being presented to the Registrar of Buntwal, were executed and presented for registration at Puttur, the Sub-Registrar of Vittal being called there for the purpose. No satisfactory explanation is given by the appellant why the document should have been executed away from Karingan and presented for registration to the Vittal Sub-Registrar and not to the Buntwal Sub-Registrar. The respondent's suggestion is that the Buntwal Sub-Registrar knew Krishna Kampti well and his affairs and if the documents were presented to him, he would have been more strict in requiring proof as to how far Krishna Kampti realised and understood the effect of those documents.

The appellant's father took the precaution of having the documents executed at places other than Karingan, removing the old man for the purpose from his house to his own house about 8 miles distant, lest the respondent who happened to be away from Karingan on the particular days might unexpectedly turn up and frustrate his designs. The execution of the Will was part and parcel of the same scheme and cannot be separated from the rest of the transactions. According to the evidence, on that date the respondent happened to be away from Karingan in order to get some medicine from the doctor for his father, who was then suffering from fever. The appellant's father, taking advantage of it, removes the old man to Amtur, which though $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles distant from Karingan is situated within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar of Vittal. He asks the Sub-Registrar to come to the house of an ordinary ryot, a stranger to Krishna Kampti, and there the Will is executed. These facts considerably strengthen the conclusion furnished by the nature and tenor of the various documents, that he was in feeble health owing to old age and that all the dispositions in favour of the plaintiff must be attributed to the exercise of fraudulent means by which the appellant's father dominated the mind and will of Krishna Kampti.

As regards the oral evidence, as was to be expected, it is of a conflicting nature. But it is proved beyond any doubt that during the days of the transactions in question the appellant's father was all along with Krishna Kampti, that he went so far as to write his books of accounts during those days so as to ingratiate himself with Krishna Kampti. (See Exhibit IV.) Much reliance has been placed, and naturally so, by the learned Advocate for the appellant on the evidence of plaintiff's witnesses Nos. 2 and 3.

The first is a second grade Pleader and the second a first grade Pleader. Both of them had been acting for Krishna Kampti for sometime before the transactions in question. These gentlemen were called in for consultation as to how Krishna Kampti could make a gift of his share of the family immoveable properties to the appellant and for the purpose of preparing the necessary documents. They speak to Krishna Kampti having expressed much anger and displeasure at the respondent's delaying to get his second wife back from her father's house and to a quarrel between the two. But none of them were in a position to say how Krishna Kampti had been worked up to such a state of fury, nor could they be expected to speak as to what part the appellant's father or anybody else had been playing in the matter. We take it upon their evidence and upon other evidence in the case—in fact that was not disputed before us at all—that in executing the deed of partition and the deed of gift Krishna Kampti knew the nature of the dispositions he was making. But that does not, by itself, dispose of the question as to whether those documents were brought about by the undue influence of any one. The value of these witnesses' evidence, especially the 3rd witness, must to my mind be taken to be much discounted by the fact that it was he who filed the written statement Exhibit III, which contains a statement that the deeds of partition and gift, to the drafting of which this Pleader was a party, were brought about at the instigation of the appellant's father and under the influence of misrepresentations and false suggestions made by him. Plaintiff's witness No. 3 should have known that the statements in Exhibit III must be false if he means to convey by his evidence in Court that the deed of partition and the deed of gift were not in fact brought about by improper means employed by the appellant's father. P. W. No. 2 says that it was at his suggestion and for his convenience that the deeds of partition and gift were executed at Puttur in the plaintiff's father's house, which is only a few yards off from his own house. But all the facts in connection with the execution of this and other various documents induce me not to accept this statement as the main reason for the execution of Exhibits A and B in Puttur.

Krishna Kampti was made to give away by a deed of gift property of the value of Rs. 40,000 or more including the family house, allowing himself and his wife, with whom he had been on loving terms, to be maintained at the discretion of a young girl of 11 years or her father. The deed itself says that the gift was made in order to make provision for her. That could not be the true reason as she could not want so much for her maintenance. The real benefit would in fact go to the appellant's father. If the making of provision for the appellant was not the real motive, the other motive suggested is Krishna Kampti's displeasure with his son. No doubt, he was angry with him for not going to the appellant's father's house to bring the appellant as desired. But in the circumstances which I have mentioned, that alone could not adequately account for Krishna Kampti's action. His mind must have been poisoned, as found by the Subordinate Judge, by the appellant's father by means of false representations to the prejudice of the respondent. It can hardly be doubted that Krishna Kampti's intelligence must have considerably declined and his will power greatly weakened during the period covered by these transactions. And that made it possible for the appellant's father to influence him in the way he did. Krishna Kampti repudiated what he had done as soon as he was removed from the influence of appellant's father. It was part of the latter's plan, in order to facilitate the object he had in view, to take Krishna Kampti away from his house to his own house for the purpose of getting him to execute and register those documents. I agree with the Subordinate Judge who saw the witnesses give their evidence, that the documents A and B were executed under undue influence and are, therefore, invalid.

This is sufficient to dispose of the appeal. But the appeal fails on another clear ground, namely, that Exhibits A and B were repudiated by Krishna Kampti before they were registered. Under the Transfer of Property Act a gift can be made only by a registered instrument. They were presented for registration by Krishna Kampti on the 1st June, but on the 5th June before they could be registered he put in a petition saying that he did not want the documents to be registered and asked that they may be returned to him. They were therefore entered in Book No. 2, which is the book containing entries of documents the registration of which is refused and the reasons for refusal to register.

They were not actually returned to Krishna Kampti because the appellant had obtained an injunction from the Civil Court. The fact, however, remains that Krishna Kampti repudiated the gift and the partition on 5th June. On 9th June he executed the Tahanamah and registered it. The effect of this is the cancellation of the contemplated gift and partition. Some reliance was placed on behalf of the appellant on a recent Full Bench decision of this Court in Gangadara Mudali v. Sambasiva Mudali (1), where it has been ruled that if a donor dies after the execution of a deed of gift but before registering it and the donee presents it for registration during the time allowed by the Registration Act, the gift becomes complete on its being registered at the instance of the donee. The reasoning on which the decision is based is that a deed of gift may be registered not merely on presentation by the executant but also on presentation by the claimant, that is, the donee. Therefore, if the donor, after executing a deed of gift, delivers the document to the donee, the latter is entitled under the law to present it for registration and once it is registered, it takes effect from the date of execution. But here the deed was not delivered to the appellant or her guardian or father or to any one acting on her behalf as guardian. The donor kept it with himself. He presented it for registration, but repudiated it afterwards and executed a document inconsistent with and having the effect of cancelling the contemplated gift. If the arguments addressed on behalf of the appellant were to be accepted, the logical result would be that directly a deed of gift is executed, even though the donor never delivers it to the intended donee or to any person on his behalf but keeps it locked in his own box, yet the donee can compel him to register it. The Full Bench decision referred to certainly does not go so far. All that it lays down is that if the donor has done all that lies in his power to complete the gift either by having it registered himself or by handing it to the donee, then he cannot afterwards retract the gift. To go any further would be to make a serious breach in the well-established principle of law, that a donor cannot be compelled to complete an incomplete gift. There were also other questions of law argued by Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, the learned Vakil for the respondent, on which it was contended that the Exhibit A is invalid and inoperative in law; it is not necessary to discuss them. I confirm the decree of the Subordinate Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

OLDFIELD, J.—I concur in the decree proposed by my learned brother and I deal with the question, on which I differ from him, that of undue influence, because plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of my finding in view of the possibility of an appeal.

The doctrine of undue influence has been invoked by defendant to disable plaintiff, his second wife, from recovering on Exhibit B, a deed of gift to her by Krishna Kampti, his adoptive father, of part of the property obtained in the partition under Exhibit A. The former document was executed three days after the latter and they are according to defendant one transaction, into which Krishnan was induced to enter by the undue influence of plaintiff's father, 7th plaintiff's witness, with the result that defendant was cut out of a large part of the property, to which he would have been entitled in the event of Krishnan's death undivided from him. His allegations are in particular that, from shortly after his marriage to plaintiff and whilst he was absent from home, 7th plaintiff's witness began to dominate the mind of Krishnan, who was aged seventy, and by telling him false tales induced him to execute these documents. The burden of proof of this is of course on defendant.

Firstly, as to the ostensible motives for the execution of Exhibits A and B and next as to those alleged to have really secured it. In 1908 defendant, aged thirty-seven, had been married some years without issue and he admits that he had no mind to marry plaintiff or any other second wife and that he married her, because Krishnan pressed him to do so. He says generally that Krishnan did so at the instigation of plaintiff's father, his brother-in-law. But there is no evidence that the latter had begun to exercise undue influence at that time and no explanation as to his means of doing so. The undisputed fact is that from the beginning defendant was averse from the marriage, whilst Krishnan insisted on it. A few days after it plaintiff, a girl of eleven, who had not yet attained her age, returned to her parent's house, where, as 2nd plaintiff's witness and 1st defendant's witness deposed, she would in accordance with custom mostly live until she did so. Krishnan, however, pressed defendant to go there and, as appears from 7th plaintiff's witness's evidence, to fetch her back in order that she might remain with him. He did not do so, but went away with his first wife to her family house, where her father was ill. Whilst he was there, Krishnan sent him Exhibit P, in which he referred to his disobedient conduct and to his having left the house "on vain pretexts, uttering some improper words" and having taken with him all the jewels belonging to his first wife and certain valuable securities; he announced his intention of making a partition and called on defendant to choose the properties in one or other of two lists enclosed as his share. The removal of the jewels could be matter for reproach, only if they were the family jewels in defendant's wife's possession; and the abstraction of the documents is not referred to again in the case. In his reply, Exhibit Q, defendant denied having taken them or been disobedient, attributed Krishnan's decision to the intrigues of relatives and friends, attempted to dissuade him from dividing and, in case the decision was insisted on, chose the properties in one list. This was on 9th May 1908. Exhibit A was executed ten and Exhibit B fourteen days later.

The period, in which all this took place, is important, because it was before the date of the document, which is attacked, and because during it the exercise of undue influence must be established, the later occurrences calling for attention only as indicative of Krishnan's mental position and capacity. There is, it may be conceded, no doubt according to any standard, European or Indian, that his insistence, not only on defendant's re-marriage contrary to his wishes, but also on his bringing back his bride, before he was willing or was obliged by custom to do so, was unreasonable. But that is not enough for defendant's case. He must prove further that this conduct was induced by influence, which was within the legal definition "undue." Such proof may be either direct, though that cannot be insisted on and is possible to a small extent only in this case, or indirect with reference to the opportunities for and disposition to the exercise of influence on the one side and the result of its exercise, as indicated by the merits of the transaction, the acceptance of false representations and the entertainment of false beliefs on the other. Following the discussion of the decision in Huguenin v. Basely (2), I deal with the evidence with regard to these points.

Krishnan owned a half share in considerable property and, except for his age, there was nothing against his capacity, defendant himself deposing that he joined in the management until his death, had taken leases and other documents in his name, in particular two mortgages in 1907, was managing well and except for 7th plaintiff's witness's influence, was a good and intelligent man. Generally, therefore, there is no ground for any suggestion that he would be the prey of a designing relative, such as 7th plaintiff's witness; and

(2) 2 White and Tudor's Leading Cases, 6th Ed., 597.

I see no reason for making the assumption, which defendant's case requires, but for which there is no distinct evidence, that his mental capacity deteriorated at this time. The 7th plaintiff's witness's opportunities for influence before Exhibit A can be stated shortly. He was Krishnan's brother-in-law and naturally his intimate. He came, he says, at Krishnan's invitation, though that is not corroborated, to his house from his own house, whither he had gone after the marriage, and was then told of defendant's refusal to go for his wife and of his other conduct, which was perverse in Krishnan's eyes, and he was with the latter, when Exhibit P was sent, as his entries in the accounts Exhibit IV on 6th to 17th May 1908 show. But this goes very little, if any, way towards proving that he dominated Krishanan's will. The proved facts, his relationship to him and the fact that he was plaintiff's father made it natural that he should be consulted, but did not entail that his opinion would be decisive. There is nothing on defendant's side to show that the story of an invitation by Krishnan is untrue and it cannot be assumed that it is so. The entries in the accounts are not shown to be of a character involving any confidential relation. There is neither at this nor any other stage any suggestion that attempts were made to prevent Krishnan and defendant meeting. Why should it be assumed that 7th plaintiff's witness was the moving spirit and that Krishnan's advocacy of plaintiff's claims was not the crotchet, unreasonable it may be, of an obstinate old man desirous of a grandchild and his endowment of her the means he adopted for bringing her and the defendant together?

The suggestion, it has been said, is that Krishnan was deceived by 7th plaintiff's witness's untrue statements as to the relation between plaintiff and defendant. But there is no direct evidence of this, no witness having been called, who refers to any allegations as having been made by 7th plaintiff's witness in his hearing or as referred to by Krishnan; and there is no evidence that as regards the period before Exhibit A 7th plaintiff's witness ever made any complaint, Exhibit W referring to much later events. In fact, if anything to prejudice Krishnan had occurred between the couple, it must have been during plaintiff's short stay in his house or in connection with defendant's refusal to bring plaintiff back there; and of those matters Krishnan's own information would be exhaustive. Defendant did not specify 7th plaintiff's witness in Exhibit Q as among the relations and friends, to whose machinations he attributed Krishnan's desire for a partition; and, although in evidence he said that his mother and the servants told him of the way in which Krishnan's mind was poisoned, he called none of them. If the charge in Exhibit P of abstracting jewels and documents refers, as it must be understood to have done, to family jewels in defendant's first wife's possession, there is no more reason for supposing that Krishnan would have shrunk from making a false charge than that 7th plaintiff's witness would have done so; and in fact on defendant's denial, that matter does not seem to have been considered further. When, as was the case, Krishnan's own information was full, there is no reason for assuming that he derived his prejudice from 7th plaintiff's witness or any other person.

It is next important that, whatever the extent of his dependence on 7th plaintiff's witness, and it is not shown to have been material, the latter is not alleged to have attempted to keep him from intercourse with defendant or any other person likely to influence him. There is some conflict of evidence, which it is not possible to resolve, as to the presence of defendant and 7th plaintiff's witness, when Exhibit A was being prepared; but the former eventually withdrew his statement that he returned home on receiving Exhibit P and said that he did not do so as he knew Krishnan would not listen to him, a statement indicating that the two had parted on a strained footing, with which 7th plaintiff's witness could have had nothing to do. There is in fact no explanation given for defendant's failure to return instead of merely sending Exhibit Q, and devote himself to undoing what had been done and counteracting 7th plaintiff's witness's influence in the future; and, perhaps because he was conscious of more acute past disagreement than the evidence discloses, it will be found consistently with this that, although he throughout had access to his father, he at no time attempted to protect Krishnan from undesirable influence or to prevent 7th plaintiff's witness retaining or regaining his ascendency. At the time of the partition, threatened in Exhibit P and agreed to in Exhibit Q, Krishnan's wife, of whom defendant makes no complaint, was with him and he executed Exhibits A and B after consultation with 2nd and 3rd plaintiff's witnesses, the latter a first grade Pleader and defendant's mother's step-brother. 2nd plaintiff's witness says that he advised both parties to be reconciled and 3rd plaintiff's witness that he advised defendant. Neither witness is beyond criticism as regards credit and independence, 2nd plaintiff giving 7th plaintiff's witness legal assistance at a later stage and 3rd plaintiff's witness's subsequent conduct in connection with Exhibit III being explicable only on the assumption that he could act as a mere mouthpiece for his client without regard to facts (as he now speaks to them) or that client's previous professions. But nothing as to 7th plaintiff's witness's exercise of influence over Krishnan was elicited from either of them. Similarly as regards 4th plaintiff's witness, a retired 2nd grade Pleader paying a substantial assessment, who had known Krishnan for thirty years privately and professionally and who attested Exhibits A and B. In reply to his remonstrance Krishnan said that he must execute them, because he was bound to see to the welfare of his son's second wife and that defendant wanted to neglect her. Defendant admitted that, when he attested, 7th plaintiff's witness was present; but the latter did not support him further and no reason has been shown for distrusting his evidence. On the other hand defendant adduced nothing whatever on this part of the case.

Exhibits A and B were presented for registration at the Vittal office, which is not the nearest to Krishnan's house at Karingan. But there is no reason for doubting the explanation given that Vittal was more convenient for 2nd plaintiff's witness, who drafted them and had advised over the partition; and the suggestion that secrecy was intended is not established, since defendant had been told in Exhibit P of the partition at least and there is no reason for supposing that he would have heard of Exhibit B also, if it had been registered at the nearest office at Buntwal, earlier than he actually did; that is within a fortnight, before Exhibit C. The suggestion, that the reference in Exhibit A to his purchase of a stamp for it was an attempt to fix him with concurrence in its terms, is unsustainable. He, no doubt, denied the purchase and in the alternative has pointed out that it was made on 3rd April 1905 sometime before any question of partition arose. But against this denial there is no reason for distrusting the endorsement of the stamp vendor made in the course of his duty; and as regards the second point and the probability that the stamp was purchased for some other transaction, the suggestion that there was any sinister design in its use for Exhibit A is sufficiently answered, when it is observed that such a design would be intelligible in connection only with Exhibit B, not with Exhibit A, which he had admitted Krishnan's right to execute and to the terms of which he had consented in Exhibit Q. It is possible, and a similar statement in Exhibit B indicates, that it was the document writer's habit to include such recitals in his drafts; and in the circumstances no inference adverse to plaintiff has been sustained.

Exhibit B effected a transfer to plaintiff of all the immoveable property comprised in Krishnan's share under Exhibit A and of a mortgage with possession for Rs. 12,000 and left him with only other mortgages aggregating Rs. 8,015, moveables and cash in hand Rs. 3,271 and outstanding Rs. 1,854, in all over Rs. 13,000, although the last item might not all be realizable. It is difficult to arrive at the proportion of this to his share under Exhibit A. But, if the latter is taken, as it was by the Sub-Registrar in Exhibit G, as worth Rs. 41,424 Krishnan gave up three quarters of his property, retaining the remaining quarter and the benefit of a stipulation in Exhibit B for his and his wife's maintenance at a specified and apparently a fairly liberal rate. Such arrangements by aged persons for their maintenance are not in my experience uncommon, although in this the selection of plaintiff, a young girl, as the donee was certainly exceptional and the provision for her would, it may be conceded, be excessively liberal according to ordinary opinion. But it is material that firstly no such total surrender and no creation of opportunity for such further aggrandisement by plaintiff or her father was created as complete domination of Krishnan's Will by the latter might naturally secure. For it must be noted that, not only was the gift limited to a portion of Krishnan's property, but he retained the management of that portion as plaintiff's trustee until her majority; that is, for as long as he was likely to be capable of it. And next in view of the occasion on which the arrangement was made and the surrounding circumstances, it is intelligible as an attempt to provide defendant with a motive for accepting plaintiff as his wife and eventually cohabiting with her.

I turn next to a portion of the case, on which defendant has laid much stress, that relating to Krishnan's subsequent conduct and dispositions. The latter must, of course, be considered without reference to the formal objections to their validity and, as they are relied on, only as evidence of his liability to succumb to any temporary influence and of the intention as to his property, which resulted from the free exercise of his will. It is to be observed that the simultaneous conduct of argument in each of these senses is difficult. For, if Krishnan's successive dispositions varied according to the influence to which he was temporarily subject, it will be hard to deduce from them any continuous underlying intention. It may be added that such intention, so far as it can be deduced, seems to me on the whole consistent with the desire to benefit plaintiff, expressed in Exhibit B.

Exhibit B was executed on 23rd May 1908 and presented for registration seven days later. But on 5th June 1908, Exhibit C, the petition for withdrawal of Exhibits A and B, which, as defendant says, may have been drafted in his presence, was presented; and on 9th June 1908 after a panchayat had been held, Exhibit I was executed and eventually registered, virtually cancelling Exhibits A and B. Next, however, apparently within the time fixed in Exhibit N, the Sub-Registrar's decision to return the documents unregistered, the plaintiff brought Original Suit No. 44 of 1908 for a direction to him to register them. It ended on 31st March 1909 in a compromise decree, Exhibit U, directing their registration, as modified by an agreement, Exhibit F dated 29th March 1909 executed by Krishnan. Between Exhibit I and Exhibit F, 7 P. W. had been coming to his house and on two days in November 1908 made entries in his account, Exhibit IV. It does not appear, however, that defendant, who no doubt was not a party to Exhibit F or the compromise, was not there also and could not have counteracted 7 P. W.'s manœuvres; and admittedly he was with Krishnan on the next important date, 17th April 1908. On it during his temporary absence Krishnan was taken a mile and-a-half to a place within the Vittal Sub-Registrar's jurisdiction, where he registered Exhibit F and Exhibit S, his Will, dying the same day.

Of these documents defendant relies mainly on Exhibits C and I as evidencing a total revulsion of feeling on the part of Krishnan. But, although the registration of Exhibits A and B was in terms abandoned and, inconsistently with them and especially the former, the father and son decided to remain joint and agreed not to change their status in the future and although Exhibit I starts with a recital regarding the previous instigation of plaintiff's relatives and (a suggestion not persevered in) the insertion in the previous documents of unauthorised matter, there is also a recital regarding defendant's disobedience and the necessity for preventing quarrels between his two wives and there are stringent provisions for the protection of plaintiff and also of the first wife against the contingencies of defendant's discarding either, marrying a third wife or adopting a stranger. These provisions require attention, because it is suggested that nothing in defendant's conduct made them necessary and that they were due to the further misrepresentations as to his intentions by 7 P. W. to Krishnan, referred to by the latter in his written statement in the suit, Exhibit III. Reference to Exhibit III, however, does not improve the argument. For, although it was no doubt signed by Krishnan and presented by 3 P. W, it is not clear how far it really embodied the former's views, since the only first hand evidence is that the draft for it was given to 3 P. W. by 3 D. W., who is brother of defendant's first wife and would, therefore, naturally assist him; and, as 3 D. W. says that he had it from another Pleader, not examined, there is only Krishnan's signature as security for his responsibility for its details. It is worth noticing that Krishnan signed it within a week of 7 P. W.'s writing entries in his accounts, when, on the defence case, he should still have been subject to the latter's influence. The provisions of Exhibit I need not in fact be explained by reference to any particular mistaken impression, however produced. For they correspond with obvious possibilities in conjugal relation, as it exists between members of the parties' community; and there is no necessity to suppose that they were founded on misrepresentations by 7 P. W. when Krishnan was equally aware of those possibilities and had expressed and was again to express distrust of defendant's intentions and when the precautionary provisions insisted on were calculated also to protect the interest of defendant's first wife. Their primary object was, it may fairly be taken, that already suggested for Exhibit A, although it was now to be effected more simply and at less expense, to promote a reconciliation between defendant and plaintiff by imposing terms for the latter's protection. Those terms were arrived at under defendant's influence and after a panchayat had been held, the members of which could presumably have been called to support this part of defendant's case; and there is no ground for ascribing them to the misrepresentation of 7th P. W. In fact they indicate that Krishnan, in spite of defendant's presence and after due deliberation and advice from his friends, persisted in his apprehension for and intention to protect plaintiff.

This intention is more clearly expressed in Exhibit F. For, although Krishnan returned to Exhibits A and B and a scheme for plaintiff's endowment and transferred the immediate management of her property from himself to 7th plaintiff's witness, he displayed a greater regard for defendant's claim in case his conduct should be satisfactory. Firstly, a separate maintenance is provided for Krishnan's wife and next there is an important explicit provision for defendant's right to manage the property, in case he "brings plaintiff and keeps her with him and lives with her in the family house amicably." Further the absolute estate conferred on plaintiff by Exhibit B is replaced by provisions (1) giving her only a life-interest, (2) directing the devolution of the properties on her children, if she has any, and otherwise on those of the first wife, if any, and in case an adoption is necessary on a son, if adopted from specified families. On this I observe firstly that, although Exhibit F refers generally to the inclusion in Exhibit B of unauthorised matter, that matter is not specified and the dispositions made are, though less favourable to plaintiff, still sufficiently so to indicate Krishnan's persistence in the intention already attributed to him to protect her. Secondly we have nothing in detail as to the execution of Exhibit F or its presentation to the Court and nothing to explain, if defendant's case is true, how 7th plaintiff's witness was able to re-establish his influence and defendant was unable to counteract it, although we know that he was with Krishnan within three weeks of the execution on the date of Exhibit S. The inference must be that Krishnan acted on a well formed intention throughout, though with discrimination, the concessions to defendant's interests being evidence on the latter point.

Lastly as to Exhibit S which, in the absence of anything definite to the contrary and in view of its registration, must be treated as made with full capacity. It was made during defendant's temporary absence and he contends that it and the simultaneous registration of Exhibit F correspond with a revival of 7th plaintiff's witness's influence since his own departure in the morning. This, it is said, is indicated first by the journey to register the document within the Vittal jurisdiction; and no doubt, if (as would have been natural) the Bantwal Sub-Registrar had been sent for to the house, he would not have had so far to come as the Vittal Sub-Registrar to the place chosen. But, previous dispositions (including Exhibit 1) having been registered by the latter, there was good reason for employing him again; and in view of defendant's merely temporary absence it is difficult to believe that there could have been any serious expectation of concealing the transaction from him. There is nothing clear as to the time he had been in Krishnan's house. But it is extremely unlikely that he was ignorant of Exhibit F, since it is mentioned in the compromise petition, Exhibit R, and he had presumably had notice of the passing of the compromise decree, Exhibit U; and it is then remarkable that Exhibit F had not been destroyed at his instance. And next, Exhibit S is significant, because, whilst it refers to the course of the dispute between Krishnan and defendant, it confirms Exhibit F, except as to one particular, the appointment of 7 P. W. as one of the executors for the disposal of the items of property not included in the earlier documents. This is not favourable to defendant. But the disposition of those items in no way supports an intention to despoil him. For it benefits only Krishnan's widow, defendant, who is to take the residue, if he lives with plaintiff within ten years, and various charities, except as regards an annual allowance to the two executors of Rs. 50 each. It is not possible to recognise in Exhibit S any material result of the exercise of influence adversely to defendant; and it is impossible to believe that any would have been exercised by 7 P. W. to secure so little advantage.

It has been pointed out that the burden of proof is on defendant. He has, in my opinion, proved only that 7 P. W. had some opportunities of influencing Krishnan; that the latter was in Exhibit B unduly liberal to plaintiff; and that for one short period he changed his mind as to benefitting her directly, although he never did so as to the general necessity for protecting her interest. There is no reason in the circumstances for the assumptions, which we are asked to make, that Krishnan's intelligence was failing and that he was moved by misrepresentations regarding matters mostly within his own knowledge, which 7 P. W. is not proved to have made and which defendant, his adoptive mother and the friends consulted could have corrected. On the other hand it is not proved that any attempt was made to keep Krishnan from the influence of defendant or any other person or that the former either before or after Exhibit B acted as though he has anything to fear from 7 P. W. The case is in fact one of an old man of full capacity, which is not shown to have been impaired, anxious, no doubt unreasonably, to secure the continuance of his family and to interfere in his son's affairs, who made a disposition, unduly liberal, but not so extravagantly comprehensive as to be irreconcilable with his own comfort or his exercise of independent volition; and who persisted in the sentiment, which dictated it, almost continuously and in defendant's immediate society until his end. That does not justify a finding for undue influence and I would, therefore, dissent from this part of the lower Court's decision.

There remains the defence that Exhibits A and B are unenforcible, because they have not been registered either by Krishnan or after delivery by him by any person legally competent on plaintiff's behalf; and I agree that it must prevail. It is not disputed that these documents cannot be given in evidence or enforced, if they are not registered. Then firstly, the original registration proceedings initiated by Krishnan were abortive, since an order was passed for the return of the documents unregistered and this cannot be affected by the actual failure of Krishnan to receive them. It has no doubt been argued that, having presented them, he had done everything in his power to make them effectual. But the principle that presentation of such documents can be treated as equivalent to registration as against their executants is not supported by anything in section 47 or elsewhere in the Act or, so far as we have been shown, by any authority. And secondly, if it is assumed that the decree, Exhibit U, was equivalent to a delivery of the documents by Krishnan to plaintiff, there is first the difficulty that Exhibit A and therefore Exhibit B had impliedly been cancelled before its date by Exhibit 1 and are, therefore, unenforcible, whether or no the subsequent presentation and registration were regular. I should, moreover, be ready to hold that they were invalid, because under section 32, Registration Act, the documents could be presented only by plaintiff's representative or assign; and 7th P. W., who presented them, was not her assign, or her representative under section 2 (10), since he had ceased to be her natural guardian on her marriage and had not been appointed her legal guardian.

In these circumstances I agree with my learned brother's decision, dismissing the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Commissioner for local investigation, remuneration of, whether can be disallowed by District Judge.

The District Judge has no power to disallow a portion of the remuneration claimed by a Commissioner for local investigation in connection with a suit pending in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. The matter is one which must be dealt with by the Subordinate Judge in whose Court the suit is pending.

Rule against the order of the Court of the Sub-Judge, Nadia, in Title Suit No. 562 of 1914

Mr. S. N. Banerjee and Babu Narendra Kumar Bose, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is directed against an order by which the District Judge of Nadia disallows a certain portion of the remuneration claimed by a Commissioner for local investigation. In making the order he has done the District Judge appears to have acted under a misconception of the Rules and Circular Orders of this Court by which the District Judge is given certain powers in the matter of the appointment of Commissioner to make local enquiries; and in this connection we should refer him to the case of Peari Mohan Kandu v. Mohini Kanta Saha Choudhary (1). We are informed that as a matter of fact the parties to the suit in question do not take exception to the bill that has been submitted by the Commissioner and are prepared to pay him the remuneration which he claims. In any case the matter is one which must be dealt with by the Subordinate Judge in whose Court the suit is pending. We, therefore, set aside the District Judge's order now complained of and remit the matter to the Subordinate Judge to be dealt with by him.

We make no order as to costs.

Order set aside.

A Court has no jurisdiction to issue an injunction against a person not a party to the suit, or to summon before it any person not a party to the injunction.

Civil revision from an order of the Munsif, Sasseram.

Messrs. Syed A. Sharfuddin and Amir Hussain, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Fakhruddin and Mohammad Hasan Jan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We are of opinion that the order of the learned Munsif, so far as it affects Shah Malhiuddin, must be set aside under our powers of superintendence, as being entirely without jurisdiction. The learned Munsif had no authority to summon before him any person not a party to the injunction and he had no authority to issue an injunction against any person not a party to the suit. The application is, therefore, admitted. The order of the learned Munsif directing Malhiuddin to appear before him to show cause why he should not be punished under Order XXXIX, rule 2 (3), is set aside. The plaintiffs-opposite party before us will pay the costs of this application, hearing fee two gold mohurs.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 9—Possession of Thakur Bari, what constitutes.

Where plaintiff appointed the pujari of a Thakur Bari, defrayed the expenses of worship, repaired the building and held the actual possession of the key by which the door of the Thakurghar was opened:

Held, that the possession of the plaintiff was such physical possession as the provisions of section 9 of the Specific Relief Act were intended to protect, notwithstanding that the Thakur Bari, as the residence of a deity was open to the public.

Rule against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Alipore.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Sir Rash Behari Ghose (with him Babu Hira Lal Sanyal), for the Petitioners.—The question in this case is whether a suit under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act would lie for the recovery of possession of a temple when the petitioner (defendant) has not interfered with the right of the plaintiff to worship the idol in the temple. A suit under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act would lie when the plaintiff's physical possession has been interfered with. The main dispute in this case is as to who is entitled to worship the idol. In a suit under section 9 the plaintiff must show that he was in actual physical possession of the property and that he was dispossessed from it. See Tarini Mohun Mazumdar v. Gunga Prasad Chuckerbutty (1). In this case the plaintiff has not shown that he was in exclusive possession of the temple. Refers to section 5 of the Specific Relief Act, Fadu Jhala v. Gour Mohan Jhala (2), Fuzlur Rahman v. Krishna Prasad (3). The temple is a public temple, and the plaintiff is not entitled to recover exclusive possession of it.

Sir B. C. Mitter (with him Babu Rupendra Kumar Mitra), for the Opposite Party was not called upon.

(2) 19 C. 544 at p. 564; 9 Ind Dec. (N.S.) 806.
(3) 29 C. 614 at p. 627.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is directed against an order made by the Subordinate Judge of Alipore under the provisions of section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. The litigation is between two rival claimants to the sole Shebaitship of a Thakur of the name of Siddeswari. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the plaintiff in the suit brought in his Court was in possession of the Thakur Bari of this Thakur and of the site thereof, and has made an order directing that he do recover possession from the rival claimant. His order is attacked before us on the ground that the Thakur Bari as the residence of the deity or a house of god is open to the public and inasmuch as the defendant has not removed the image of the Thakur, it cannot be said that he has dispossessed the plaintiff from the Thakur within the meaning of section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. We are unable to accede to this contention. On this earth Thakurs and other deities must be represented and their interests protected by mundane persons. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the plaintiff was in possession of this Thakur Bari by appointing the pujari, by defraying the expenses of the deity's worship, by repairing and in fact reconstructing the building, and by holding actual possession of the key by which the door of the Thakurghar is opened. In our view that is physical possession such as the provisions of section 9 of the Specific Relief Act are intended to protect.

We, therefore, discharge this Rule with costs, five gold mohurs.

Rule discharged.

LAKSHMI NARAYAN ROY AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 74—

LAKSHMI NARAYAN ROY v. SECRETARY OF STATE.

Abwab—Peshkash, whether abwab—Antiquity and purpose of payment, whether ground for inferring legitimate origin—Jalamutha and Majnamutha estates in Midnapore.

The levy of peshkash by the proprietors of the two estates known as Jalamutha and Majnamutha in the District of Midnapore from the nisfidars (holders of resumed lakheraj lands) and lakherajdars of those estates is not illegal, as peshkash cannot be regarded as an imposition in the nature of an abwab but a right to it is an interest in the land to which a title may be made out by prescription. [p. 499, col. 2.]

From the peculiar situation and character of the lands of the estates and the antiquity and purpose of the payment of peshkash, it may be inferred that a right to levy it had a legitimate contractual foundation at its inception. [p. 499, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Midnapore, dated the 4th of June 1915, confirming that of the Munsif at Contai, dated the 26th of August 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra, for the Appellants.—Anything realised over and above rent is an abwab and not recoverable. See section 10 of Act X of 1859, the first Bengal Tenancy Act. Rs. 13 and odd was deducted as peshkosh from the rent previously payable. Even if it be revenue peshkosh is illegal. It was once realised by a certificate in 1912. Apart from that there is no other evidence of realisation. Even if peshkosh was paid down to 1844 the subsequent enactments would make it illegal. If the imposition is illegal, realisation for any number of years would not make it valid. See section 3 of Regulation V of 1793 and sections 54, 55 of Regulation VIII of 1793. Even if it be revenue the Tenancy Act would apply, if it is rent the tenancy law would forbid the realisation even if it is mentioned in the agreement. See section 74 of the present Bengal Tenancy Act. Is it open to Government to realise something in addition to revenue from the Zemindari? If it is not, it would be governed by the contract. Permanent Settlement was made to settle the revenue for ever. Having regard to the fact that it has fallen into disuse and not recorded in the settlement it is not realisable. If it is a public demand it would be realisable. But it is not so; it does not come in any of the items in the schedule of the Act.

Babu Ram Charan Mitter, for the Respondent.—What is the position of the nisphidar as tenant? He is not a tenant, he holds an estate, the area is 47 bighas. The question of abwab would not arise if he holds an estate. Government constructed the embankment and levied this.

[RICHARDSON, J.—This is a cess in addition to rent.]

Yes. If they are looked upon as tenants of former proprietors it is certainly an amount which their Zemindars could levy as consideration for certain improvements. It can't be said to be an abwab and the basis of the claim was long continued, payment being from time immemorial.

[RICHARDSON, J.—See the unreported decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., and Holmwood, J., in Second Appeal No. 44 of 1912, decided on 30th July 1915].

Here the question of abwab does not arise, the lakherajdar in his new position holds an estate.

Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra, in reply.—Assuming it to be revenue there is no escape from Regulation V of 1812; in the absence of any specific agreement, length of time wo'nt give any legal origin under section 3 of the Regulation. Peshkosh initially was in the nature of an abwab.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is preferred by the plaintiffs in a suit against the Secretary of State and relates to a charge described as peshkosh, which the Collector has levied from the plaintiffs in execution of a certificate issued under the Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act I of 1895). The plaintiffs sue for a declaration that the levy of peshkosh is illegal and they further pray for the cancellation of the certificate, for the refund of the amount levied thereunder and for a perpetual injunction restraining the Secretary of State from levying peshkosh in future.

It appears that there are two estates, known as Jalamutha and Majnamutha in the District of Midnapore, the history of which is adverted to in the judgments of the Courts below.

At the time of the Permanent Settlement the proprietors refused to accept the settlements offered to them and the estates have ever since been temporarily settled. Their situation renders them liable to inundation and grambheries or village embankments are maintained to protect the cultivable lands. It is asserted for the Secretary of State that peshkosh is a fixed annual sum payable by the nisphidars (holders of resumed lakheraj lands) and lakherajdars of these estates as a contribution towards the not inconsiderable expense which has to be incurred every year by the proprietors for the time being in repairing the embankments. As the estates are at the present time under direct management that expense is now met by the Government.

Both the Courts below have found as a fact that the practice of levying and paying peshkosh has existed from a very long time. The learned Munsif in the trial Court says that the proprietors from time out of memory have been realising peshkosh from lakherajdars and nisphidars and in some cases from the tenants of lakherajdars and nisphidars. The learned District Judge in the lower Appellate Court says similarly: "There can be no doubt from the oral and documentary evidence adduced for the defendant that peshkosh, although its actual origin is unknown, was being realised by the proprietors of the two estates from lakherajdars (whether their title was valid or not) and from mal tenants from 1207 (1800 A. D.) and that it was taken as a contribution by the aid of which the proprietors were to repair the village embankments within the estate." The inference which the District Judge has drawn from the evidence is that the practice has existed for so long that it must be referred to some legal origin, and he holds that there must at sometime have been an agreement between the proprietors of the two estates and those who hold land therein that the former should maintain and repair the grambheries in the estates with the aid of funds contributed by the latter. He refers to Mr. Bayley's report on the Settlement of Majnamutha in 1844 as authority for the statement that prior to that year, probably in 1827, in the case of mal tenants or tenants of rent paying lands, peskkosh was amalgamated with rent. In the case of the lakherajdars no such amalgamation could take place and when some of the lakheraj lands were afterwards resumed the nisphidars continued to pay under a separate head and apart from their rent the sum which they had previously paid on this account as lakherajdars.

The annual payment for which the plaintiffs have been found liable was fixed in 1844 or before at Rs. 13-1-8 gandas. The main contention of the learned Pleader for the plaintiffs is that peshkosh is an abwab and as such is prohibited by the tenancy law in this country. If that contention has any substance it is somewhat surprising that the fact was not discovered before this. The collection of abwabs has now been prohibited for a great number of years. So far as we are aware the objection taken on this ground has only once been taken before and then unsuccessfully in a case to which I shall shortly refer. We are satisfied that peshkosh cannot be regarded as an imposition in the nature of an abwab within the meaning of the various provisions which have been enacted from time to time on that subject. The plaintiffs' own kabuliyat of 1844 shows that the amount due on account of peshkosh was deducted from the assets of the land and that rent was assessed only on the balance of the assets after this deduction had been made. That indicates that the payment comes out of the land and that the right to it is an interest in the land to which a title may be made by prescription.

The peculiar situation and character of the land and the antiquity and purpose of the payment all point to its having a legitimate contractual foundation. If the statutory law governing the relations of landlord and tenant must be applied, the modern analogue is to be found, not in section 74 of the Bengal Tenancy Act relating to illegal cesses, but rather in the provisions of that Act relating to improvements [Chapter IX and section 30 (c)].

We are supported in the view we take by an unreported decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., and Holmwood, J., (Second Appeal No. 44 of 1912 decided on 30th July 1915). Sir Lawrence Jenkins, referring to a claim for peshkosh in the Majnamutha estate, said that the basis of the claim was long-continued payment beyond the memory of man, which was in itself a title in favour of the recipient of the payment. He referred to Sambhoo Lal v. Collector of Surat (1), where the payment in question might have had a vicious origin and added that there was no vice in the origin of peshkosh, the consideration for which on the contrary was most beneficent work.

It was suggested in the argument that in the case of the plaintiffs it has not been shown that they have regularly paid peshkosh. It is in evidence, however, that peshkosh was levied from them under the certificate procedure in the year 1904 and peshkosh is mentioned in their kabuliyat of 1844. We are satisfied that there are materials on the record upon which the Court below was entitled to come to the conclusion that peshkosh is payable in respect of the land held by the plaintiffs.

The learned Pleader for the appellant has not pressed the point taken in the Court below that the Public Demands Recovery Act was not applicable for the purpose of enforcing the payment. The terms of the Act of 1895 are sufficient to meet the point and it could not have been urged with success.

The appeal must accordingly be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

These second appeals coming on for hearing on the 14th and 15th August 1917, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—These two second appeals have arisen out of two cross-suits. In the earlier Suit No. 92 of 1914, the plaintiff is the owner of the upper western land and he sued for an injunction preventing the defendants from obstructing the draining of the surplus water of his upper land into the defendant's field, through a particular madai or opening which, after traversing the breadth of the eastern ridge of the plaintiff's field, passes through the breadth of the boundary ridge between the two villages of the plaintiff and the defendants respectively and then opens out into the defendants' field. He also prayed for the removal by the defendants of the bund which they had put up on their own land opposite to the madai so as to prevent water falling through the madai into the defendants' lower land. The 3rd relief claimed by the plaintiff was that he might be put in possession of the site of the madai situated on his own patta land and its entrance. The plaintiff also prayed for further reliefs by way of damages caused by the defendants' acts. The cross-suit was for an injunction against the plaintiff in the first suit restraining him from discharging water through the madai into the defendants' field and for damages. I shall call the plaintiff in the first suit (who is the owner of the upper land) as plaintiff, hereafter. The first issue raised in that Suit No. 92 of 1914 was whether the plaintiff was entitled to discharge the surplus water of his land into 1st defendant's land through the madai marked A in his plan. Now the water which is collected on the plaintiff's land seems not to be merely the rain water which falls on that particular land, but also water brought on to the plaintiff's land from irrigation sources for the purpose of cultivation of sugarcane, besides the water which comes on to the plaintiff's land from fields which are still higher up and which are also cultivated for agricultural purposes. The judgments of the lower Courts consider the plaintiff's right as of the nature of a natural right in some places, as a customary right in other places and as a prescriptive right in yet other parts of the judgments. As regards a natural right strictly so called, it may be said that it covers only the right to allow the rain water falling upon a land which is naturally higher in level than its neighbouring land to drain by surface flow by gradually flowing over, wherever and along whatever lines the water could find its way on to that neighbouring land. But such a strict interpretation of the expression "natural right" seems not to have been adhered to always by Courts. Even if the owner of the upper field reclaims or improves portions of his land in course of ordinary agricultural operations, provided the water does come upon his land naturally and in draining it off to the lower field he does not cause more injury to that lower field than would have been caused if he had left his land in its natural unimproved condition, the right conferred on him by law to so drain off the water has also been described as a "natural right." I think also that even if the water was not merely rain water, but water that is brought according to the custom and usages of the country along irrigation channels upon the land, the right to pass it on to a land of a lower level may be spoken of as a "natural right" without much violence to language. In the present case the District Munsif finds a customary right on the part of the plaintiff's land and similar lands south and north of the plaintiff's land in the plaintiff's village to throw off the water coming on to those fields for purposes of agricultural irrigation on to the lower lands in the defendants' village to the respective fields in the plaintiff's village situated opposite to and south of the first mentioned lands. The Subordinate Judge in paragraph No. 7 of his judgment notices this finding of the District Munsif that the lands in the plaintiff's village of Pallevaram have been accustomed to drain their water through madais shown in the Commissioner's plan into the lower fields in the defendants' village of Velayudampatti, but he does not expressly find that a customary right of easement to so pass on the water through madais, even though the water was brought in for purposes of agriculture, has been established. He refers mainly to natural rights strictly so called, that is, those rights which relate only to the drainage of rain water and the passing on of water by surface flow to the lower land without a definite outlet. He might have intended to find a customary right of easement also. However, I think that it is better to request the lower Appellate Court to submit a definite and clear finding on this customary right and as to the extent of such customary right, though the defendants contented themselves in their written statement with denying the plaintiff's right altogether and did not in the alternative set up that the plaintiff has been trying to exceed his customary right.

I may also here refer to the fact that the District Munsif in drawing up the decree has not given sufficient consideration to the right given to a servient owner by section 22 of the Easements Act which says, "the dominant owner must exercise his right in the mode which is least onerous to the servient owner; and when the exercise of an easement can without detriment to the dominant owner be confined to a determinate part of the servient heritage, such exercise shall, at the request of the servient owner, be so confined." The decree gives an injunction directing the defendants to remove the heap of mud put up by the defendants opposite to the madai A and to restore the original level of the defendants' lands. Injunctions as to such easements, when they have been broken, should, in my opinion, be confined to a direction to the defendants not to obstruct the exercise of the easement and should not descend into details, as that will prevent the defendants from taking advantage of the privilege given to them by section 22, Easements Act. As regards the site of the madai, though the defendants in paragraph No. 8 of their written statement denied the plaintiff's ownership of the madai, it is clear from the plan that between the defendans' patta land and the plaintiff's patta land there is the boundary ridge between the two villages and I take it that it does not belong to either party. The decree, when it restores possession of the site of the madai to the plaintiff, must be interpreted as confined to the ridge and opening in the survey boundary of his field No. 243 as shown in the Commissioner's plan, and not to the eastern village boundary ridge or to the ridge further east belonging to the defendants' field. The issue on which the lower Appellate Court has to find is:—"Is the plaintiff, by custom or prescription, entitled to drain the water coming on his land by the falling of rain or drained from upper fields or brought by himself for purposes of irrigation, to the defendents' land and, if so, in what mode and to what extent?" The finding will be submitted on the evidence on record in four weeks from the receipt of records. Ten days will be allowed for objections.

PHILLIPS, J.—I agree. I do not think it is necessary in this case to express a definite opinion as to the nature or extent of natural rights. For the purposes of this case it is sufficient to hold, as I do, that an owner of land can have no "natural" right to pass the water, which has come upon his land artificialy, to the adjoining land. In this case it is admitted that the upper field is watered from irrigation sources and, therefore, a right to pass such water away from the field cannot be a natural right. It is, therefore, necessary that the question as to whether the upper owner has a prescriptive right or a customary right to pass away that water should be decided.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the District Judge of Trichinopoly submitted the following

FINDING.

I am required to submit a finding on the following issue:—

"Is the plaintiff by custom or prescription entitled to drain the water coming on his land by the falling of rain or drained from upper fields or brought by himself for purposes of irrigation to the defendants' land and if so, in what mode and to what extent?"

2. The plaintiff in the issue is the plaintiff in Original Suit No. 212 of 1914, (Additional District Munsif's Court, Trichinopoly) and the owner of S. No. 243 (4) of Pallavaram. The defendants own S. No. 145 (2c) immediately east of the plaintiff's land and included in Velayuthampatti village. The plaintiff claims a right to discharge water coming on his land on to the defendants' field and the District Munsif has found that he is entitled to do so by custom and by prescriptive right (paragraph No. 19 of his judgment). The case of the defendants is that the water from the plaintiff's land is carried southwards through other fields of Pallavaram to a point where the Krishnapuram channel (shown on Commissioner's plan) approaches the village boundary and is there discharged into that channel. It is further the plaintiff's case that from other fields of Pallavaram situated similarly to his own, water is discharged on to the fields of Velayuthampatti lying immediately to the east of them. The water is said to be carried off in each case by means of a "Madai" in the ridge which forms the boundary between the two villages. The defendants do not state expressly how drainage is effected in the case of Pallavaram fields to the south of the bend in the channel but 1st defendant in his deposition denies the existence of madais.

3. The District Munsif has rightly pointed out that the evidence on both sides comes from interested sources. Ramaswami Chetti, however, who owns land adjoining that of 1st defendant in Velayuthampatti, supports the plaintiff's case. His statement is entitled to some weight as being against his interest, although he owes 1st defendant a grudge. Reference has been made to statements by this witness and by Gurunatha Muthirian in cross-examination as indicating that the water discharged on to Vellayuthampatti fields is rain water only. I do not think that this is the right interpretation of the answers. I think they really refer to the irrigation season. It would be impossible to discriminate between rain water and other water and I do not believe the witnesses intended to draw any such distinction.

4. If the evidence for the plaintiff is accepted, I think it establishes a custom to discharge water from the Pallavaram lands in the block now in question on to the adjacent lands of Velayuthampatti and also that the plaintiff has in fact so discharged water from his field in a manner and for a time long enough to give him a prescriptive right.

5. Which version is to be accepted must depend in a great measure on a consideration of general probabilities. The Commissoner's report and the other evidence establish that the Pallavaram lands slope mainly towards the east. Their irrigation source is the channel on the west. It is admitted that water is discharged from some of these fields into the Krishnapuram channel in Velayuthampatti limits. The flow would naturally be in this direction and I think it is probable that each landholder did discharge water in this direction by the most direct method, i.e., into the adjacent fields of Velayuthampatti. Until recently there was no reason why this method should have been objected to. I do not think that the fields being situate in different villages makes any difference. The Commissioner saw a number of madais in existence and it seems very unlikely that the defendants' party would have permitted these to have been formed simply for the occasion. If the defendants' story were true that the discharge is concentrated at one point, there would have been signs of this but nothing of the kind is referred to in the evidence nor does the Commissioner's attention appear to have been called to it.

6. I think the probabilities are in favour of the plaintiff's contentions and I accordingly accept the evidence on his side. I find that the plaintiff is entitled by custom and prescription to drain the water coming on his land in the ways mentioned in the issue on to the defendants' land. The mode authorised is through a madai in the ridge at the eastern limit of his land. All water coming on to the plaintiff's land by means of rainfall or drainage from fields between his land and the channel on the west may be discharged in this way as well as water brought on to plaintiff's land by himself for purposes of irrigation.

These second appeals coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

IN S. A. No. 1133 OF 1916.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

IN S. A. No. 1134 OF 1916.

We accept the findings. In the result the decree of the District Munsif (confirmed by the lower Appellate Court) is modified in the following respects:—

Instead of clause (1), substitute "(1) That the defendants do restore the Madai A as shown in the plaint plan to its original condition and allow the flow of water in the mamool manner through the said opening."

Add at the end of clause (2) "A in the plaint plan."

For "the madai" at the end of clause (3) substitute "the site of the ridge and opening in the boundary of the field No. 243 as shown in the plaint plan so far as it is included in plaintiff's holding."

The appellants must pay the respondent's costs in this second appeal and bear their own.

Fraud, decree obtained by, suit to set aside—Burden of proof—Suspicious circumstances—"Ei qui affirmat non ei qui negat incumbit probatio."

Where a plaintiff seeks to set aside a decree as having been obtained by fraud, and fraud is not proved, the plaintiff fails, and if in the absence of direct proof the circumstances which are established are equally consistent with the allegation of the plaintiff as with the denial of the defendant, the plaintiff fails for the very simple reason that he is bound to establish the affirmative of the proposition; ei qui affirmat non ei qui negat incumbit probatio. [p. 506, cols. 1 & 2.]

Letters Patent appeal against the decision of Mr. Justice Beachcroft, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2500 of 1911, dated the 31st July 1913, against the decree of the District Judge, Tipperah, dated the 15th May 1911, reversing that of the Munsif, 6th Court at Comilla, dated the 30th August 1910.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of BEACHCROFT, J.—The plaintiffs brought the suit out of which this appeal arises for declaration of title and possession. They trace their title from one Daulat Gazi, being the heirs of Kamina, a deceased daughter of Daulat. Defendants Nos. 4 and 5 are sons and defendant No. 6 a daughter of Daulat. Defendant No. 1 is son and defendant No. 3 grandson of defendant No. 4 and defendant No. 2 is a son of defendant No. 6. Defendant No. 7 is the landlord.

Daulat died in 1893. Kamina died in 1906. Previous to her death Kamina had sued defendants Nos. 4 to 6 on the allegation that they had dispossessed her and got a decree in 1905. Subsequent to her death the plaintiffs got possession.

In August 1906 the landlord, defendant No. 7, got an ex parte rent-decree against defendant No. 4, and in execution bought the holding and settled it with defendant No. 1.

The plaintiffs in the present suit alleged that Daulat was an occupancy raiyat and that the rent-decree obtained by the landlord was obtained by fraud. They claimed that their title was not affected.

The only defendants who put in written statements were defendants Nos. 1, 3 and 7. The joint written statement of the first two, so far as it is material to this appeal, alleged that the property never belonged to Daulat or Kamina, that defendant No. 4 alone was in possession of the holding, that the decree and execution proceedings were not fraudulent and that they took settlement from defendant No. 7.

Defendant No. 7 alleged that Daulat, Kamina and the plaintiffs never had any interest in the land, that the decree and execution proceedings were not fraudulent, that defendant No. 4 alone was in possession of the holding, that if any other persons had rights in the holding, the name of defendant No. 4 had been registered with their knowledge and consent, in fact he represented the owners of the holding, and that he himself had settled the holding after the execution purchase with defendants Nos. 1 and 3.

The Munsif found that Daulat had an occupancy right in the holding and that the proceedings in the rent suit were fraudulent and collusive. He accordingly decreed the suit.

On appeal the District Judge found that Daulat was a non-occupancy raiyat, that he had no heritable interest in the holding, and consequently that plaintiffs had not made out any title. He also found that if Daulat had a heritable interest in the holding, defendant No. 4 represented the whole body of tenants in the holding at the time of the rent suit and that consequently if plaintiffs had had any interest in the holding it had passed by the execution sale. He accordingly dismissed the suit. He did not in terms come to any finding as to whether the proceedings in the rent suit were fraudulent.

The first point taken in this appeal is that the Judge ought not to have allowed the defendants to take up inconsistent positions, that in the first instance having denied that Daulat had any interest at all in the holding, they should not have been allowed to agree that his interest was not heritable. This really amounts to this proposition that the Court was bound to find that Daulat either had an occupancy right as alleged by plaintiffs or no right at all as alleged by defendants. It is obvious that such a proposition is not maintainable. I know of no principle of law which says that if the Court believes the truth to lie midway between the allegations of the parties it is not to find in accordance with its belief. The first Court having found that Daulat had an interest, it was open to the defendants to argue that at any rate it was wrong in finding that that interest was a heritable one.

The learned District Judge has treated it as a settled proposition of law that a non-occupancy right is not heritable. On this point opinions are divided. That no doubt was the opinion expressed in the case of Karim Chowkidar v. Sundar Bewa (1), but of the three Judges who dealt with the question in the Full Bench case of Lakhan Narain Das v. Jainath Panday (2), two expressed a contrary view: one considered that non-occupancy rights were not heritable, and two held merely that the Bengal Tenancy Act had not affected those rights, without expressing any opinion whether they were heritable or not apart from the Tenancy Act.

Fortunately it is not necessary for me to express any opinion on this difficult question, as I am of opinion that the second finding of the learned Judge concludes this appeal.

It is argued that the defendants ought not to have been allowed to set up any plea of representation as the position that defendant No. 4 represented the other heirs of Daulat could only arise if Daulat had heritable rights, a position inconsistent with the other plea that defendant No. 4 was the owner of the holding, and it is also argued that the theory of representation was an impossible one in view of the fact that plaintiff had been fighting defendants Nos. 4 to 6 shortly before the rent suit.

There is no substance in the first point. The landlord defendant alleged in his written statement that defendant No. 4 had been in possession of the holding over 12 years and he was not aware of any other person having an interest in it, but that if it turned out that others were interested they had treated defendant No. 4 as their representative. There is no reason why a defence should not be taken in this alternative form, and in fact Daulat had been dead for 13 years at the time of the rent suit.

The second point taken is a pure question of fact, and as such the finding of the learned Judge is conclusive whether it be a reasonable finding or not, and I may remark that as 12 years had elapsed between the death of Daulat and the litigation of 1905, it is not necessarily an unreasonable one. On that finding the interests of the plaintiffs, if any, in the holding would pass by the sale: Jagattara Dassya v. Daulati Bewa (3).

Finally it is objected that the learned Judge did not decide the question whether the rent suit was fraudulent or not. It is true that he does not find in express terms one way or the other. But reading that part of his judgment which deals with the question as a whole, I think there can be no doubt that he meant to find that fraud was not proved. He states that the appellant (the present respondent) contended that it was not fraudulent, and that the holding passed by the sale. He then refers to the argument on behalf of the plaintiffs on the question of representation which was bound up with the question of the fraudulent nature of the proceedings, and he concludes by saying that the decree against defendant No. 4 passed the rights of all the parties. By this he clearly intended to find that fraud was not established, for on a contrary view of the facts he must have found that nothing passed by the fraudulent execution sale.

In these circumstances the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

SANDERSON, C J.—I do not think we can interfere in this case.

(2) 34 C. 516; 11 C. W. N. 265; 5 C. L. J. 457; 2 M. L. T. 219.

(3) 2 Ind. Cas. 695; 13 C. W. N. 1110; 37 C. 57.

It appears that the suit was brought for recovery of possession and for declaration that the decree in a certain rent suit was fraudulent.

The Court of first instance found that this decree was obtained fraudulently.

The learned District Judge in the first Appellate Court gave judgment in which he impliedly decided that the decree in the rent suit was obtained by fraud.

On appeal to this Court Mr. Justice Beachcroft acted upon that supposition.

When the matter came in appeal under the Letters Patent to the Bench consisting of the late Chief Justice and Mr. Justice N. R. Chatterjea, it was decided that the learned Judge of the first Appellate Court ought to have come to a distinct finding on this all-important question whether the decree in the rent suit had been obtained by fraud.

Therefore, the matter was sent down to the District Judge for a finding upon that point. As has been already pointed out by my learned brother Mr. Justice Mookerjee, the matter came before another District Judge, who investigated the matter and came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the rent-decree was fraudulent or collusive. Now, an objection has been taken to that finding, and the learned Vakil has drawn our attention to the ground upon which he asks us to reverse that decision.

As I understand the learned Judge's finding, it is that the facts which have been proved before him are suspicious; that they are consistent with fraud; and on the other hand they are also consistent with there being no fraud: and, that being so, he has come to the conclusion that the plaintiff has failed to prove what he set out to prove.

In my opinion the principle which should be applied in such a case as this is laid down by Lord Halsbury in Wakelin v. London and South Western Railway Co. (4), where he says: "That is the fact to be proved"—in the present case the fact to be proved by the plaintiff is that the rent-decree was fraudulent and collusive. "If that fact is not proved the plaintiff fails, and if in the absence of direct proof the circumstances which are established are equally consistent with the allegation of the plaintiff as with the denial of the defendants, the plaintiff fails for the very simple reason that the plaintiff is bound to establish the affirmative of the proposition; Ei qui affirmat non ei qui negat incumbit probatio."

I think the finding of the learned District Judge is one with which we cannot interfere; and, as it is admitted that if that finding stands the appeal must be dismissed, the consequence is that, in my judgment, this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

MOOKERJEE, J.—I agree.

Mr. P. S. Kotwal, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. V. Chitale, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a preliminary decree for foreclosure passed by the late District Judge of Seoni on foot of a mortgage executed by one Tikait Singh in favour of the plaintiff. The mortgaged property consists of an eight-annas share in Mauza Chhapara Khurd, which is separated from Mauza Chhapara where the plaintiff lives by the river Wainganga.

The present appellant Dilli Singh is Tikait Singh's son and being a minor was represented in the lower Court by his uncle. It is common ground that Tikait Singh and Dilli Singh are joint and that the mortgaged share is their ancestral property. The plaint alleges no ground for making Dilli Singh liable under the mortgage except that he is Tikait Singh's son and owns a share in the property.

The mortgage was executed by Tikait Singh alone on the 12th July 1911. The deed (Exhibit P-1) recites that the mortgagor borrowed Rs. 750 that day in cash but does not mention the purpose for which the money was taken. Rs. 2,250, the balance of the consideration, is described as the total amount due under four simple money bonds executed by Tikait Singh in the mortgagee's favour—

(1) on the 24th January 1909 for Rs. 500.

(2) on the 3rd June 1910 for Rs. 200.

(3) on the 6th May 1911 for Rs. 500.

(4) on the 25th May 1911 for Rs. 300.

The deed contains no reference to the mortgagor's son. It stipulates for repayment of the principal by three annual instalments of Rs. 1,000 each along with interest at Rs. 1-5-0 per cent. per mensem and for compound interest in case of default.

Tikait Singh filed a written statement and with it a receipt (Exhibit D-1) for Rs. 300 executed by the plaintiff on the 13th July 1911, the day on which the mortgage deed sued upon was registered. He pleaded that immediately after registration the plaintiff took back Rs. 300 out of the sum of Rs. 750 advanced in cash, promising to give credit for that amount against the mortgage-debt. He further alleged that all the money borrowed from the plaintiff from time to time was taken to the plaintiff's knowledge for gambling and spent in that manner. In a subsequent oral statement he admitted that no re-payment beyond this sum of Rs. 300 had been made.

The written statement for the minor defendant alleged the debts to have been incurred for gambling and other immoral purposes and that his share, therefore, could not be bound by the mortgage. The rate of interest was objected to as exorbitant and Tikait Singh's plea that Rs. 300 had been repaid was endorsed. In an oral reply the plaintiff's Pleader admitted receipt of Rs. 300 but alleged that this was taken as a separate loan and a month or two later was repaid to Tikait Singh in the presence of Jhanaklal (P. W. No. 4), the plaintiff's brother and agent. The old bonds were said to have been destroyed when the mortgage-deed was registered. Knowledge of Tikait Singh's gambling was denied. The only reason advanced for treating the mortgage as binding upon the minor's share in the property was that the consideration consisted in part of antecedent debts.

Tikait Singh having rejoined by denying return of his Rs. 300, the following issues among others were framed:—

Is the consideration for the mortgage such as to bind the minor defendant's interest in the mortgaged property? or

Was the debt in suit or were the previous debts of which it is a renewal borrowed for immoral purposes?

Was the Rs. 300 for which defendant Tikait Singh holds a receipt borrowed by the plaintiff independently of the transaction in suit?

Was it not a part payment of the debt in suit?

Has the plaintiff repaid the Rs. 300 to Tikait Singh?

With regard to the first of these the lower Court held as follows:—

"The consideration of the deed has been admitted and proved to have been antecedent debt and a cash (advance). This is a good and valid consideration. I find the consideration was such as to bind the interest of the minor defendant in the property."

The evidence adduced for the minor on the next issue was considered to be unconvincing and the Judge was not satisfied that the bond debts were taken for illegal or immoral purposes. He failed to distinguish between those debts and a cash advance and so came to the general conclusion that the mortgage-debt in suit was not borrowed for an illegal or immoral purpose. Lastly he held that the plaintiff did not repay Rs. 300 to Tikait Singh but that this sum was given in part payment of the mortgage-debt.

The present appeal has been preferred on behalf of the minor defendant. With regard to so much of the consideration as consisted of old debts, it is urged that the case not being one in which the property charged has passed out of the hands of the joint family, the appellant's evidence suffices to show that the debts were tainted with immorality, it being unnecessary to prove that when the debts were contracted the plaintiff was aware or might have been aware of the immoral purposes for which the money was borrowed. In this connection it is also urged that the same evidence suffices further to establish that the plaintiff was aware of the immoral purpose. With regard to the cash advance the contention is that this not being an antecedent debt and the plaintiff having failed either to plead or to prove legal necessity for the loan or benefit to the minor therefrom, the mortgage is to a corresponding extent invalid as against the minor's share in the property. Lastly it is said that compound interest at Re. 1-5-0 per cent. per mensem should not have been allowed, inasmuch as the mortgage requires interest on the entire consideration (Rs. 3,000) to be paid with each instalment and so includes a stipulation by way of penalty against which relief should be given.

It will be convenient to deal first with the contention that the cash advance of Rs. 750 not being an antecedent debt or taken for any recognised necessity, the appellant's share cannot be made liable for that part of the consideration for the mortgage.

Out of the said advance Rs. 300 was immediately returned to the plaintiff and has been treated by the Trial Judge as a repayment, so that we are practically concerned with Rs. 450 only out of the principal amount (Rs. 2,700) declared due.

In Hira Ram v. Udhe Ram (1) I held that an advance of cash does not constitute an "antecedent" debt if its payment and the transfer securing its repayment are in reality parts of the same transaction; and also that a mortgage of joint ancestral property will not be binding on the mortgagor's sons after his death, unless the debt secured thereby was either antecedent or justified by legal necessity. The correctness of this view as to what constitutes an antecedent debt must now be taken as settled by the very recent decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2). Manifestly then the advance in the present case was not a debt antecedent to the mortgage sued upon. The decision just cited is further apposite in that it lays down the principle on which the effect of an alienation by the father is to be determined during his lifetime. Their Lordships' view is thus expressed:—

"While the father remains in life, the attempt to affect the sons' and grandsons' shares in the property in respect merely of their pious obligation to pay off their father's debts, and not in respect of the debt having been truly incurred for the interest of the estate itself, which they with their father jointly own, must fail; and the simplest of all reasons may be assigned for this, namely, that before the father's death he may pay off the debt, or after his death there may be ample personal estate belonging to the father himself out of which the debt may be discharged. In short, responsibility to meet the father's debts is one thing, and the validity of a mortgage over the joint estate is quite another thing."

It is clear then that the mere circumstance of a pious obligation does not validate the mortgage as against the appellant's share.

I have already remarked that in his pleadings the plaintiff rested the liability of the son's share solely on the fact that the consideration for the mortgage consisted partly of antecedent debts. Some evidence, however, was adduced to show necessity for the cash advance and on that reliance is placed for the respondent in this Court. The only witnesses who have said anything in this connection are Chaitram (P. W. No. 2) and Jhanhia (P. W. No. 4). The former is Tikait Singh's second cousin and his creditor to the extent of Rs. 1000: he was examined on the 31st January 1916 and stated that Tikait Singh borrowed from the plaintiff for agricultural purposes and for the marriages of his three daughters. He must, however, be wrong in regard to the marriages, for he admitted in cross-examination that the eldest daughter was married 8 or 9 years back (1907 or 1908) and the other two together 5 or 6 years back (1910 or 1911). L. Jhanhia is the plaintiff's brother and though separated has long been his recognised agent for business in the law Courts: he stated generally that all money borrowed by Tikait Singh during his agency was taken "for purposes of cultivation, sometimes for seed, sometimes for oxen, sometimes for wages and sometimes for weeding." Neither of these witnesses directly makes out any connection between the advance of Rs. 750 made on the 12th July 1911 and a particular agricultural necessity. That Tikait Singh had no really immediate need for the whole sum is clear from his letting the plaintiff have Rs. 300 back at once. Tikait Singh's own story is that he borrowed the money to gamble with and actually lost the very next day all that he retained after letting the plaintiff take Rs. 300: his daughters were according to him married 1 eight years back (1908) and the other 2, six or seven years back (1909 or 1910). The plaintiff himself did not enter the witness-box, though he evidently settled the terms of the mortgage himself and certainly presented the deed for registration. There is nothing to show that he made any inquiry as to the purpose for which the cash was wanted, and that it was given without any sort of inquiry is strongly indicated by the absence of any explanatory recital or expression in the deed. In these circumstances I am not satisfied that there was any legal necessity for the cash portion of the consideration for the mortgage. The result will be that so far as the appellant's share in the mortgaged property is concerned, the amount of principal included in the decretal amount will be reduced from Rs. 2,700 to Rs. 2,250 and that there will be a corresponding reduction in the amount (Rs. 3,402) of interest.

Turning to the remaining portion of the consideration for the mortgage, it is clear that this consisted of antecedent debts. The law appears to be settled that a father can make a mortgage of the joint family estate in order to discharge an antecedent debt and that such a mortgage can be enforced as against his sons. This exception to the general rule that the ancestral property cannot be alienated except with the consent of all the co-parceners or for legal necessity was recognised in the recent decision of the Judicial Committee above cited, in the course of which their Lordships remarked as follows (pages 131 and 132* of the report):—

"Although the correct and general principle be that if the debt was not for the benefit of an estate then the manager should have no power either of mortgage or sale of that estate in order to meet such a debt, yet an exception has been made to cover the case of mortgage or sale by the father in consideration of an antecedent debt. This being an exception from a general and sound principle, their Lordships are of opinion that the exception should not be extended and should be very carefully guarded. They desire, in the first place, to make it clear that much if not all of the law upon this subject has arisen from the necessity of protecting the rights of third persons, say the purchasers of the property who have taken their title for onerous consideration and in good faith."

It is, however, open to the son to prove that the original debts were incurred for immoral purposes. The appellant's case in this Court is that he has succeeded in proving the original debts to have been taken for gambling and that the respondent knew of this purpose when advancing the money. For the plaintiff-respondent it is contended that the lower Court was right in disbelieving the evidence adduced to establish the alleged immoral purpose and also that the appellant was bound and has failed to prove the respondent's knowledge of that purpose, if it be held to have existed.

Upon the question whether the appellant was or was not bound to show not only an immoral purpose on the part of his father but also knowledge of that purpose on the part of the respondent, the only case cited at the Bar is Mahoraj Singh v. Balwant Singh (3) in which Stanley, C. J., and Burkitt, J., declined to place upon the son, in a case somewhat similar to the present, the burden of showing that the lender knew of the immoral purpose for which the father contracted debts. In that case their Lordships remarked as follows:—

"The case would be different if the appellants were endeavouring to recover ancestral property which had already passed out of his possession either upon a sale in execution of a decree obtained against his father or a sale carried out by his father in satisfaction of an antecedent debt. In such a case we should be bound and prepared to give full effect to the propositions laid down in Suraj Bansi Koer's case (4)."

In Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (4) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, referring to the case of Girdhari Lall v. Kantoo Lall (5), observed that it was undoubtedly authority for the following propositions:—

"Firstly, that where joint ancestral property has passed out of a joint family, either under a conveyance executed by a father in consideration of an antecedent debt, or in order to raise money to pay off an antecedent debt, or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debt, his sons, by reason of their duty to pay their father's debts, cannot recover that property, unless they show that the debts were contracted for immoral purposes, and that the purchasers had notice that they were so contracted; and secondly, that the purchasers at an execution sale, being strangers to the suit, if they have not notice that the debts were so contracted, are not bound to make inquiry beyond what appears on the face of the proceedings."

But in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2) their Lordships adopted as a correct and useful statement of the law the following comment made on the above pronouncement by Stanley, C. J., in Chandrâdeo Singh v. Mata Prasad (6):—

"The first of these propositions, it will be observed, deals with cases where joint ancestral property has passed out of a joint family either under a conveyance executed by a father in consideration of an antecedent debt or in order to raise money to pay off an antecedent debt or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debt. It deals with cases in which ancestral property has passed out of the family, and with no other cases, and the words 'antecedent debt' seem to have been used advisedly. Likewise the second proposition deals with the case of a purchase at an execution sale. Neither proposition touches a case in which a mortgagee of a Hindu father seeks to enforce his mortgage as against the sons."

I am aware of no reported decision in which it has been held that a son in the position of the present appellant is bound to prove the lender's knowledge of an immoral purpose on the part of the borrower, nor do the Sacred Texts appear to attach any importance to the knowledge of the creditor. Thus Narada (I, 10; Sacred Books of the East, Volume XXXIII, page 45) lays down merely that "a son must pay a debt contracted by his father, excepting those debts which have been contracted from love, anger, for spirituous liquor, games, or bailments," and Brihaspati (XI, 51; Sacred Books of the East, Volume XXXIII, page 329) exempts sons from paying any debt incurred by their father "for spirituous liquor, for losses at play, for idle gifts, for promises made under the influence of love or wrath, or for suretyship." The character of the debt is good or bad apart from any knowledge which the creditor may have of the purposes for which it is incurred, and the son's liability should, therefore, be independent of any such knowledge. I agree with the view expressed in Maharaj Singh v. Balwant Singh (3) above cited that to require such proof would practically amount to barring the defence that the debts were immoral. I hold, therefore, that the appellant had to prove merely the purpose for which he alleged the original loans to have been contracted.

It is necessary now to consider the evidence regarding each individual loan. Tikait Singh's account of the first, taken in January 1909, is that having obtained money from the plaintiff at Chhapara he lost it the same night by gambling at the house of Chaitram (P. W. No. 2), his distant cousin, in Khairi. Chaitram himself does not support this story, but speaks of only one occasion, 12 or 13 years prior to January 1916, on which Tikait Singh gambled at his house. Kodu Khan (D. W. No. 2), a cultivator of Chhapara Khurd, and Babu, Kotwar of the same village (D. W. No. 3), both profess to have been present when the money was borrowed and when it was lost. Mr. Hance, who was District Judge when the plaintiff's witnesses and the first seven of the defendant's were examined, noted on the Kotwar's deposition that at one stage he appeared to be trying to remember a forgotten part and that at other times his demeanour was not entirely satisfactory. Nokhe Singh (D W. No. 14) is a caste-fellow but no relation of Tikait Singh and lives at Likari in the Amarwara Tahsil of the Chhindwara District. He professes to have been present at Khairi, which seems to be a mile or two from Chhapara, on the occasion when Tikait Singh lost Rs. 800 at Chaitram's house. He gambled himself on that occasion having taken Rs. 100 or Rs. 150 with him and won Rs. 200 or Rs. 250. Two years later he gambled again with Tikait Singh, this time at Chhapara about the middle of 1911 when Tikait Singh lost Rs. 400 or 500, which is apparently the occasion on which Tikait Singh is said to have lost at Naipal Singh's house the entire sum (Rs. 500) borrowed on the 6th May 1911.

The second loan is said by Tikait Singh to have been lost in Jeth (25th May to 22nd June) 1910 at Chhapara in the house of Dadu Shah Fakir on the very day the money was borrowed. His supporting witnesses are Balju Teli of Chhapara (D. W. No. 4) and Sumran Katia of Chhapara Khurd (D. W. No. 5), both of whom deposed that they were present when the money was taken and also when it was lost. Neither mentions that any bond was executed: On the contrary both say that they saw no document executed, Balju was a casual passer-by having just come from bathing.

The third loan, taken on the 6th May 1911, has already been referred to as lost at Naipal Singh's house in Chhapara the very day it was borrowed, so that its circumstances are suspiciously similar to those of the two earlier loans. The supporting witnesses are Sheolal Singh Rajput, a tenant of Chhapara Khurd (D. W. No. 6), Hemraj Katia, Kotwar of Partabgarh (D. W. No. 7), and Nokhe Singh (D. W. No. 14). On the deposition of Hemraj Mr. Hance has noted, 'This deposition speaks for itself", the remark evidently meaning that the story told is not true. To my mind also the story is false. Hemraj had allegedly come from his village five miles away to Chhapara Khurd to arrange a marriage for his son with the daughter of Sumran (D. W. No. 5). He was staying with Sumran and having arranged the marriage was on his way to the bazar to buy pan and cakes wherewith to entertain a panchayat the following day, yet he accompanied Tikait Singh and Sheolal Singh to the plaintiff's house, saw Tikait Singh execute a bond and receive Rs. 500 there and after making his purchases in the bazar returned to the plaintiff's house, went with Tikait Singh and Sheolal Singh to Naipal Singh's house and stayed there all night to watch the gambling. Surman, re-called immediately after Hemraj was examined, could not remember the all-night absence alleged and it seems to me most improbable that in the circumstances Hemraj would have absented himself from his host's house all night merely to watch play in which he took no part. According to Sheolal Singh Hemraj made no purchases at all and was made to accompany Tikait Singh, who treated him just as he would have treated his own dependant Sumran.

The fourth loan of Rs. 300 was taken only 19 days after the third. What became of this money Tikait Singh's deposition does not show, but his own supporting witness Mukim Khan (D. W. No. 13), a tenant of his, deposed not only to seeing the money borrowed and the bond executed but also to accompanying Tikait Singh to the house of Naipal, where by midnight the entire money was lost at play.

Taking these four sets of evidence together it is impossible to avoid noticing their similarity and completeness. On each occasion Tikait Singh obtained a considerable sum of money without furnishing any sort of security, although the plaintiff knew perfectly well that it was to be used for gambling, and forthwith lost the whole. Not only so but Tikait Singh lost at Dadu Shah's house in Chhapara on the 13th July 1911 the Rs. 450 net cash which he had borrowed the previous day. His supporting witnesses are nearly all his dependants or practically such, while several of them habitually accompanied him on his gambling expeditions and some of them like Tikait Singh himself have been fined for gambling. That Tikait Singh has long been addicted to gambling is certainly established, but more than this must be shown and I am not satisfied that the required connection between the loans of 1909, 1910 and 1911 and the gambling has been made out. That such a connection must be proved was held in Jawahirsing v. Mohanlal (7) following Chintamanrav Mehendale v. Kashinath (8) and in Dattatraya v. Vishnu Narayan Dhamankar (9). In Vasudev Morbhat Kale v. Krishnaji Ballal Gokhale (10) it was further held that proof of immoral habits in the debtor does not suffice to shift the onus of proof to the creditor.

It remains to deal with the contention advanced upon the sixth ground of appeal which relates to the fourth issue framed by the lower Court. That issue runs as follows:

"Can the plaintiff claim post diem interest? Can it be a charge on the property?"

Upon this issue the lower Court found in accordance with the terms of the deed that compound interest was payable till the satisfaction of the debt and constituted a charge on the property; such interest was, therefore, allowed from the date of execution of the deed until the date fixed for payment of the decretal amount. The ground of appeal simply states that all this interest should not have been allowed. At the hearing an entirely new point was taken, namely, that part of the stipulation for interest in the mortgage deed (Exhibit P-1) amounts to a penalty and should be relieved against. The stipulation in question has been thus translated for the purposes of this appeal:

"I agree to pay interest at Re. 1-5-0 per cent. per mensem in this way—Rs. 1,000 and interest on the total amount in 12 months from to-day, Rs. 1,000 and interest on the total amount in 24 months from this day and Rs. 1,000 and interest on the total amount in 36 months from this day, the whole amount thus to be paid off."

It is urged that the mortgagor thus bound himself to pay interest on the entire principal (Rs. 3,000), even after it had been reduced first by Rs. 1,000 and again by a like amount, by payment of the first and second instalments respectively. The words "interest on the total amount" used by the translator represent the words "kul ka sud" in the original and in my opinion that expression cannot reasonably be interpreted as meaning the entire original principal. The word "kul" seems to signify nothing more than the balance of principal due for the time being and that the parties so understood it in the lower Court is strongly indicated by the fact that no plea of penalty was taken by the appellant's legal advisers. It was held in Bhagwant Atmaram v. Ganpati Chowdhuri Kunhi (11) that such a plea is one of fact rather than of law: it is, therefore, not one which can ordinarily be raised for the first time in appeal.

The result is that the decree of the lower Court will be modified by reducing as above indicated the amount of principal and interest for which the appellant's four-anna share of Mauza Chhapara Khurd is liable to be foreclosed. Costs in this Court will be apportioned on the assumption that the appellant has succeeded in respect of $\frac{1}{4}$th and failed in respect of $\frac{3}{4}$ths of his claim. In the lower Court the plaintiff will bear his own costs to the extent of Rs. 15 for Court-fees, Rs. 30 for Pleader's fee and Rs. 20 for diet money of witnesses and will also pay Rs. 30 on account of the appellant's Pleader's fee. The date fixed for payment is altered to the 30th November next and interest at the contract rate will be calculated up to that date.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 495 OF 1916.

January 19, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Piggott and Mr. Justice Walsh.

JAHANGIRA—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

KARRAR HUSAIN—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Landlord and tenant—Agreement to pay rent—Tenant, whether can question right of landlord to sue for rent—Estoppel—Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 10—U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 190), s. 36—Mortgage of sir and khudkasht land—Ex-proprietary rights—Agreement of rent between mortgagor and mortgagee, whether can be accepted by Revenue Authorities.

Defendant, a proprietor in a mahal, mortgaged his entire share, including his sir and khudkasht lands, to the plaintiff, and then entered into a contract of lease with the latter by which he undertook to hold the sir and khudkasht lands as tenant of the plaintiff and agreed to pay a certain rent therefor. The rent agreed upon between the parties was accepted by the Assistant Collector as a fair rent under section 36 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act. The plaintiff sued for rent on the basis of that agreement and the defendant resisted the claim on the grounds (1) that the right to sue vested in the entire body of co-sharers in the mahal to which the lands in suit appertained, (2) that the agreement to pay a certain rent contravened the provisions of section 10 of the Agra Tenancy Act:

Held, (1) that the defendant having admitted the plaintiff to have held the demised lands in severalty and having covenanted to occupy them as his tenant and to pay him rent therefor, it was not open to him to object that the other co-sharers should have joined in the suit; [p. 514, col. 1.]

(2) that it was competent to the Assistant Collector acting under section 36 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act to accept the agreement of rent come to between the parties. [p. 514, col. 2.]

Section 10 of the Agra Tenancy Act fixes a maximum rent and there is nothing to prevent the parties concerned from contracting for the payment of a lower rate, or from coming to an understanding amongst themselves as to what the prevailing rates of rent are and what advantages the ex-proprietary tenant is likely to get under the section. Such an agreement is not enforceable in itself and cannot be sued upon as it stands. What is wanted is an order under section 10 (5) fixing the rent to be paid by the ex-proprietary tenant, but the law does not lay down that this order cannot lawfully be based upon an agreement come to by the parties, still less that in passing it the Collector must not take into account the terms of such an agreement. [p. 514, col. 2; p. 515, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Meerut, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, First Class.

Mr. Bhagwati Shankar, for the Appellant.

Mr. Sital Prasad Ghosh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—These are three connected appeals by a defendant in three connected suits for arrears of rent. It appears that the defendant, being a proprietor in a mahal, mortgaged his entire share with possession to the plaintiff. At the time of the mortgage the defendant was personally occupying certain plots of land in the mahal as his sir or khudkasht. The lands so occupied by him fell naturally into three classes. There were the sir lands strictly so called, there were khudkasht lands which the defendant had held for the full statutory period of twelve years, and to which, therefore, in law all the incidents of sir attached although they were not yet recorded as such, and finally there were khudkasht lands which the defendant had occupied for less than the statutory period. Having mortgaged his share with possession the defendant entered into a contract of lease with the plaintiff. By this contract he undertook to hold all the lands of each of the three descriptions referred to above as tenant of the plaintiff at a certain specified rent for each class of land. The present suit is to enforce the terms of that agreement. It has been resisted on a variety of grounds; but we are concerned only with the points raised by the petitions of appeal before us. One of the pleas taken is that the decrees of the lower Appellate Court are not in accordance with the judgment, inasmuch as the total sum decreed in favour of the plaintiff in the three decrees is in excess of the total of Rs. 165 awarded by the judgment. We have looked into this point and are satisfied that there is no force in it. The judgment clearly intended to award interest, at least up to the date of the institution of the suit, at the statutory rate of twelve per cent. per annum on the sum of Rs. 165, and this interest is sufficient to account for the difference between Rs. 165 and Rs. 196-1-0, which is the total of the three decrees, including interest to date. Two other points have been argued in this case: one is that the plaintiff is not entitled to sue at all, because the right to collect the rents of these lands is not vested in the plaintiff alone but in the entire body of co-sharers in the mahal to which the lands in suit appertain. In our opinion the defendant is estopped from raising this plea. He entered into a rent-agreement with the plaintiff in respect to these particular lands. If the plaintiff in enforcing his rights under that agreement is trenching on the rights of the other proprietors in the mahal, the latter have their remedy, either by way of a suit for settlement of accounts or by way of an application for partition. At any rate this defendant has admitted this plaintiff to have held these particular lands in severalty and has covenanted to occupy them as his tenant and to pay him rent therefor. The defence that other co-sharers should have joined in this suit is not open to him. The next point argued, although it is not easy to see how it is raised by any specific plea taken in the petition of appeal to this Court, has been that the rent agreement between the parties, is unenforceable, being in contravention of the provisions of section 10 of the Local Tenancy Act (No. II of 1901). This contention, of course, affects two of the suits only, namely, those in which rent is claimed in respect of the sir and of the khudkasht of twelve years' standing or over. Under the provisions of section 10 aforesaid the defendant became an ex-proprietary tenant of these lands and entitled to the privileges of such tenant. The law required that his rent should be fixed by the Collector under section 36 of the N. W. P. and Oudh Land Revenue Act of 1901. When these appellants were first before this Court the facts were not as clear as they should have been made, but they are established now by the findings which have been returned on the issues remitted by this Court. It is certain that there was a proceeding purporting to be under section 36 aforesaid, by which the rent payable by the defendant to the plaintiff for these particular lands was fixed at the amounts specified in the agreement come to by the parties themselves. There is nothing in law to prevent the Revenue Court from accepting such an agreement. No doubt it is the duty of the Revenue Courts—and the reported decisions of the Board of Revenue show that that duty is jealously performed—to see that the provisions of section 10 of the Tenancy Act (No. II of 1901) are not evaded and that a reckless and improvident proprietor is not permitted to contract himself out of them. At the same time all that the law has said on this subject of rent is that the ex-proprietary tenant is entitled to hold at a rate which shall be four annas in the rupee less than the rate generally payable by the non-occupancy tenants for lands of similar quality and with similar advantages in the neighbourhood. To begin with, it is obvious enough that these provisions fix a maximum rent, and there is nothing to prevent the parties concerned from contracting for the payment of a lower rate. Then again, there is nothing in law to prevent the parties from coming to an understanding amongst themselves as to what the prevailing rates of rent are and what advantages the ex-proprietary tenant is likely to get under the statutory provisions in question. They may come to a conclusion of their own as to what a fair rent, fixed with regard to the provisions of section 10 aforesaid, is likely to be, and the law certainly does not forbid an agreement to pay the same. Such agreement is not enforceable in itself and could not be sued upon as it stands. What is wanted is an order under section 10, clause 5 aforesaid, fixing the rent to be paid by the ex-proprietary tenant; but the law does not lay down that this order cannot lawfully be based upon an agreement come to by the parties, still less that in passing it the Collector must not take into account the terms of such an agreement. The contention before us, after the findings have been returned on the remanded issues, has been that the proceedings which terminated in the order fixing the rent under section 36 of the Land Revenue Act were irregular and that there was nothing to show that the question as to whether the agreement come to by the parties had given due effect to the provisions of section 10 of the Tenancy Act in favour of the ex-proprietary tenant, was present to the mind of the Collector or Assistant Collector and duly considered by him. On this there are two things to be said. One is that the presumption of law is in favour of validity and regularity in the proceedings of a Court of Justice, and not the contrary. We know that the Assistant Collector acted upon a report of the Tahsildar. That report is not before us; but there is no reason why we should presume that it did not contain an expression of the Tahsildar's opinion as to the suitability and propriety of the rent agreed upon between the parties. In the next place, it is at least open to argument whether in a suit like the present the Court can enquire into the materials upon which the Collector or the Assistant Collector proceeded when he passed his order fixing the rent under section 36 of the Land Revenue Act.

It so happens, however, that we are able to clinch this matter in the most satisfactory manner possible. The enquiry made under the orders of this Court shows that the rent agreed to be paid for the sir and khudkasht lands was a favourable rent and gave to the ex-proprietary tenant the full benefit of the statutory provisions. The Court below in enquiring into this point found that it was useless to take as exemplars the plots of land actually held by the few non-occupancy tenants (strictly so called) in this village, the fact being that all the best lands were included in the sir or khudkasht. It was inevitable, therefore, that the Court should enquire into the prevailing rates of rent paid for lands of similar quality and with similar advantages to those in suit, by a sub-tenant taking a lease of the same from the holder of the sir or the khudkasht rights. It has found that such lands are ordinarily let out for a rate of about Rs. 12 per pucca bigha and that the rent which the defendant covenanted to pay does not quite amount to Rs. 8 per pucca bigha. It is true that, when formally recording his finding on the issue remitted to him, the learned District Judge has expressed himself very clumsily and has fallen into what we have no reason to doubt is a clerical error. He says that the rent fixed on the defendant's sir and khudkasht land was "nearly equal" to that payable by other tenants for lands of similar quality and with similar advantages. If this finding be read in connection with the reasoning on which it proceeds, it is fairly clear that the Court intended to find that the rent so fixed was nearly equal, after the deduction of the statutory 25 per cent. It may be that in the absence of a petition of objections we might have felt compelled to hold the parties bound by the finding as recorded, if the case had turned upon this single point, but the really decisive issue in the case is the second issue as to the order of the Assistant Collector fixing the rent. And when we are asked to consider whether there is any ground for presuming that in passing that order the Collector had overlooked the provisions of section 10 of the Tenancy Act and had not allowed the ex-proprietary tenant the advantages secured to him by that section, we are clearly entitled to take into consideration, not merely the finding actually recorded on the first issue, but the reasoning upon which that finding proceeds and the conclusions actually arrived at by the Court below on the evidence considered by it. The result is that there is really no force either in law or in equity in any of these appeals and we dismiss them accordingly with costs.

WALSH, J.—I agree.

BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that this and the two connected appeals are dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 20—Part-payment of principal, endorsement of, not signed by payer, whether saves limitation.

An endorsement of a part-payment of the principal written on the back of a bond on behalf of the person making the payment, but not signed by the payer or bearing his mark, does not operate to save limitation under section 20 of the Limitation Act. [p. 517, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Gouhati, in Assam Valley Districts, dated the 16th February 1915, reversing that of the Munsif, Mangaldai, dated the 31st July 1913.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy (with him Babu Anilendranath Roy Choudhury), for the Appellant.—Plaintiff brought this suit on a simple money-bond executed in his favour by the defendant on 8th February 1908. The suit was instituted on the 23rd January 1915. Part-payment of the principal money was made on 24th January 1910. Defendant denied payment of this sum. The 1st Court decreed the suit. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit on the ground of limitation.

The question is if an illiterate person requests another person to make payment on his behalf and the payment is accordingly made but without the signature and without any mark of the illiterate person, would that payment save limitation under section 20 of the Indian Limitation Act? The signature of him who can write must be in his handwriting. See Mukhi Haji Rahmuttulla v. Cuverji Bhuja (1), Nivajkhan Nathankhan v. Dadabhai Musse Valli (2) and Lodd Govindass v. Rukmani Bhai (3). As to illiterate persons reference may be made to Madabhushi Seshacharlu v. Singara Seshaya (4) and Jamna v. Jaga Bhana (5).

[FLETCHER, J.—There is no mark in this case.]

The question was never argued before the first Court. The only fact was the fact of payment. Marking is not writing. Had there been any mark the case would have come directly under the ruling reported as Jamna v. Jaga Bhana (5).

Babu Lal Mohan Ghose for Mr. N. C. Burdalois, for the Respondent, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of the Assam Valley Districts, dated the 16th February 1915, reversing the decision of the Munsif of Mangaldai. The plaintiff brought the suit to recover a certain sum of money said to be due on a simple money-bond dated the 8th February 1908. The suit was instituted on the 23rd January 1915. In order to show that his suit was not barred under the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act, the plaintiff relied upon a part-payment of the principal said to have been made on the 24th January 1910 and evidenced by an endorsement in writing on the back of the bond. The ground on which the learned Judge decided the case was that the endorsement of the fact of part-payment of the principal on the back of the bond was not signed by the person making the payment, that is, the defendant, nor did it bear his mark, he being illiterate. It is quite clear on the evidence that the defendant could not write and that the endorsement was written by another man for him. It is quite clear also that he did not make any mark on the back of the bond, because we have looked at the bond and the learned Judge was right in saying that there was no sign of any mark to the endorsement. The question what is a sufficient handwriting of the person making the payment within the meaning of the proviso to section 20, sub-section (1), of the Indian Limitation Act has formed the subject-matter of judicial decision and the latest case, so far as we have been referred to, is a decision of Chief Justice Jenkins and Mr. Justice Aston of the Bombay High Court [Jamna v. Jaga Bhana (5)] and the view adopted by the learned Judges in that case was that, if the payer affixed his mark beneath the endorsement written for him in the case of an illiterate person, that was a sufficient handwriting to satisfy the proviso to section 20, sub-section (1), of the Indian Limitation Act. There is no case that has ever yet suggested that, in the absence of mark, the clear words of the section requiring the payment and the handwriting to be made by one and the same person are complied with. I think the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court came to a correct conclusion when he held that, on the facts found, the fact of the payment did not appear in the handwriting of the defendant. In that view, the judgment appealed from is correct. The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Acquiescence—Tenant cultivating waste land without objection—Presumption of contract of tenancy.

Where a plea of acquiescence or of standing by has been raised by a tenant in order to resist the claim of the landlord to eject him and it is proved that the tenant has been encouraged to spend money, he can claim the protection given by a Court of Equity. In the absence of such a plea of "standing by" or acquiescence a Court of fact may, if the circumstances of the case justify, come to the conclusion that the landlord had expressly or impliedly contracted to lease the land to a tenant whose reclamation of waste land has not been objected to for some years. This, however, is not a presumption of law but a presumption of fact which may or may not arise in a case. [p. 517, col. 2; p. 518, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Saugor, in Civil Appeal No. 79 of 1917, decided on the 8th May 1917.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—I think the case has been rightly decided by the Courts below, though there are certain passages in the judgments of the lower Appellate Court to which exception has been taken, and rightly taken, by the learned Counsel for the appellant. The defendants have been recorded at the recent Settlement in 1915 as ordinary tenants of field No. 628 to which Re. 1 has been assessed as rent. The case of the defendants was that the banjar land was leased to their predecessor some fifteen years ago on the understanding that rent will be fixed at a later date. The plaintiff malguzar sues to eject the defendants, but is met with the initial difficulty of establishing the incorrectness of the entry made at the recent Settlement. All that is pointed out is that the evidence of the Patwari, if accepted, shows that the defendants have not cultivated for more than seven years. Assuming that this is correct, it does not follow that the entry made in the settlement is incorrect. For it is by no means impossible that an agreement of the nature pleaded by the defendants did take place and which agreement is given effect to in the settlement record. The learned District Judge, however, without referring to any particular judgment has stated that it has been held by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner in several cases in the Bilaspur District that when a tenant is allowed to cultivate waste land by a malguzar, who knows about the cultivation, without objection for more than two years, a presumption of the existence of a contract of tenancy arises and the malguzar cannot be allowed to eject the tenant after the latter has spent money and labour in converting the waste land into a fertile holding. It is of course, clear that where a plea of acquiescence or of standing by has been raised, a tenant who is encouraged to spend money may claim the protection given by a Court of Equity on the principle laid down by Lord Kingsdown in Ramsden v. Dyson (1).

(1) (1866) 1 H. L. 129; 12 Jur. (N. S.) 506; 14 W. R. 926.

In the absence of such a plea of "standing by" or acquiescence a Court of fact may, if the circumstances of the case justify, come to the conclusion that the landlord had expressly or impliedly contracted to lease the land to a tenant whose reclamation of waste land has not been objected to for some years. This, however, is not a presumption of law but a presumption of fact, which may arise or may not arise in a case. I see, however, no foundation for the rule laid down by the District Judge of the limitation of two years. What length of possession without objection on the part of the landlord would justify a Court of fact in accepting a story of a lease depends upon the facts of each case. No rule can be laid down upon this point. The actual decision come to in the case, however, seems to be correct, and this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 116, 120, 132—Mortgage for loan of paddy, suit on—Limitation.

A suit on a mortgage-bond executed for a loan not of money but of paddy is governed by Article 116 or Article 120 and not by Article 132 of the Limitation Act. [p. 519, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Bankura, dated the 24th April 1915, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st Court of that District, dated the 4th April 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chakrabarty (with him Babus Upendra Lal Roy and Gopal Chandra Chakrabarty), for the Respondents, raised a preliminary objection that on the face of the facts on the record the suit out of which the appeal arose, was barred by limitation, as it was not brought within six years from the due date of the bond on which the paddy borrowed should have been repaid. As the bond was in respect of a loan not of money but of paddy, Article 132 of the Limitation Act did not apply and the suit was governed by Article 116 or Article 120.

Referred to Rash Bihari Das v. Kunjabihari Patra (1).

[RICHARDSON. J.—Was the question raised in the Court below ?]

Yes. The first Court found against the defendant on the question of limitation, but the lower Appellate Court having dismissed the suit on the ground that it was not maintainable in its present form did not enter into the question of limitation. However, if on the face of the record the suit was barred, then even if the plea of limitation was not expressly taken the Court could give effect to it.

Babu Bejoy Kumar Bhattacharjee, for the Appellant.—The solenamah (compromise) contains an admission of mortgage, and the suit is within time from the first date of default as contained in the solenamah.

The defendants have said in their written statement that they have made payments of interest up till 1316 B. S. and the suit is within time from that date. The defendants, having admitted that payments have been made up till 1316, cannot now turn round and say that the suit is time-barred. The time must be taken to have run from the date when the defendants admit to have made payments.

The law laid down in Rash Bihari Das v. Kunjabihari Patra (1) is, I submit, not good law, as it did not take into consideration the definition of mortgage as contained in section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act. Article 122 of the Limitation Act is applicable to this case. Refers to Nilmony Singha v. Haradhan Dass (2).

(2) 13 C. W. N. clxxxiv (184 notes.)

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is preferred by the plaintiff in a suit to enforce a mortgage security. The parties to the suit are not the original mortgagor and the original mortgagee. They are persons to whom the mortgage and the equity of redemption have respectively been transferred. The Courts below have concurred in dismissing the suit on the ground that it is not maintainable in its present form. Whatever may be said on that subject, on which we express no opinion, a preliminary point has been taken before us on behalf of the defendants that the suit is barred by limitation. The contention is that inasmuch as the mortgage-bond was executed by the respondent in respect of a loan, not of money but of paddy, Article 132 of the Limitation Act has no application and the suit is governed either by Article 116 or Article 120. This contention is founded on the ruling of the late Chief Justice Sir Lawrence Jenkins and Mr. Justice Holmwood in the case of Rash Bihari Das v. Kunjabihari Patra (1).

The learned Pleader for the plaintiff has argued that that decision cannot be supported, and that the word 'money' in Article 132 should be construed as including money's worth. We are bound, however, to follow the decision unless we are prepared to refer the matter to a Full Bench, and as at present advised we are not disposed to take that course. On the face of the plaint there can be no doubt that this suit was brought more than six years after the due date of the bond, the date on which the paddy borrowed should have been repaid. It is said that the defendants in their written statement pleaded payment of interest for several years, but that plea was negatived in that Court and the plaintiff has given no credit for any payment of interest such as might have saved the suit from the bar of limitation. Some reference has been made in the course of the argument to a consent decree made in a suit between the original mortgagor and the original mortgagee. The decree is not referred to in the plaint. And even if the compromise amounted to an admission of liability by the mortgagor, that admission was made more than six years before the date of the institution of this suit and cannot help the plaintiff. In our opinion the objection of the respondent that the suit is barred by limitation is an objection which on the face of the record must prevail.

The result is that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), s. 185, scope of —Private land of zemindar —Evidence other than that specified in section, admissibility of—Presumption.

Section 185 of the Madras Estates Land Act permits the landlord to produce any evidence other than that specified in the section to prove that the land in dispute is his private land, and not ryoti land. [p. 520, col. 2.]

The section raises a presumption in favour of the ryot, but the question to be considered is whether the evidence adduced by the landlord is sufficient to rebut that presumption. [p. 520, col. 2; p. 521, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Salem, in Appeal Suit No. 130 of 1914, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Dharmapuri, in Original Suit No. 761 of 1913.

Mr. K. R. Subramania Sastri, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. Viswanadha Aiyar and P. N. Nageswara Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit was in ejectment, and one of the questions before the lower Appellate Court was whether the land in dispute was the private land of the plaintiff or the ryoti land of the defendant. The District Munsif held in favour of the plaintiff, but, in appeal, the learned District Judge was of opinion that section 185 of the Madras Estates Land Act permitted only a specific kind of evidence to be adduced in proof of the allegation whether certain land was the private land of the landholder. Taking that view of the section, he came to the conclusion that the plaintiff failed to adduce any proof that the land was his private land. The learned Pleader for the appellant points out that there were at least two documents, Exhibits A and B, which contained an admission of the plaintiff's title. The statement which is said to amount to an admission is to the effect that the land belongs to the plaintiff's patta. He also points out that there was evidence of the plaintiff that the land was his private land. Further there was evidence furnished by the conduct of the defendant which supports the plaintiff's case. Section 185 says: "When in any suit or proceeding it becomes necessary to determine whether any land is the landholder's private land, regard shall be had to the local custom and to the question whether the land was before the first day of July 1898 specifically let as private land and to any other evidence that may be produced, but the land shall be presumed not to be private land until the contrary is shown. Provided that all land which is proved to have been cultivated as private land by the landholder himself, by his own servants or by hired labour with his own or hired stock for twelve years immediately before the commencement of this Act, shall be deemed to be the landholder's private land." The Legislature, whether it was necessary for it to mention certain classes of evidence or not, does lay down that evidence other than that mentioned may be produced in support of the landholder's allegation. With reference to Exhibit A, which is a muchilika executed by the defendant in 1904, that is, since 1st July 1898, it is urged that section 185 in mentioning that "regard shall be had to local custom and to the question whether the land was before the 1st day of July 1898 specifically let as private land", means to exclude any evidence of letting as private land after 1st July 1898. That seems to be the view taken by Sadasiva Aiyar. J., in Mulpuru Lakshmayya v. Varadaraja Apparow (1), while Mr. Justice Sundara Aiyar's view was to the contrary. In Chintaman Reddi Sanyasi v. Rajasagi Appala Narasimha Raja Garu (2) the learned Chief Justice and Ayling, J., had a similar question before them, and it is contended by the learned Pleader for the respondent that they took the same view of section 185 as Sadasiva Aiyar, J., but we do not think that this is correct. On the other hand, it seems to us that in two places they point out that, besides the classes of evidence mentioned in section 185, it is open to the landlord to produce any other evidence which may be relevant to his purpose. No doubt there is a sentence in that judgment which might perhaps be taken to lend some countenance to the argument of the learned Pleader for the respondent; it is to this effect:—"What the Court has to find is, with regard to the classes of evidence mentioned in the section, whether the land was private land at the passing of the Act". But if that sentence is read along with the rest of the judgment, it seems to us to be fairly evident that the learned Judges did not mean to lay down that, under section 185, only certain classes of evidence are admissible, for the result of that would be that they would not be giving effect to the words "any other evidence that may be produced". We do not see any reason why we should give such a narrow construction to section 185 as suggested by Sadasiva Aiyar, J. Besides, Exhibit A is sought to be used by the plaintiff not to prove the fact of letting but as containing an admission of his title to the land in question.

With reference to Exhibit B it is contended on behalf of the respondent that it is an agreement to lease for ten years and, therefore, inadmissible for want of registration. It is a razinama filed by the parties, the defendant and the plaintiff, containing several terms, one of which is a grant of lease for ten years. The passage upon which the plaintiff relies is "that this land belongs to the plaintiff's patta", which, he says, is an admission of his title.

We think that the learned District Judge was wrong in his construction of section 185 and there is evidence which has to be considered in connection with the question as to whether the plaintiff has proved that the land is his private land. We may point out that section 185 clearly raises a presumption in favour of the defendant, but the question that has to be considered is whether the evidence which has been Plaintiff, mortgagee of a raiyati holding, brought a suit on foot of his mortgage. Defendant, who was the purchaser of the holding and had been recognised by the landlord, applied to be made a party to the suit. He did not claim to redeem the mortgage, but set up a title paramount to the mortgagee and also questioned the bona fides of the mortgage transaction. His application was rejected. The plaintiff obtained a decree and purchased the holding in execution thereof. He then brought a suit to eject the defendant:

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—This second appeal is preferred by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in a suit for recovery of possession of certain land. At the date of the suit the defendant No. 2 was a tenant of defendant No. 1. We are informed that there is reason to believe that defendant No. 2 has since purchased the rights of defendant No. 1. As to the facts found, it appears that on the 31st March 1895, one Jamaraddi mortgaged the property in suit with other properties to the plaintiffs. The property in suit is a raiyati holding.

On the 6th May 1896 Hara Chandra Das, the father of defendant No. 1, in execution of a money-decree obtained by him against the mortgagor purchased the property and subsequently in the same year obtained actual possession from the Court.

In 1907 the plaintiff brought a suit upon the mortgage of 1895 against the heirs of the mortgagor and others. To that suit he did not make the father of defendant No. 1 a party. Accordingly on the 29th May 1907 Hara Chandra Das applied by a petition to be joined as a party defendant. The plaintiff opposed the application, which was rejected by the Court. The mortgage suit proceeded and in the result the plaintiffs obtained a mortgage decree in the usual form and in execution purchased the property themselves on the 9th September 1908. On the 2nd March 1909 the plaintiffs obtained symbolical possession from Court. Their subsequent efforts to obtain actual possession led to a criminal proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, which was decided on the 24th February 1909 in favour of defendant No. 1. The plaintiffs then instituted the present suit on the 18th June 1912. At this stage of the suit all that is claimed by the defendants-appellants is that the plaintiffs' title to eject them from the disputed land is subject to their right to redeem the plaintiffs—a right which the Courts below have by these decrees concurrently refused to recognise. In denying any right to redeem in the defendants-appellants the Courts below have acted on two grounds. The first ground appears to be that they were under the impression that the defendants did not claim the right to redeem in this suit and were unwilling to redeem. The second ground which is the more substantial ground is that the defendants, if they ever had any right to redeem, are precluded from exercising that right by reason of the application which Hara Chandra Das made in the mortgage suit of 1895. I will deal first with the second of these two grounds.

The petition which Hara Chandra Das presented to the Court in that suit has not been produced by either of the parties to the present suit. But we have the order of the Court on the petition passed on the 30th May 1907. The order begins in this way: "I have heard the Pleader for the plaintiff and the Pleader for the person who prays to be added as a defendant. The plaintiff's Pleader objects to the third party being joined as a defendant." Then it goes on to say: "The plaintiffs sue on a mortgage of a raiyati. The third person who seeks to be made a defendant says he purchased the land at a money sale and got himself registered in the sherista of the landlord. He claims the land on the strength of such recognition also." He concludes with these words: "I do not think I should be justified in adding this person as a defendant against the will of the plaintiff, particularly when he claims a title which may be pleaded as defeating the plaintiff's right of mortgage." Now upon the terms of that order it is clear that Hara Chandra Das's application to be made a party was rejected at the instance of the mortgagee plaintiffs. The grounds on which the Munsif based his order are not very clear. It may be that Hara Chandra Das indeed set up a title which was paramount to the mortgage title of the plaintiffs. His plea may have been of the same nature as the plea which was put forward by the purchaser of a part of the mortgaged property in the case of Radha Kant Chakravarti v. Ramananda Shaha (1). If that was the plea of Hara Chandra Das, it is possible that if he had been made a party and the plea had been tried it would have proved unsuccessful in the event as it did in the case cited. But, apart from that plea, it is not at all clear. Hara Chandra Das did not also set up the case on which the defendant No. 1 now relies. The pleadings in the present suit lend some support to the view that Hara Chandra Das also put forward the contention that the plaintiffs' mortgage was not a bona fide transaction. If, therefore, Hara Chandra Das had been permitted at his own instance to become a party defendant in the suit, he might have filed a written statement putting forward both defences to the plaintiffs' claim. As a matter of fact, however, he was not made a party, he had no opportunity of filing a written statement or of stating his case in a formal way. In that state of things, in my opinion, the Courts below were wrong in holding, on the authority of such cases as Nilkant Banerji v. Suresh Chandra Mullick (2) and Jaggeswar Dutt v. Bhuban Mohan Mitra (3), that the defendant-appellants are precluded in the present suit from asserting any right to redeem. In the case of Nilkant Banerji v. Suresh Chandra Mullick (2) decided by the Privy Council the defendant who claimed the right to redeem had been made a party to the mortgagee's suit. In that suit he had set up the paramount title which he claimed and he had said nothing about his right to redeem. Having been a party to the suit and the suit having been dismissed as against him on the ground that as he claimed a paramount title he was not a proper party to the suit, it was held that in the subsequent suit brought by the mortgagee for possession of the property, it was too late for him then to set up a new title under which he would have the right of redemption. The present case is almost the converse of that case. Hara Chandra Das was not permitted to become a party to the mortgage suit; and, as I have said he had no opportunity in that suit to put forward the case that even if he failed to establish a paramount title he had at least a right which would entitle him to redeem the plaintiffs. In my opinion, therefore, the Courts below are wrong in their conclusion that in the present suit the defendant-appellants are debarred from setting up a right of redemption.

Coming next to the first ground I find it somewhat difficult to reconcile the statements in the judgment of the Courts below that the appellant claims no right to redeem with the fact that this question is discussed in both the Courts in connection with issues Nos. 2 and 9 framed by the first Court. As regards the lower Appellate Court, it appears that the right to redeem was expressly asserted and insisted upon in paragraph 4 of the grounds of appeal filed in that Court. As to the plaintiffs' pleadings paragraphs 6 and 8 of the plaint embody an admission of the right of the defendants to redeem, should they be able to prove that the decree under which Hara Chandra Das obtained possession was not a decree founded upon a collusive transaction. In paragraph 6 of the plaint the plaintiffs say: "Particularly, even if the defendant No. 1 or his predecessor Hara Chandra Das had any decree, still the plaintiffs' mortgage being preferential, they had no right to retain the land of the schedule in their possession without redeeming the same." In paragraph 8 the plaintiffs say again: "If it is held that defendant No. 1 has any right to redeem any mortgage, then he may be given the opportunity to pay what is justly due to the plaintiffs on account of their mortgage; and if that opportunity be not availed, then a decree for possession may be awarded to the plaintiffs." Each party was, as usual, disputing the validity of the transaction under which the other claimed title. The plaintiffs said that Hara Chandra Das's money-decree was based on a collusive deed without consideration. The defendants impugned the mortgage of the plaintiffs on very much the same ground. What the Courts below have found is that both the transactions were bona fide and real transactions. It would seem to follow from the admissions in paragraphs 6 and 8 of the plaint that the plaintiffs' right to eject the defendants must be subject to the defendants' right to redeem the plaintiffs. There is nothing, so far as I can see, in what happened in the previous suit or in the conduct of the present suit by the defendants to debar them from this right of redemption, to which on the facts found they are clearly entitled. In that view, in my opinion, the decree of the Court below must be modified and the right of the defendants to redeem the plaintiffs declared.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal is allowed, the right of the defendants-appellants to redeem the plaintiffs in respect of the property in dispute is declared and the case remitted to the Court of first instance for that Court to take the proper accounts, determine the amount which the defendants should pay the plaintiffs for the purpose and make a decree accordingly. The appellants are entitled to their costs of this appeal. We make no order as to the costs in the Courts below. The costs of the further enquiry as to accounts now directed will be in the discretion of the Court of first instance.

Let the record be sent down as soon as possible.

Where a pro-note is executed by a vendee of immoveable property for part of the sale consideration, it is a question in each case whether the parties intended that the security was to be in lieu of the actual cash and whether the vendor was thereby to abandon his lien for unpaid purchase-money. [p 524, col. 1.]

The lien created by section 55 (4) of the Transfer of Property Act is different from the equitable lien known to English Law, for under the latter though the legal estate passes at the time of sale, the equitable estate does not pass until the purchase-money has been completely discharged. Ordinarily one of several vendors of immoveable property cannot enforce his charge on the property without making his co-vendors parties to the suit, save where the share of the party seeking enforcement thereof has been definitely fixed.[p. 525, col. 2.]

The interpretation of a document is a point of law which can be taken in second appeal and that, taken with the intention of the parties, is a mixed question of law and fact which the High Court can itself deal with in second appeal. [p. 526, col. 1.]

Where one of two vendees executed a pro-note for part of the sale price in favour of one of two vendors and amounts in discharge thereof were entered on the pro-note and the vendor in whose favour the note was executed sued on it without impleading his co-vendor:

JUDGMENT.

PHILLIPS, J.—In this case the plaintiff and another jointly sold certain lands to defendants Nos. 1 and 4 for Rs. 10,000 under Exhibit A. The document recites the receipt of Rs. 10,000 in cash and at the end of the document the particulars for the receipt of Rs. 10,000 are given as follows :— Rs. 8,650 received in cash,—Rs. 1,350 received as per two bonds executed separately in our favour by the aforesaid T. Kristnaswami Iyengar (the 1st defendant). One bond was executed in favour of the present plaintiff and the other in favour of his co-vendor Srinivasavaradachariar. The plaintiff now sues to recover the amount due to him on account of his sale, namely, Rs. 675 with interest. He also makes other claims with which we are not concerned now. The lower Courts have given him a decree for the amount due and have also given him a charge on the plaint property treating the amount as unpaid purchase-money.

It is now contended in appeal that this charge ought not to be given because the whole of the purchase-money had been paid. This plea is based on two grounds, (1) that the two promissory notes constituted part of the consideration to be paid for the land and were not merely collateral security for the unpaid purchase-money, and (2) that the vendors accepted the sole liability of the first defendant in respect of these two promissory notes and exonerated the other vendee, the 4th defendant.

The appellant has quoted a large number of English cases in support of his plea, but it must be observed that the vendor's lien for unpaid purchase-money is of a somewhat different nature in English Law from the statutory lien granted under section 55 (4) of the Transfer of Property Act. for in England the lien is an equitable lien and is based on the assumption that although the legal estate passes at the time of sale, the equitable estate does not pass until the purchase-money has been completely discharged.

For this reason the two cases quoted, viz., Jersey (Earl) v. Briton Ferry Floating Dock Co. (1) and Winter v. Lord Anson (2), have no application here. Three other cases have been cited, viz., Dixon v. Gayfere (3), Parrott v. Sweetland (4) and Brentwood Brick and Coal Company, In re (5). In two of those cases the consideration for the sale was the payment of an annuity to the vendor or his relations, and it was held that the vendor had no lien on the property in respect of the amount so secured. The third case was one where a consideration of £ 6,000 was agreed to be paid out of shares which were to be subsequently allotted by the vendee company. It was there held that the consideration had actually passed and that the balance which was due was secured by an agreement which was accepted in lieu of cash. The details of cases are not of very much importance here except as authority for the proposition that it is open to a vendor to accept security from vendee for part of the purchase-money in lieu of the actual cash and thus to lose his lien for unpaid purchase-money. But whether he actually does so or whether he accepts the agreement merely as collateral security for future payment is a question of the intention of the parties. Similarly in other English cases where a creditor accepted the liability of one of two or more joint debtors, it was held to discharge the other debtors in respect of the original debt due. [Vide, Lyth v. Ault (6) and Thompson v. Percival (7)].

We, therefore, have to consider in this case what was the intention of the parties when the sale was made. When a vendor takes a promissory note from the vendee it does not necessarily follow that he has given up his statutory lien under section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act. Vide, Vellayappa Chettiar v. Narayanan Chettyar (8). And even when the promissory note is given by a third person it has been held in Kampiah Pillai v. Hari Row (9) that that fact raises no presumption that the lien has been abandoned.

After a careful consideration of all these cases, it appears to me that we are thrown back upon the facts of each particular case and must infer the intention of the parties from the document itself and the surrounding circumstances, giving due weight to the fact that the vendor has a statutory lien for unpaid purchase-money which he can enforce in the absence of an agreement to the contrary. In the present case both Courts have found that the plaintiff had not lost his lien. But the District Judge has not discussed the circumstance of the case in any way than by merely saying that it has been repeatedly held that a vendor does not lose his lien by taking a promissory note as part of his purchase-money. But he omits to add that if he takes a security as part of the consideration there is no unpaid purchase-money for which he can have a lien. The language of the document supports the appellants' plea that the promissory notes were taken as part of the consideration for the sale-deed and expressly recites receipt of the whole purchase-money. It is also significant that the promissory notes were executed by only one vendee in favour of the two vendors separately, one promissory note in favour of each and in the notes there is a stipulation for a fixed rate of interest. It also appears that money has been paid towards the discharge of these promissory notes and the payments endorsed on the notes. It is also significant that the plaintiff has brought this suit without impleading his co-vendor. He does not allege in the plaint to what share of the property sold he is entitled. But it is alleged now on his behalf that inasmuch as one promissory note was executed in his favour for one half of the purchase-money not paid in cash, he must be deemed to be entitled to one-half of the property. There is, however, no evidence that the actual cash was received by the two vendors in equal shares and consequently there can be no presumption that the plaintiff is entitled to a lien for one-half of the unpaid purchase-money. In the absence of the co vendor it would be inequitable to determine the shares to which he and the plaintiff are respectively entitled, for possibly the co-vendor might have owned a very large fraction of the property sold, in which case the plaintiff would not be entitled to a lien for one-half of the unpaid consideration.

No doubt the plaintiff is entitled to the amount specified in the promissory note. But I am of opinion that he cannot enforce his lien without impleading his co-vendor. No doubt in clause (2) of section 55, Transfer of Property Act, the benefit of a contract of a sale "is annexed to and goes with the interest of the transferee as such and may be enforced by every person in whom that interest is for the whole or any part thereof from time to time vested," and it has been held in Chidambaram Pillai v. Sivathasamy Thever (10) that one of the two co-vendees can bring a suit without impleading the other. But in that case it was found as a fact that each of the purchasers had contributed half of the purchase-money. There is no provision in clause 4 of section 55 similar to that in clause (2) and I have not been referred to any case in which it has been held that one of several vendors of immoveable property is entitled to enforce his charge upon the property without making his co-vendor a party to the suit. Objection as to the non-joinder of the plaint.

iff's co-vendor was taken in the 1st defendant's written statement and an issue was framed as to whether the plaintiff was entitled to claim a charge.

In a case of this kind where the meaning of the parties is not exactly obvious, I should be reluctant to interfere with the concurrent finding of two Courts, if it were not for the fact that the lower Appellate Court has not at all discussed the question on which the case really turns. I am of opinion, on consideration of the language of the document, of the subsequent payments upon the promissory notes and of the plaintiff's action in bringing this suit separately from his co-vendor, that it was the intention of the parties that the two promissory-notes should form part of the consideration of the sale. In that view there is no unpaid purchase-money for which the plaintiff can have a lien. Put in this way the question at issue would seem to be one of fact as is often the case when a document has to be interpreted, but it has always been held by this Court that the interpretation of a document is a point of law which can be taken in second appeal. In this case, moreover, the District Judge has altogether failed to take into consideration the law on the subject when determining what was the intention of the parties and, therefore, I think, the question is one of mixed law and fact which can be dealt with here, and I may add that the learned Vakil for the respondents has not taken any objection.

I would, therefore, allow this appeal with costs and modify the lower Courts' decree by disallowing the plaintiffs' charge upon the land.

JUDGMENT.—In this appeal we are concerned with the chowkidari chakran lands of Mouza Someparah.

These lands were resumed by Government in 1898, and were thereafter transferred to the Zemindar (the Maharajah of Burdwan) subject to an annual assessment of Rs. 51-5-0. By a lease, dated 10th Chait 1308, the Maharajah next let out the lands to respondent No. 2 at a yearly rent of Rs. 77, and he in his turn has settled upon portions thereof cultivating tenants who in this appeal are respondents Nos. 3 to 26.

The plaintiff-appellant is the owner of an eight-anna share in the Putni of Mouza Someparah and the only question argued before us is whether the chowkidari chakran lands of the Mouza were excluded from the Putni.

It is now common ground that the terms upon which the grant of the Putni was made are embodied in a kabuliyat (Exhibit B) executed by one Radharaman Thakur in favour of the Zemindar on the 21st Ashar 1216, corresponding with the 3rd of July 1809.

The grant is in respect of the whole Mouza and unless we find provision to the contrary the chowkidari chakran lands, being part of the Zemindar's estate in the Mouza, we must hold to be included.

The kabuliyat expressly reserves or excepts certain lands falling under three descriptions, namely, (1) the house, garden and tank in the Zemindar's khas possession, (2) tanks and the like covered by sanads granted prior to the date of the Putni, and (3) aymahs antecedent to the Zemindari.

Between the provisions relating to the 2nd and 3rd of these three classes we find a clause which has been properly translated thus :—

"If any chowkidar attached to the Police Cutchery die or go away ..... and if it be necessary to make a change (i.e., appoint or dismiss), you (i. e., the Zemindar) shall make the same and with that I shall have no concern."

With this clause the Judges of both Courts below have considered the question whether the services expected of chowkidars in addition to the performance of their duties as village watchmen were rendered to the Zemindar, or to the Putnidar. Their findings, as we read them, appear to be that such services were rendered neither to Zemindar nor to Putnidar and, in any event, that of the rendering of such services to the Putnidar no satisfactory evidence has been given. Even then if such evidence be admissible the findings arrived at are of no assistance to us in the present case.

The contention of the respondents which found favour in both the lower Courts is that the clause set out above imports the exclusion of the chowkidari chakran lands.

In at least three cases kabuliyats of about the same period, and in terms very similar to those contained in the one now under consideration, and all executed in favour of the Burdwan Raj have been construed by this Court. Of these cases one reported as Nitya Nund Hazra v. Maharajadhiraj Bejoy Chand Mohatab (1) lends support to the contention of the respondents, while in two, the decisions, namely, the first in an unreported case Second Appeal No. 2114 of 1903 and the second in the case reported as Girish Chandra Roy v. Hem Chandra Roy (2) assist the contrary contention of the appellant.

These decisions not being between the same parties and the documents also being different are not of course binding upon us in the present case.

We, however, agree with the view taken in Girish Chandra Roy v. Hem Chandra Roy (2) that the clause which reserves to or confers upon the Zemindar the right to appoint or dismiss chowkidars has not the effect of reserving to the Zemindar and of excluding from the Putni the chowkidari chakran lands.

In the result this appeal succeeds. The decrees of the lower Courts are set aside and there will be a decree declaring that to the extent and in respect of his 8-annas share plaintiff-appellant is entitled in Putni right to the lands in suit subject to the annual assessment fixed or approved by the Collector. To the same extent he will recover possession from and jointly with respondents Nos. 2, 27 and 28. The decree will not authorize him to disturb the possession of tenant respondents Nos. 3 to 26, but will entitle him to receive rent from the said defendants in respect of his share. He will further recover mesne profits for the 3 years prior to suit from respondents Nos. 1 and 2, such profits to be ascertained in the manner provided in the Civil Procedure Code, Order XX, rule 12 (1), clause (b). The plaintiff appellant will further have his costs throughout from respondents Nos. 1, 2 and 28. The decree for costs in favour of original respondent No. 27 who has not been made a party to this appeal remains unaffected by this decision.

ALLAH DAD—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—RESPONDENT.

Punjab Alienation of Land Act (XIII of 1900), s. 16—Mortgage—Debt, whether can be separated from security—Execution—Mortgage-debt, whether can be sold apart from security.

A mortgage-debt cannot be separated from the security and sold in execution of a decree, where the mortgage itself is not liable to sale. The sale of the debt would carry with it the security.

Where, therefore, the provisions of section 16 of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act prevent a decree-holder from selling up his judgment-debtor's mortgage rights, he cannot sell up either the debt or the security.

Second Appeal from the order of the Additional District Judge, Sialkot, dated the 14th August 1916.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mehr Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The judgment-debtor holds certain land in mortgage. It is admitted that the provisions of section 16 of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act prevent the decree-holder from selling up the mortgagee's rights, but he wishes to sell the mortgage-debt, separating the debt from the security. The lower Appellate Court having held that he cannot do so, the decree-holder appeals to this Court.

Mr. Manohar Lal admits that he is unable to quote any authority in his favour. On the contrary, he frankly admits that there is an authority, Tarvadi Bholanath v. Bai Kashi (1), to the effect that the sale of the debt carries with it the security. The same view is also expressed in Karam Ilahi v. Gulab Rai (2).

We note that in this case the mortgage is with possession and under the terms of the mortgage-deed the mortgagor cannot redeem till the end of 18 years, a few only of which have as yet elapsed. So even if the debt were to be sold apart from security, the auction-purchaser would have to wait till redemption before he could realize anything. At the end of the 18 years the mortgagor might not care to redeem. If he did not redeem till limitation had expired the mortgagee would apparently retain possession for ever, the auction-purchaser having no remedy, not being the mortgagee he could not recover his money in any way. But if the mortgagor wished to redeem he would find that the curious situation was that the mortgagee in possession was no longer the mortgage creditor. What the real legal effects of such a peculiar state of affairs would be we are not prepared to say. It is sufficient for us to say that we agree with the Bombay ruling that the debt and the security should not be divorced.

We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Plaintiff filed an objection to the attachment of a share in a village in respect of which he held two registered mortgages. On the date fixed for evidence the scribe of one of the mortgage-deeds was the only witness present for the objector, who, however, did not examine him. An adjournment was refused and the case was closed with the result that the objection was dismissed. Plaintiff instituted a suit for a declaration more than one year after the dismissal of the objection. It was urged that the suit was barred under Article 11 of the Limitation Act:

Mr. V. D. Sathaye, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. Gupta, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—The plaint on which this case commences recites that the plaintiffs are mortgagees under a registered mortgage executed by the 1st defendant on 14th June 1906, whereby he mortgaged a 7·1/9-annas share of Mouza Harnkhedi with sir khudkasht and cultivating rights in the same. The amount claimed is Rs. 1,027-4-0. The 2nd defendant Sheoram is said to have attached the mortgaged property and had it sold, therefore he has a right to redeem. The 1st defendant the mortgagor admits the mortgage-bond and the claim. The 2nd defendant is the decree-holder who having obtained a money-decree has purchased the mortgaged property in execution of that decree. He denied the claim. He contends that the suit is not maintainable, on the ground that the plaintiff had filed an objection under Order XXI, rule 62, Civil Procedure Code, which objection was dismissed and the plaintiff not having brought a suit to set aside that order within the period of limitation he cannot bring this case. The case went to trial, inter alia, on the following issues:

(1) Whether the plaintiff No. 1 and the plaintiff No. 2's father Bhagwan had preferred objections to the attachment by defendant No. 2 in execution of his money-decree and was the objection disallowed?

(2) Is the present suit to enforce the mortgage barred under Order XXI, rule 63, of Schedule I of the Civil Procedure Code and Article 11 of the Limitation Act?

The first Court found the first issue in favour of the 2nd defendant. On the 2nd issue the first Court came to the conclusion that the objection petition in Miscellaneous Case No. 160 of 1908 purported to have been preferred under Order XXI, rule 62, and in that application what was sought for was an order to sell the property subject to the two encumbrances of the plaintiff, viz, dated 14th June 1906 and 28th January 1908, and that objection was disallowed on 5th January 1909, as the objector gave no evidence in support of his case. It held that the order became conclusive against the plaintiff on 6th January 1910 and as no suit was filed to set aside that order within one year as prescribed by Article 11 of he Limitation Act, the plaintiff's encumbrances must be held to be extinguished. The suit was dismissed. On appeal the lower Appellate Court upheld the decision of the first Court. The order passed on the plaintiff's objection runs as follows:—

"The objector alleges that the property under attachment has been mortgaged to him by two documents, dated 14th June 1906 and 28th January 1908, respectively. He accordingly asks that the attachment may be raised. The decree-holder remained absent though personally served. Case proceeded ex parte against him. Time was given to the objector to produce his evidence. He has not summoned any of the four attesting witnesses but says that only one of the scribes is present. He assigns no reason for the default except mistake and asks for an adjournment. I refuse to grant any adjournment and close the case. The documents remain unproved. The objection is accordingly disallowed with costs on objector."

The order is dated 5th January 1909. It is pressed for the appellants that as the order was not passed on the merits it cannot be held conclusive, nor one to which Article 11 of the Limitation Act applies. Sarala Subba Rau v. Kamsala Timmayya (1), Kallar Singh v. Toril Mahton (2) and Nandlal Brahmin v. Krishnaji (3) are quoted in support of this proposition. On the other hand the respondent's learned Counsel relies on Rahim Bux v. Abdul Kader (4), Sardhari Lal v. Ambika Pershad (5). In my opinion the objection before the Munsif is not sufficient to bring the case within Order XXI, rule 63 of the Code. There was really no investigation at all. At least the scribe of one of the documents who was present should have been examined. I, therefore, hold that the case does not fall within the one year period laid down by Article 11 of the Limitation Act and I set aside the orders of the Courts below and hold that the suit is within time and remand the case for a decision on the merits A refund certificate will issue and other costs will abide the result.

Case remanded.

GHULAM RASUL - JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—RESPONDENT.

Execution—Duty of executing Court—Decree to be executed literally—Subject-matter of decree altered materially—Decree, whether capable of execution.

An executing Court cannot tamper with decrees which must be executed literally. [p. 531, col. 1.]

When a decree cannot be executed literally it cannot be executed at all. [p 531, col. 1.]

Plaintiff obtained a decree that he was entitled to share the water flowing through a certain rajbaha equally with the defendant. Subsequently the canal authorities made certain alterations, as a result of which the volume of water flowing through the rajbaha was increased and many other persons besides the plaintiff and the defendant became entitled to share in the water:

Held, that the decree in favour of the plaintiff was no longer capable of execution. [p. 530, col. 2.]

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Multan, dated the 22nd February 1916, confirming that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Multan, dated the 21st July 1915, rejecting an application for execution.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi and Mr. Shah Nawaz, for the Appellant

Mr. C. Bevan Petman and the Hon'ble Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The following rough plan will assist.

There were originally two rajbahas C D and A B. Now the upper part of C D has been closed and a cross cut E F has been made so that water now flows from A to D via E F.

While both rajbahas were separate, plaintiff and defendant had a dispute and plaintiff sued and got a decree declaring that he and defendant were entitled to share equally in the water of the A B rajbaha.

Since that decree was passed the canal authorities have, as above described, remodelled the rajbahas and water for both of them now passes down A E. The canal authorities having refused to recognise plaintiff's claim to share equally with defendant, plaintiff now applies to the Court asking that the decree may be enforced by attachment of property (vide Order XXI, rule 32). The first Court holds that the kassi (or water cut) having been changed the decree is practically inoperative. The District Judge upholds this order, remarking that there are several other persons now interested in the supply of water who were not parties to the decree (this refers to those persons who got water along F D) and that if the decree-holder wants to enforce his decree regarding the kassi at a point lower down the Sarla Branch he can ask the Civil Court for the necessary civil relief. I am now inclined to think that the District Judge means that if plaintiff wants to demand one-half share of the water which passes down E B he should bring a fresh suit for it. Whether such a suit would lie I cannot now decide. What I have to decide is whether the old decree can be enforced. On consideration I am of opinion that it cannot be enforced. That decree was for one-half of the water which came down from A. Now plaintiff obviously is not entitled to $\frac{1}{2}$ of it, for other persons who formerly got water from C are now entitled to a share. So the old decree dividing equally between plaintiff and defendant the whole of the water which came from A cannot now be regarded as in full force. It might be said that the spirit of the decree should be carried out, and that defendant should be made to share equally with plaintiff the water which flows down E B after some has been taken off at F for the use of persons who formerly got their water from C. But an executing Court cannot tamper with decrees. Decrees must be executed literally. Here the decree cannot be executed literally, owing to change of circumstances, and so I do not think it can be executed at all.

The appeal is dismissed, but I pass no order as to costs as I think it hard that plaintiff should have lost the benefit of his decree.

Appeal dismissed.

Berar Land Revenue Code, s. 78 (2)—Anti-ijara tenancy—Presumption—Burden of proof.

It is the tenant who wants to remain on the land in spite of the landlord's wishes to the contrary that has to prove the circumstances which entitle him to do so. He has, therefore, to prove, in the case of an anti-ijara tenancy in Berar, that no satisfactory evidence of the commencement of his tenancy and of the period agreed upon between the landlord and tenant for its duration is forthcoming.

If he fails to do so no presumption under section 78 (2) of the Berar Land Revenue Code can be made in his favour.

Appeal from the decree of the Court of the District Judge, Amraoti, dated the 30th April 1917, in Appeal No. 193 of 1916.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. V. Joshi, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 3.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sue, after service of notice to quit, the defendant No. 2 whom they allege to be an annual tenant. Defendant No., 2 pleads that he purchased his field orally from one Raoo, who was an anti-ijara tenant, and is not liable to ejectment.

In this Court it is argued that the defendant No. 2 is a tenant of antiquity and is entitled to remain on the land under the provisions of section 78 (2) of the Berar Land Revenue Code.

The lower Appellate Court has found that the origin of Raoo's tenancy is not obscure, but that it commenced somewhere about 1872. This finding is not challenged, but it is argued that the defendant having carried back his tenancy to that year a presumption should be made that he was a tenant of antiquity and the burden should have been held to have shifted to the plaintiffs to prove that the defendant is not a tenant of antiquity but only an annual tenant. I do not think any such presumption can be raised and the burden shifted in consequence to the plaintiffs.

It is the tenant who wants to remain on the land in spite of the landlord's wishes to the contrary that has to prove the circumstances which entitle him to do so. He has, therefore, to prove that no satisfactory evidence of the commencement of his tenancy and of the period agreed upon between the landlord and tenant for its duration is forthcoming.

If he fails to do so the presumption under section 78 (2) will not be made in his favour.

Apart from this, however, the lower Appellate Court has found that the defendant has not shown that he can claim under Raoo, so as to take advantage of the period of Raoo's tenancy, as he has failed to prove his alleged purchase from Raoo 25 or 30 years ago.

The notice given in this case is dated 12th November 1913 and asks the defendant to vacate by 31st March 1914, and appears to be quite proper and legal. It is to be noted that in his pleadings the defendant No. 2 only denied that any notice was given to him. He did not plead that it was not a valid notice.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Mr. Muhammad Hasan Jan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

CHAMIER, C. J.—In execution of a decree for arrears of rent obtained by one Umdan Bibi against Nazrul Hossain and others certain property was put up for sale on March 9th, 1914, and was purchased by the appellant. A few days before the date fixed for the confirmation of the sale the respondent's father Baijnath Rai, alleging that he had purchased the property at an execution sale held after the sale of March 9th, 1914, deposited the amount due to Umdan Bibi. The Munsif thereupon set aside the sale, purporting to act under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The appellant objected but his objection was overruled. He then brought the present suit for a declaration that Baijnath had no right to deposit the money and had acquired no title to the property. The Munsif gave him a decree which was affirmed by the District Judge. On second appeal a learned Judge of this Court dismissed the suit, holding that it was not maintainable. The learned Judge referred to the decision in Kabilaso Koer v. Raghu Nath Sakan Singh (1). That was a case in which a judgment-debtor sued to set aside a sale. Her suit was barred by section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure notwithstanding the fact that the auction-purchaser was interested in the matter and was a party to the case [see Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (2)].

Section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act corresponds to section 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882 (Order XXI, rule 89 of the present Code). Under the Code of 1882 it was well settled that the auction-purchaser was entitled to sue to set aside an order under section 311 setting aside or refusing to confirm a sale [see Azim-ud-din v. Baldeo (3), Mathuradas v. Panahlal (4), Shiam Behari Lal v. Rup Kishore (5), and the notes of Messrs. Woodroffe and Amir Ali to Order XXI, rule 92]. It follows that a similar suit could have been maintained in respect of an order passed under section 310A. There does not appear to be any reported Calcutta case directly in point. This may be due to the fact that erroneous orders of the kind now in question were generally taken up to the High Court on the revision side. But the reasoning on which the Allahabad and Bombay cases rest was accepted by the Calcutta High Court in many cases. Under the Code of 1882 the only ground for negativing the right to bring a suit to confirm or set aside an execution sale, after an order had been passed on the subject by the Court executing the decree, was that the suit was barred by section 244 [see Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (2)]. A suit like the one now before us could not have been held to be barred by section 244. Before 1908, so far as I know, no Court ever doubted that a suit of this kind would lie. It is within my knowledge that many such suits were brought.

RAJESWARI DASI v. BENODA SUNDARI DASI.

The Code of 1908 allows an appeal by a person aggrieved by an order under Order XXI, rule 92, and bars a suit like the one now before us. [See Order XXI, rule 92 (3), which prohibits a suit by a person against whom an order is passed under Order XXI, rules 89, 90 or 91]. But no such provision has been inserted in the Bengal Tenancy Act and it is impossible to hold that an order passed under section 174 of that Act is an order passed under Order XXI, rule 89, and attracts the operation of Order XXI, rule 92 (3).

The omission is, I think, unfortunate but with that we are not concerned.

I would allow this appeal and dismiss the appeal to this Court with costs of both hearings.

ROE, J.—I agree. I have sought in vain for any bar to the suit. Under section 9, Civil Procedure Code, the Courts had jurisdiction to try the suit and on the merits were required to give a decree.

Appeal allowed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 20—Acknowledgment by judgment-debtor, whether saves limitation against auction-purchaser—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 69—Proof of document where all attesting witnesses are dead.

An auction-purchaser of a property in execution of a money-decree is entitled to have the property purchased by him in the condition in which it was at the time of attachment. Therefore, an acknowledgment of a lien on the property made by the judgment-debtor after its attachment cannot prevail against the auction-purchaser although such acknowledgment if made before attachment may save limitation as against the auction-purchaser. [p. 534, col. 1.]

Where all the attesting witnesses of a mortgage-bond including the scribe were dead and a witness was called who proved the handwriting of the attesting witnesses and who said that he was present at the execution of the document, but did not say that he saw the mortgagor signing his name nor did he say that the signature on the document was the signature of the mortgagor:

Held, that there was a defect in the proof of the mortgage-bond under section 69 of the Evidence Act. [p. 533, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Jessore, dated the 4th June 1914, modifying that of the Munsif, 2nd Court, Bongaon, dated the 1st of May 1913.

Babu Sashi Sekhar Bose, for the Appellants.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit upon a mortgage bond Exhibit I said to have been executed by Bhim Karmakar, the deceased father of defendant No. 1, in favour of Jadumandal the husband of plaintiff No. 1, on the 9th August 1891. On the 18th of March 1898 defendant No. 1 executed a kobala in respect of some lands in favour of Jadumandal and in this document marked Exhibit II made an admission of the earlier mortgage of the 9th August 1891. On the 21st March 1898 one Basant purchased property No. 1 in execution of a money-decree against defendant No. 1 and sold the same to defendant No. 2 on the 12th August 1898. The suit giving rise to this appeal was brought on the 16th March 1910 and would be barred by limitation unless the acknowledgment by defendant No 1 in Exhibit II can save it. Then arises the question whether Exhibit I has been proved in accordance with law. All the attesting witnesses including the scribe are dead. One witness Hazarilal has proved the handwriting of the attesting witnesses: he says he was present at the execution but does not say that he saw Bhim signing his name, nor does he say that the signature of Bhim on the document is the signature of Bhim. There is, therefore, a defect in the proof of the document under section 69 of the Evidence Act. Does the admission in Exhibit II cure this defect? Defendant No. 2 claims under a purchase from Basant, who purchased at an auction sale the right, title and interest of defendant No. 1. Is the admission of defendant No. 1 binding on defendant No. 2, that is to say, is the auction-purchaser or his transferee bound by the admission of the judgment-debtor made before his purchase? It was said by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Dinendronath Sannial v. Ramkumar Ghose (1) that the auction-purchaser "derives title by operation of law adversely to the judgment-debtor" but their Lordships held in a later case, Mahomed Mozuffer Hossein v. Kishori Mohun Roy (2), that the auction-purchaser is bound by an estoppel binding upon the judgment debtor. Sir Charles Sargent, C. J., in the case of Ali Sahib v. Kaji Ahmed (3), held after reference to the former case, that "although the title is derived from the judgment-debtor against his will, the purchaser's liability to be ejected nonetheless arises from the title which he has derived from the judgment-debtor." The auction-purchaser was held to have derived his liability through the judgment-debtor. An acknowledgment, therefore, by a judgment-debtor may save limitation against the auction-purchaser. There is a further question, however, that arises in this case, and that is that the acknowledgment was made only three days before the auction-sale and must, therefore, have been made after attachment; does that make any difference? I think it does. The auction-purchaser is entitled to have the property purchased by him in the condition in which it was at the time of the attachment. The judgment-debtor is debarred by section 64, Civil Procedure Code, from making any private transfer of any interest in the property after attachment. But for the acknowledgment the lien on the property attached would have expired before the present suit: the effect of allowing the acknowledgment to prevail would be to give a longer life to the lien, that is, to place a larger burden on the property than it bore at the time of the attachment. I think that the acknowledgment in this case, made as it was after attachment, cannot prevail against the auction-purchaser defendant No. 2.

In this view of the case the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Ala and adna maliks—Right to share of produce—Declaratory suit to establish right as adna maliks—Burden of proof.

Plaintiffs sued for a declaration that they were the adna proprietors and in possession of the land in suit and that the defendants were merely ala proprietors entitled to receive malikana dues at 25 per cent of the land revenue. It appeared that the land in dispute had been entered in the successive settlement records as the property of the defendants whose names were written across both the columns relating to ala and adna maliks:

Held, (1) that the onus was on the plaintiffs to establish their claim to inferior proprietorship and to prove that the defendants were merely superior proprietors entitled to recover only 25 per cent. on the land revenue; [p. 535, col. 2.]

(2) that the mere fact that tenants had been located by the village officers was no adequate ground for depriving the defendants of their right of ownership when the entries with regard to that matter had all along been in their favour; [p. 537, col. 2.]

(3) that the plaintiffs having failed to discharge the onus that lay on them, the defendants were entitled to the ownership both ala and adna, of the land in suit [p. 537, col. 1]

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Mianwali, dated the 25th August 1914, dismissing the suit with costs to defendants Nos. 1 to 85.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain and Mr. B. R. Puri, for the Respondents.

AHMAD YAR v. MUHAMMAD KHAN.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to the respective rights of the parties in a large plot of land, nearly 84,756 kanals in area, situate in the village Kundal of the Isa Khel Tahsil in the Mianwali District. Plaintiffs claim that they along with defendants Nos. 162 to 211 are the adna maliks of the land and that the defendants Nos. 1 to 85 are merely ala maliks and entitled as such to receive only 25 per cent on the land revenue assessed on the land This claim is resisted by defendants Nos. 1 to 85, who deny these allegations and assert that they are full proprietors, and have the right to recover from the tenants one-tenth share of the produce. The remaining defendants who are occupancy tenants and tenants-at-will are not interested in the result of the litigation, and may consequently be regarded as merely pro forma defendants.

Upon the pleadings of the parties the Subordinate Judge framed four issues, which are set out in the judgment appealed against, and after recording his opinion thereon against the plaintiffs has dismissed their suit. Against this decree the plaintiffs have preferred a first appeal to this Court; and we have listened to lengthy arguments advanced by learned Counsel on both sides, and given our long and careful consideration to the points raised by them and to the evidence upon the record.

The decision of the appeal depends mainly upon the documentary evidence on the record, and it is necessary to give a brief historical retrospect of the village Kundal. It appears that prior to the present settlement, the operations of which continued up to 1907 and even later, the village was divided into two distinct sub divisions, one consisting of land near the river Indus and thus liable to be submerged, and the other comprising the high land. These two sub-divisions were styled respectively Kacha Kundal and Pacca Kundal or Thal Kundal, and have in the present settlement been assessed as two separate estates. The land in dispute is situate in Thal Kundal, and was entered in the Settlement Record of 1878 as the property of the defendants, whose names are written across both the columns Nos. 5 and 6 relating to ala malik and adna malik. This entry is clearly in favour of the defendants and so are the entries in the Summary Settlements of 1854 and 1865, which show that the defendants were proprietors of not only the land in dispute but of the entire village. The onus is, therefore, upon the plaintiffs to establish their claim to inferior proprietorship and to prove that the defendants are merely superior proprietors entitled to recover only 25 per cent. on the land revenue.

The plaintiffs claim that the judgment of the Settlement Superintendent, Mian Ghulam Farid, passed in 1876 conferred upon them the rights of adna maliks in the land in dispute. Now, that judgment dealt with the particular case of one Waryam, who claimed inferior proprietorship in a plot of land as against the Isa Khel proprietors (the contesting defendants or their predecessors); and the Settlement Superintendent, while adjudicating upon that claim, laid down certain general principles determining the status of the different settlers in the village, which principles received the approval of the Settlement Officer. It is beyond dispute that prior to that judgment the only owners shown in the Revenue Records were the defendants or their ancestors, and that all other right-holders were shown as tenants. The latter were divided by the Superintendent into three classes according to the length of their occupation. 1) Those who settled in the village before the Settlement of 1853-54 A. D. They were given the status of adna maliks. (2) Those who settled between the Summary Settlement of 1853-54 and the year 1865. They were given the status of occupancy tenants. (3) Lastly, those persons who settled after 1856. They were regarded as tenants-at-will. The Superintendent further directed that the right-holders belonging to classes (1) and (2) should pay one-tenth of the produce of the land to the Isa Khel proprietors, but on appeal by Waryam, who was conceded the status of an inferior proprietor, Mr. Thorburn, the Settlement Officer, declared that Waryam should in future pay 25 per cent. on the land revenue in cash instead of khutti in kind.

Now it is contended that this order governs the land in dispute, and that the connection of the Isa Khel proprietors with the land is confined to the receipt of 25 per cent. on the land revenue. This contention was accepted by Pandit Hari Kishen Kaul, who carried out the recent Settlement of the district, but his order was set aside by the Financial Commissioner. Upon a careful consideration of the pros and cons, and upon an examination of all the relevant evidence on the record, we are of opinion that the plaintiffs' claim cannot be entertained. In the first place, there can be no doubt whatsoever that the status of the persons occupying the different plots of land was determined in accordance with the duration of their possession and that the classification referred to above could have no possible application to a plot of land which was not in the occupation of the plaintiffs. It appears that out of the total area of nearly 85,000 kanals, only 152 kanals was cultivated at the time of the Settlement of 1377 78, and that even that small area had been reclaimed only two or three years before the Settlement. It is obvious that in accordance with the aforesaid general principles only the plot of 152 kanals could come under the third category and to this the Isa Khel proprietors have no objection even now.

It is, however, argued that the decision of the Superintendent was applied, as a matter of fact, to the property in dispute and that consequently plaintiffs have since then located tenants, realised khutti from them, and paid only 25 per cent. on the land revenue to the defendants. In this connection our attention is invited to an entry in the remarks column of the khewat of 1878 relating to the land in dispute, stating that "this land was declared to be as held by the tenants and the adna maliks;" and also to an entry in column 7 relating to possession. This entry states that "the conditions of possession and cultivation are entered at khata No. 109:" and upon a reference to that khata we find it recorded that both the tenants and adna maliks "are, according to the old practice, empowered to cultivate this land with the permission of the proprietors . . . . . If any of the occupants wishes to make the land abad he can do so with the permission of lambardars and warhidars. At the time the land is made abad occupant shall give one-tenth share of the produce to the ala maliks as khutti."

Now, taking these entries at their face value, the only thing they show is that the adna maliks and tenants were regarded as being in possession of the land, and were entitled to locate tenants. But it is quite clear that the tenants, when located, were to pay khutti or one-tenth share of the produce to the ala maliks and not to the plaintiffs. There is nothing whatever in the Settlement entries to show that the plaintiffs were ever regarded as adna proprietors of this large area, and that the original owners were deprived of their rights pro tanto. Indeed, as pointed out above, it is the defendants whose names are written across both the columns relating to adna and ala proprietors; and it is unlikely that if the Revenue Authorities held the plaintiffs to be adna proprietors of the area in dispute, they would not have recorded them as such in the Settlement records, considering that the orders passed in 1876 were given full effect to in respect of other holdings by means of separate entries in the columns for superior and inferior proprietors.

Coming now to the different clauses of the wajib-ul arz we observe that paragraph 7, upon which the appellants place their main reliance, is couched in ambiguous language, but taking it in the most favourable light for the plaintiffs, we find that it deals only with possession in terms similar to the entry in the remarks column of the khata referred to above, and has absolutely no bearing upon ala or adna proprietorship. It recites that according to the judgment of the Superintendent passed in 1876, the land was declared to be in the possession of the tenants and adna maliks, and that the lambardars and warhidars were to make arrangements for cultivation. Now, we have already pointed out that the aforesaid judgment does not proprio vigore apply to the land in dispute, nor do the principles enunciated therein, and our attention has not been invited to any order passed by any competent authority which made the judgment applicable to the property in dispute and determined the question of the possession and the location of tenants in the manner described in that paragraph. It is clear that the rights of ownership, whether superior or inferior, are not affected thereby; and, indeed the other clauses of the wajib-ul-arz place the question of defendants' full ownership beyond all reasonable doubt. For instance, the latter portion of paragraph 5 clearly states that the adna maliks are the owners of the area actually possessed by them, and even the earlier portion, with the exception o the words "siwae wasuli khutti," which words are meaningless, and, as pointed out by the Financial Commissioner, appear to have been introduced by mistake from a similar clause in the wajib ul-arz of the other villages, shows that the Isa Khel proprietors were the persons who located all the tenants. Further, paragraph 1 states that the adna proprietors have no claim of ownership to lands other than those held by them, and paragraph 21, which deals with the village abadi, provides that the land in possession of the non-proprietors is owned by the proprietors (the contesting defendants), and the malikan kabza and the adna proprietors are the owners of the sites of their respective houses, and have no concern whatsoever with the sites other than those possessed by them. Lastly, paragraph 27 declares that the contesting defendants or their predecessors were owners of the land under the cultivation of the tenants and received one-tenth share as khutti.

A perusal of all the relevant entries in the Settlement Record of 1878 leads us to the conclusion that the ownership both ala and adna of the land in dispute vests in the defendants and the plaintiffs, upon whom the burden of establishing their claim rested, have failed to discharge that onus. As regards the entry relating to possession and location of tenants, we have already remarked that there was no justification for making it in 1878; and though the oral evidence adduced by the plaintiffs shows that the Isa Khel proprietors have not been taking interest in making arrangements for cultivation and in assigning the different plots of land to the tenants, it cannot be said that they have not dealt directly with the tenants at all. Indeed Pandit Hari Kishen Kaul, who directed entries to be made in favour of the plaintiffs, says that "butemar tenants do not at present pay any rent to adna maliks, but they give khutti to ala maliks only. The above mentioned decision will not affect the said rights. The only difference will be this that adna maliks and not ala maliks will have a right to eject the butemar tenants." The Financial Commissioner, who reversed that order, also refers to the fact that the result of the enquiry ordered by him established that "between 1878 and the present Settlement there are nine cases in which ala maliks recovered rent or haq malikana through the Courts."

It may be that the lambardars and warhidars were acting on behalf of the proprietors who do not reside in the village: but whatever the real state of affairs may be, we do not think that the mere fact that the tenants have been located by the village officers is any adequate ground for depriving the Isa Khel proprietors of their right of ownership, when the entries with respect to that matter have all along been in their favour. It is to be remembered that the land was not valuable, and this fact coupled with their absence from the village fully explains their indifference in the matter of locating tenants.

The findings of the Subordinate Judge on the question of limitation and the applicability of Order II, rule 2, are obviously wrong; and are admitted to be so by Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain; but the decision on the merits is correct. Accordingly we uphold the decree, and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 16, 18, 20, 23—Petition for adjudication—Court, power of, to call upon debtor of insolvent to pay money into Court.

Where a debtor presents a petition for adjudication as an insolvent, the Court has no power, without making an order for adjudication or appointing a Receiver, to order a debtor of the insolvent to pay into Court any money which he owes to the insolvent. [p 538, col 2.]

Appeal from the order of the Additional District Judge, Buldhana, dated the 17th January 1917.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmoorti, for the Appellant.

Mr. Atmaram Bhagwant, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order made under the Provincial Insolvency Act. That order was ultra vires of the lower Court and must be set aside. One Krishnaji applied to be declared an insolvent on the ground that his debts amounted to Rs. 1,808 and his assets to Rs. 6-8-0 The petition was opposed by five of his creditors, who alleged inter alia that the petitioner, was the owner of a field which he had pretended to sell to his uncle one Ganpat for Rs. 900. The petitioner replied that he had in truth sold the field for the said amount and used the money in satisfying some of his creditors. The contesting creditors gave no evidence whatever in support of their allegations as to the legality and force of a deed executed one year before these proceedings began, but the lower Court, having accepted evidence tendered by the petitioner for the purpose of proving that the sale was a real transaction, held:

(1) that the sale was in fact a real transaction; and

(2) that Ganpat had paid Rs. 450 out of the price of Rs. 900 to the petitioner.

Thereupon, the lower Court, without making any order of adjudication under section 16 of the Insolvency Act, 1907, or for the appointment of a Receiver under section 18 of that enactment, directed that Ganpat should pay Rs. 450 into Court for the benefit of the general body of the petitioner's creditors. The learned Judge does not enlighten us as to the section of the Insolvency Act under which he passed this order upon Ganpat and I have been unable to find any such section. Ganpat has appealed from the order, and there is no doubt that the appeal must succeed. The question, whether or not Ganpat owes any money to the petitioner for insolvency is not a question to be decided in these proceedings, to which Ganpat is no party. If the lower Court is satisfied that the petitioner has fraudulently concealed the existence of assets belonging to him, that may be good ground for dismissing the petition. But if the Court decides to proceed with the administration of the petitioner's affairs, it must first make an order of adjudication under section 16. Thereafter, unless it elects to carry on the administration itself under the powers given to it by section 23 of the Act, it should appoint a Receiver under section 18 of the Act. Then, under section 20 of the Act, steps can be taken according to law to release the property of the debtor. The learned Judge will avoid such errors as he has made in this case if he proceeds with the Insolvency Act, 1907, open before him, and follows the procedure laid down for him in proper order by section after section.

The appeal is allowed, the order of the lower Court directing Ganpat to pay Rs. 450 into Court is set aside and that Court is directed to proceed with the case according to law. I make no order as to costs of this appeal. Costs in Courts below all be disposed of as that Court may think proper.

JUDGMENT.

D. CHATTERJEE, J.—A Hindu widow before making an adoption made an agreement with the natural father of her prospective adopted son that she was to receive a certain amount for her maintenance and a certain amount for the marriage of her relations: and Rs. 25 per mensem each was to be paid to her brother's son and grandson during their lifetime. These amounts were regularly paid so long as the widow was alive but on her death payment was stopped by the guardian appointed by the District Judge. The present appeal arises out of a suit by the brother's grandson of the widow for enforcing the contract against the adopted son. Both the Courts below have dismissed the suit. Hence this appeal.

The plaintiff's case was that the allowance was sanctioned by the Will of the defendant's adoptive father—that he and his uncle were receiving their allowances from before the adoption and the giving of the allowance was the condition on which the adoption was made and would not have been made but for it.

The defendant's plea was that he was not bound by the contract of his father.

The alleged Will of adoptive father has not been proved to be genuine and even if it were, its terms cannot be read as sanctioning the allowance to the plaintiff. Plaintiff's case, therefore, must stand or fall by the contract of the natural father with the adoptive mother. There is some divergence of judicial opinion on the general question whether anti-adoption agreements entered into by the natural father of an adopted son and operating in restriction of his legal rights as an adopted son are binding on him. Their Lordships of the Privy Council have expressed a leaning against the binding nature of these agreements: see Bhaiya Rabidat Singh v. Indar Kunwar (1). This was a case, however, of an agreement made in violation of the terms of the Will of the husband by which the authority to adopt was given and the real question for decision before their Lordships was the validity of the adoption, the contention being that the adoption was invalid by reason of the agreement which restricted the rights of the adopted son. In the case of Visalakshi Ammal v. Sivaramien (2) a Full Bench of the Madras High Court held that, an agreement with the adoptive mother by which the natural father agreed before adoption that in case of a difference she would enjoy half the estate of her husband for life, the adopted son getting it on her death, was valid and binding: the real test in these cases being whether the arrangement was fair and reasonable.

In the case of Vyasacharya Narayanacharya v. Venkubai Rangacharya Upadya (3) a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court has held that a gift by the widow of a portion of her husband's estate to her daughter and assented to by the natural father of a subsequently adopted son at the time of the adoption, is not binding on the adopted son. This was a case of an alienation by the widow which would not bind reversioners if there were no adoption, as she was dealing with more than her life-interest. There is no case exactly in point in Bengal. The case of Bepin Behari Bundopadhya v. Brojo Nath Mookhopadhya (4) was that of an adoptive father authorising his widow to hold possession for her life and the natural father giving away his son with the knowledge of the restriction. The case of Harendra Nath Avasti v. Shibo Sundari Debi Chowdhurani (5) is also of the same nature, as the adoptive father made a similar restriction by his Will.

These cases do not seem to take the case further than validating fair and reasonable arrangements for the enjoyment of her husband's property by the widow during her lifetime, especially when there is authority from the husband in that connection. The broad proposition, therefore, that all anti-adoption agreements by the adoptive mother with the natural father and operating in the restriction of the rights of the adopted son are valid cannot be supported, and it is hardly necessary in this case to go into further detail in this matter. The allowance in dispute was paid during the lifetime of the widow and the objection is made after her death There is no alienation by her of her husband's property. She has with the consent of the natural father tried to impose a personal contract upon the minor. Neither she nor the natural father had any legal authority to do so. It is true that the contract is not absolutely void and could have been ratified by the minor but he has not. In this view of the case we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 6th January 1914.

Mr. Abdul Razaq, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. C. Narang, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit by a mortgagee for possession by foreclosure, and the question is whether the foreclosure notice, issued under the Regulation of 1806, is valid.

The mortgage was without possession. The land mortgaged was 8 ghumaos 5 kanals 11 marlas 6 sarsahis with share in shamilat. The notice specifies the 8 ghumaos 5 kanals 11 marlas 6 sarsahis but omits to mention the shamilat. The original area has now been increased by an addition of shamilat from 69 kanals to 227 kanals.

The first Court, relying on Wazir Chand v. Makhan (1), held that as the notice omitted to mention the shamilat the notice was invalid, and dismissed the suit.

The learned Divisional Judge on appeal followed an unpublished ruling of this Court, Civil Appeal No. 492 of 1908, and held that the notice was valid to the extent of the land specified and gave plaintiffs a decree for 8 ghumaos 5 kanals 11 marlas 6 sarsahis.

Defendant appeals to this Court.

On referring to the above unpublished ruling we find that it professes to follow the line taken in Wazir Chand v. Makhan (1). This, however, is clearly a mistake, for on referring to the records of the 1901 case we find that the plaintiff's suit was dismissed in toto. Apart from this unpublished ruling, which was clearly based on a misapprehension of the real facts of the reported case of 1901, we know of no authority for holding that a foreclosure notice can be held to be valid as regards one part of the mortgaged land and invalid as regards the other part.

In Wazir Chand v. Makhan (1) the suit was dismissed because the foreclosure notice specified a part only of the mortgaged land, omitting to refer to the shamilat. The case seems exactly on all fours with the present case. This ruling was approved and followed by a Division Bench in Civil Appeal No. 1031 of 1912 [published as Shambu Ram v. Jamita (2)], though there the flaw in the notice was that it overstated the area of the mortgaged land.

Following Wazir Chand v. Makhan (1) we hold that the notice is altogether invalid and that the suit should be dismissed.

It is urged that the misdescription cannot have misled the mortgagor, but we are of opinion, as was held in Shambu Ram v. Jamita (2), that where the notice misdescribes the mortgaged property the mortgagor is very likely to be misled by the misdescription.

Finally defendant's Counsel urged that his client should at least get a decree for possession as mortgagee. But we note that the mortgage-deed does not provide for the mortgagee taking possession except by foreclosure.

We accept this appeal and, reversing the decree of the lower Appellate Court, we dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sues for pre-emption. He is the holder of a recognised Sub-Division of a Survey number. The defendant No. 2 was the holder of another recognised Sub-Division of the same Survey number and sold his rights to the other defendant. It is conceded by the plaintiff on the authority of Musammat Gangu v. Chandu (1) that he would have no right of pre-emption if the two plots remained recognised Sub-Divisions of a Survey number; but it is argued that at the recent Record of Rights the holdings have been described as pot hissas, the term used in the vernacular for recognised Sub-Division being pakti. The argument for the plaintiff-appellant is that he has now become a co-occupant with the defendant No. 1, since 1913 the two plots having been made into one holding. In Surya Bhan v. Renai (2) I had occasion to discuss the powers of the officer-in-charge of the Record of Rights. I have given my reasons for holding that the officer is not such an officer as is authorised to recognise a Sub Division of a Survey number or to form two recognised Sub-Divisions into one Survey number. The recognised Sub-Division of a Survey number is a holding which has a separate assessment fixed for it. Chapter VIII (a) of the Berar Land Revenue Code shows that the officer-in-charge of the Record of Rights is merely to ascertain and record existing facts and, amongst other things, the revenue paid by each of the holders in accordance with the arrangements come to between them. Section 96 (j) points out that such entries made in the Record of Rights shall not affect the liability of any person to pay the land revenue. If the plaintiff's holding was a separate holding and was liable solely for the revenue in respect of it, this holding cannot be made part of a larger holding so as to make him responsible jointly with another for the entire revenue. Such a procedure can only be adopted when there is a Survey Settlement as provided for in section 85. I may point out that in the remarks column the plots are noted also as paiki numbers. No change, therefore, has been made in the rights of the parties as regards pre-emption by reason of anything done in the course of the enquiry for the preparation of the Record of Rights. The Courts below are, therefore, right in holding that the plaintiff has no right of pre-emption in this case.

(1) 18 Ind. Cas. 862; 9 N. L. R. 16.
(2) 42 Ind. Cas. 447.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed.

Letters Patent Appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Rafique, confirming a decree of the District Judge of Aligarh.

Messrs. M. L. Agarwala and Peary Lal Banerji, for the Appellants.

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought in the Revenue Court for profits. One of the plaintiffs happened to be the Lambardar, but we think that this fact ought to be left out of consideration for the purposes of the case. The plaintiff is not suing as Lambardar. He is suing as one of the co-sharers. The learned Assistant Collector at the commencement of his judgment says:—"The peculiarity of this case is that one of the plaintiffs is the Lambardar; and the defendants being only pattidars have so much land as sir and khudkasht that the Lambardar instead of distributing profits has been reduced to the position of a sharer claiming profits." The defence to the suit was that the defendants were not in the habit of making any collections, and that any profits that they had in their hands were the profits from their own sir and khudkasht, and that they had not more sir and khudkasht than represented their share in the village. Another defendant pleaded much the same thing but also alleged that the plaintiffs, particularly the Lambardar plaintiff, had purposely allowed land to go out of cultivation. The Court of first instance gave a decree in the plaintiffs' favour for the following sums, for

1317	Fasli	Rs.	63-7-10
1319	„	„	129-3-8.

The lower Appellate Court dismissed the appeal of the defendants. In the course of his judgment the learned District Judge says, "The first point for determination is on what basis the liability, if any, of the defendants-appellants should be calculated. I decide that the calculation ought to be made on the basis of actual collections made, including of course nominal rental of sir and khudkasht." The defendants have appealed and it is urged on their behalf that in a general way the real issue between the parties has not been decided. It would rather seem as if the expression "basis of actual collections" was not very appropriate, because the defendants have all along alleged that they make no collections at all and there is nothing in the finding of either the Court of first instance or the lower Appellate Court to show that they did. So far as we can gather from the findings arrived at in the Court below, the defendants have been in possession of a considerable amount of land and such profits as they have in their hands are the profits derived from land which they have been cultivating themselves or by sub-tenants. We think that if the different co-sharers are entitled to different portions of the mahal as their sir and khudkasht, each co-sharer would be entitled to the profits of his own sir and khudkasht and he would not be obliged to account for those profits to the other co-sharers. It would seem to be only common justice that if one co-sharer was industrious and made a considerable profit out of his sir and khudkasht, he should not be obliged to share that profit with another co-sharer, who neglected or was less fortunate with his sir and khudkasht. On the other hand if any co-sharer had in his hands and in his own cultivation an excess of land, over and above his proper share of sir and khudkasht, he should certainly account for the excess. The share of each co-sharer in sir and khudkasht need not necessarily be identical in area, because a larger share of inferior land might be given to one co-sharer where the others had land of superior quality. We must also point out that if the plaintiffs were entitled to certain land as their sir and khudkasht and for any reason they neglected to cultivate it, they would not be entitled to call upon the defendant to account for the profits of his sir and khudkasht unless the latter was in excess of what the plaintiffs were to cultivate. After these general remarks we think it advisable to refer certain issues to the Court below before deciding the appeal:—

(1) Was the land divided between the co-sharers as sir and khudkasht?

(2) Was the sir and khudkasht of each co-sharer in proportion to his share in the village?

(3) Were the defendants in possession by themselves or through sub-tenants of sir and khudkasht in excess of their share, and if so, to what extent? In considering this issue the Court will have regard to the quality of the land.

(4) Having regard to the findings on the above issues, have the defendants realised anything, and, if so, how much in excess of what they were entitled to?

The parties may adduce further evidence relevant to the above issues. On return of the findings the usual ten days will be allowed for filing objections.

On return of the findings the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—Having regard to the findings we think this appeal must fail. We accordingly dismiss it with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit by the plaintiff-appellant, who is the purchaser of an entire estate under Act XI of 1859, to eject the defendants. The defendants and their predecessors-in-interest, it is found, had been holding the lands at any rate from 1838 as Raiyats, and had acquired a right of occupancy in the lands in suit, but the defendant Chunnu Miah and another in 1881 executed a daimi kaimi chirasthai (permanent Raiyati Kabuliyat). The Courts below have held that the interest of the defendants was protected under section 37 of Act XI of 1859, and the plaintiff was not, therefore, entitled to khas possession, but was entitled to fair and equitable rent for the lands. The plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

Under section 37 of Act XI of 1859, the purchaser at a revenue sale is not entitled to eject any Raiyat having a right of occupancy at a fixed rent or at a rent assessable according to fixed rules under the laws in force. On the facts stated, the defendants' interest prima facie is that of a "Raiyat having a right of occupancy at a fixed rent."

At the time when the Revenue Sale Law (Act XI of 1859) was passed, the law relating to landlord and tenant in force was Act X of 859, and under section 6 of that Act every Raiyat who cultivated or held land for 12 years acquired a right of occupancy in such land. Under that Act there were two classes of occupancy Raiyats viz., Raiyats at fixed rates of rent, and occupancy Raiyats who did not hold at fixed rates of rent (see sections 3, 4, 5 and 6). Both these classes of occupancy Raiyats are protected under the proviso to section 37 of Act XI, which provides that the purchaser shall not be entitled to eject any Raiyat having a right of occupancy at a fixed rent, or at a rent assessable according to fixed rules under the laws in force. "Occupancy Raiyats at fixed rates of rent" do not find any place in the classification of "Raiyats" under the Bengal Tenancy Act Under that Act there are occupancy Raiyats and Raiyats holding at fixed rates. But if a Raiyat had a right of occupancy at a fixed rent under Act X of 1859 (as the defendants in the present case had), we do not think that he lost his right of occupancy and the privileges attaching to it after the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, merely because occupancy Raiyats holding at fixed rates of rent are not separately mentioned in the classification of Raiyats under the Bengal Tenancy Act.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant, on the authority of the case of Bhutnath Naskar v. Monmotho Nath Mitra (1), that a Raiyat at fixed rates cannot have a right of occupancy. The question which had to be considered in that case was, whether the interest of the defendants was a protected interest within the meaning of section 160, clause (d) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Doss, J., held upon a construction of the lease in that case that the interest of the defendants was a tenure, and that if the defendants were treated as Raiyats holding at fixed rates, their interest was not protected under section 160 of the Act. On appeal under the Letters Patent, the learned Chief Justice affirmed the judgment of Doss, J., on the ground that the interet of the defendants was a tenure and therefore not protected under section 160, and did not express any opinion on the other question. Mookerjee, J., confirmed the judgment of Doss, J. not only on that ground, but also on the ground that a Raiyat holding at fixed rates is not protected under section 160 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

It is necessary to consider in the present case, whether a Raiyat holding at fixed rates is protected under section 160 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, as the present case has to be considered with reference to section 37 of Act XI of 1859, the wording of which differs materially from that of section 160, clause (d), of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Reliance, however, is placed on behalf of the appellants on the observations of Mookerjee, J., in that case, in support of the proposition that a Raiyat holding at fixed rates cannot have a right of occupancy. No doubt, the mere fact that a holding is held at fixed rates, does not make it an occupancy holding, for a Raiyati holding at a fixed rent may be created only a month before the revenue sale, and the Raiyat, in such a case, cannot certainly be called a Raiyat having a right of occupancy. The defendants in the present case had acquired a right of occupancy before their rent was fixed in perpetuity, which again was before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is unnecessary, therefore, to consider, in the present case, whether a Raiyat holding at fixed rates after he has held the land for 12 years in a village can become a settled Raiyat of the village and acquire a right of occupancy—a question upon which there is divergence of judicial opinion. [See the unreported cases, Second Appeal No. 1115 of 1915 decided on the 15th February 1917 and Second Appeal No. 847 of 1913 decided on the 26th May 1915 (Akhil Chandra Sen v. Tripura Charan) (2).] The only question for consideration is whether a Raiyat who has acquired a right of occupancy before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act can retain the privileges of an occupancy Raiyat although his rent has been fixed in perpetuity, by reason of which he becomes a Raiyat holding at fixed rates according to the classification of Raiyats in the Bengal Tenancy Act. Section 19 provides that every Raiyat who immediately before the commencement of the Act has a right of occupancy in any land shall, when the Act comes into force, have a right of occupancy in that land, and section 178 (1), clause (b), of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides that nothing in any contract between a landlord and tenant made before or after the passing of the Act shall take away an occupancy right in existence at the date of the contract. In the present case the Kabuliyat executed in 1881, by which the rent of the defendants was fixed, did not even purport to take away any right which the defendants had at the date of the Kabuliyat. The right of occupancy, therefore, which the defendants had, was not affected by the Kabuliyat by which the rent was fixed.

Mookerjee, J., in referring to the omission of 'a raiyat holding at fixed rates' from section 160, suggests that "the policy of the Legislature was to protect the Raiyat, but not necessarily to the complete detriment of the purchaser of a tenure at a sale for arrears of rent. If a Raiyat holding at a fixed rate of rent were protected from ejectment, the purchaser would acquire the property in an incumbered condition; for he would be unable, not only to eject the Raiyat, but also to enhance the rent. On the other hand, if occupancy Raiyats and non-occupancy Raiyats alone were protected from ejectment, while their possession would be maintained, they would be liable to have their rent enhanced from time to time, at the instance and for the benefit of the purchaser of the tenure."

Those considerations, however, do not arise in connection with the proviso to section 37 of Act XI of 1859. That proviso expressly lays down that the purchaser shall not be entitled to enhance the rent of an occupancy Raiyat otherwise than in the manner prescribed by law or otherwise than the former proprietor, irrespectively of all engagements made since the time of settlement, may have been entitled to do. Now the rent of an occupancy Raiyat, who holds at a fixed rate of rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement, could not be enhanced under Act X of 1859, nor can the rent of such a Raiyat be enhanced under the Bengal Tenancy Act. Section 37 of Act XI of 1859 having expressly laid down that the purchaser at a revenue sale is not entitled to enhance the rent of such Raiyats, no question arises as to the "detriment of the purchaser" under that section. Where, however, the occupancy Raiyat holds at a fixed rent not from the time of the Permanent Settlement, but only under an engagement made since the time of settlement he is not protected from enhancement, because the former proprietor would have been, irrespectively of the engagement, entitled in a proper case to raise the rent of such a Raiyat. The purchaser, however, is not entitled to eject occupancy Raiyats of either of the two classes. The rights of the purchaser as regards enhancement of rent having been clearly laid down by section 37 of Act XI of 1859, the considerations relied upon by Mookerjee, J., do not arise in connection with cases coming under section 37 of the Revenue Sale Law. The case of Abdul Gani v. Makbul Ali (3), in so far as it holds that a person who has already acquired an occupancy right does not by obtaining a grant of fixed rent lose that occupancy right and that such a person is protected from ejectment under section 37, supports the view we take and to that extent we agree with that decision. If the opposite view were taken, Raiyats who might be holding lands for generations and who might have acquired rights of occupancy would be liable to be ejected by a purchaser at a revenue sale, simply because they may come under the description of Raiyats holding at fixed rates under the Bengal Tenancy Act, by reason of their rent being fixed in perpetuity by contract, or by reason of their holding at the same rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement or by reason of a presumption arising under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act that they have been so holding, when the clear intention of the Legislature is to protect such Raiyats from ejectment at the hands of a purchaser at a revenue sale.

We are of opinion that as the defendants had acquired rights of occupancy they were protected from ejectment under the proviso to section 37 of Act XI of 1859, although they held at a fixed rent. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, Expl. (iv)—Res judicata against pro forma defendant.

Where one of several persons interested in a property brings a suit in respect of it, and the other persons interested therein being unwilling to join themselves as plaintiffs in the suit are made pro forma defendants, they cannot, upon the failure of the plaintiff, harass the defendant upon the same cause of action. [p. 547, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Arrah, dated the 11th June 1914.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case have been stated at length in the judgment of the lower Court. They are briefly that the family of the plaintiffs settled in 1863 two villages Ichri and Ayar upon a widow of their family Chamela Kuer as maintenance for her lifetime, with the proviso that on her death the property should revert to the family together with all accretions made thereto by her. One of these properties, Ichri, was brought to sale for arrears of revenue and ostensibly purchased by Kolaishar Pande defendant No. 3 and subsequently transferred by him to Bansropan Sahu, the daughter's grandson of Chamela's co-widow. The other property, Ayar, had been mortgaged and in execution of the mortgage decree purchased by Togan Sahu in 1904. Chamela had instituted a suit against Togan Sahu to set aside the decree and sale as inoperative against her. That suit was withdrawn and simultaneously with the withdrawal of the suit the property was conveyed by Togan Sahu to the same Bansropan. Upon the death of Chamela Bansropan claimed to remain in possession of these properties. The plaintiffs, therefore, brought this suit for a declaration, firstly, that the purchase by Kolaishar Pande was a fraudulent transaction; that the money with which the property was purchased came from the pocket of Chamela Kuer and that the subsequent ostensible transfer to Bansropan was without consideration; also that the purchase by Togan Sahu was with the money of Chamela and that Bansropan was only her benamidar; and on these declarations to recover possession of the properties.

The defendants resisted the suit on the ground that it was res judicata that Kolaishar Pande was not a benamdar and that the purchase by Bansropan of the interest of Togan Sahu was a genuine transaction.

The lower Court found that the suit with regard to the village Ichri was barred by the rule of res judicata, but that it was clear that the village Ayar had been purchased by Togan Sahu with the widow's money and that, therefore, it must revert to the family on her death.

Against the decree made upon these findings the plaintiffs appeal and the defendants have filed a cross-appeal.

With regard to the plaintiffs' appeal it is clear that the question whether Kolaishar was a benamdar has been already settled in litigation to which all the plaintiffs in the present suit were either parties or representatives-in-interest of parties. It is contended in this respect that Chuni Sahu who is the father of one set of plaintiffs was not a plaintiff in the former suit and that, therefore, the decision is not binding upon that branch of the family. Chuni Sahu was pro forma defendant in that suit and had he wished to contest the position of Kolaishar with regard to this property, it was his clear duty to apply to be transferred from the category of defendants to that of plaintiffs and within the meaning of Explanation IV of section 11 he might have made the allegation that Kolaishar was not the real purchaser of the property a ground of attack; having failed to do so his representatives cannot be heard now to raise the same claim.

It is clearly an idle proposition that where A brings a suit against B, and C and D being equally interested with A in the property have been made defendants but have refused to join themselves as plaintiffs in the suit, C may, upon the failure of A, come forward and harass B upon the same cause of action and on his failure D in his turn may also come forward. We have no doubt that Explanation IV to section 11 was designed to meet a plea of this description. It is res judicata that the purchase of Kolaishar Pande was a bona fide purchase and that property in the estate passed to him by virtue of the revenue sale. Seeing that failure was unavoidable upon this point, Mr. Gangadhar Das suggests that the real fact was that Kolaishar purchased the property in good faith but that thereafter Musammat Chameli Kuer re-purchased the property from him with her own money in the name of Bansropan. He asks to be allowed to amend his plaint in this Court and to fight the case upon this issue in the lower Court once more.

The plaintiffs were undoubtedly badly advised in putting up a plea which had already been decided against them, but having elected that ground of attack in the lower Court they cannot be allowed in this Court to choose a fresh ground of attack. Upon their pleadings it is idle for them to say in the same breath that no money was paid to Kolaishar under the bond by which the transfer was made in the name of Bansropan and that the money that was paid to Kolaishar came from the pocket of the lady. The suit with regard to village Ichri was rightly dismissed.

The position with regard to village Ayar has been fully set forth in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge. The defendant Bansropan was challenged to show that he was the real purchaser of this village. It was shown that he was living at the time of the purchase with his great-grandmother. It was suggested that he had no means; that he was a mere boy without any occupation. The consideration passed was Rs. 425. There had been no ostensible change in the ownership of the property since the purchase. Chameli Kuer had apparently been in possession up to the time of her death. All these considerations threw upon Bansropan the burden of proof of showing that he obtained the money either from his own pocket or from his father's pocket. He gave no evidence of any description of the source from which the money was drawn. In these circumstances it was rightly found that Bansropan was an ostensible purchaser only and that Chameli Kuer was the real purchaser. The suit with regard to village Ayar was rightly decreed. The appeal and the cross-appeal are dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Subsequently S. executed another mortgage in favour of B and C in order to pay off the prior mortgage. B and C foreclosed the property. B sold his half share in the foreclosed property to the plaintiff and he also sold his right under the prior mortgage, alleging that it had not been fully satisfied. Plaintiff sued to foreclose C's share of the property on the basis of the first mortgage, alleging that it had not been completely satisfied:

Held, that in view of the implied terms of the contract between B and C, that contract being that they embarked upon a joint adventure for the purpose of extinguishing the prior mortgage and taking a first charge on the property, it was the legal duty of B to inform his co-mortgagee within a reasonable time that he had still an outstanding claim under the prior mortgage and that B's omission to give the information amounted to such an omission as is contemplated by section 115 of the Evidence Act and operated as an estoppel against A under that section. JUDGMENT.—One Sitaram executed a mortgage for Rs. 2,000 on 16th September 1886 in favour of Naik and Pingle. Two payments aggregating Rs. 850 were made to Naik and it is admitted that Pingle had received his half share of this amount. On the 11th March 1891 he executed a fresh mortgage for Rs. 2,000 of the same property in favour of Pingle and one Nandurkar in order to pay off the prior mortgage. Pingle credited Rs. 999 towards the former mortgage and Rs. 1,000 was paid by Nandurkar to the mortgagor for satisfaction of the prior mortgage. Out of this Rs. 745 was paid to Naik. Naik admits that his share of the mortgage debt has been fully satisfied. On the 11th June 1904 Pingle and Nandurkar foreclosed the mortgaged property. On the 13th April 1908 Pingle sold his half share in the foreclosed village to the plaintiff and he also sold his rights under the prior mortgage, alleging that it had not been fully satisfied. The plaintiff now sues to foreclose Nandurkar's share of the village on the basis of the first mortgage. Both the Courts below have dismissed the suit on the ground that the first mortgage has been satisfied. According to a calculation made by the first Court, Rs. 1,978-8-0 was due on the date when the joint mortgage in favour of Pingle and Nandurkar was executed; it is clear from the recitals in that document that the intention of the parties was to extinguish the prior mortgage and each of the co-mortgagees advanced his share of the mortgage money. The plaintiff's case is that his vendor did not receive his share of Rs. 625 paid to Naik. He, therefore, claims half that amount with interest thereon. The suit was filed on the last day of the period of grace given by section 31, Act IX of 1908. The lower Appellate Court has presumed satisfaction from a long delay in enforcing the claim under the mortgage of 1886. It is contended that the burden of proof as regards satisfaction was wrongly placed upon the plaintiff and in support of this an unreported ruling of the learned Judicial Commissioner in Second Appeal No. 245 of 1915 has been cited.

There is a finding by the Courts below, which I think enables me to dispose of the case on the ground of estoppel. The finding is to the effect that Pingle never asserted a claim till 1908 for the short payment said to have been made to him under the first mortgage. The view taken by the first Court is that the estoppel so far as it is based upon the recitals in the document, is correct as far as it goes. The lower Appellate Court has not discussed the question of estoppel at all. But there is an aspect of the case not considered by the Court below, though Pingle's silence for many years has been pleaded as a ground for holding that he is estopped. Let us now look at the facts. Pingle and Nandurkar found that about Rs. 2,000 was due on the prior mortgage. Their intention, as would appear from the recitals in their mortgage, was to extinguish the prior mortgage and to obtain a first charge upon the property. They agreed to advance half the sum each. It is not suggested that Nandurkar acted improperly in paying over his share to Sitaram. Pingle had no doubt a right to an account from Naik. Pingle may have equally a claim against Sitaram, the mortgagor, for not paying the amount due to Pingle. The intention of the two mortgagees was to extinguish the title, and in the absence of a complaint made by Pingle, Nandurkar was justified in assuming that it had been duly satisfied so far any claim on the part of his co-mortgagee was concerned. It is, however, urged that Nandurkar represents the mortgagor after the foreclosure decree, and is, therefore, bound to the same extent as the mortgagor. This is so far correct. The question arises whether there was not a duty cast upon Pingle to inform within a reasonable time that he had still an outstanding claim under the prior mortgage, which was meant to be extinguished by this joint adventure. That there was a moral duty on his part to so inform Nandurkar does not admit of any doubt. I think also that there was a legal duty in view of the implied terms of the contract, that contract being that they have embarked upon a joint adventure for the purpose of extinguishing the prior mortgage and taking a first charge on the property. If it was a legal duty, then Pingle's omission to inform him was such an omission as is contemplated by section 115 of the Evidence Act. Nandurkar was lulled into a belief that the property had ceased to be encumbered. Any claim upon that mortgage ought to have been made long ago. The joint mortgage was, in consequence of this belief, not enforced by Nandurkar till the debt reached near the full value of the property, for it is obvious that it was foreclosed because it reached that value. If Nandurkar had been so informed within a reasonable time, he would have enforced his mortgage at a time when the alleged outstanding claims on the prior mortgage and the mortgage money due under the joint mortgage had not reached the full value of the property. His position, therefore, has been altered for the worse by reason of the unreasonable delay in asserting the claim. Pingle and his representative, the plaintiff, are, therefore, estopped from saying that the claim under the prior mortgage has not been fully satisfied. On the whole, the suit has been rightly dismissed and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Petition, under section 44 of Act III of 1914, for revision of the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ambala, dated the 20th April 1917, returning the plaint for filing separate suits.

Messrs. Jai Gopal Sethi, N. C. Mehra and Lala Duni Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Bullu Mal died in 1857 leaving a widow Musammat Dhan Kaur, who gifted her late husband's property to her daughters, Musammat Naraini and Musammat Sobhi. Both Musammat Naraini and Musammat Sobhi made certain alienations and then gifted their properties to their respective husbands, Basant Rai and Bishambar Das. Musammat Sobhi had a daughter named Musammat Tulsa by whom she was predeceased. Musammat Tulsa again had a daughter, Musammat Manohri, who is in possession of property gifted by Musammat Sobhi to Bishambar Das.

Musammat Sobhi died in 1911 and Musammat Naraini in 1912. The plaintiffs, who are the sons of Musammat Naraini by Basant Rai, have sued for possession of the whole of the property alienated by Musammat Naraini and Musammat Sobhi, and also that held by Musammat Manohri. Their position is that they are the heirs of Bullu Mal; that all the alienations were unauthorised; and that their cause of action has arisen on the death of Musammat Naraini.

Defendant No. 1 is Musammat Manohri. defendants Nos. 2 to 7 are mortgagees from Musammat Sobhi. Defendants Nos. 10 to 14 are vendees from a mortgagee of Musammat Sobhi and Musammat Naraini. Defendant No. 15 is a vendee from Bishambar Das. All these defendants are represented in this Court by Mr. Duni Chand.

Defendants Nos. 8 and 9 are vendees from a mortgagee of Musammat Sobhi and Musammat Naraini. They are represented here by Mr. N. C. Mehra.

Defendants Nos. 16 to 18 are vendees from Musammat Naraini and Musammat Sobhi. They are represented by Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi.

In the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge in which the suit was filed it was contended that there was misjoinder of parties. This view was accepted by the Senior Subordinate Judge, who returned the plaint to the plaintiffs with a direction that they should continue the suit against any one set of defendants they may select. The sets of defendants were not specified and the various Counsels engaged in this Court are not agreed as to what was meant. One view is that each group of alienees should be considered to be a set. Another is that all the alienees from the same alienor or alienors should be so regarded.

The case has come before this Court as a petition for revision. An objection has been raised that such a petition ought not to be entertained. That is a view which I am not able to accept and Tufail Mahomed v. Hira Singh (1) is an authority in point.

There are a great many rulings, e. g., Umbai v. Vithal Vasudev (2), Nundo Kumar Nasker v. Banomali Gayan (3), Musammat Rattan Kaur v. Badna (4) and Tufail Mahomed v. Hira Singh (1), to the effect that a suit for possession on the ground of inheritance can proceed against a number of different alienees. The only ruling to the contrary which has been cited before me is Hari Ballabh Rai v. Gopal Lal Singh (5), which was considered but not approved in Tufail Mahomed v. Hira Singh (1).

In Hari Ballabh Rai v. Gopal Lal Singh (5) there was, however, a further question whether the same suit could proceed in the case of alienations by different alienors. The decision was that in the circumstances of that case it could not so proceed and this point is not covered by any of the other rulings to which I have referred.

The question is purely one of convenience and after examination of the facts alleged it appears to me that any varieties of defences which can arise can easily be cured by the successive trial of the issues separately affecting different defendants. In the case of alienations by Musammat Sobhi and Musammat Naraini there will probably be two main lines of defence (1) absolute title, and (2) valid necessity. There are at least three cases in which joint alienations have been effected by Musammat Sobhi and Musammat Naraini and consequently the question of the title of Musammat Sobhi will have to be decided in all those cases as well as in the case of the alienation by Musammat Sobhi alone. The case against the alienee from Bishambar Das will again depend on the title of Musammat Sobhi and so apparently will be the position of Musammat Manohri.

It appears to me, therefore, that the balance of convenience lies on the side of allowing the suit to proceed against all the defendants jointly. The Court should, of course, decide the questions of title first and should not require any set of defendants who are not interested in questions of necessity to appear when those questions are being dealt with.

A. P. RI. EXECUTOR, A. R. A. R. SOMASUNDRAM CHETTIAR THROUGH HIS AUTHORISED AGENT MAYANDI CHETTIAR—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 11, 29, 120—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 63—Claim proceedings—Order releasing attachment—Suit by decree-holder to declare alienation fraudulent—Limitation, commencement of—Cause of action—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53, scope of.

A suit by the holder of a decree to declare an alienation as fraudulent, based on an order passed under Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code, is governed by Article 11 of the Limitation Act and should be filed within one year from the date of the order. [p. 552, col. 2.]

Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code, gives a right of suit whether the order in the claim petition is correct or not. [p. 552, col. 2.]

Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia Chettiar, 43 Ind. Cas. 651; 33 M. L. J. 705; 6 L. W. 750, explained and distinguished.

Obiter.—Even if Article 120 be held to apply, the cause of action for a suit based on fraud does not arise on the date of the alienation, but on the date when the creditor seeking to set aside the alienation knows that he has been defrauded, defeated or delayed. [p 552, col 2.]

Section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act does not expressly give a right to sue, but gives to a creditor an option to avoid certain transactions, and the right to sue does not accrue until he exercises that option. [p. 552, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

PHILLIPS, J.—Plaintiff obtained a decree against 1st defendant and attached his property, but the attachment was released on the application of 1st defendant's alienees, the 1st defendant having alienated the property to 2nd defendant just over 6 years before the present suit was filed. The suit now is for a declaration that the alienations are not binding on plaintiff, and that he can proceed against the property in execution of the decree against 1st defendant. Defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 9, alienees from 2nd defendant, are appellants here.

The first contention raised is that plaintiff cannot bring this suit on his own behalf, but must sue on behalf of all the creditors for a declaration that the alienation is invalid as against all of them.

This plea was not taken in either of the lower Courts and is one which might have been met, if necessary, in the first Court by an amendment of the plaint.

Whether the plea can be supported is doubtful [Smith v. Hurst (1) and Blenkinsopp v. Blenkinsopp (2)], but without expressing an opinion on it, we cannot allow it to be taken at this late stage.

Another plea that appellants are entitled to a charge on the property must also be disallowed, because it has not been taken before, and its decision would involve a fresh consideration of the evidence.

The chief ground of appeal is on the question of limitation, the contention being that the suit is governed by Article 120 and that more than six years have elapsed since the alienation by 1st defendant to 2nd defendant. The subsequent alienations to appellants need not be considered, as there is no finding that the alienation to 2nd defendant was merely a sham transaction—

the finding being only that that it was effected in fraud of creditors. It has been held by this Court that a suit for a declaration that an alienation is not binding on a creditor under section 53, Transfer of Property Act, is governed by Article 120 [Authikesavaloo Naicker v. Shah Abdulla (3) and Pachamuthu v. Chinnappan (4)], but it is contended for respondent that the present suit is one brought under Order XXI, rule 63, and that consequently Article 11 is applicable. The plaint gives as the date of the cause of action the date of the order setting aside plaintiff's attachment and the suit is evidently intended to be one under Order XXI, rule 63. Objection is, however, taken that the order setting aside the attachment was correct in view of a recent decision of a Bench of three Judges of this Court in Second Appeal No. 691 of 1916 [Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia Chettiar (5)] that an alienation in fraud of creditors is valid until set aside and cannot be pleaded as a defence by a creditor in a suit by an alienee and that a suit under Order XXI, rule 63, is really in the nature of an appeal [vide, Phul Kumari v. Ghanshyam Misra (6) and Krishnappa Chetty v. Abdul Khader Saheb (7)] and that consequently the present suit cannot be treated as one under Order XXI, rule 63, as it goes beyond the scope of the order in the claim petition, and asks for a relief which would be barred by limitation if the suit for that relief were brought in the ordinary course. The former case, a decision of the Privy Council upon which for this purpose the later case is based, was considered by a Full Bench of this Court in Kovouri Basivireddi v. Nidumoori Ramayya (8) and it was held that a suit in respect of moveable property, a claim to which had been dismissed in execution proceedings, was governed by Article 11 and not by Article 29 and that although one of the reliefs sought would be barred under Article 29, it could be granted as the whole suit was governed by Article 11 which applies to suits under Order XXI, rule 63. In the present suit plaintiff seeks to establish his right to proceed against the property of the 1st defendant, and incidentally to have it declared that the alienation to 2nd defendant is not binding on him. This right was negatived in the order on the claim petition, and consequently following Kovouri Basivireddi v. Nidumoori Ramayya (8), I would hold that the present suit is one under Order XXI, rule 63, being, as it is, one to establish the right which plaintiff claims to the property in dispute and is within the time allowed by Article 11.

The fact that the decision in Second Appeal No 691 of 1916 [Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia Chettiar (5)] shows that the order in the claim petition, if worded differently, was correct, cannot affect the question of limitation, for Order XXI, rule 63, gives a right to sue whether the order in the claim petition is correct or not.

In this view it is not necessary to decide whether, if Article 120 were applicable, the suit would be barred by limitation, but I am inclined to hold that the cause of action does not arise on the date of alienation, but on the date when the creditor seeking to set aside the alienation knows that he has been defrauded, defeated or delayed. Section 53, Transfer of Property Act, does not expressly give a right to sue, but gives to a creditor an option to avoid certain transactions, and it is in the exercise of his option that he obtains a right to sue. It is not until he obtains the option that the right to sue accrues, and I do not see how it can be said that he has a right of option at a time when he is unaware of the circumstances which give him such right. In all cases of fraud, misconduct, etc., the period of limitation for a suit begins to run from the time when the fraud, misconduct, etc., becomes known (vide Articles 90, 91, 95, 96, etc.), but no such provision could be inserted in Article 120, for it is a residuary Article and thus applicable to every variety of suit not otherwise provided for and is not confined to suits based on fraud. If such a suit coming within Article 120 is based on fraud, the time when the right to sue accrues must, I think, be determined in consonance with the principle governing the other specific suits based on fraud, and that is that the time, when the fraud becomes known, becomes the starting point for limitation. In this case we have no evidence as to when the plaintiff became aware of the fraud, for the question of limitation was not raised in the lower Courts, but it is incumbent on defendants to show that plaintiff had clear and definite knowledge of the fraud at a time which is too remote for a suit to be brought, if they wish to make limitation operative [Rahimbhoy Habibbhoy v. Charles Agnew Turner (9) and Sukh Lal v. Madhuri Prasad (10)].

In this view also plaintiff's suit is within time and the second appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

AYLING, J.—I agree. I must confess to considerable doubt on the question of limitation; and I am not prepared to dissent from the conclusion of my learned brother that Article 11 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act applies and that the suit is within time.

The second appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 13, 17 (2)—Execution, application for—Supplementary list of properties, whether allowable after registration of application—Fresh application, whether can be treated as continuation of previous application.

An application for execution, which was on the face of it in accordance with law, was subsequently, on objection taken by the judgment-debtor, discovered to be defective, inasmuch as against the properties specified in the list furnished under Order XXI, rule 13, of the Civil Procedure Code proceedings could not be taken. The decree-holder then applied to the Court requesting it to accept a further and supplementary list of the properties and praying that execution should proceed by attachment and sale of those properties:

Held, that even after the admission and registration of the original application for execution it was open to the decree-holder to ask the Court to proceed against the properties specified in his supplementary list, which should be taken as part of the original application under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 17 (2), Civil Procedure Code, or if a fresh application were at all necessary that application should be treated as one made in continuation of the application first presented so that no question of limitation could arise in the case. [p. 554, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge of 24 Parganahs, dated the 1st July 1915, reversing that of the Munsif, Barnaipore, dated the 26th March 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Surendra Madhab Mallick, for the Appellant.—The question for determination is whether an application for execution which has been admitted and registered can under any circumstances be amended at all. The lower Appellate Court is wrong in holding that no such amendment can be allowed and that the decree-holder cannot proceed against the properties specified in his supplementary list. Refers to Order XXI, rule 17 (2), Civil Procedure Code. The case of Asgar Ali v. Troilokya Nath Ghose (1) and the case of Salimulla Bahadur v. Sainaddi Sarkar (2) are distinguishable from the facts and circumstances of this case and hence cannot apply in a case like this, because in those cases the original application was not made in accordance with law; but here the application was in accordance with law as required by the Code. Moreover, the Full Bench case in Asgar Ali v. Troilokya Nath Ghose (1) was decided on the wording of section 245 of the old Code of 1882 and cannot apply after the passing of Act V of 1908,

(1) 17 C 631; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 960.
(2) 22 Ind. Cas. 337; 18 C. L. J. 538.

which introduced a change in the law on the subject.

Babus Jogesh Chandra De and Khitish Chandra Chackerbutty, for the Respondents.—The law laid down in Salimulla Bahadur v. Sainaddi Sarkar (2) is still good law and on the authority of that case, followed in several other cases, the lower Appellate Court was perfectly justified in not allowing amendment of the application for execution after the application was admitted and registered. The defects must be removed and the application must be amended just after the receipt of the application, i. e., before the application is registered.

Babu Surendra Madhab Mallick in reply.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of certain proceedings in execution. The decree in question being a rent-decree was obtained against certain persons as shebaits of a certain Thakor on the 28th November 1911. The application for execution was made on the 23rd November 1914. On its face the application was one in accordance with law. Later, on objection taken by the judgment-debtors it was discovered that against the properties specified in the list furnished under Order XXI, rule 13, proceedings could not be taken and accordingly on the 14th January 1915 the decree-holder made an application to the Court requesting the Court to accept a further list of properties and praying that execution should proceed by attachment and sale of those properties. It has been held by the first Appellate Court that the application having been admitted and registered the proposed amendment could not be accepted and that it would be necessary for the decree-holder to make a fresh application in execution. In coming to this conclusion the Court relied upon the decision of a Full Bench of this Court reported as Asgar Ali v. Troilokya Nath Ghose (1). We may observe, a further reference has been made to the case reported as Salimulla Bahadur v. Sainaddi Sarkar (2). But the present case may be distinguished from both these cases, in that in those two cases the application as originally made was one not made in accordance with law and that it contained no list of properties against which the proceedings were intended to be taken. In the present case, as we have already pointed out, the matter is different. Here there was a list of properties, the application was one made in accordance with law and it was only on the objection taken by the judgment-debtors that it was discovered that against these properties execution could not proceed. We are not of opinion that in a case such as this the decree-holder should be confined to the properties he had originally specified, and we think that it was open to him to ask the Court to proceed against the properties specified in his further and supplementary list. We are further of opinion that that list should be taken as part of the original application under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 17 (2), or if a fresh application were at all necessary that that application should be treated as one made in continuation of the application first presented on the 23rd November 1914.

In this view no question of limitation arises and we, therefore, set aside the order of the first Appellate Court and decree this appeal with costs. The decree-holder will now be at liberty to proceed in execution as on his application of the date 23rd November 1914.

We assess the hearing fee at three gold mohurs.

Order set aside.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 29, applicability of—Transfer by guardian ad litem—Sanction of Court, whether necessary.

Section 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act does not apply to transfers of property made on behalf of minors by their guardians ad litem. No sanction of the Court is, therefore, necessary in the case of such transfers. [p. 556, col. 1.]

BARKAT v. JAMILA

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 7th April 1916, decreeing the claim.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Appellants.

Mr. Santanam, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the pedigree of the parties is as follows: —

Mamman=Musammat Amiran (defendant No. 5)
Abdur Rahman (deceased)
Abdur Razak
Musammat Barkat (defendant No. 7)
Sheikh Bidu (defdt. No 1).
Qamar-ud-Din (defdt. No. 4)
Musammat Muhammad-un-Nisa (defdt. No. 3)
Musammat Sarwar-un-Nisa (died 19-12-14)
Latif-ur-Rahman (died 5-8-1911)
Fayaz-ud-Din (defdt. No. 2).
Musammat Salamti (defdt. No. 6).
Musammat Jamila (plaintiff) = Mohammad Sadiq.
Musammat Asmat (plaintiff) = Muhammad Sultan.
Musammat Razia (plaintiff).
Musammat Zakia (plaintiff).

The property in dispute belonged to one Latif-ur-Rahman who died in 1911. His heirs included his four minor daughters, the present plaintiffs who inherited a 16/24th share. The remainder of his property went 3/24ths to Musammat Sarwar-un-Nisa, his widow, who has died ; 4/24ths to his grandmother Musammat Amiran and 1/24th to his cousins Fayaz-ud-Din and Musammat Salamti. The death of Latif-ur-Rahman was followed by various applications for the guardianship of his minor daughters. Musammat Sarwar-un-Nissa was appointed in January 1912 as guardian of their persons and Bidu and Fayaz ud-Din were appointed as guardians of their property on 17th January 1912. The property consisted of a Turkish Bath, which had been managed for some years by Bidu, and of other house property.

The present litigation commenced in November 1911 with a suit brought by Musammat Sarwar-un-Nissa, for herself and her daughters, for rendition of accounts of the Turkish Bath. The principal defendant was Bidu, whom she stated to be merely the manager on behalf of the owners. The other members of the faimly were made defendants. Bidu himself stated that he was a co-partner in the business and resisted the claim. The case eventually came before Mr. Clifford, Additional District Judge, Delhi, who held that Bidu was not a co-sharer but that he was a working manager with a share in the income after deducting expenses and that his share was only four annas. He held also that Bidu had an equitable lien on the Turkish Bath on account of contributions made by him for its improvements. He considered that this lien was to the extent of about Rs. 6,000. He remanded the case for an enquiry into this point and for a decision regarding the accounts. While the case was then proceeding before Lala Murari Lal, Subordinate Judge, a compromise was effected between the parties. A valuation was made of the Turkish Bath and of the remaining property. It was considered that Bidu, who had a right to manage the Turkish Bath, would manage it to its best advantage and that the minors would be unable to supervise or interfere in his management, and that if it became necessary to partition it the business would be ruined The Turkish Bath was valued at Rs 30,000 and the remainder of the property at Rs. 70,800. For the share of Sarwar-un Nissa and her daughters Bidu agreed to deposit Rs. 5,000 in cash and to hand over to them the rights of Musammat Amiran and Fayaz ud-Din in the remaining immoveable property. He also agreed to pay Rs. 4,000 on account of the share of Musammat Sarwar-un-Nissa and her daughters in the profits of the Turkish Bath. The Turkish Bath thus became his property and that of Fayaz-ud-Din and Musammat Amiran, with whom he made his private arrangements. He deposited Rs. 10,000 in Court and apparently paid up the remainder shortly afterwards. The compromise was agreed to by all the members of the family. The present plaintiffs now sue for a declaration that they are not bound by the compromise and that they are still entitled to a rendition of accounts.

The present suit has been decreed by the District Judge of Delhi, mainly on three grounds :—

(1) that the guardians of the property and the guardians ad litem did not obtain the permission of the District Judge under section 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act to the transfer of property involved by the compromise ;

(2) that the compromise was not for the minors' benefit ; and

(3) that the compromise went beyond the scope of the suit.

As for the finding of the learned District Judge on the first point, it has to be considered whether any transfer was made by the certificated guardians as contemplated by section 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act. It is to be noticed that the suit was being conducted for the minors by Qamar-ud-Din and Muhammad-un-Nissa as their guardians ad litem. Bidu and Fayaz-ud-Din, the guardians of their property, were defendants in the case and parties to the compromise. By the compromise it is true that certain property was transfered by exchange in favour of the certificated guardians of the property, but we consider the view of the learned Judge unsound that any transfer was effected by them of the minors' estate. They merely were parties to the acceptance of a proposal to compromise the suit by means of exchange. The real transfer on behalf of the minors must be regarded as having been effected by their guardians ad litem and to such transfers section 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act has no application.

The most important issue in the case was whether the minors' benefit was considered in effecting the compromise and whether they have been adversely affected thereby. The learned District Judge held that the Subordinate Judge in accepting the compromise overlooked the fact that Fayaz-ud-Din and Bidu had valued the Hammam at Rs. 40,000, and that Bidu himself had valued the rental at Rs. 200 a month, while for the purposes of the compromise the Turkish Bath was valued at Rs. 30,000, and the rental value of the other property which fell by the compromise to the minors was little more than that of the Turkish Bath. He also doubted whether Bidu had an equitable lien to the extent of anything like Rs. 6,000 on the property. We are not impressed by the finding that the Subordinate Judge overlooked the true interests of the minors. After taking the statements of all the parties to the case, some of whom were interested in the minors' benefit and able to form an accurate opinion thereof, the Subordinate Judge passed a considered order accepting the compromise. He held that the main value of the Turkish Bath consisted in the skilled management of Bidu himself and that as he now would be uncontrolled it was extremely doubtful if the institution would prove as lucrative as previously, and that as the daughters would certainly marry in different families and probably demand partition the whole business would be ruined. In accepting the valuation fixed by the parties he had the advantage of the opinion of the adult members of the minors' family.

As for the valuation having been previously given by both Bidu himself and Fayaz-ud-Din at Rs. 40,000 and this valuation having been reduced for the purpose of the compromise to Rs. 30,000, it must be remembered that according to Mr. Clifford's considered judgment Bidu had a lien thereon of about Rs. 6,000, and it must also be repeated that its value largely depended on Bidu's personal supervision. We, therefore, do not consider that the reduction in the valuation accepted by the Subordinate Judge gives any indication that the interests of the minors were not fully considered. The learned District Judge may have had some material before him from which he stated that Bidu valued the rental of the Hammam at about Rs. 200 a month but there is no such material on the record. No accounts of the income of the Turkish Bath are on the record and even if the income did amount to Rs. 200 a month, it would not follow that the rental paid by a third person would approach this sum.

A further obvious advantage to the minors from this compromise was that they obtained Rs. 4,000 in cash on account of the profits of the Turkish Bath. Bidu had apparently been paying into Court certain items to their account, but definite information is lacking as also definite information as to the extent of the profits which were then due to the minors. We see no reason, however, to believe that these profits would have exceeded Rs. 4,000 and even if they did exceed this sum to some extent, we consider that it is most improbable that they would ever have obtained even as large a sum by litigation.

So far from considering that the interests of the minors were overlooked by the Court or by their representatives, we find every reason to hold that the compromise was an eminently fair and sensible arrangement between the parties.

It has also been urged with some force that none of the minor girls has yet come of age and so been able to form any independent opinion as to the result of the compromise. The present suit was instituted by a maternal relation, who apparently thought nothing of their interests at the time of the compromise.

The learned Counsel for the appellants argued that the District Judge held that the compromise was unenforceable as it went beyond the scope of the suit. It is somewhat difficult to ascertain the meaning of the finding of the District Judge on this point as it is of an indefinite character. But assuming the finding of the District Judge to be as stated by Counsel for the appellant, we can find no authority for the apparent views of the learned District Judge. We were referred to some authorities regarding the duties of a Court in dealing with a compromise which affects property other than that concerned in a suit, but these authorities appear to have no application to the present case.

The appeal, therefore, is accepted and plaintiffs' suit is dismissed with costs in both Courts.

Mr. M. K. Padhye, for the Applicants.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurty, for the Non-Applicants.

JUDGMENT.—The 1st ground of revision has no force in it whatever, since to the suit as brought section 92 of the Tenancy Act had no application whatever. As to the 3rd ground, the lower Court has held that all the plaintiffs were in possession and this being a finding of fact cannot be dealt with in revision. The 4th and 5th grounds have no force whatever since the defendants have admitted that the plaintiffs were in joint possession within six months before the date of the suit, although they alleged that they were in possession merely as sub-tenants. The ground of revision that needs some consideration is the 2nd ground. The suit was brought under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. The plaintiffs claimed that they had been in exclusive possession and asked to be restored to exclusive possession. It was found, however, that they had been in joint possession and they were restored by the decree to joint possession. If such a decree is otherwise unobjectionable, there was no reason why it should not be granted on the suit as brought, for plaintiffs are always entitled to a lesser relief of the same kind as they have asked for. The only question that remains is whether section 9 of the Specific Relief Act applies to cases where a co-owner in possession of property jointly with other co-owners is dispossessed by the latter. There is a clear authority on this point with which I entirely agree. It was held in Ajiman Bibi v. Reasat Sheikh (1) that the section could be employed in such cases. If the plaintiffs were in physical possession they can be restored to such possession as they had, under the decree of the Court. The application is dismissed with costs.

Application dismissed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 153—Appeal, whether lies—Question of title raised but not decided.

Under section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it is not sufficient merely that there should be a controversy on the question of title as between parties having conflicting claims to land but the section requires that some question of title should be decided as between such parties. Therefore, where in a suit for rent the lower Court does not decide the question of title which is raised between parties having conflicting claims thereto, no appeal lies under section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 558, col. 2; p. 559, col. 1.]

Appeals against the decrees of the Subordinate Judge, Birbhum, dated the 13th of September 1915, confirming those of Munsif at Suri, dated the 20th of May 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Baranashibasi Mukerjee, for the Repondents, raised a preliminary objection that under section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the appeal was not competent, as the question of title to land or to any interest in land though raised by the plaintiff was not decided by the Courts below. Referred to Gangadhar Karmakar v. Shekharbasini Dasya (1).

Babus Jogesh Chandra Roy and Mohesh Chandra Banerjee, for the Appellants, submitted that the question of title raised by the plaintiff was gone into by the Courts below incidentally though not directly, and inasmuch as the purchaser at the auction-sale for arrears of revenue, whose title was set up by the tenant, was a party to the suit, it was sufficient for the purpose of section 153, Bengal Tenancy Act, if the question was gone into incidentally Furthermore, the question of the relationship of landlord and tenant, under the facts and circumstances of the case, involved a question of title.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—A preliminary objection is taken to the hearing of this appeal on the ground that the appeal is incompetent under the provisions of section 153, Bengal Tenancy Act. It is urged that the Courts below have decided no question relating to title to land or to any interest in land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto. The plaintiff brought this suit for rent on the footing that he was originally a co-sharer to the extent of 2 annas 3 pies in the estate within the ambit of which the land in question is situated. That share of the estate, it appears, had been sold under Act XI of 1859 for arrears of revenue. But the plaintiff claims that he is entitled to his original share in respect of the land, inasmuch as it is resumed chowkidari chakran land which he says did not pass at the sale. As defendants the plaintiff impleaded not only the tenant from whom the rent was claimed but also the purchaser of the share of the estate sold for arrears of revenue. A controversy no doubt arose between the plaintiff and the purchaser as to the title of the land; but under section 153, Bengal Tenancy Act, it is not sufficient merely that there should be a controversy on the question of title, but the section requires that some question of title should be decided. On this point reference may be made to the case of Gangadhar Karmakar v. Shekharbasini Dasya (1). A perusal of the judgments of the Courts below will show that the question of title though raised was not decided. The learned Munsif in the trial Court expressed himself thus: "Considering the evidence on the record I am of opinion that the plaintiff was dispossessed from these lands by the auction-purchaser even if he had any separate right to these lands and the auction-purchaser has been in peaceful possession by receiving rents from the defendants and his possession should not be disturbed in these rent suits." The learned Subordinate Judge in the lower Appellate Court concurred generally with the Munsif and dealt in his judgment merely with the question whether the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the plaintiff and the tenant defendants. He decided that question in the negative and passed over the question whether the plaintiff or the purchaser at the auction sale was entitled to the resumed chowkidari chakran lands. There is nothing, therefore, in the judgments of the Court below to prevent the plaintiff from raising this question of title again, if he be so advised, in a regular suit. In my opinion the preliminary objection must prevail and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

(1) 35 Ind. Cas. 348; 24 C. L. J. 235 at pp. 240, 243; 20 C. W. N. 967.

This judgment governs second appeal No. 3253 of 1915.

BEACHCROFT, J.—I agree.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 90—Presumption as to genuineness of ancient documents—Discretion of Court—Appellate Court, interference by.

The question of making a presumption with regard to the genuinenes of a document under section 90 of the Evidence Act is one in which the Court has to exercise its discretion and when that discretion has been exercised with due care and the presumption allowed by law has been made an Appellate Court should be slow to interfere with such discretion. [p. 560, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Delhi, dated the 10th October 1916, modifying that of the Munsif, 2nd Class, Delhi, dated the 31st March 1916, decreeing the claim to the extent of Rs. 18 for three years' rent and dismissing rest of the claim.

Mr. Kirkpatrick, for the Appellant.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this appeal is whether the defendant purchaser from Saudagar Mal is a permanent tenant of the property in suit.

The contention centres round a lease executed by Saudagar Mal in 1873. This lease is over 40 years old, but the first Court declined to make the presumption allowed by section 90, Evidence Act. The District Judge on appeal made this presumption and gave plaintiff a decree for possession allowing defendant 6 months for removing his materials.

Mr. Kirkpatrick at first contended that this lease does not cover the property in suit. No such contention seems to have been raised in the lower Courts, and Mr. Kirkpatrick did not press the matter but confined himself entirely to arguing that the District Judge was wrong in presuming in favour of the lease. Mr. Kirkpatrick refers to Amir v. Nur Muhammad (1) and urges that forgery and fraud are frequent in Delhi, and that special care must be taken before a document can be accepted as genuine. But I note that the Additional District Judge, Mr. Clifford, whose order is under appeal, resided for long years in Delhi, and if ever there was a judicial officer who could claim an intimate acquaintance with Delhi people and their customs I should say Mr. Clifford could. He has carefully considered the case, and I should be slow to interfere with a decision of his in such a case as the present, which rests on the question whether the presumption allowed by law should be made or not.

Mr. Clifford's main reason, or at least one of his main reasons, for presuming the lease to be genuine is that it was "filed with the plaint of 1904 when Saudagar Mal was alive and that it is difficult to believe that plaintiffs would have produced a forged lease during his lifetime."

Mr. Kirkpatrick points out that it is not correct to say that it was filed with the plaint. It was filed at a late stage of the case, and Mr. Kirkpatrick urges that as Saudagar Mal did not appear to contest the suit there was no danger in putting in a forged lease. But the lease was distinctly mentioned in the plaint, so I presume that plaintiffs had it in their possession when the plaint was written, and I certainly cannot presume that plaintiffs were aware when their plaint was drawn up that Saudagar Mal was not going to contest their claim.

As for the District Judge's finding that the land in the Rui Mandi must have been acquired by Saudagar Mal in the end of 1872 or the beginning of 1873, there is of course no direct evidence as to when he got this land, but the District Judge makes an inference from the previous history of the relations between Saudagar Mal and the plaintiffs and I am not at all prepared to say that the District Judge's reasoning is incorrect.

I think the learned District Judge has given good reasons for making the presumption allowed by section 90. It is a matter in which the Court has to exercise its discretion and when that discretion has been exercised with due care, and the presumption allowed by law has been made as in the present case, an appellate Court should be slow to interfere with such discretion, vide Shafiq-un-nissa v. Shaban Ali Khan (2). In fact it is argued on behalf of the respondents that the question involved is one of fact and not one of law, and here Parankusa Zatinrda Mahadesikuswami v. Subramania Pillai (3) is quoted, a case in which the learned Judges differed; this, however, is a question which I do not think I need decide

I uphold the decision of the learned Additional District Judge except that I extend the period allowed for removing the malba till the 19th July 1918 (see my orders dated 8th February 1917 and 23rd March 1917 passed in this case), in all other respects the Additional District Judge's decision is affirmed and the appeal fails. The appellant will pay costs in this Court.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 48, applicability of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 181—Execution, stay of—Revival of antecedent application—Limitation.

Section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code applies only to a fresh application for leave to issue execution. It has no application whatsoever to the case of a revival of an antecedent application for execution which has been in suspense by reason of some bar or which has been stayed pending the determination of subsequent litigation. The limitation applicable to such a case is that provided by Article 181 of the Limitation Act, i. e., three years from the time when the bar is removed. [p. 561, col. 1.]

Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Cuttack, dated the 12th December 1916, confirming that of the Munsif, Cuttack, dated the 11th September 1916.

Mr. B. N. Singh, for the Appellant.

Mr. Tinkori Banerjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

ATKINSON, J.—The plaintiff brought an action on foot of a mortgage and recovered judgment on the 23rd of May 1900. The plaintiff made many attempts to execute this decree and I believe eight executions, or attempts at execution, were instituted. However the last petition for leave to issue execution was filed on the 20th of May 1912. The defendants, subsequently, brought a suit, after the property had been sold, contending that the same was not the property of the judgment-debtor but that it formed their own property. Consequently the plaintiff's application for leave to issue execution was stayed by order of the High Court dated the 13th of November 1912. The defendants' suit was finally disposed of and dismissed by the High Court on the 20th of May 1916. The last petition for leave to issue execution was filed three days before the 12 years had expired from the date of the decree; and therefore the application was within time within the meaning of section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is contended now that the plaintiff is not entitled to issue execution or to revive the antecedent application for execution that was made on the 20th of May 1912, because he did not proceed with his application for revival within three days from the date of the dismissal of the defendants' suit on the 20th of May 1916—that is to say, that the plaintiff, after the determination of the defendants' suit, had three days only in which to file any application that may have been necessary to revive the previous application to issue execution. As a matter of fact the plaintiff applied on the 6th of July 1916 to revive the application for leave to issue execution and this was granted. The learned Judge declined to yield to the contention of the defendants and held that the plaintiff was entitled to issue execution within the period of three years from the date of the removal of the bar for leave to issue execution or the carrying into effect of the last petition for execution filed on the 20th of May 1912. It is argued before us that section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code applies. That section would only be applicable if it was a fresh application for leave to issue execution. It has no application whatsoever to the case of a revival of an antecedent application for execution, which had been in suspense by reason of some bar or which had been stayed pending the determination of subsequent litigation. The Article which seems to apply and which was designed to apply to this case is Article 181, formerly Article 178, of the general Limitation Act; and that Article provides that where no limitation is expressly provided by the Act for the doing of any particular act, the period of three years is to be deemed to be the period of limitation from the date on which the right accrued. In this case the right accrued at the date when the bar was removed; and the plaintiff must be deemed to have three years from that date within which he would be entitled to revive the application of the 20th of May 1912 for leave to issue execution. The defendants contend that this is very hard. It may be hard but it is very just, because it is very right and proper that the plaintiff should be entitled to a reasonable time at any rate from the date of the removal of the bar to issue execution; and to hold that he is entitled to only three days would, in my opinion, be very unfair and unjust, more especially when the defendants deliberately set themselves to endeavour by every means in their power to defeat the execution proceedings. I think that the learned Judge was right in the conclusion at which he arrived and I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

A daughter is not an agnate of her father and she derives her title not from the common ancestor but from her father. She has no right, superior to that of her father; she represents him; and his estate in her hands is liable for his debts. [p. 562, col. 1.]

Miscellaneous second appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Gujranwala, at Sialkot, dated the 18th August 1916.

Mr. Devi Das, for the Appellants.

Mr. Narain Singh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The judgment-debtor in this case is the daughter of the original debtor, and she objected to the execution of the decree against the property in her hands on various grounds.

The learned Judge refused her prayer for relief on agrarian considerations, but held that Jagdip Singh v. Narain Singh (1) was authority for granting the relief prayed for, on the ground that the property was ancestral and the decree had not been charged on the property by the last male owner.

Jagdip Singh v. Narain Singh (1) has no application to a case of this kind. Jagdip Singh v. Narain Singh (1) gave a very wide extension to the rights of agnates, because agnates are supposed to derive their title not from the last male owner but from the common ancestor.

A daughter, however, is not an agnate and she derives her title not from the common ancestor but from her father. She has no right superior to that of her father; she represents him, and his estate in her hands is liable for his debts.

I accept the appeal and restore the Munsif's order. Costs throughout to appellant.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), ss. 105A, 109—Status of tenant—Decision by Settlement Officer—Suit for declaration, maintainability of.

Under section 105 A of the Bengal Tenancy Act a Settlement Officer hearing an application for the settlement of a fair rent is authorised to decide whether the tenant belongs to a class different from that to which he is shown in the Record of Rights as belonging. When a Settlement Officer has decided that question, it is not competent to a Civil Court, having regard to the terms of section 109 of the Act, to entertain a suit for a declaration of the status of the tenant. [p. 563, col. 1.]

Babus Jyoti Prosad Sarbadhicary and Jogendra Nath Dutt, for the Appellants.

Babus Hemendra Nath Sen and Jatindra Mohan Sen Gupta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the defendant against the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, dated the 17th December 1913, affirming the decision of the Munsif at Howrah. The suit was brought by the plaintiffs, the tenants, against the defendants, the landlords, for a declaration that the entry in the Record of Rights was wrong and that they were permanent tenants at a fixed rate and not settled raiyats as entered in the record. The Record of Rights in this case was finally published on the 29th October 1907; that is, after the date on which Act I (B. C.) of 1907 came into force, which amended the Bengal Tenancy Act by adding a new section (section 105 A). On the 29th November 1907 an application was made by the landlords, the defendants, under the provisions of section 105 for settlement of a fair rent. On the 28th February 1908 an order was passed settling a fair rent under which the rent of the tenants was somewhat enhanced. Then the tenants brought the present suit. The only question is whether the present suit is maintainable. Before section 105A came into force, the decisions of this Court show that, when the Settlement Officer was dealing with an application to settle a fair and equitable rent, he could not go behind the Record of Rights. He was bound to accept the entries that appeared there. That was the view which Mr. Justice Teunon and myself took in the case of Shashi Bhusan Hazrah v. Sheikh Esabar Ali (1). It appears that the record in that case was finally published in the year 1903. It was clearly a case to which Act I (B. C.) of 1907, which enacted for the first time section 105A, could not apply. But the present case must be dealt with with reference to the new section that has been added by Act I (B. C.) of 1907. Now, section 105A was expressly enacted to meet the objection that had been raised in the cases referred to, so as to enable the Settlement Officer who was hearing an application for settlement of rent to decide certain issues which the Court had held that he was not entitled to decide in an application under section 105. Amongst those issues which the Settlement Officer was authorised to decide by section 105A was issue No. (e) of that section, namely, whether the tenant belonged to a class different from that to which he was shown in the Record of Rights as belonging. That being so, it is quite clear that the Settlement Officer had in this case jurisdiction to enquire as to whether the tenants belonged to the class to which they were shown in the Record of Rights. The question is, "did he so enquire"? It is quite clear that he did. The written statement set up a case that the rent was not liable to enhancement. The learned Settlement Officer by his decision decided that the rent was enhancible and ought to be enhanced. Therefore, he must have come to a definite and clear conclusion that the status of the tenants was one of tenants whose rent was liable to be enhanced. That being so, under section 109 of the Act, a Civil Court is prohibited from entertaining any application or suit concerning any matter which is or has already been the subject of an application made, suit instituted or proceedings taken under sections 105 to 108 (both inclusive). That includes, of course, the new section 105A. It seems to me quite clear, on a reading of the new section along with section 109, that, in this case, the Settlement Officer having decided that the tenants were not tenants at fixed rates of rent but were liable to have their rents enhanced, and their rents having been enhanced, it was not competent to the Civil Court, having regard to the terms of section 109, to enter into and enquire what was the status of those tenants. That being so, the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is, in my opinion, wrong. We should, therefore, allow the appeal and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit. The plaintiffs-respondents must pay to the defendants-appellants their costs in this Court as well as in the Courts below.

(1) 29 Ind Cas 122; 19 C. W. N. 686.

Mr. M. Chuckerbutty, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. S. Naidu, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question raised in this appeal is one of law. The plaintiffs-appellants were the holders of a money-decree. In execution they procured the attachment and sale of a house belonging to the judgment-debtors-respondents. With the permission of the Court the decree-holders bid at the sale and bought the house. The sale was confirmed and the appellants were given a sale certificate on the 27th January 1913. They, however, failed to apply to be given possession of the house under section 318 of the then Civil Procedure Code, corresponding to rule 95 of the Order XXI of the present Code. They have brought the present suit for possession of the house on the 24th June 1911. If the suit is maintainable, it is within time with reference to Article 138 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act. According to the plaint the house remained in the possession of the defendants, the judgment-debtors. The suit cannot be treated as an application in execution of the decree, as such an application would be time-barred. It was contended for the defendants that the suit was barred by section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code; that plaintiffs' proper course would have been to ask for possession under section 318, Civil Procedure Code (now Order XXI, rule 95). The learned Munsif, following the ruling in Bhagwati v. Banwari Lal (1), held that section 47 was no bar to the suit, but in appeal the learned District Judge has held the contrary, relying on the view of Sir Basil Scott, C. J., and Rao, J., in Sadashiv Mahadu v. Narayan Vithal (2), which is also the view of the Calcutta and Madras High Courts as shown by Madhusudan Das v. Gobinda Pria Chowdhurani (3) and Sandhu Taraganar v. Hussain Sahib (4). The Allahabad ruling cited above is relied on by the learned Counsel for the appellants, but it is to be observed that the view of the majority of the Full Bench was dissented from by Stanley, C. J., and Knox, J. who have given what are, in my opinion, very strong reasons for supporting the opinion of the District Judge, who has thus followed the practice of the Calcutta, Madras and Bombay High Courts, which has the support of a strong minority of the Allahabad Bench. I cannot hope to put the arguments in support of the respondents more clearly than they have been put by Stanley, C. J., Knox and Rao, JJ. I can only say that I agree with the opinion that when a decree-holder by his own action combines the position of decree-holder and auction-purchaser by purchasing at an auction sale with the permission of the Court, he does not lose his character of a party to the suit and that the proceedings in execution are not terminated until the auction-purchaser obtains possession of the property, inasmuch as the Civil Procedure Code provides in the Chapter relating to execution of decrees, for delivery of possession being enforced. I agree that section 47, Civil Procedure Code, is a bar to the suit and the appeal is dismissed with costs. Since writing the above I have had the advantage of referring to the judgment of Drake-Brockman, Offg., J. C., in Second Appeal No. 209 of 1906 in which the learned Officiating Judicial Commissioner held that the balance of authority was in favour of the view which I have adopted.

JUGAL KRISHNA MULLICK v. PHUL KUMARI DASSI.

Rule against the order of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, 24-Pergannahs, in Title Suit No. 6 of 1915.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Surendra Madhub Mullick, (with him Babu Satyendra Kumar Roy Chowdhury), for the Petitioner.—The Court below has acted illegally and with material irregularity in rejecting the application of the petitioner to be added as a party to the suit, in view of the fact that his interest as beneficiary will be seriously prejudiced if the suit fails for want of taking proper steps for the conduct of the suit. The administratrix is not taking proper steps; that would appear from the report of the Commissioner, appointed for local investigation, made to the Court that his work came to a standstill as the administratrix did not, in spite of repeated notices, place any evidence before him.

[TEUNON, J.—Does the administratrix admit the fact of petitioner's adoption?]

Yes. The petitioner Jugal and his adoptive mother the present administratrix have fallen out and the latter is now questioning the validity of the adoption, which is testified to by a registered deed of adoption dated the 4th of July 1902. A conflict of interests has now arisen in the property in suit between the adopted son and the plaintiff who is the administratrix to the estate.

[TEUNON, J.—The petitioner cannot ask to be added as a party unless he is found to be a necessary party.]

Under Order I, rule 10, sub-rule (2) of the Civil Procedure Code he can be added as a party, as his presence before the Court is necessary in this sense that if the suit fails for failure to place proper evidence before the Court owing to the default of the administratrix the petitioner shall be the sufferer in the end, because the decision in the suit will be binding upon him. Moreover, if he is made a party and allowed to watch the proceedings in the suit, neither the plaintiff nor the defendants can be prejudiced in any way. Having regard to the provisions of Order I, rule 10, and Order XXXI, rule 1, of the Civil Procedure Code the lower Court should have added the petitioner as a party to the suit under the particular facts and circumstances of the case.

Babu Bepin Chandra Mullick (with him Babus Dhirendra Nath Bagchi and Panna Lal Dutt), for the Opposite Party.—The Court below had under Order I, rule 10, sub-rule (2), ample jurisdiction to decide, in the exercise of its discretion, whether or not the petitioner should be added as a party to the suit, and it has decided that the petitioner is not a necessary party and his presence before the Court is not necessary for deciding the subject-matter in dispute in the suit. Therefore under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code the order of the Court below is not open to revision. Even if the decision of the Court below is wrong in law, it is no ground for the interference of the High Court in revision under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. See Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (1), Muhammad Yusuf Khan v. Abdul Rahman Khan (2) and Parasurama Ayyar v. Seshier (3).

Under Order XXXI, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, in a suit between the administrator and a third person the beneficiary is not a necessary party unless the interest of the administrator is adverse to that of the beneficiary. The order of the Court below which is now sought to be set aside is to the following effect:—"The petition and affidavit of one Jugal Kissore Mullick for making him a co-plaintiff in this suit on the ground that he is a beneficiary of the estate of Sham Lall Mullick, the present plaintiff being the administratrix of that estate and that the present plaintiff as administratrix is taking no interest in the present suit.....The plaintiff denies the right of the petitioner as beneficiary altogether. There is nothing to show that the plaintiff has an interest adverse to the interest of the petitioner regarding the subject-matter of the suit.....The prayer for making the petitioner a co-plaintiff in this suit is, therefore, rejected". In the face of the above findings of the Court below the petitioner cannot be added as a co-plaintiff. Refers to Beresford v. Ramasubba (4). Moreover, the expression "persons beneficially interested" in Order XXXI, rule 1, Code of Civil Procedure, means persons whose rights as beneficiaries have been established or are not disputed. Only such persons may, under extraordinary circumstances, be made parties in suits between the administrator and third persons. In this case the validity of the petitioner's adoption is in dispute in a suit between the plaintiff and the petitioner pending on the Original Side of this Court. Therefore the petitioner whose interest as beneficiary is not yet established cannot be made a co-plaintiff.

Babus Surendra Madhub Mullick, in reply.—The order of the Court below is open to revision by the High Court not only under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code but also under section 107 of the Government of India Act. Refers to Dwarka Nath Sen v. Kisori Lal (5).

On the merits, my submission is that the very fact that the petitioner and the administratrix have already fallen out shows that the latter is likely to act adversely to the interests of the former.

JUDGMENT.—In this case one Phul Kumari Dassi has sued as the administratrix to the estate of her deceased husband for the purpose of having a sale of part of the estate for arrears of revenue set aside.

The petitioner before us one Jugal Kishore Mullick, claiming to be a son adopted to her deceased husband by Phul Kumari and being now of full age, applied to be made a party plaintiff in the suit. The application was refused by the Subordinate Judge of Alipore in whose Court the suit is pending, on the ground that the administratrix fully represented the estate and that there was nothing to show that she had interests adverse to the interests of the petitioner.

Here there can be no doubt that the Subordinate Judge has fallen into error.

In the new current year the petitioner in fact brought a suit (No. 212 of 1917) on the Original Side of this Court to recover possession from Phul Kumari and for accounts. In that suit Phul Kumari has entered appearance and while apparently admitting the factum of the adoption has pleaded that she had no valid authority from her husband to make it. Further on the record of the present suit there are many indications going to show that she is not prosecuting the suit with due diligence.

But on behalf of the opposite party it is contended that neither under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code or section 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, are we empowered to interfere in a matter of addition or substitution of parties. To that contention the case reported as Dwarka Nath Sen v. Kisori Lal (5) is a sufficient answer.

It is next contended that Order XXXI, rule 1, applies only when the interest of the claimant as a beneficiary is admitted or not disputed. No authority has been adduced in support of this proposition. It may be that the petitioner's title cannot be finally adjudicated in the present suit but having regard to the registered deed of 4th July 1902 and the admissions made by the plaintiff Phul Kumari from time to time, we are satisfied that the petitioner has made out a prima facie case sufficient to entitle him to be made a party to the suit. We, therefore, set aside the order complained of and direct that the petitioner be added as a party plaintiff.

The Rule is accordingly made absolute with costs against the plaintiff-opposite party, hearing fee three gold mohurs.

Rule made absolute.

CHIVIKULA VENKATASUBBIAH AND ANOTHER—APPELLANTS

versus

GOLLAPUDI VENKATESWARULU —RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s 7—Manager of Hindu family, whether can give valid discharge of decree-debt—Execution—Attachment—Dismissal of execution petition, whether removes attachment—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 56, 57.

A major manager of a joint Hindu family is competent to give a valid discharge of a decree-debt within the meaning of section 7 of the Limitation Act so as to make the time run against the minor members of the family.

(Case-law discussed)

Whether the dismissal of an execution petition has the effect of removing the attachment depends upon the facts of each case.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Guntur, in Appeal Suit No. 148 of 1915, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Ongole, in Execution Petition No. 1042 of 1912, in Original Suit No. 317 of 1902.

Messrs. T. Prakasam and P. Chenchiah, for the Appellants.

Mr. V. Lakhshminarayana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—As regards the question whether section 7 of the Limitation Act of 1908 has the effect of barring the application for execution, Execution Petition No. 1042 of 1912, the preponderance of authority is clearly in favour of the affirmative view. The question whether a major manager of a joint Hindu family can give a valid discharge of a decree-debt within the meaning of the above section so as to make the time run against the minor members of the family is fully discussed in Duraisawmi Sastrial v. Venkatarama Iyer (1), where it was held that the dictum of Bashyam Aiyangar, J., in Periasami v. Krishna Ayyan (2) could no longer be said to be good law having regard to the change of language in section 7 of the new Limitation Act. The same view is enunciated by Sadasiva Aiyar and Spencer, JJ., in Planiandi Pillai v. Papathi Ammal (3) and one of us followed Duraisawmi Sastrial v. Venkatarama Iyer (1) in Ramnadhan Sivayya v. Udatha Atchayya (4): No doubt in Mahomed Silar Sahib v. Nabi Khan (5) Oldfield and Sadasiva Aiyar, JJ., seem to approve of Bashyam Aiyangar's observation in Periasami v. Krishna Ayyan (2), but this decision may perhaps be distinguished on the ground that no question of limitation directly arose in that case. However that may be, we think that since there is express mention of applications for execution of decrees in section 7, there is no longer room for the contention that it has no application to cases where under the Hindu Law the manager can give a valid discharge simply because the liability to be enforced arises under a decree.

Another point was raised before us in second appeal, viz., that the attachment of the judgment-debtor's decree by order dated 15th April 1908 continued in spite of the dismissal of the petition on the 25th April 1908. But whether the dismissal of an execution petition has not the effect of removing the attachment depends upon the facts of each case, as observed in Raghavachariar v. Anantha Reddi (6). The District Munsif points out that there was nothing to show that the petition was not dismissed in the presence of parties and the decree-holder himself has treated the attachment as having ceased to exist. In the lower Appellate Court the question does not appear to have been argued and in second appeal we are not under the circumstances forced to hold that the view of the District Munsif on this point is wrong.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

The word 'transfer' in Article 134 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act includes a transfer by way of a permanent lease. [p. 569, col 1.]

A suit by a shebait to recover debutter property held by the defendant under a permanent lease granted by the plaintiff's predecessor is governed by Article 134 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act and must be brought within twelve years of the date of the transfer. [p. 568, col. 1.]

The representation of an idol by the shebaits is a continuing representation and limitation runs against the shebaits continuously and not as against each shebait individually as and when he succeeds to the office, the shebaits not being holders of successive life-estates in the management or in the property of the endowment. JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—The present appeal is preferred from the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, dated the 28th May 1915, affirming the decree of the Munsif of Burdwan, dated the 30th March 1914. The plaintiffs in the suit, who are the appellants before us, are the shebaits of a certain idol and they sue the defendants to recover possession of certain debutter property held by them under colour of a mokarari lease granted by the father of the plaintiffs, the previous shebait, in the year 1876. The sole question which arises is whether the suit, which was instituted on the 14th February 1913, is barred by the provision of Article 134 of the Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act of 1908. By that Article a suit to recover possession of immoveable property conveyed or bequeathed in trust or mortgage and afterwards transferred by the trustee or mortgagee for valuable consideration must be brought within 12 years of the date of the transfer. Prima facie the present suit falls within the Article and having been brought more than 12 years after the date of the lease to the defendants is out of time. The Courts below have so held.

It has been contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that the transfer to the defendants having taken the form of a lease, the transfer is not a transfer within the meaning of Article 134 and that Article has no application. In support of this contention reliance has been placed upon the cases of Abhiram Goswami Mohant v. Shyama Charan Nandi (1) and Ishwar Shyam Chand Jiu v. Ram Kanai Ghose (2). These cases, however, were decided by the Judicial Committee under the Limitation Act of 1877, in Article 134 of which the word 'transferred' was not used. As the Article then stood, it applied only to properties "purchased" from the trustee or mortgagee and the period of limitation was 12 years from the date of the "purchase." It was held in Abhiram Goswami's case (1) that the word 'purchase' did not include a transfer by way of lease, even though the lease was a permanent lease. As to the second of the two cases, if regard be had to the course which it took, it will be found to be in respect of the present law an authority rather in favour of the defendants than in favour of the plaintiffs. The judgment of this Court which was taken on appeal to the Privy Council was delivered in 1905 [Ram Kanai Ghose v. Raja Sri Sri Hari Narayan Singh Deo Bahadur (3)]. This Court held that the word 'purchased' in Article 134 of the Act of 1877 was as applicable to a permanent lease, such as a putni lease, as to an absolute conveyance, and in so doing adopted the view taken in an earlier case decided in 1896, the case of Nilmony Singh v. Jogabandhu Roy (4). On the first hearing of the appeal to the Privy Council, the appeal was dismissed and the decision of this Court was affirmed. An application was, however, subsequently made to their Lordships to review their judgment [Sri Sri Ishwar Shyam Chandjiu v. Ram Kanai Ghose (5)] and on review the decision of this Court was reversed in 1911 on the ground that it was, as regards the meaning of the word "purchased", inconsistent with Abhiram Goswami's case (1) which had been decided by their Lordships in 1909. As Article 134 is now worded, it is impossible to say that a transfer by way of a permanent lease is not within its scope. Apart from the dates it might seem that the language was altered for the express purpose of avoiding the effect of the ruling in Abhiram Goswami's case (1). In fact it was apparently not intended to make any change in the law but only to state more clearly the law as it was at the time understood.

The further point taken, that the plaintiffs had no cause of action till their father died, is also untenable on the authorities. In Madhu Sudan Mandal v. Radhika Prosad Das (6) the question was treated as concluded by the decision of the Privy Council in Damodar Das v. Lakhan Das (7). The representation of the idol by the shebaits is a continuing representation, and limitation runs against the idol continuously and not as against each shebait individually as and when he succeeds to the office, the shebaits not being holders of successive life-estates in the management or in the property of the endowment: Prosunno Kumari Debya v. Golab Chand Baboo (8), Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram (9).

It has next been contended, however, that Abhiram Goswami's case (1) must be taken to have settled what the law was before the Limitation Act of 1908 was passed and that the plaintiffs, therefore, are entitled to say that they have been deprived of a right of suit which they had under the pre-existing law or that in some way they are entitled to treat the present suit as a suit not under Article 134 but as a suit to which some other Article applies. As the argument is put, in one aspect it is the last point over again, namely, that the plaintiffs had no cause of action till their father died in 1912. Even if this were so, it is obvious that they had no vested right of suit when the Act of 1908 was passed. In another aspect the argument seems to be that their cause of action has at any rate been in some way changed. But if time ran against the idol, no change of substance has occurred in respect of the cause of action. That still depends, as it did before, on the unlawful alienation of the property by the plaintiffs' father and even if the defendants had to prove adverse possession, adverse possession would run against the idol under the old law just as it would under the new law: Nilmony Singh v. Jogabandhu Roy (4), Damodar Das v. Lakhan Das (7). The gist of this part of the argument seems to be that the Article of the Limitation Act applicable would previously have been Article 144 and not Article 134. But whether that be so or not, the whole of the contentions based on the change in the law really come to this, that the passing of the Act of 1908 has cut down and made shorter the period of limitation to which the plaintiffs would otherwise have been entitled. In such a state of things the relevant section of the Act, to which we must look, is section 30. That section provides that "notwithstanding any thing herein contained, any suit for which the period of limitation prescribed by this Act is shorter than the period of limitation prescribed by the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, may be instituted within the period of two years next after the passing of this Act or within the period prescribed for such suit by the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, whichever period expires first." The Act of 1908 was passed on the 7th August of that year and the period of two years allowed by section 30 expired before the suit was instituted. There is no other concession to which the plaintiffs are entitled and having regard to the law as it was understood to be in this country up to 1908, there is no hardship.

As a last resort, it has been argued that, at any rate, the minor plaintiffs are entitled to an extension of time under the provisions of section 6 of the present Act. It may be doubted whether the provisions of section 6 control those of section 30. But the true answer to this argument seems to be that under the law as it now stands it must be taken that the time began to run in 1877 when the lease to the defendants was granted and that under section 9 of the Act the time having once begun to run no subsequent disability or inability to sue stops it.

For the reasons indicated I am of opinion that this appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

THE DEPUTY COMMISSIONER OF MANBHUM—DECREE-HOLDER—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 5, 15, applicability of—Execution, application for—Decree offered as security for costs—Exclusion of period during which decree served as security, whether allowable—Limitation, whether can be excluded by agreement—Estoppel.

It is the duty of the Court to look into the question of limitation itself and it is not relieved from the duty of doing so by the fact that the parties or one of them has agreed not to plead limitation. [p. 572, col. 1.]

If to an action the Statute of Limitation is pleaded and proof is given that the action clearly commenced after the period of limitation had expired, the defendant, notwithstanding the existence of any agreement, is entitled to a verdict. [p. 572, col. 1.]

Section 5 of the Limitation Act is not applicable to an application for execution of a decree. [p. 571, col. 1.]

A plaintiff wishing to appeal to the Privy Council against a decree of the High Court offered as security for costs a decree for rent which he had obtained against the defendant. The security was accepted by the High Court and the plaintiff was thereby enabled to appeal to the Privy Council. His appeal failed and costs were awarded against him. He then applied for execution of his rent-decree:

Held, (1) that the acceptance of the security by the High Court did not involve an order staying execution of the rent-decree, and that section 15 of the Limitation Act had no application to the case; [p. 572, col. 1; p. 571, col. 1.]

(2) that, therefore, the time during which the appeal was pending before the Privy Council could not be excluded from the period of limitation provided for the execution of the decree. [p. 571, col. 2; p. 572, col. 2.]

Appeal from an order of the Deputy Collector, Manbhum, dated the 1st March 1917.

Mr. P. R. Dass (with him Mr. Sailendra Nath Palit), for the Appellant.

Mr. Mohammad Fakhruddin, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

CHAMIER, C. J.—The question for decision in this appeal is whether an application for execution of a decree against the appellant presented by the respondent to the Court below on July 5th, 1916, is barred by limitation. The decree which was dated December 17th, 1909, and was for a large sum on account of arrears of rent, expressly provided that execution should not be taken out until the disposal of an appeal in another suit between the same parties then pending in the Calcutta High Court, the appellant in that case being the present respondent. The appeal to the High Court was dismissed on April 28th, 1910. The present respondent then applied to the High Court for leave to appeal to the Privy Council and obtained leave in the ordinary course. On being required to give security for the costs of the present appellant who was the defendant in the rent suit, he gave as security the decree for rent which he held against his opponent. The bond by which the decree was made security for the costs of the respondent in the Privy Council recited the course of the litigation and the fact that the High Court had allowed the rent decree to be given as security, and then it provided that if the present respondent paid to the extent of Rs. 4,000 any costs payable by him to the present appellant under the order of His Majesty in Council, then the document was to be void and the rent decree was to be released from the bond, but in default of the costs being paid they were to be realised by sale of the rent-decree, the sale-proceeds to be applied in payment of such costs to the extent of Rs. 4,000, and until such costs were paid the decree was to remain charged therefor. The appeal to the Privy Council was dismissed with costs in February 1915, and the present application for execution of the rent decree was presented, as already stated, on July 5th, 1916. It is quite clear that the respondent is entitled to deduct the time which elapsed between the date of the decree and the disposal of the appeal in the other case by the Calcutta High Court. The question is whether he is entitled to deduct the time which elapsed between the disposal of the case by the Calcutta High Court and the date on which his present application for execution was filed.

The first contention is that the case is covered by section 5 of the Limitation Act and that the respondent has established sufficient cause for not making the application within time. But one has only to read section 5 to see that it has no application whatever to the present case. It applies only to an appeal or application for review of judgment or for leave to appeal or any other application to which the section may be made applicable by any enactment or rule for the time being in force. It is not suggested that there is any enactment or rule which makes this section applicable to the present application for execution. Section 5 has, therefore, no bearing on the case.

Next it was contended that the case was covered by section 15 of the Limitation Act. There was no express injunction or order staying the execution of the decree, but it is suggested that what took place in the High Court, when the decree was made security for the costs in the other case, amounted to an order by the Court that execution should not proceed pending the disposal of the case by their Lordships of the Privy Council. It appears to me impossible to accept this contention. It is probable that neither side contemplated the possibility of the rent-decree becoming barred by limitation and that it never occurred to the Court or the parties that there was any necessity to stay execution of the rent-decree. If by the bond mentioned above the decree was transferred to the Registrar of the High Court, then the Registrar could have taken out execution. If the decree was not effectively transferred by that document, then it appears that the respondent could have taken out execution himself. He could certainly have made an application to the Court setting out the facts and representing that the execution of the decree was about to become barred by limitation. If he had done so, suitable action would have been taken. Other security could have been substituted or arrangements made for the execution of the decree. In suits for partition of family property where the property to be divided includes bonds or decrees standing in the name of one or other of the parties, it is a common practice to apply to the Court to make arrangements for the bringing of suits on the bonds or for the execution of decrees proceedings on which are likely to be barred by limitation. The truth appears to be that the decree-holder overlooked the fact that his decree was becoming barred by limitation and he now seeks to make out that the Court prevented him from executing it. That, however, is not the case. I am unable to hold that the case is covered by section 15 of the Limitation Act.

Lastly, it was contended that what took place in the Calcutta High Court amounted to an agreement extending the period of limitation until the disposal of the case by the Privy Council. It was settled many years ago that limitation could not be extended even by express agreement, and it certainly could not be extended by an agreement to be implied from circumstances such as those with which we have to deal in the present case.

I am of opinion that this application for execution was barred by limitation and should have been dismissed. I would allow this appeal, set aside the order of the Court below and dismiss the application for execution with costs in both Courts.

CHAPMAN, J.—I agree. Raja Ram Kanai Sahe wished to appeal to the Privy Council against a decree of the Calcutta High Court dismissing his suit for a declaration that a lease which had been given to the Midnapur Zamindary Co. was invalid. In order to be able to appeal the Raja had to give security for any costs which might be awarded to the Zamindary Co. by the Privy Council. He offered as security a decree for a considerable sum of rent which the Estate had obtained against the Zamindary Co. The security so offered was accepted by the Calcutta High Court and the Raja was thereby enabled to prosecute his appeal in the Privy Council. His appeal failed and costs were awarded against him. An application was then made by the Deputy Commissioner in his capacity as Manager of the estate for execution of his rent decree against the Zamindary Co. The application was on the face of it barred by limitation. In order to get over the difficulty of limitation the two contentions which appear to me to have any substance appear to be these. First, that when the security offered by the Raja was accepted by the High Court that acceptance involved an order staying the execution, of the rent-decree and that section 15 of the Limitation Act became then applicable. It is, however, conceded that there was in fact no order staying execution, nor can it be said that any such order was implied. The other alternative is to consider whether the fact of the acceptance of the rent decree by the High Court as security for costs resulted in such a relationship between the Deputy Commissioner and the Midnapur Zamindary Co. as would estop the Company from now pleading limitation or would extend the period of limitation in favour of the Deputy Commissioner. So far as estoppel is concerned, it is the duty of the Court to look into the question of limitation itself and it is not relieved from the duty of doing so by the fact that the parties or one of them had agreed not to plead limitation. So far as the question whether the period of limitation was extended as the result of such an agreement is concerned, it was decided by the Privy Council so far back as the year 1849 in the case of East India Company v. Oditchurn Paul (1), not without reluctance, that if to an action the Statute of Limitation is pleaded and proof is given that the action clearly commenced after the period of limitation had expired, the defendant, notwithstanding the existence of any agreement, is entitled to a verdict. There is a decision to the same effect by the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Kristo Komul Singh v. Huree Sirdar (2). The case no doubt is one of very considerable hardship to the decree-holder, because no doubt it was not obvious to him that it was his duty to keep the rent-decree alive nor indeed was it easy to say how that decree should be kept alive, whether by application by the decree-holder or by some sort of motion to the High Court, in order that the Registrar might make arrangements for some application to be made in the matter. I agree that the lower Court was wrong in holding that the application for execution was not barred by limitation. I desire to abstain from expressing any opinion as to whether anything could be made of the equities of the case in order to meet an application for execution by the other side of the decree of the Privy Council for costs.

Malabar Law—Karnavan, position of—Mortgage by karnavan to pay barred debt—Consideration—Tarwad, liability of—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 25.

The status of a karnavan in a Malabar tarwad is more akin to that of a manager of a Hindu family than to that of a Hindu father. The peculiar obligations which a Hindu son incurs in respect of the debts of his father are not those with which a junior member of a tarwad is chargeable with reference to the karnavan's debts. A mortgage executed by a karnavan in payment of a barred decree-debt is not binding on the junior members of the tarwad. [p. 573, col. 1.]

The provisions of section 25 of the Contract Act do not apply to such a case, for though the mortgage might be treated as having consideration, it is not enough to charge the tarwad with liability, which must be shown to have been benefited by the transaction. [p. 573, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Tellicherry, in Appeal Suit No. 602 of 1913, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Quilandy, in Original Suit No. 608 of 1912.

Mr. Kutti Krishna Menon, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question for decision is whether a deed of mortgage executed by a Karnavan in payment of a decree debt which was barred by limitation at the date of the mortgage is binding on the junior members of the Tarwad.

Mr. Kuttikrishna Menon for the appellant relied on Eravanni Revivarman v. Ittapu Revivarman (1), in support of the proposition that the Karnavan of a Malabar Tarwad occupies a position analogous to that of a Hindu father under the Mitakshara Law. We do not think that the learned Judges intended in that case to draw a distinction between the position of a father and that of a bare manager. The exact status of a Karnavan was considered more elaborately in Achal Ram v. Kazim Husain Khan (2) and in Kunhichekkan v. Lydia Arucanden (3), and we agree with the view taken in these two decisions that the Karnavan occupies a position more akin to that of a manager than to that of a Hindu father. The peculiar obligations which a Hindu son incurs in respect of the debt of his father are not those with which a junior member of a Tarwad is chargeable with reference to the Karnavan's debts.

It has been held in Chinnaya Nayudu v. Gurunatham Chetti (4) that the manager of a Hindu family is not entitled to revive a barred debt, and this decision has been cited with approval in Narayanasami Chetti v. Samidas Mudali (5), Kondappa v. Subba (6) and Suryanarayana v. Narendra Thatraz (7). As regards Kondappa v. Subba (6), it is enough to point out that the widow was regarded as being under a pious duty to relieve her husband from the sin of not paying a just debt. In the case of sons, the Hindu Law imposes an obligation to pay their father's debts not tainted with illegality or immorality. That is the reason of the rule in Narayanasami Chetti v. Samidas Mudali (5). We do not think that the view in Dalip Singh v. Kundan Lal (8) to the contrary is good law.

As regards the English cases, the principle enunciated by Romer, J., in Midgley v. Midgley (9) is that the payment of barred debt will not enable the legatees to charge an executor with Devastavit. As pointed out by Mr. Madhavan Nair, this is a very exceptional proposition which should not be extended to Indian conditions. Moreover in England, a debtor is not bound to plead the Statute of Limitations, whereas under the Limitation Act, the Court is bound to dismiss a claim, if it is barred by limitation. One other distinguishing feature is, that an executor is directed to pay all the just debts of a testator, there is no similar obligation on the Karnavan. It is open to argument, however, that if a debt barred by limitation has been actually paid, the Karnavan might not be held liable for having paid it; that would stand on the analogy of an executor or trustee not being liable to be proceeded against for Devastavit under similar circumstances. See Rowson, In re, Field v. White (10). But that is not the present case. Here the holder of the mortgage has obtained only a promise and not payment. That promise has to be enforced against the Tarwad and the members are entitled to plead that the promise has not been made for necessary or lawful purposes. That is the principle which Hindu junior members are entitled to invoke as against the manager.

Regarding the argument that section 25 of the Contract Act can be utilized against the Tarwad, the answer suggested by Mr. Madhavan Nair seems reasonable. The mortgage document may be regarded as having consideration; but that is not enough to charge the Tarwad with liability. The consideration must be such as to bind the members, either by showing that the transaction was beneficial or was justifiable.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 29—Landlord and tenant—Hajat or rent kept in abeyance—Landlord's right to realise full nominal rent.

Where a tenant by a kabuliyat agreed to pay rent at the rate of Rs. 37-1-0 per annum subject to a hajat or deduction of Rs. 21-10-0 and the kabuliyat contained the following clause: "If after the expiry of the term I do not within a year deliver a fresh dawl kabuliyat for the whole amount inclusive of the sum kept in abeyance I shall pay Rs. 37-1-0, being the full amount of actual rent inclusive of the sum kept in abeyance:"

Held, (1) that the clause in the kabuliyat was in the nature of a threat that the rent at the full nominal rate would be levied in case the tenant did not execute a kabuliyat within a year after the expiry of the term; [p. 575, col.1]

(2) that the landlord's claim at the full nominal rate was inadmissible, as the stipulation in the kabuliyat with regard to the deduction to be allowed was a device to evade the provisions of section 29, Bengal Tenancy Act; [p. 575, col. 1.]

(3) that as in cases of this nature each case must depend on its own facts, it would be better in all such cases for the lower Courts to record an express finding one way or the other whether or not the agreement was a device to evade the Statute. [p. 575, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Rungpore, dated the 23rd March 1915, confirming that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Rungpore, dated the 29th April 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Ram Charan Mitter (with him Babu Mukundnath Roy), for the Appellants.—This appeal arises out of a suit for arrears of rent for 3 years 1317—19 B. S. in respect of 25 bighas and 13 katas at the rate of Rs 37-1-0 per year, subject to a hajat or deduction of Rs. 21-10-0. These lands were settled with the present defendants upon a kabuliyat in the year 22nd Agrahan 1287 B. S.-1880, before the Bengal Tenancy Act was passed. A portion of the rent was kept in abeyance and the remainder Rs. 15-7-0 was payable. The question is whether it is a device to evade the law. The case reported as Mahamaya Kar v. Kishore Chang (1) relied on by the District Judge in the Court below has no application here, because there is no finding that it is a device to evade section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The tenancy being created before the Bengal Tenancy Act, it was competent to the parties to make any arrangement as to the amount of rent. See Romesh Chandra Biswas v. Ghulam Nabi Fakir (2), Ram Doyal Das v. Kamala Priya Debya (3), Kalis Chandra Saha v. Darbaria Sheik (4) and Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Durga Sundari Dasya (5). If there was an agreement between the parties settling rent at a time when it was competent to settle that rent and the parties intended that it should come into operation, there is no bar to the right of the landlord to realise that rent. But if the tenants thought that it should not be realised from them, then and then only the tenants should not be compelled to pay the higher rent.

[BEACHCROFT, J.—That rent was not paid for 30 years.]

There is no finding that the nature of the kabuliyats was explained or understood by the tenants. There is no such defence that the land was not such as would entitle the landlord to claim rent at Rs. 37-1-0. The terms of the two kabuliyats are the same.

Ram Doyal Das v. Kamala Priya Debya (3) is in my favour.

In Romesh Chandra Biswas v. Ghulam Nabi Fakir (2) where the tenants did not set up that the kabuliyat was not intended to be acted upon, it was held that section 29 of Bengal Tenancy Act was no bar to the rate claimed.

In Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Durga Sundari Dasya (5) a portion was kept in abeyance for some time.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—By the kabuliyat of 1287 the tenants agreed to pay a rent of Rs. 37-1-0 per annum subject to a hajat or deduction of Rs. 21-10-0. The rent actually payable was, therefore, Rs. 15-7-0. The kabuliyat contains the following clause: "If after the expiry of the term I do not within a year deliver a fresh dowl kabuliyat for the whole amount inclusive of the sum kept in abeyance, I shall pay Rs. 37-1-0, being the full amount of actual rent inclusive of the sum kept in abeyance." That clause is rather in the nature of a threat that rent at the full nominal rate would be levied in case the tenants did not execute a kabuliyat within a year after the expiry of the term, which was six years. The tenants, however, seem to have continued to pay rent at the rate of Rs. 15-7 a year and no further kabuliyat seems to have been executed till the year 1311. The kabuliyat then executed contains a similar provision as to rent, except that the amount of the deduction was diminished by 4 annas and the amount of the rent payable was increased by the same sum. The kabuliyat in this case contains this clause towards the end: "After the expiry of the said term I shall pay according to the above-mentioned arrangement the sum of Rs. 37-1-0, being the full amount of the actual rent inclusive of the rent kept in abeyance." Acting presumably upon this clause, the plaintiffs have brought the present suit, claiming rent in respect of a period subsequent to the expiry of the term at the full rate without any deduction, the tenants having paid up to the end of 1316, first at the rate of Rs. 15-7-0 and then at the rate of Rs. 15-11-0. The Courts below have held that the claim for rent at the higher rate is inadmissible. The only ground on which these judgments are attacked is that neither Court has expressly found that the arrangement with regard to the deduction to be allowed was a device to evade the provisions of section 29, Bengal Tenancy Act. The District Judge, however, has referred to the case of Mahamaya Kar v. Kishore Chang (1) and the only reason why he has not expressly found that the provisions of the law are being evaded is apparently that he considered the facts to be too clear to admit of any doubt. The facts of the present case are stronger than those of the case to which the learned District Judge has referred. No doubt there are a number of decisions relating to contracts more or less like the present. No doubt also each case must depend upon its own facts, and it would be better in all such cases for the lower Courts to record an express finding one way or the other, whether or not the agreement is a device to evade the Statute. It would be better that they should do so, if only for the purpose of saving the parties from the expense of appealing as also in cases near the line from the additional expense of a remand. We see no reason here for disturbing the concurrent judgments of the lower Courts and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

BEACHCROFT, J.—I agree.

NAURATAN LAL—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182—"Where there has been an appeal," meaning of—"Review of judgment," whether includes application for re-hearing of suit dismissed for default.

The words "where there has been an appeal" in clause 2 of the last column of Article 182 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act mean where there has been an appeal against a decree in the suit and cannot be held to include an appeal against an order made on an application to set aside that decree. [p. 576, cols. 1 & 2.]

Clause 3 in the third colum of Article 182 of the Limitation Act does not apply where an application for a re-hearing or review has been dismissed. The intention of the Legislature was to allow further time to a holder of a decree or order for costs where there has been an application for review which has been heard and a fresh decision has been pronounced, not to allow further time where an application for re-hearing or review has been put forward on untenable grounds and has consequently been rejected or dismissed. [p. 576, col. 2.]

Quære.—Whether the words "review of judgment" in clause 3 of Article 182 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act cover an application for re-hearing of a suit dismissed for default.

RAI BRIJRAJ v. NAURATAN LAL.

Miscellaneous civil appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Patna, dated the 20th September 1916.

Messrs. Mustafa Khan, Banwari Lal and Purnendu Narain Sinha, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Ganesh Dutt Singh and Gangadhar Dass, for the Respondent.

CHAMIER, C. J.—The facts of this case are as follows: There was a suit for a declaration which was dismissed for default on November 15th, 1912, and costs amounting to Rs. 642-11-0 were awarded to the present respondent. There was an application to set aside the dismissal for default, which was dismissed on June 17th, 1913, and costs amounting to Rs. 82-7-3 were awarded to the present respondent. Then there was an appeal against the order rejecting the last-mentioned application, which was dismissed on November 30th, 1914, and costs amounting to Rs. 132 2-3 were awarded to the present respondent. Lastly, there was an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, which was dismissed on December 6th, 1915, and costs amounting to Rs. 80 were awarded to the present respondent. An application was made by the respondent for recovery of the costs awarded to him under the decree and the three orders mentioned above. This application for execution was presented on April 11th, 1916. There can be no doubt that the application was made within time as regards all the sums, except the first mentioned sum of Rs. 642-11-0. The Court below has held that the application was made within time with regard to that sum also, and the question which we have to decide in this appeal is whether the application is barred as regards the first mentioned sum. The Subordinate Judge relied on the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Lutful Huq v. Sumbhudin Patluck (1). That decision can no longer be accepted in view of the later decision of the Bombay High Court in Jivaji v. Ramchandra (2) and the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Baikunta Nath Mittra v. Aughore Nath Bose (3) and other cases. It is now settled that the words "where there has been an appeal" in the last column of Article 182 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act mean where there has been an appeal against a decree in the suit, and cannot be held to include an appeal against an order made on an application to set aside that decree. The learned Vakil for the respondent frankly admits that the authorities on this point are against him, but he contends that the case is covered by clause (3) in the third column of Article 182. He maintains that the application to set aside the dismissal of the suit for default was a review of judgment within the meaning of clause (3). There is no doubt authority in favour of the contention that the words "review of judgment" are not intended to be restricted only to a review strictly so called in the Code of Civil Procedure. But this will not avail the respondent for it has also been held that clause (3) of Article 182 does not apply where an application for a re-hearing or review has been dismissed [see Kurupam Zamindar v. Sadasiva (4)]. The intention of the Legislature seems to have been to allow further time to a holder of a decree or order for costs where there has been an application for review which has been heard and a fresh decision has been pronounced, not to allow further time where an application for re-hearing or review has been put forward on untenable grounds and has consequently been rejected or dismissed. Personally I am disposed to doubt whether the words "review of judgment" were intended to cover an application for re-hearing of a suit dismissed for default, but assuming that the words were intended to cover such a case I am of opinion that in the case before us there was no decision passed on the review within the meaning of clause (3) in the third column of Article 182 in the First Schedule of the Limitation Act. For these reasons I am of opinion that the application for execution was barred by limitation as regards the sum of Rs. 642-11-0. I would allow this appeal and modify the order of the Court below accordingly.

CRIMINAL APPLICATION FOR REVISION No. 310 OF 1917.

October 5, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Justice Heaton and Mr. Justice Shah.

In re PARVATRAO MHASKOJIRAO—APPLICANT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195 (6)—Sanction to prosecute confirmed on appeal—Revision summarily rejected by High Court—Period of six months, commencement of.

The period of six months, during which a sanction to prosecute remains in force under clause (6) of section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, begins to run either from the time the original sanction was given or from the date of some subsequent order made by a competent Court which confirms the giving of the sanction or itself specifically gives a sanction. An order of the High Court summarily rejecting an application in revision does not approve or confirm the order of the Court below and therefore does not furnish a starting point for the period of six months to run from. [p. 577, col. 2; p. 578, col. 2.]

Criminal application for revision from an order passed by the Special First Class Magistrate, Malegaon.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. S. Rao (with him Mr. S. M. Varde), for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—This application raises a point of difficulty about which there has been—and perhaps is likely to be—difference of opinion. A sanction to prosecute was given under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code and an appeal against the sanction was made to the Superior Court and that appeal was dismissed. Then the applicant approached the High Court in its revisional powers asking it to interfere with the sanction and the High Court summarily rejected the application. Originally the sanction had been given on the 23rd of July 1916 and the order of the High Court was made on the 1st of February 1917. By this time, therefore, more than six months had elapsed since the date when the sanction was given by the Original Court. But a further delay ensued. It was not until the 10th of July 1917, more than six months after the order of the Appellate Court confirming the sanction and more than five months after the High Court had refused to interfere, that the complaint was presented to the Magistrate by the person who had obtained the sanction. The accused person, i. e., the applicant, then contended that the sanction by that time was spent in consequence of the latter part of clause (6) of section 195, which says: "No sanction shall remain in force for more than six months from the date on which it was given." The applicant urged this objection before the Magistrate who considered it and wrote a judgment disposing of it. He thought that the words which I have quoted must be construed so as to give the complainant six months from the date of the order of the High Court.

I think the Magistrate was wrong. The matter presents difficulties in two phases. The first is whether the six months begin to run from the date of the order of the Appellate Court where there has been an appeal. For the moment I will assume that it is so. Then the second phase which is to be considered is this: does the period of six months similarly run from the date of the order of the High Court when there is a revisional application made to the High Court and that application is summarily rejected?

As regards the second phase of the case I do not myself feel any doubt. It is quite clear to my mind that an order by the High Court summarily rejecting an application such as was made in this case does not constitute a date from which the period of six months begins to run. My reason for so thinking is this: The words which I have already quoted and the relevant words of the rest of section 195 show conclusively to my mind that the six months must run from either the time the original sanction was given or from the date of some subsequent order made by a competent Court which confirms the giving of the sanction or itself specifically gives a sanction. In other words, there must be an order which definitely either approves and confirms or itself gives a sanction. But, as I understand, an order of this Court summarily rejecting an application in revision does not approve or confirm the order of the Court below. It is a refusal of the High Court to interfere and nothing more. In practice—and here I am speaking from a good many years' experience of this Court—a great many revisional applications are summarily rejected, certainly not because this Court affirms or even approves the order against which the application in revision is directed, but because this Court will not permit the law as to appeals to be violated. That law would be most seriously violated, in my opinion, if this Court exercised its revisional powers in such a way as to permit every applicant to obtain from this Court a consideration of the merits of his case and a decision of this Court upon those merits. The reason is that such a method would be to introduce a most elaborate and comprehensive system of what would in reality be appeals where the Criminal Procedure Code declares that no appeal shall be allowed. I am, therefore, satisfied that in this case the Magistrate's order is wrong, because the latest order from which the period of six months could run is either the original order or the order in appeal. This sanction is long since spent and cannot be made the basis of a prosecution.

I think, therefore, that the correct order for the Magistrate now to make is to dismiss the complaint before him.

SHAH, J.—In this case the original sanction was granted by the trial Court on the 24th of July 1916. The application made to the District Court of Poona for the revocation of that sanction was dismissed on the 23rd of October 1916. Against that order there was an application to this Court in revision, which was summarily rejected on the 1st of February 1917, on the main point as to the revocation of the sanction, and a Rule was granted only for the limited purpose of considering the order made by the lower Courts as to costs. The subsequent order on this revisional application was made on the 4th April 1917. We are not concerned now with that order. The present complaint was filed on the 10th of July 1917.

The point that arises on the present application is whether the complaint made on the sanction thus granted can be entertained or, in other words, whether the sanction had not become inoperative at the date of the complaint in consequence of the lapse of time. Undoubtedly the complaint was made more than six months after the date of the original sanction given by the trial Court. It was also made more than six months after the order was made by the District Court of Poona. But it is within six months from the date of order of this Court rejecting the application on the main point.

The point urged on behalf of the applicant is that the date contemplated by section 195, clause (6), of the Criminal Procedure Code is the date on which the sanction is given, i. e., in this case the date on which it was granted by the trial Court, and that the order made by the District Court of Poona in October 1916 was merely an order refusing to revoke the sanction granted by the trial Court. It is not necessary for the purposes of this application to express any opinion as to whether the date mentioned in clause (6) is the date of the original sanction or the date of the order of the District Court of Poona, as the complaint was filed more than six months after either of these dates. It seems to me that there is considerable force in the argument urged on behalf of the applicant that the word "given" must refer either to the sanction given by a Court of the first instance or to a sanction granted by the Superior Court though refused by the Subordinate Court in the first instance and that it cannot refer to an order by the Superior Court refusing to revoke a sanction granted by the Subordinate Court. It is not necessary, however, to decide the point in this case. It is clear that the mere fact that there was an application in revision made to this Court and that it was rejected on the 1st of February 1917 does not give the present complainant a fresh starting point for the six months provided in sub-clause (6) of section 195. I do not think that the provision in section 195, sub-clause (6), as to the six months from the date on which the sanction is given can apply to an order made by the High Court in revision under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code rejecting the application. The sanction "given" must refer either to the sanction granted by the first Court or by the Superior Court in appeal. The question whether any order by the High Court on an application under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code for the exercise of the powers under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, made after issuing a Rule and after hearing both parties, will have the effect of making the time run from that date does not arise in this case, and I express no opinion on that point. We are only concerned with the case of an application in revision which is rejected summarily.

On behalf of the complainant, however, an oral application is made in the course of the argument that we should extend the time under the powers given to this Court under clause (6). But there is no affidavit explaining the delay; and there is no attempt made to show any good cause for the extension of time. I do not think that under the circumstances the time could be extended.

I am clearly of opinion that the sanction was not in force at the date of the complaint, and that the Magistrate cannot take any cognizance of the complaint.

I, therefore, agree that the Magistrate should now dismiss the complaint.

Complaint dismissed.

Press Act (I of 1910), s. 3—Press exempted from depositing security—Subsequent order requiring security, validity of—Procedure, proper.

An order under section 3 (2) of the Press Act can be passed only by the Local Government. [p. 579, col 2.]

The keeper of an old press on the passing of the Press Act made the necessary declaration but was exempted from depositing security under section 3 (1) of the Act. Subsequently the District Magistrate directed him to deposit security within fifteen days:

Held, (1) that the District Magistrate had no power to issue such an order; [p. 580, col. 1.]

(2) that the proper procedure for the District Magistrate was to issue a notice to the keeper of the press to show cause why the order exempting him from security made at the time of the filing of his declaration should not be cancelled or varied in such manner as may seem good to the District Magistrate. [p. 580, col. 1.]

Messrs. S. Sinha, Rajendra Prasad and Dhirendra Nath Dutta, for the Petitioner.

The Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case we are asked to interfere under section 107 of the Government of India Act of 1915. The facts briefly are that a press is owned by the petitioner and alleged by the petitioner to have been working since 1889. From 1889 to 1914 it appears to have worked without any such declaration as was required by section 4 of Act XXV of 1867, but on a notice being issued under Act I of 1910, he filed the necessary declaration on the 24th June 1914. At the time of filing that declaration no security was deposited. The proceedings in regard to this matter are not before us, and we are, therefore, not in a position to say whether or not reasons were then recorded for exempting the petitioner from depositing the security. The present proceedings were taken on account of the publication of two pamphlets, which in the opinion of the district authorities contained objectionable phrases likely to excite disaffection. On the 3rd April 1916 the petitioner appeared before the District Magistrate to show cause why he should not be called upon to give a security under section 3 of Act I of 1910. The terms of the notice served upon him are as follows:—

"Issue notice to proprietor of the Behar Angel Press to deposit Rs. 2,000 as security under section 3 of the Indian Press Act, 1910, within 15 days as he allowed such objectionable pamphlets to be printed in his press as Jivan Jagya and Swavalamban. If he fails to comply with the order he will be prosecuted under section 23 of the Act."

It is pointed out to us by the learned Counsel for the petitioner that if this is meant to be an order passed under section 3, clause 2, only the Local Government has power to make such an order. The matter is very much one of form We have not before us, as I have said, the previous proceedings under section 3, and it would undoubtedly have been better if the learned Magistrate had framed his notice so that it was clear that he was acting under section 3, clause 1, and proposing to cancel or vary the order made under the first part of that clause, and in cancelling or varying that order was calling upon the petitioner to show cause why he should not be ordered to make a substantial deposit. Inasmuch as great subsequent difficulty may arise in the matter of prosecutions under section 23 or proceedings in connection with the forfeiture of the deposit, we think it best to set aside the order made on the 17th April 1916 and to direct that the Magistrate start afresh with a simple order upon the petitioner to show cause why the order exempting him from security, made at the time of the filing of his declaration in June 1914, should not be cancelled and that order varied in such manner as may seem good to the District Magistrate.

Rule made absolute.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 430, essentials of —Diminishing supply of water used for agriculture—Prevention of waste and storage of water for sale, whether 'mischief'—Cutting bund erected on channel.

An offence under section 430 is committed when a person without any sort of right takes water to which another is entitled, whereby the latter is deprived of the full supply that he has a right to claim. Such taking, in the absence of a bona fide claim of right, evidences an intention to cause wrongful loss. [p. 581, col. 2.]

Neither the prevention of the water from running waste, nor the storing of it with the intention of selling it to other landowners makes the act of taking any the less an offence when deprivation is caused to the person legally entitled to the water. [p. 581, col. 1; p. 582, col. 1.]

The cutting of a bund erected on a channel, whereby a person is wrongfully deprived of the use of water, constitutes an offence under section 430 of the Penal Code. [p. 582, col. 1.]

Petition under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Palghat, in Criminal Appeal No. 51 of 1917, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the Stationary 2nd Class Magistrate, Palghat Taluq, in Calendar Case No. 15 of 1917.

Mr. P. S. Narayanaswami Aiyar, for the Respondent.

Mr. C. Narasimha Chariar, for the Crown.

ORDER.

NAPIER, J.—The accused were convicted by the Stationary 2nd Class Magistrate of Palghat under section 430, Indian Penal Code, and this conviction has been upheld on appeal. The facts found are that they entered on the lands of the complainant, cut three bunds which had been erected in a channel that runs through the complainant's land, with the result that the water in that channel ran down another channel off the complainant's land and was utilised by the 1st defendant for sale to ryots holding lands lower down. Dr. Swaminadhan applies to us to set aside the conviction and sentence on various grounds, the two chief grounds being that where water is in fact utilised for agricultural purposes and not allowed to run to waste, no offence under section 430, Indian Penal Code, is committed, the other, that even if it would have been an offence, if the complainant had intended to utilise the water for his own fields, it is no offence if the intention was to sell the use of it to the other persons. The first ground is one of importance, for it amounts to this, that the section is only intended to penalise the waste of water and not the deprivation of a person having the right to use it. The language of the section is as follows:—

"Whoever commits mischief by doing any act which causes, or which he knows to be likely to cause, a diminution of the supply of water for agricultural purposes, or for food or drink for human beings, or for animals which are property, or for cleanliness or for carrying on any manufacture, ..."

The section begins by saying 'whoever commits mischief' and it is, therefore, unnecessary to ascertain from section 425 what 'mischief' is. Section 425, Indian Penal Code, is as follows:—

"Whoever, with intent to cause, or knowing that he is likely to cause, wrongful loss or damage to the public or to any person, causes the destruction of any property, or any such change in any property or in the situation thereof as destroys or diminishes its value or utility, or affects it injuriously, commits 'mischief.' "

Now there cannot be any doubt that the removal of the bund is such a change in the situation of property as destroys its utility in a case where that bund has been erected for the purpose of holding up water, and that a person who so removes a bund must know that he is likely to cause wrongful loss to any person who is entitled to the use of that water. It has been found by a Civil Court that the complainant in this case is entitled to the use of the whole of the water in the channel in question, and that finding has been accepted by both the Magistrates. Prima facie, therefore, on the facts, an offence of mischief is made out, but it is argued that, there being no waste, there is no mischief under section 430. I see no reason why the Legislature should be supposed to have wished to import this limitation. Further, the language of the section is against it. The water referred to is not only for irrigation but is for other useful purposes, and I think that these clearly have reference to the actual utilisation of the particular water by particular persons and animals who are deprived of it by the mischief complained of. Such supply for drinking and for cleanliness is a common system in the Presidency. Again, with regard to 'any manufacture' it is impossible to argue that it means that a Court should have to find that no part of the water was used for any manufactory anywhere. Obviously it must mean the particular manufactory which was deprived of the water.

Turning to decisions, Dr. Swaminadhan was able to adduce one case which he claimed to be in support of his contention, Criminal Revision Case No. 134 of 1881, reported as Vattu Karan, In re (1). The passage in the judgment relied on is to this effect: "The act of the accused in diverting water to their own fields did not diminish or tend to diminish the usefulness of the water. It merely diverted it to the use of the defendants' fields instead of to that of the complainant." Taken apart from the facts of the case, this language seems to lend some support to the learned Counsel's contention. But the facts in that case were the channel was a Government channel and was not shown to be appropriated to the use of the complainant to the exclusion of the defendants through whose fields it passed. There was no evidence that any loss had been sustained by the complainant and as the sole right of the complainant was to have his accustomed supply from Government, it followed that the act of the accused in taking water, whether they had a right to do so against Government or not, did not cause wrongful loss to the complainant, and as it was utilised by the accused, did not cause wrongful loss to the public. This case is, therefore, no authority for the proposition contended for.

The leading case in our Court on section 430 is Ramakrishna Chetti v. Palaniandi Kudambar (2). That was a decision of the Full Court, which laid down as follows:— "It is not part of the definition of the offence that the act of the accused should be in common language a mere wanton act of waste. Under section 430, Indian Penal Code, the physical requisites of the act are the doing of the act which causes... or is likely to cause a diminution of supply. He also fulfils the mental requisites when he does this with intent to cause wrongful loss, and the intention is properly held to be such when he takes it without any sort of right." This case clearly establishes two propositions, that the taking of water, which can only mean taking without any sort of right, is within the section and that such taking evidences the intention to cause wrongful loss. This decision was applied in a case in Chengama Naidu v. Emperor (3), where the Court held that the petitioners in taking water in violation of the order as to turns issued by the Tahsildar, so as to cause a diminution of supply to other ryots, were guilty of an offence under section 430, Indian Penal Code. The same view was taken by the High Court of Calcutta in Emperor v. Sheik Arif (4). The accused in that case cut the embankment of a water channel in order to irrigate their own fields and thereby deprived the complainant, who owned a factory, of the use of water. One of the learned Judges held that an offence under section 430, Indian Penal Code, had clearly been committed; the other learned Judges had some doubts whether, in view of the claim of right, the matter should have been disposed of in the Criminal Court. He did not, however, dissent from the conviction under section 430, Indian Penal Code. Neither of the learned Judges had any doubt that, in the absence of a bona fide claim of right, the facts would constitute an offence under section 430, Indian Penal Code. The learned Counsel's contention, therefore, fails on this point.

The next point urged is that the water was not being supplied for agricultural purposes. I asked the learned Counsel if he would contend that water taken down a channel and stored in a tank was not supplied for agricultural purposes and he was not prepared to go to this length. The evidence of the complainant shows that he put up the bunds to store water for irrigating his own lands and for selling it to other landowners. This point, therefore, fails on the facts. But, even if the water had been stored for sale to the other landowners, I fail to see how it was not being supplied for agricultural purposes if those landowners used it for such purposes.

The petition fails on the point of law, but I think that the sentences are too severe. The fines will be reduced to one of Rs. 50 on the 1st accused, Rs. 100 on the second accused and Rs. 5 each on accused Nos. 3, 4and 5, who are coolies.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—I agree.

Conviction affirmed;
Sentence reduced.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Sanction to prosecute—Appeal, temporary dismissal of, legality of—Procedure.

Accused preferred a charge under section 406 of the Penal Code against one B. which was dismissed. B. then applied for sanction to prosecute accused for perjury, but that application was rejected. In the meantime accused brought a civil suit to recover the sum of money in respect of which he had preferred the charge in the Criminal Court. That suit was pending, when B. appealed to the District Magistrate against the order refusing sanction to prosecute. The latter dismissed the appeal till the decision of the civil suit, but after its determination granted the sanction:

Held, (1) that the order of the District Magistrate granting sanction was illegal, inasmuch as the Magistrate became functus officio when he passed his order dismissing the appeal, there being no such thing known to law as a temporary dismissal of an appeal; [p. 583, col. 1.]

(2) that the proper procedure for the District Magistrate would have been to have postponed the decision of the appeal till the decision of the civil suit. [p 583, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The applicant in this case on the first of September 1916 preferred a charge under section 406 of the Indian Penal Code against Bindraban in a Criminal Court. He was given sufficient opportunity of producing preliminary evidence but he failed to do so and finally in the beginning of January the complaint was dismissed. He at once put in a fresh complaint and finally the case was tried by a Bench of Honorary Magistrates, who dismissed it again in the presence of the accused. Bindraban then applied to the Bench for sanction to prosecute Lachhmi Narain for the offence of perjury. The Bench of Magistrates did not think it advisable to grant sanction and rejected the application. In the meantime Lachhmi Narain had brought a suit in the Civil Court to recover the sum of money in respect of which he had preferred the charge in the Criminal Court. That suit was pending when Bindraban appealed to the District Magistrate against the order of the Bench refusing sanction to prosecute. The District Magistrate wrote a strange order. It runs as follows:—"The appellant admits that the respondent has got a civil suit now pending to recover the money, he alleges he paid to appellant, about which he filed his complaint, under section 406 of the Indian Penal Code, which was dismissed. It would be obviously improper to grant sanction to a prosecution for a false case at this stage. If, when the civil suit is finished, the appellant still thinks that he has good ground for asking for a prosecution, he can apply again to this Court for a revision of the lower Court's order. Till that time this appeal stands dismissed." On the 14th of September 1917, Bindraban again applied to the District Magistrate, the civil suit in the meantime having come to an end. It had been dismissed and he furnished the Court with copies of the judgments of the first Court and the Appellate Court in that suit. Notice was issued by the District Magistrate to Lachhmi Narain and then the District Magistrate passed the following order:—"Having now seen the judgments of the lower and Appellate Civil Courts in this matter, in both of which Courts the respondent in this case entirely failed to substantiate his claim, I think this is a proper case in which to grant sanction to prosecute, as apart from the personal enmities between the parties, the interest of the state demands that such prosecutions, on biased and unreliable evidence, should be stopped. I set aside the order of the lower Court and grant the sanction asked for." Lachhmi Narain has come to this Court in revision against this latter order. Such things as temporary dismissals of appeals are unknown to law and so far as the appeal is concerned, practically the District Magistrate was functus officio when he passed his order of the 22nd of September. His proper course would have been to have postponed the decision of the appeal until the decision of the civil suit. The case, however, appears to be one in which some action might be taken as regards Lachhmi Narain and his witnesses but in which the prosecution should not be left in the hands of a private person, as it would simply be used as a weapon of extortion. I, therefore, allow this application and set aside the order of the District Magistrate of the 22nd of September 1917. I direct the record to be returned to the Magistrate with direction that, if he thinks fit, he may take up the case suo motu and issue notice and, if necessary, direct the prosecution of Lachhmi Narain and his witnesses so as not to leave the prosecution in the hands of a private person. The District Magistrate will understand that I do not seek to fetter his discretion in any way.

Order set aside.

Section 345 of the Criminal Procedure Code deals only with the lawful compounding of offences. The principles which apply to the offence also apply to the exception. [p. 586, col. 2.]

The section is not limited to acts done in Court or to cases in which the parties continue to be of the same mind until the case comes on for further hearing before the Court. Once a composition has been effected, the matter is at an end and the person injured cannot effectively resile from the agreement. If he chooses to do so, it is for the Court to enquire into the accused's allegation that the offence was compounded out of Court and to direct an acquittal under the section if it so finds. [p. 586, col. 1: p. 584, cols 1 & 2.]

A composition made before the filing of a complaint in Court is covered by the provisions of section 345, the offence being complete when the acts constituting it have been committed apart from whether any complaint or charge has been laid before the Court or not. [585, col. 1; p. 586, col. 2.]

The word 'accused' in paragraph 6 of the section only describes the character of the person accused of the offence at the time of the trial when the question of the effect of the composition is under consideration. [p. 585, col. 1.]

To operate as an acquittal, the compounding must have been completed and any incomplete agreement would not amount to an acquittal within the meaning of the law. [p. 586, col. 2.]

ORDER.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—This is an application to revise an order of acquittal passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate in appeal in a case in which the accused were convicted by a 2nd Class Magistrate of offences under sections 147, 355 and 323 of the Indian Penal Code. The Appellate Magistrate found that the charge of rioting could not be sustained upon the evidence and thereupon acquitted the accused of that offence. That acquittal must, in my opinion, stand, as no sufficient reason has been made out for interference with that part of the order of the Appellate Magistrate. He has acquitted the accused of charges under sections 323 and 355, on the ground that there had been a valid composition of those offences within the meaning of section 345, Criminal Procedure Code, before the complainant laid the charge in Court. There are two questions of law which arise in connection with this matter. First of all, a doubt has been expressed by Oldfield, J., who admitted this application, with regard to a decision of mine in Mahomed Kanni v. Pattani Inayathulla Sahib (1), in which it was laid down that it was not necessary for section 345, Criminal Procedure Code, to operate that the complainant, after the composition has been arrived at, should still be of the same mind and join the accused in asking the Court that the case should be dismissed as there has been a valid composition. Once there has been a composition of an offence compoundable under the Criminal Procedure Code, the matter is at an end and the person injured cannot afterwards effectively resile from the agreement If he chooses to do so, it is for the Court to enquire into the allegation of the accused that the offence was compounded out of Court and if it finds that it was so compounded, to acquit the accused under the provisions of section 345. In holding this view I followed a ruling of the Calcutta High Court in Murray v. Queen-Empress (2). There is also another ruling of the same Court, Yusum Bewa v. Bechu Bewa (3), which proceeds upon the same principle. Both the learned Public Prosecutor and the learned Counsel who appeared for the petitioner urged no arguments against the decision in Mahomed Kanni v. Pattani Inayathulla Sahib (1) and on giving the question my best consideration again, I do not find any sufficient reasons for taking a different view.

The next point of law that has been discussed relates to the question whether a composition, which takes place before any complaint has been laid in Court by the person injured, is covered by the provisions of section 345. In its first part, the section says that the offences described in the table attached, may be compounded by the persons mentioned in the 3rd column of the table. Looking at the 3rd column, we find that the persons who can compound these offences are, generally speaking, the persons injured and not a person who has already laid a charge in Court. When the person injured has entered into a composition, that composition is complete, and paragraph 6 of the section lays down what the effect of such a composition is. It says that "the composition of these offences under this section shall have the effect of an acquittal of the accused." It is argued that the use of the words 'offence' and 'accused' shows that the composition which is contemplated is one arrived at after a complaint has been laid and there is an accused person before the Court. I cannot accept this argument as at all sound. An offence is complete when the acts constituting it have been committed, apart from whether any complaint or charge has been laid before the Court or not. The allusion to 'the accused' in paragraph 6 of section 345 only describes his character at the time of the trial when the question of the effect of the composition is under consideration. As regards certain classes of offences which may be compounded, the Legislature provides that they may be compounded only with the permission of the Court. In those cases, the operation of the composition is necessarily suspended until the Court sanctions it. But in the other cases, no such permission is needed and no reason is apparent to me or has been suggested why the Legislature, having permitted certain classes of offences to be compounded by the parties themselves without any reference to Court, should insist that that composition should be arrived at after the person alleged to have committed the offence has been brought before the Court. In the absence of clear language showing that that was the intention of the Legislature, I should not be prepared to impute to it any such intention. I think it is quite clear upon the interpretation of section 345 that the contention on behalf of the complainant on this point cannot be sustained. It is unnecessary, therefore, to discuss the English Law on the subject to which some reference has been made at the Bar. But I may point out that so far as I have been able to go into the matter, the case of Keir v. Leeman (4) supports the view which I have indicated as the one adopted in the Criminal Prosedure Code rather than otherwise. This was a judgment of Lord Denman, C. J., and he after reviewing the cases at some length laid down the following proposition on the subject of compromise of offences:—"We shall probably be safe in laying it down that the law will permit a compromise of all offences, though made the subject of a criminal prosecution, for which offences the injured party might sue and recover damages in an action. It is often the only manner in which he can obtain redress. But, if the offence is of a public nature, no agreement can be valid that is founded on the consideration of stifling a prosecution for it." The exact point we have to consider here was not before the learned Judges in that case, but the proposition seems to imply that a composition of an offence of a particular description would not be the less valid because it took place before any complaint was laid in Court. Then the exception to section 214 of the Penal Code exempts from the provisions of sections 213 and 214 cases of compounding offences which may be lawfully compounded. If the contention submitted on behalf of the prosecution in this case were sound, the compounding of particular offences dealt with under sections, 213 and 214, Indian Penal Code, would be no offence if the compounding took place before the charge was laid. It seems to me that this would be an untenable proposition.

On the facts, however, of this case, I am not satisfied that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate "quite clearly realised whether there was a completed agreement or composition" within the meaning of section 345, Criminal Procedure Code. It appears that there was an arbitration and the arbitrator decided after some parley that accused No. 1 was to pay to the complainant Rs 300. It is argued on behalf of the complainant that he did not accept this composition and had not even agreed to the arbitration. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate does not seem to have arrived at a clear conclusion on these points. A further question arises as to whether the Rs. 300 was to be actually paid before there was any completed composition within the meaning of section 345; or whether the complainant was satisfied with the promise of the accused to pay that amount. The amount was not actually paid before the complaint was lodged in Court. Unless it is found that the compounding was completed before the complaint was made, any incomplete agreement would not amount to an actual acquittal within the meaning of the law. I may say, speaking for myself, that I should ordinarily be very reluctant to interfere in a case of this nature. But there is no finding of the Appellate Magistrate on the subject of the charges under sections 323 and 355 of the Penal Code, the acquittal of the accused of these charges being based merely on an alleged composition. The facts found are not enough to show that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had in this connection quite clear before his mind's eye the elements which would be necessary for a complete and valid composition. I would, therefore, set aside the order acquitting the accused of the charges under sections 323 and 355 of the Penal Code and remit the appeal to be re-heard and disposed of by the Appellate Magistrate on these charges in the light of the above observations.

NAPIER, J.—I agree and wish to add only a few words. With regard to the decision reported as Mahomed Kanni v. Pattani Inayathulla Sahib (1) which has been referred to in the admission order, I desire to say that I am in entire accord with it. It lays down that the composition referred to in section 345, Criminal Procedure Code, is not limited to acts done in Court nor to cases in which the parties continue to be of the same mind until the case comes on for further hearing before the Court: that view seems to me to be entirely warranted by the language of the section. The sole question to be ascertained is whether there was a contract and once that has been ascertained, there is nothing on principle which allows a party to resile from his contract and lay a charge which he had agreed for consideration not to lay. A further question has been argued whether such a composition can be made before any complaint has been made to a Magistrate or any proceeding taken in Court. Considerable stress has been laid on the words "offence" and "accused" in the section; and the learned Public Prosecutor has pointed out that it must be difficult to say whether a composition was lawful or unlawful unless the facts had been considered by the Court; the difficulty will arise, however, in the actual offence compounded. It is clear from the very earliest authorit es that the offence of compounding a felony could be committed before any charge had been laid. With reference to compounding theft, the language of Lord Coke is quoted in Reg. v. Burgess (5), which language is reproduced in Archibold's 'Pleading and Evidence in Criminal Cases' in the section dealing with compounding offences. The offence known as theft bote is committed "where the owner not only knows of the felony, but taketh of the thief his goods again or amends for the same to favour or maintain him, that is, not to prosecute him to the intent that he may escape." It is reproduced by Blackstone in his Commentaries as follows: "the offence of theft bote which is where the the party robbed not only knows the felon but also takes his goods again or other amends upon agreement not to prosecute." This is the language of the earliest authorities and there cannot be the slightest doubt that the offence of illegal compounding is one that can be committed in relation to a matter which has not been brought before the Court. Now the connection between illegal compounding and legal compounding is very close, because in the Penal Code the exception to section 214 says that "the provisions of sections 213 and 214 do not extend to any case in which the offence may lawfully be compounded." Of course lawful compounding is that which is dealt with under section 345, Criminal Procedure Code. So the principles which apply to the offence must necessarily apply to the exception. I am, therefore, satisfied that a composition made to prevent a case going into a Court is just as much a composition under section 345 as one made after the case has come into Court. As my learned brother has pointed out, it will have no effect as a plea in bar of conviction in cases covered by clause (2) unless the Court has given its sanction. But where a composition has been made out of Court and at a certain stage in the proceedings the Court gives the sanction required by clause (2), then it is a good composition.

On the facts of this case, it seems to me that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate has entirely misunderstood the alleged position. He seems to have thought that because P. W. No. 2 representing P. W. No. 1 agreed to abide by the decision of the arbitrators and there was a decision of a certain sort, that amounted necessarily to a contract not to prosecute. Speaking for myself, I think that the evidence is perfectly clear on that point: but I do not wish to decide this case on a question of evidence, because we are sitting in revision of an order of acquittal. What the Sub-Divisional Magistrate should have done was to examine the evidence and see whether the panchayatdars decided that the complainant was to accept the promise of the accused to pay or whether the decision of the panchayatdars was that if the accused did pay, no complaint should be laid.

I agree with my learned brother that this is a matter to which the Sub-Divisional Magistrate must direct his attention. I agree with the order proposed.

Order set aside; Case remitted.

Criminal appeal from an order of the Assistant Sessions Judge, Saran, dated the 3rd July 1917.

Mr. S. Sinha, for the Appellant.

Mr. Fakhruddin (Government Pleader), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

ATKINSON, J.—In this Criminal Appeal No. 172 of 1917 a very ingenious point has been taken by Mr. Sinha on behalf of the accused person Balak Singh, who was charged and convicted under sectin 467 of the Indian Penal Code of forgery, in respect of a handnote for a sum of Rs. 200. The trial of the accused was fixed for a certain date when only one duly qualified assessor was present in Court and capable of acting as such; whereupon the Judge ordered any other person who happened to be present in Court, whether on the official list of assessors or not, should be required to act as an assessor. A certain gentleman who was present in Court was brought before the Judge and was compelled, though not an official assessor, to act as an assessor. The person who acted as such assessor was not a person summoned or chosen from among the official list of persons appointed to act as assessors for the year 1917 prepared by the District Magistrate in conjunction with the District Judge. The trial started thus with only one person as an official assessor and the trial proceeded and terminated with only one person presuming to act as an assessor.

It is quite clear that a trial instituted in such a form is clearly illegal. Section 284 provides that "when the trial is to be held with the aid of assessors, two or more shall be chosen, as the Judge thinks fit, from the persons summoned to act as such."

Now clearly under the provisions of section 284 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the trial was not valid; and Mr. Fakhruddin on behalf of the Crown frankly admits that only one person acted as assessor throughout the trial and that the other person who purported to act as an assessor was not upon the official list of persons appointed for the year 19 7, though he had been an assessor in the previous year and was not summoned to act as such for the year 1917.

Mr. Fakhruddin attempted to rely upon section 285. Obviously section 285 has no application to the facts of the present case. That section provides that if in the course of a trial with the aid of assessors, at any time before the finding, any assessor is from sufficient cause prevented from attending throughout the trial, or absents himself, and it is not practicable to enforce his attendance, then the trial may proceed with one assessor. Here the trial proceeded with only one official assessor, and not with two duly qualified assessors, hence the trial was utterly abortive and contrary to law. The cases of Khub Singh v. Emperor (1) and Man Singh v. Emperor (2) are authorities on the point and clearly govern the case. Mr. Fakhruddin does not seem to controvert the facts stated by Mr. Sinha and upon the facts as stated it is quite clear that the conviction of Balak Singh, the petitioner, cannot stand. We think that the proper order that we should make is that the conviction and sentence pronounced by the Assistant Sessions Judge on the 3rd July 1971 be quashed and that the conviction and sentence be set aside, and we direct that the District Magistrate shall take such steps as he may be advised to try Balak Singh again on the charge of forgery.

Opium Act (I of 1878), s 9—Illegal possession of opium—Joint possession—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 25—Excise Officer, whether Police Officer—Confession to Excise Officer, admissibility of.

A person found in possession of a quantity of opium in excess of what he can lawfully possess for his own personal use is guilty of an offence under section 9 of the Opium Act, and the fact that he used to give opium to the other members of his family to eat does not make them joint possessors of the opium with him. [p. 589, col. 1.]

An Excise Inspector is not a Police Officer, and, therefore, a confession made to him is admissible in evidence against the accused. [p. 588, col. 2.]

Appeal from the order of the Magistrate, First Class, Ferozepore, dated the 18th December 1915.

Mr. C. Beuan Petman, Government Advocate, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the Local Government under section 417, Criminal Procedure Code. The respondent Wazir Singh was sent up for trial under section 9 of Act I of 1878 (Opium Act) upon a charge of having in his possession 7 tolas 1½ mashas of opium, which was discovered in an almirah in his house on the 5th December 1915. He was acquitted by the Magistrate on the ground that the opium in question was owned jointly by him and the other members of his family consisting of his father and his minor sons.

It is contended by the learned Government Advocate that the order of acquittal is erroneous and must be set aside, and in support of his contention he has cited Queen-Empress v. Salaru (1), Crown v. Sadiq (2) and King-Emperor v. Buta Singh (3). On the strength of these authorities he argues that the respondent is guilty of the offence with which he was charged in the Magistrate's Court, because he was found in possession of a quantity of opium in excess of what he could lawfully possess for his own personal use, it being perfectly immaterial whether other alleged members of the family used to consume opium along with the respondent or not.

The record shows that the respondent admitted before the Excise Inspector that the opium found in his almirah belonged to him, and since the Excise Inspector is not a Police Officer, this statement, which amounts to a confession in this case, is admissible against him. Apart from this confession, the fact of the respondent being in possession of the opium is fully proved and his defence that he was in joint possession of it on behalf of his father and his two minor sons cannot be accepted as sufficient in view of the principle laid down in the decisions mentioned above. It is obvious that the respondent's minor children could not have been in joint possession of the opium with him, and it is equally clear that his father who, as the Magistrate says, is an old man of about ninety and half witted, could not possess the opium jointly with the respondent. The mere fact that the respondent gave opium to his father and his children to eat is of itself insufficient to show that he alone was not in possession of the quantity discovered in his almirah.

Following the principle laid down in the above-mentioned decisions, we accept this appeal and setting aside the order of acquittal convict the respondent of an offence under section 9 of the Opium Act and sentence him to one month's rigorous imprisonment.

Appeal accepted.

Criminal Revision against an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Arrah, dated the 6th June 1917.

Mr. Athar Hussain, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Manohar Lal, (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this case to set aside an order made under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code restraining the petitioners Rashbehari Singh and others from entering upon land of which they were formerly lessees under the Collector. This land has now been settled by the Collector with another party. On the 2:th February 1917 a similar order was made against these same petitioners. That order came before this Court in review and by the decision of Mr. Justice Mullick, dated the 24th April 1917, it was held that there had not been any illegal assumption of jurisdiction nor an excess of jurisdiction on the part of the Deputy Magistrate in issuing the order. The application was, therefore, rejected. That order, being dated 28th February 1917, expired on the 28th April last; the order now complained of was issued on the 6th of June and expired to-day. We are asked to set it aside on the ground that it was in fact a continuation of the first order and that under the terms of section 144 itself any continuation of an order beyond a period of two months requires the sanction of the Local Government. The ground upon which this fresh order was issued was that the second party insisted upon going and ploughing the land in question in spite of their having been previously restrained under section 144. The reason for which they insisted upon ploughing the land is that they were accused in a criminal case of rioting with regard to crops cut from the land on the 25th February and have been acquitted upon that charge on the ground that they grew those crops and were entitled to take them away. It is much to be regretted that this case did not come before us earlier. We view with disapproval the use of section 144 for anything of the nature of a permanent expedient. It is idle to suggest that the Legislature intended that a man may be restrained once under section 144, and that then if he states his intention of again doing the same thing a further order may be made against him. The logical conclusion to such a suggestion would be that if a Magistrate chooses to allow one day to elapse between the expiry of one order and the issue of another he is at liberty to continue ad libitum to extend an injunction under section 144 without the sanction of the Local Government.

In the case before us there does not seem to have been any deliberate intention to usurp jurisdiction. Inasmuch as the order has this day expired, we do not think it necessary to set it aside or to say more than we have done. We would ask the District Magistrate himself to give his attention to this matter and to look into the real rights of the parties. If the applicants are likely to commit a breach of the peace and are clearly in the wrong, the proper course is to take proceedings under section 107. This has been so frequently said in the Calcutta Court that we should have thought it was not necessary to repeat it. It does seem necessary, however, and we wish it to be understood that if this order is again repeated, the Court will have no hesitation in setting it aside.

The Hon'ble Mr. Jinnah and Mr. Vellani, (with them Mr. Ratanlal Ranchhoddas), for the Applicants.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—In this case certain persons were convicted under section 188 of the Indian Penal Code for disobeying an order promulgated by the District Magistrate of Kanara under section 44 of the Bombay District Police Act. The order had reference to the ensuing Laxmi worship and Kartik festivals and it provided as follows: "No one shall obstruct religious or ceremonial processions passing with music in front of any Masjid within the Municipal limits of the Haliyal town." The accused did in fact obstruct a Hindu procession passing a mosque with music. It has, therefore, been found that they disobeyed a lawful order and, therefore, are guilty of an offence under section 188, and the Sessions Judge in appeal upheld these convictions. The applicants have come to us in revision.

On reading the judgments of the lower Courts I think that they found with unmistakable clearness that there was an obstruction of the procession and, therefore, disobedience of the order. It has been contended that even on the facts found by the Magistrate and the Judge there was not an obstruction within the meaning of the section. That argument, however, does not appeal to me, and the only point of genuine importance in the case, I think, is a different matter altogether. It is whether the order made by the District Magistrate was or was not a lawful order. It is a very carefully drafted order. It sets out in a series of paragraphs the occurrences which had led to the order, its purpose and the particular occasion as to which it was to apply. But what is called the operative part of the order is as I have already quoted, and it is this operative part of the order which has been subjected to so much criticism. The first criticism is this: the order says:—"No one shall obstruct" instead of providing as section 44 requires that the order shall relate to certain persons or parties, it not being contemplated by section 44, it is argued, that an order should be issued in such general terms. The second criticism is that there is no time limit to the order, and that whereas section 44 only admits of an order relating to an actual or intended occurrence, the order in fact (that is, the operative portion taken by itself) is purely general and does not mention any actual or intended occurrence. This criticism is perfectly legitimate, but it has failed to persuade me that the order is not a valid order, because when I take it as a whole and read the whole of it, I do not feel any doubt whatever that the order relates to the Hindus and Musalmans of the Halyal town as regards persons and to the ensuing Laxmi worship and Kartik festivals as regards the occasion. I do not think that anybody was misled, or was likely to be misled, by the order. It would, no doubt, have been better if the operative part of the order had been confined to Hindus and Musalmans of the town of Halyal or such other classes of persons as the District Magistrate had in view, and to the occasion of the ensuing Laxmi worship and Kartik festivals. So framed the order would have been more correct in form. Yet it seems to me that the error in form is so purely of a technical character as not to render the order an invalid order. In short, I see nothing substantially wrong with the order. But I would suggest for the consideration of the District Magistrate that out of regard for the Courts before whom very acute and ingenious criticism is likely to be placed, it would be better if in future orders were made more specific as regards the persons affected and the occasions to which the orders are to apply. From what I have said it will be perfectly clear that the order is now long since spent, that it has not and cannot have any operative effect whatever now that the Laxmi worship and Kartik festivals contemplated are over.

For these reasons I think that the convictions are correct, and as the sentences have been served by those who were convicted, there is no need for us to concern ourselves with them. I think the Rule should be discharged.

SHAH, J.—I agree.

Babu Haro Prasad Chatterjee, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case we have read the explanation of the Magistrate and have heard the learned Pleader for the opposite party but we think that the Rule should be made absolute. It is inconvenient that proceedings under section 107 and also under section 144 or 145 should be going on at the same time. In this case it appears that Moti Lal Mandal, one of the petitioners, was the first to go to the Magistrate and apply for his assistance in the matter of possession of this land and the thatching of grass thereon.

Then proceedings were taken and an injunction was issued under section 144 and the petitioners were called on under section 107, a procedure which in effect debarred them from giving evidence of the possession which they had been the first to allege. The injunction under section 144 will, we understand, expire at the end of this month. It will be no more appropriate, if there is any present apprehension of a breach of the peace, for the Magistrate to take proceedings under section 145 rather than under section 107. The question of possession can then be gone into and properly decided. We accordingly make the Rule absolute and direct that section 145 proceedings, if any proceedings are now necessary, be substituted for the proceedings under section 107.

U. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1916), s. 326 (1), applicability of, to criminal proceedings—Cattle Trespass Act (I of 1871), s. 22—Illegal seizure of cattle—Compensation.

Section 326 (1) of the U. P. Municipalities Act has nothing to do with proceedings in a Criminal Court. It relates only to suits of a civil nature in a Civil Court. It does not, therefore, apply to prosecutions under the Cattle Trespass Act.

Accused, servants of a Municipality, seized and impounded cattle belonging to the complainant which had not done any damage to Municipal trees:

Held, that the seizure was illegal and unjustified and that the accused were liable to pay compensation under section 22 of the Cattle Trespass Act.

Criminal reference made by the District Magistrate, Jhansi.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This case has been referred to this Court by the District Magistrate of Jhansi. The facts are simple on the evidence and as found by the Magistrate. The accused persons are certain Municipal servants who illegally and without justification seized and impounded cattle belonging to the complainant. A complaint was made before a Joint Magistrate under section 22 of the Cattle Trespass Act, and it was transferred by him to the Court of the Third Class Magistrate for decision. The Magistrate found the accused guilty and directed them to pay Rs. 10 as compensation to the complainant under section 22 of the Act. The District Magistrate admits in his order of reference that the case is trivial, but is of opinion that the lower Court's order was illegal and irregular, because the accused persons were servants of the Municipality and quite within their rights in impounding cattle damaging Municipal trees, and that the Court ought to have acted under section 326 (1) of the Municipalities Act. The District Magistrate at the end of his reference expresses what to me is an astounding opinion. He says: "the lower Court may or may not believe the evidence, but I think it is exercising a very unwise discretion in fining them." In the first place, section 326 (1) of the Municipalities Act has nothing to do with the proceedings in a Criminal Court. It relates only to suits of a civil nature in a Civil Court. The wording of the section is plain and it has nothing to do with prosecutions under the Cattle Trespass Act. In the next place, it is very material indeed whether the evidence for the prosecution in the case was worthy of belief or not. The Magistrate has given his reasons and they are fairly cogent for holding that the seizure of the cattle was without justification and that no damage whatever had been done to the Municipal trees. No Municipal servant is authorised in these circumstances to seize and impound cattle. It is only where the latter are damaging or have damaged the Municipal trees, that these servants would be at all justified in impounding them. I must say I am surprised that the learned Sessions Judge should have sent up a reference of this nature without any remarks and without any expression of opinion. There is absolutely no force whatsoever in it and the time of this Court and other persons has been unnecessarily wasted in a very trivial matter. Let the record be returned.

Held, that the kabuliyat might be considered either as a new contract under which the tenants agreed to pay enhanced rent or as a contract containing recitals of the incidents of the tenancy which was in existence before. In either view the kabuliyat showed that the rent was enhanceable. Therefore the presumption under section 50 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act was rebutted.

Babu Priyasanker Mozumdar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.— Defendants Nos. 1 and 3, who purchased the tenure in suit from defendant No. 4, appear to have paid rent for about 37 years and the rent was accepted from them. Plaintiff, therefore, is not entitled to obtain khas possession of the tenure, as his right to do so is barred by limitation. That being so, the plaintiff cannot ignore the right of defendants Nos. 1 and 3 who were entered in the Record of Rights as tenants. We do not see, however, why the plaintiff should not get a decree for rent at the enhanced rate of Rs. 90 odd. It is true there is a presumption under section 50 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act arising from the payment of rent at the same rate for more than twenty years; but the plaintiff has produced a kabuliyat of the year 1840 executed by the predecessor-in-interest of the defendant No. 4, the vendor of defendants Nos. 1 and 3. There is an express stipulation in the kabuliat that the tenants would pay enhanced rent according to the Pargana rate. The kabuliyat may be considered either as a new contract under which the tenants agreed to pay enhanced rent, or as a contract containing recitals of the incidents of the tenancy which was in existence from before. In either view of the matter it shows that the rent was enhanceable. That being so, the enhancement allowed by the Court of first instance will stand; and to that extent only the decree of the Court of first instance is varied.

The result is that the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the decree of the Court of first instance affirmed with respect to the amount of rent payable by the defendants. The entry of the names of defendants Nos. 1 and 3 in the Record of Rights will stand. Under the circumstances of the case, we direct that each party do bear its own costs in all the Courts.

An under-raiyat in occupation of land is an incumbrancer upon such land within the meaning of section 215 of the Orissa Tenancy Act. [p. 594, col. 2.]

A purchaser at an auction-sale has one, and only one, remedy open to him for annulling an incumbrance, namely, that prescribed by section 221 of the Orissa Tenancy Act, and in cases where this remedy is not followed and a year is allowed to elapse by the purchaser without taking steps to annul the incumbrance affecting the lands or interest he has purchased, he is not entitled to eject the under-raiyat under section 57 of the Act. If the purchaser does take the steps open to him to annul the incumbrance and the under-raiyat refuses to give up possession consequential thereon, he can be ejected under section 57, but if the purchaser does not avail himself of the only remedy which is open to him he is not entitled to eject the under-raiyat in any other way. SHIBA DAS v. GAJENARA NATH DAS.

Civil Appeal from a decision of the Collector, Balasore, dated the 2nd September 1916, modifying that of the Deputy Collector, Balasore, dated the 21st June 1916.

Mr. S. N. Sen Gupta, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. N. Singh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this suit seeks to eject the defendant from the land in suit of which he is in occupation as an under-raiyat.

The facts shortly are as follows:—

The plaintiff purchased the occupancy right in the land in suit at a rent-sale held on the 1st of February 1915. The original tenant fell into arrear in the payment of his rent; and one of the co-sharer landlords instituted a suit for the recovery of the arrears of rent due, making the other co sharer landlords defendants with the tenant, and obtained a decree for, it is alleged, part of the total rent. We must take it, having regard to the course which the case has pursued in both the lower Courts, that the decree which was obtained in the suit against the original tenant was a rent decree; and that the sale which took place on the 1st of February 1915 was a sale in pursuance of a rent decree. At the sale the plaintiff became the purchaser of the occupancy interest in this holding. At the date of sale there was on the holding an under-raiyat who was in possession of the entire holding and who is now the defendant in this suit. The holding was about 10 to 11 acres in area; and the learned Deputy Collector has found that the entire holding of the original tenant was sold at the sale held on the 1st of February 1915. The present plaintiff seeks to eject the defendant from the lands in suit relying upon section 57 of the Orissa Tenancy Act; and he alleges that he has served the notice required by section 57 of the Orissa Tenancy Act upon the under-raiyat and that therefore he is entitled to maintain this action for ejectment.

The case put forward by the defendant, the under-raiyat, is that this action is not maintainable having regard to the special provisions of section 215 read in conjunction with sections 220 and 221 of the Orissa Tenancy Act.

The learned Collector, disagreeing with the opinion of the Deputy Collector, has held that the plaintiff is entitled to seek relief under section 57. The Deputy Collector on the contrary held that the provisions of section 57 did not apply; and that the rights of the parties were governed by the true interpretation of sections 220 and 221 of the Orissa Tenancy Act.

Section 215 of the Orissa Act defines what an "incumbrance" is; and undoubtedly an under-raiyat in occupation of land is an incumbrancer upon such land within the meaning of section 215 of the Orissa Tenancy Act, and upon this point there seems to be no controversy. Therefore, we may take it that over the lands in suit there was an incumbrance to the extent of the interest of the under-raiyat therein. That being so, sections 220 and 221 regulate in what way and in what manner the incumbrance can be got rid of by an auction purchaser. He is not in the same position as the original intermediate landlord, viz., the original tenant. The Act has provided that his rights are to be something less. But it appears that if an auction-purchaser desires to annul an incumbrance, the Act specifically prescribes what steps are to be taken by him for doing so and the Act is careful to specify that by no other steps and by no other means can the incumbrance be annulled or got rid of. Section 220, sub-section (2), runs as follows:—

"The purchaser at a sale under this section may, in manner provided by section 221, and not otherwise, annul any incumbrance on the holding."

I take that section to mean that it is incumbent upon the auction-purchaser, if he desires to annul an incumbrance, to follow strictly the procedure prescribed by the section. Section 221 prescribes that when a purchaser desires to annul an incumbrance he must do so by serving a notice within one year from the date of sale, or the date upon which he first had notice of the incumbrance, through the Collector upon the incumbrancer. Now it is not contended here for one moment that the procedure prescribed by section 221 was followed. On the contrary, it is contended by the plaintiff that he has served a notice within the meaning of section 57 and that no other notice is necessary, and that he is entitled to maintain the present suit. This is a case of first impression; but it appears to us upon a fair and reasonable interpretation of the Orissa Tenancy Act that what was intended was that a purchaser at an auction sale had one, and only one, remedy open to him for annulling an incumbrance, namely, that prescribed by section 221; and that in cases where this remedy is not followed and a year is allowed to elapse by the purchaser without taking steps to annul the incumbrance affecting the lands or interest he has purchased, the purchaser is not entitled to eject the under raiyat under section 57 of the Act. No doubt, if the purchaser did take the steps open to him to annul the incumbrance and the under-raiyat refused to give up possession consequential thereon, the under-raiyat could be ejected as a trespasser under section 57 of the Act; but if, as in this case, the purchaser does not avail himself of the only remedy which is open to him he is not entitled to eject the under-raiyat in any other way. The opinion which we have formed corresponds with the interpretation given to the corresponding enactment in the Bengal Tenancy Act in Janaki Nath Hore v. Prabhasini Dasi (1).

We think that the conclusion at which the learned Deputy Collector arrived was right. No doubt his judgment leaves much to be desired as to its form and method of expression; but upon a careful consideration of the law and the facts we think that he was right in dismissing the plaintiff's suit.

We accordingly set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and allow this appeal with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 50 (2), presumption under, rebuttal of—Landlord and tenant—Amalgamation of tenures, whether creates new tenancy.

Where four separate tenures were amalgamated into one by a kabuliyat of 1853, which expressly stated that enhanced rent would be paid according to the rate of enhancement in the village, and there was no suggestion that the other incidents of the tenure as mentioned in the kabuliyat were the same as those of the four original tenures:

Held, that the kabuliyat created a new tenancy in 1853, so that the presumption arising under section 50 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act was rebutted. [p. 596, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Special Judge, Faridpur, dated the 7th December 1914, affirming that of the Assistant Settlement Officer, Rajbari, dated the 24th July 1914.

Babus Mohendra Nath Ray and Amarendra Nath Bose, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for enhancement of rent of a tenure. Defendants proved payment of rent at the same rate for a period of 20 years before the institution of the suit and the learned Subordinate Judge held that a presumption arose under section 50 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act that the rent was being paid at that rate from the time of the Permanent Settlement. Plaintiff produced a kabuliyat of the year 1260, corresponding to 1853, and relied upon it as showing that the tenants had agreed to pay enhancement of rent. It appears that there were originally four separated tenures which were amalgamated into one by the kabuliyat of 1853. The main question for our consideration is whether there was the creation of a new tenancy under the kabuliyat or merely a recognition of the previously existing tenures. The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that there was no new tenancy created by the kabuliyat, although the tenant expressly stipulated to pay enhanced rent. He relied upon the case of Bisseswar Ray Chowdhry v. Rajendra Kumar Singha (1) in support of the proposition that, notwithstanding that the kabuliyat showed a variation of rent, it was merely a recognition of a previously existing tenure. The judgment in that case, however, shows that that was not so. The learned Chief Justice, in referring to the kabuliyat in that case, observes: "The true meaning of this document has been the subject of considerable discussion before us, but this at least emerges clearly from the discussion that the document is the recognition of a previously existing interest and not the creation of a new one." There is nothing to show that the rent was a variable one or that the tenant had agreed to pay enhanced rent in that case. In the present case the kabuliyat expressly states that enhanced rent would be paid according to the rate of enhancement in the village. Then, again, there is no suggestion that the other incidents of the tenure as mentioned in the kabuliyat were the incidents of the four original tenures. That being so, we think, upon a proper construction of the kabuliyat, that it created a new tenancy although the four original tenures were amalgamated into one, and that if there was a new tenancy created in the year 1853, the presumption under section 50 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act is rebutted. The result is that the decrees of the Courts below are set aside and the case is sent back to the Court of first instance in order that the question of the amount of enhancement may be gone into. Costs will abide the result.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 68—Mortgage-deed—Attestation, proof of—Witness summoned, but not examined—"Called," meaning of—Document incorporated in subsequent deed, effect of—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 59—Mortgage, proof of.

Defendants executed a mortgage in favour of plaintiffs, but it was discovered that the scribe had erroneously entered a lower rate of interest in the deed than was agreed upon between the parties. A fresh deed was thereupon drawn up and executed, which described the correct rate of interest and incorporated some clauses of the previous deed. In a suit on the mortgage it was found that one of the attesting witnesses of the first deed was dead. The second attesting witness was summoned but not examined:

Held, (1) that the first deed could not be used in evidence as an independent document either requiring attestation or in fact attested, inasmuch as the provisions of section 68 of the Evidence Act had not been complied with; [p. 599, col. 2.]

(2) that the second deed having been duly attested and executed and having incorporated the prior deed, the prior deed was admissible in evidence as part of the second deed. [p. 602, col. 1.]

The word "called" in section 68 of the Evidence Act means tendered for the purpose of giving evidence. [p. 598, col. 1.]

A mortgage need not be contained in one or any other particular number of documents. It may be collected from a variety of documents so long as the effective document is a duly signed, attested and registered instrument in accordance with section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. The Hon'ble Mr. Motilal Nehru and Mr. Surendra Nath Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

WALSH, J.—The facts of this case are remarkably simple, though the questions which have been raised and discussed before us have covered a wide area. The plaintiffs, who brought this suit in the Court of the Third Additional Subordinate Judge of Aligarh to enforce a mortgage or rather, as they alleged, two mortgages dated respectively the 15th of May and the 21st of July 1909, carry on business as bankers and commission agents in the city of Benares. The defendants at or about the time carried on business as saltpetre merchants and were in the year 1909 obviously in considerable difficulties. Through the medium of an agent or general-attorney of the plaintiffs, one Beni Prasad Dube, it was arranged between the plaintiffs and one of the defendants, Sri Krishn Chand, that inasmuch as a considerable sum was already due from the defendants to the plaintiffs in respect of commission and other dealings which had taken place between them, the plaintiffs instead of pressing for payment should render assistance to the defendants by treating the existing debt as a loan and taking security over their property. The present defendants were members of a joint Hindu family and carried on business together as such, Lalta Prasad being father and Sri Krishn Chand and Jhabbu Lal being the two sons. There was a good deal of delay in the completion of the necessary formalities to carry out the transaction, due apparently to some discussion with regard to the amount of the outstanding account between the defendants and the plaintiffs at that date. This, however, is not material because the amount of the debt was agreed and there is in fact no dispute as to the substantial effect of the transaction which was entered into. The whole difficulty that has been raised is one of form. A document was prepared by a Pleader, which was intended to be a mortgage, to carry out the arrangement which had been agreed upon. It was written by a scribe of the name of Mukundi Lal and the plaintiffs' general attorney, Beni, Prasad, according to his own account, with certain other persons who were to act as witnesses attended at one of the defendants' places of business in Farrukhabad. The father was absent. It is suggested that he was keeping out of the way on account of the pressure of his creditors. However that may be, it is clear that he was not present on the occasion when the parties met with a view to executing the document, and it was signed only by the two sons above mentioned and by Sheobandhan Dube and Janki Das as attesting witnesses. It was also signed by his own hand by the scribe, in the sense that it contained a clause in his own handwriting stating that he had written the document on the 15th of May. And undoubtedly at one time it was suggested, and one of the grounds raised in the memorandum of appeal was, that if there was any defect in the document by reason of the absence of sufficient attestation, that was cured by the clause containing the signature of the scribe. That argument, however, was not seriously pressed; the scribe's evidence shows that he did not purport to attest and no further reference need be made to it. The document having been thus executed by the two sons whose signatures are said to have been attested by these two men, Sheobandhan Dube and Janki Das, it appears to have been originally intended to have the document registered in accordance with law as quickly as possible. But the plaintiffs, the mortgagees, required the signature of the father and the document was sent to him for signature and returned to the son, Sri Krishn Chand, duly signed by the father on the 31st of May 1909, after a delay of some 13 or 14 days. What happened when the father affixed his signature does not appear. It is, however, quite clear that his signature was not attested by either of the attesting witnesses to the deed. The document, having been thus executed and registered and being at that time clearly regarded by everybody as a complete, valid and properly executed mortgage-deed in accordance with the strict provisions of the law, was discovered to contain a slip by the scribe. The agreement had been for a rate of interest at eight annas per cent. per mensem, but only eight annas per cent. per annum was provided in the interest clause. It became necessary to correct this blunder and by consent of everybody a fresh deed was entered into on the 21st of July 1909 with this object. The terms and effect of that deed it will be necessary to consider with some care hereafter. It was duly signed by Lalta Prasad, the father, and by both his sons in the presence of two attesting witnesses. It was duly attested by Janki Das, one of the attesting witnesses to the former deed, and by Makundi Lal, the scribe, and it was registered according to law on the 16th of November 1909. Default having been made the plaintiffs instituted this suit on the 18th of April 1914. Substantially there was very little contest about the merits. The main controversy turned upon the question of the attestation and the admissibility of the deed of the 15th of May 1909. One of the defendants Jhabbu Lal put in no appearance. The other two, the father and one of the sons, admitting their signatures and denying that the amount entered in the deed was correct, alleged that the deed had not been duly executed and that the signatures had not been attested according to law. The first Court held that the document was inadmissible under section 68 of the Evidence Act for the following reasons. At the trial it appeared that Sheobandhan Dube was dead. Janki Das was in Court. He was not called. The document was one which was required by law to be attested and no attesting witness, although one was alive, was called, as required by section 68 of the Evidence Act. He had been summoned and was present in Court. The expression "called" used in the section clearly means tendered for the purpose of giving evidence. The learned Judge, therefore, had no alternative but to reject the document, and we agree with the course which he took and with the reason wich he gave for so doing. Very little attention, judging from the evidence and from the judgment, appears to have been paid to the supplementary or second deed of the 21st of July 1909. But relying on certain authorities which the learned Judge refers to in his judgment he gave effect to the deed of the 15th of May 1909, which he had rejected as inadmissible as a mortgage, as evidence of a covenant to pay, and passed a personal decree against all three defendants for the amount due. Thereupon an appeal was brought to this Court by the plaintiffs, challenging the decision upon three grounds.

1. That the execution of the deed had been proved.

2. That the evidence of the scribe who had in fact been called was sufficient as that of an attesting witness and

3. That the learned Judge had not properly weighed the evidence.

There was a difficulty in serving the respondents with the notice of appeal. Ultimately substituted service was ordered by means of advertisement in the newspapers, and whether or not they had knowledge of the proceedings they did not in fact appear, although the order for substituted service was duly carried out at the hearing of the appeal, which was opened before my brother Piggott and myself on the 29th of March 1917. During the discussion in the opening of the appeal it was pointed out amongst other things that there was some difficulty in appreciating the grounds upon which the learned Judge had given effect to the deed as a covenant to repay the money, while rejecting it as inadmissible under section 68, and it was urged upon us with some force that if the failure of the suit resulted from the omission to call Janki Das during the trial, that was an omission which might, subject to certain penalties, be repaired without injustice to the defendants, if we were to afford an opportunity to the plaintiffs of producing him as a witness in this Court. We made an order on the 29th of March 1917 in the following terms:—"Without discussing further the question of law raised by this appeal, we think it sufficient to say that, under the circumstances, the appellants are entitled to an opportunity of producing before this Court for examination the witness Janki Das, who should perhaps have been produced by them in the Court below. Assuming that the appellants are prepared to deposit the necessary fees and expenses we order that this case be put upon any near convenient date, and summons to issue for the attendance of the said witness, Janki Das son of Khiali Ram, caste Mahajan, resident of Muhalla Mufti Saheb, in Farrukhabad, in this Court on such date." Difficulties arose in carrying out that intention owing to the illness of Janki Das. Adjournments were applied for from time to time, which were granted in the hope that the whole thing might be settled by hearing the evidence of this witness, who might have been tendered in the Court below. Unfortunately the witness got worse and died and it was, therefore, impossible for the appellants to call him. The case, therefore, came on for re hearing before us in the condition in which it was, when it was originally opened before us in appeal with the addition which we had made by the order we passed on the 29th of March 1917. On this occasion the respondents put in an appearance and several questions have been argued in attack upon and in support of the decision of the Court below.

The real question which we have to decide is whether in fact the plaintiffs, in the events which have happened, have been able to establish by legal evidence the execution in their favour of a mortgage for this debt over the property of the defendants, and whether they are entitled to an order enforcing it in this suit. Now it is abundantly clear that the loan was made, that it was obtained by the defendants offering a substantial and valuable security, that the money is still due, and that the defendants have no merits of any kind. The case is an illustration of the pitfalls which the prudent provisions of the Legislature made for the protection of ignorant and foolish persons may possess for the ordinary men of business and the use that knaves may make of them. There are, in evidence, some copy letters dated one of the 19th of May 1909 and two each of the 1st of June 1909. These, if genuine, are conclusive as to one material fact in dispute, namely, the attestation of the father's signature. Due notice to produce the originals of these letters was given to the plaintiffs through the Court on the 25th of January 1915. Beni Prasad, the general attorney of the plaintiffs, was cross-examined with a view to explaining the absence of the originals which were not forthcoming. He explained that after some short period it was the practice in the plaintiff's business to weed out and destroy letters, and the topic was pursued no further. Clear notice was given to the plaintiffs of the existence of these letters. They were called upon to produce them and the defendants were entitled to use their copies. We have examined the defendants' press copy letter book, in which these copies are contained. It is, relatively speaking, well kept and we are both satisfied that it is a genuine book.

These copy letters show three things. Firstly, that after being written out the day before, the document of the 15th of May 1909 was signed by the two sons and attested by Sheobandhan Dube if not by Janki Das, but that on the 19th of May the father had not signed it. Secondly, that registration was delayed until after the 31st of May 1901, when the document was received back by Sri Krishn Chand from his father with the father's signature upon it, and that if the plaintiffs had not insisted upon the father's signature the defendants would have registered the document without it regarding the execution as then complete, and thirdly, that the defendants were in need of money, that they were in profound misery, that their honour was in jeopardy and that they were anxious to do all they could to complete the security.

What happened at the trial as to the failure to call the attesting witness has been clearly stated in the judgment of the first Court and has already been referred to above. The only living attesting witness was present in Court and was deliberately not called. This fact alone prevents the document by virtue of the provisions of section 68 of the Evidence Act from being "used as evidence," and if the plaintiffs' case rested upon the document of the 15th of May alone, it must fail. We see no escape from this conclusion.

It was urged that the events which happened in this Court on the 29th of March 1917 and the death of the missing witness have removed this case from the operation of section 68. We cannot agree with this view. We ordered that the plaintiffs-appellants should be given an opportunity of producing the witness. It seems to us that that order had none of the attributes of finality. It was made at an ex parte hearing. The respondents ought not to be allowed to improve their position by the fact of their absence. But it appeared to us that, apart from the debatable point as to whether the learned Judge ought, in the circumstances, to have given a decree for the principal money at all, it was possible that the omission of the plaintiffs in the first Court was a mere error of judgment which it was not too late to repair and that by allowing them to repair it justice might be done by penalizing by some order in respect of costs for their error. But it now appears perfectly clear that their act in refraining from calling Janki Das was due to their deliberate decision as to the conduct of their case. The letters of the 19th of May and the 1st of June 1909, though on the file, had not been printed in this Court's book and had unfortunately been ignored in the judgment of the first Court and had not been considered relevant by the appellants in their presentation of the evidence. When we made the order of the 29th of March 1917, we had no notion of their existence. They now make it plain that the plaintiffs' general attorney endeavoured to prove the due attestation of the document of the 15th of May by the grossest perjury. He swore that the signatures of the father and the two sons were affixed in his presence and in that of Janki Das, Sheobandhan Dube and the scribe. "Jhabbu Lal," he said, "read the document and the other defendants (that includes the father, there can be no mistake about it) heard it." The fact is that the father was not there. Further, he said in cross examination: "nobody signed the document on the day it was written. The signatures of the witnesses and the executants were affixed on the following day. Lalta Prasad was not present on the day the document was written. He came the next day, and the signature was affixed on the same day." These statements are clearly deliberate falsehoods. Moreover, the evidence of Beni Prasad made an unfavourable impression upon the learned Subordinate Judge, who was not inclined to believe that Beni Prasad was present even when the document was signed by the sons, and in this conclusion he is very likely correct. Makundi Lal was even more specific both in examination-in-chief and in cross examination. He lied with elaborate and vivid detail and identified Janki Das as having attested all the three signatures on the same afternoon. He described in minute detail the process of execution and stated that Lalta Prasad affixed his signature first of all.

What the condition of Janki Das's mind may have been it is idle to speculate, but he could not, if called, have stated, what the contemporaneous documents now show to have been the facts, without destroying the plaintiffs' case and casting discredit upon both their general attorney and the scribe. Had we known on the 29th of March the real state of the evidence on the record, it is unlikely that we should have granted any indulgence to the plaintiffs who had conducted their case with such materials. We think it was open to this Court at any time to hear further argument and finally to refuse to allow additional evidence to be given. Our previous order, made by us under a misapprehension, cannot be used to enable the plaintiffs to avail themselves of section 69. We hold, therefore, that the document of the 15th of May cannot be used in evidence in the sense contemplated by section 68, that is to say, as a mortgage which is required by law to be attested and has in fact been attested.

The three letters to which I have referred further show that the document was not in any case duly attested, one of the signatories having clearly signed it at another place and on some date subsequent to the attestation by the only witnesses who are alleged to have attested. It was urged with great force by Sir Sunder Lal on behalf of the appellants that it might be treated as a document duly signed, attested and executed by two members of a joint Hindu family dealing with joint family property and that the consent of the remaining member of the family, in this case the father, who alone could object, could be proved by any method known to the law. Speaking for myself I do not think it necessary to decide whether this contention is sound or not, because in either view the provisions of section 68 not having been complied with, the document cannot be used as evidence at all as a document either requiring attestation or in fact attested.

But this does not, in the events which have happened, prevent it from being used in evidence as something else or for any other purpose. It is obvious that section 68 is subject to some limitation, e. g., if the document were tendered in some other proceeding for the purpose of proving the handwriting of the scribe, it could not seriously be objected to upon the ground that, no attesting witness being called to prove it, it could not be used in evidence at all. The second deed of the 21st of July, as I have pointed out, was signed by all the parties to the transaction in this suit, duly attested and duly registered. It treated the document of the 15th of May as a valid mortgage-deed and repeated some, at any rate, of its stipulations as being the terms which were to govern the new contract. We think it quite clear that we are entitled to look at the document of the 15th of May identified by reference, as it clearly is, in the document of the 21st of July in order to ascertain what these stipulations were. If they had been contained in some other kind of document, clearly identified, to which the parties agreed that reference should be made for the purpose of interpreting their rights and obligations, such a document would clearly be made admissible by the act and contract of the parties, even though as an independent legal document it was itself inadmissible. It derives its admissibility from another source which binds the parties. This would apparently be so according to English Law, under what is described in Taylor on Evidence as the sixth exception to the rule of inadmissibility due to the absence of an attesting witness, if the party objecting to it took some benefit from the latter document which treated the earlier one as valid. This is not the case here, the party objecting clearly undertook a greater burden. But I think in truth that it is not really an exception to the rule at all, but merely an illustration of a document to which the rule in England is inapplicable, and that the rule in India, that is to say, section 68 is equally inapplicable in the present case for the purpose of deciding whether the earlier document is admissible as a document to which the parties have referred otherwise.

The case before us on this point bears a remarkable similarity to the case of Fishmongers' Company v. Dimsdale (1). In that case the decision of the Chief Justice Tindal, as reported in the statement of facts at page 57 of the Law Journal Report, is precisely the objection now raised to the admissibility of the document of the 15th of May, but an exceptionally strong Court of the Exchequer Chamber overruled this objection and held that the document was admissible. The case occurred before the Common Law Procedure Act of 1864, and the rule of law which had to be dealt with, namely, with regard to the necessity of calling a subscribing witness in order to render a document admissible at all, in substance did not differ from section 68. Baron Parke in giving judgment gave as the reason that the memorandum endorsed, which corresponds in this case to the document of the 21st of July, incorporated the original argument. I prefer the judgment of Coleridge, J., as reported in the Law Journal Report, who added his own reason in these words.—"There is a complete identification by words of reference." It is somewhat remarkable that when a similar case arose at a later stage with reference to its admissibility having regard to the stamp, the Chief Justice was overruled for treating the earlier document as incorporated thereby, following the dictum of PARKE, B. (vide 22 L. J. C. P.). But the principle is clear, although the language in which if is expressed in the published report of the judgment may not be scientifically accurate. And we find it difficult to draw any distinction between that case and the case before us. We were referred to a further decision which is also very much in point. In 1885, the question arose as to the due registration of a deed of conveyance. There had been an earlier deed of 1873, which was not registered. The transaction was sought to be carried out and put in force through a subsequent deed, namely of 1878, which, no doubt, did a little more than the document of the 21st of July does, actually re-affirmed and repeated in its entirety the deed of 1873, referring to it in express terms and setting it out in a schedule as part of itself, namely, the deed of 1878. When presented for registration, the memorandum of registration was written not on the first sheet but at the end of the deed which was annexed as a schedule to the deed of 1878. I take that statement from the judgment of Sir Barnes Peacock, and it would appear from that that the deed of 1873 had actually been copied out or itself annexed as a schedule to the subsequent deed of 1878. But there can be no difference in principle whether the document is incorporated by actual physical annexation, or by reference in unmistakable terms of identification. The High Court in that case had held that the registration was insufficient because the latter document had not been registered and the endorsement upon the deed in the schedule, being upon a document which in itself could not be proved, could not be looked at.

(1) (1848) 18 L. J. C. P. 55; 6 C. B. 896; 136 E. R. 1500; 77 R. R. 526.

The Privy Council overruled that contention in these words, "that document (that is, referring to the earlier document) was not proved. It could not be proved because it could not be given in evidence. But the fact that the deed itself could not be given in evidence was no reason why the deed of 1878 should not be given in evidence and that deed (referring to the deed of 1873) was proved to have been executed and duly registered." That language covers, in our view, in almost express terms, the point raised in this case, namely, as to whether the document of the 21st of July having been duly executed and attested does not in sufficient terms refer to the earlier document which was inadmissible in itself, so as to make it admissible as part of the latter document.

The question of interpretation remains. This, of course, is totally distinct from the question of admissibility. What is the effect of these two documents, bearing in mind that we are not entitled to treat the document of the 15th of May as a mortgage at all or even as a document in itself binding upon the parties for anything? On the whole we think that the document of the 21st of July 1909 hypothecates the property described in the specification for interest at eight annas per cent per mensem on the sum of Rs. 32,914-3-9 from the 15th of May 1909. We also think, although we feel some doubt about it, that it sufficiently hypothecates the property for the principal sum. It clearly repeats or incorporates the clauses in the deed of the 15th of May, which relate to interest. It says, "we shall pay interest on the debt due to the Babu Sahibs at Rs. 6 per cent. per annum, which is equal to eight annas per cent. per mensem, in accordance with the stipulation laid down in the aforesaid mortgage deed." The document must, at any rate, therefore, be construed as having contained within it, in express terms, at least clauses 1, 2 and 3 of the document of the 15th of May. Clause 2 provides that if the interest is not paid within 6 months, the executants shall be liable to pay compound interest at eight annas per cent. per mensem, and further that (after fulfilment of certain provisions which involve a reference to the body of the document to ascertain the meaning of the words "the above term") "the said Babu Sahibs will be at liberty to recover the entire amount payable to them by taking proper proceedings, from our person, the property mortgaged and other property, moveable as well as immoveable, belonging to us, the executants." The indebtedness for the principal is clearly acknowledged by the deed of the 21st of July, and we find it difficult to give effect to clauses 1, 2 and 3 which are thus clearly incorporated and accepted in the document of 21st of July, as governing the payment of interest together with the consequences for non-payment without also giving effect to those parts of them which govern the payment of the principal. The two are indissolubly connected. The property mortgaged is clearly specified in the later document of the 21st of July: clause 2 can only mean that a power of sale is to be exercised by the Babu Sahibs for non-payment, and clause 3 refers to realisation which can only be read, having regard to the provisions of clause 2, as meaning sale. The terms of section 58 defining a mortgage are, "a mortgage is the transfer of an interest in specified immoveable property for the purpose of securing an existing debt."

"Where a mortgagor binds himself personally to pay the mortgage money and agrees expressly or impliedly that, in the event of his failing to pay according to his contract, the mortgagee shall have a right to cause the property to be sold and the proceeds of sale to be applied in payment of the mortgage money, the transaction is called a simple mortgage."

We think that that is what all three executants impliedly did when they signed the document of the 21st of July. Their intention is obvious. The only doubt is as to whether they carried it out. It was unnecessary that they should repeat in express terms all that they had agreed to in the previous transaction, for both parties treated the previous deed as binding upon them, but it so happens that out of extra precaution they did repeat and reiterate those terms which we have mentioned and thereby impliedly gave the mortgagee a power to sell not only for the new rate of interest but for the principal. A mortgage need not be contained in one or any other particular number of documents. It may be collected from a variety of documents so long as the effective document is a duly signed, attested and registered instrument in accordance with section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. We think that this is the real legal effect of the document which was duly executed and attested on the 21st of July and that, therefore, the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed in this suit upon that ground. It is not the ground upon which the case was first launched in the plaint, nor upon which the case was fought in the first Court, nor is it the ground upon which the plaintiffs by their memorandum of appeal sought relief in this Court, but, we think, it is the ground which gives effect to the real transaction between the parties, and which does substantial justice in spite of the mistakes the plaintiffs have made. The plaint and the memorandum of appeal must be treated as having been duly amended for the purpose of raising the claim in this form based upon the subsequent document of the 21st of July 1909. But we do not think that the omission by the plaintiffs in the conduct of their suit ought to stand in the way of our doing what nobody can doubt is substantial justice in the case.

On the other hand, we feel it impossible to pass by without marking our sense of the conduct of the plaintiffs in presenting their case to the Trial Court. As one would expect, no attempt has been made by their representatives in this Court to defend or justify it. We think that so far as that is concerned, the justice of the case will be met by altering the decree of the Court below and giving them a decree for sale of the mortgaged property without costs either of the suit or of this appeal.

PIGGOTT, J.—I agree generally. The only difficulty I have felt is with reference to the principal of the mortgage-debt. I may put my point in this way: as regards the interest at six per cent. per annum it seems to me that, when the parties entered into the contract embodied in the agreement of July the 21st, 1909, it was a definite part of the intention of the executants of that document to charge the extra rate of interest on the property, which they conceived to have been already mortgaged by the deed of the 15th of May. They may have done this only by way of extra precaution; but on the terms of the deed of July the 21st, 1909, even considered by itself alone, it seems to me that a hypothecation of the property specified at the foot for payment of the interest therein covenanted for is made by necessary implication. If the intention of the parties had been otherwise, I do not believe there would have been any specification of the property in this deed at all. As regards the principal my difficulty is this, that the parties conceived themselves to have already effected a valid mortgage of the same property as security for the re-payment of this principal, and it was presumably no part of their intention on the 21st of July 1909 to make a fresh hypothecation for that purpose. At the same time I agree with what has been said as to the anomaly of drawing any distinction between the effect of the transaction of July the 21st in respect of the principal and its effect as regards the interest. Broadly speaking, what the law requires is a registered instrument, duly executed and attested, in order to effect a mortgage; we have such an instrument before us in the so-called agreement of July the 21st, 1909. I think that we are entitled to read it in connection with the earlier document to which it refers, and that the results stated in the judgment of my learned colleague necessarily follow.

BY THE COURT.—We allow this appeal and direct that in lieu of the simple money-decree passed by the Court below a decree for sale be drawn up in the proper form in respect of the property specified in the plaint. Interest must be calculated at the rate of six per cent. per annum on the amount claimed up to the date fixed for payment, which we hereby fix at six months from this date. The decree will embody the usual provisions as to the consequences of payment or non payment on the part of the judgment-debtors, and the same decree will carry future interest at six per cent. per annum from the date fixed for payment until realisation. For reasons which we have already stated we leave the parties to bear their own costs in both Courts.

DIL MUHMUD SARKAR AND OTHERS—JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182, cl. (5)—Step-in-aid of execution—Filing list of witnesses, whether step-in aid of execution.

A decree-holder applied for the execution of his decree and the judgment-debtor put in an objection to execution. The Court directed both parties to adduce evidence in support of their respective cases on a certain date. On that date the decree-holder filed a list of his witnesses who were present in Court, and intimated to the Court that he was ready to proceed with his case:

Held, that the conduct of the decree-holder implied an application to the Court to take the evidence which he was prepared to adduce to repel the objection of the judgment-debtor and should be taken to be an application to the Court to take some step-in-aid of execution. [p. 605, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 16th of December 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, Jawalpur, dated the 4th June 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy for Babu D. N. Chackravarty (with him Babu Ramani Mohan Chatterjee), for the Appellant.—There were three applications for the execution of the decree, and the Courts below were wrong in holding that as the second application was not within time, the third, i. e., the present application, is barred by the three years' rule of limitation. After the first application for execution had been made the judgment-debtor filed his objections to the execution of the decree, and thereafter both parties were directed by the Court to adduce evidence in support of their respective cases. On the day fixed for the hearing of the case the decree-holder filed his hazira and list of witnesses present in Court and informed the Court that he was ready to proceed with the case. The above acts of the decree-holder should be construed to be steps in-aid of execution taken by him, and the present application for execution having been made within three years from the date when the last step-in-aid of execution was taken is not barred by limitation. See Pran Krishna Das v. Protap Chandra Dalai (1).

Babu Debendra Nath Mandal, for the Respondents.—The filing of hazira by the decree-holder is not a step-in-aid of execution of the decree, and the period of three years is to be counted, not from the date when the case was considered and heard by the Court for the last time, but from the date of the last application made in accordance with law. Refers to Limitation Act, Article 182 clause (5), Umesh Chunder Dutta v. Soonder Narain Deo (2), Madan Mohun Dey v. Ganga Chandra Roy (3), Maganlal Mulji v. Doshi Mulji (4), Sadananda Sarma v. Kali Sankar Bajpai (5). Appearance in Court by filing a hazira cannot be taken to be a step-in-aid of execution of the decree. Even appearance of the decree-holder to oppose any objection by the judgment-debtor to the execution of the decree is not a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of Article 182 of the Limitation Act. Refers to Troyloka Nath Bose v. Jyoti Prokash Nandi (6), Sheo Prasad v. Indar Bahadur Singh (7).

Babu Ramani Mohan Chatterjee in reply.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh dismissing an application for execution on the ground that it is barred by limitation. The decree is dated the 31st March 1908. The first application for execution was on the 20th January 1911, the second on the 22nd August 1914 and the third or the present application on the 6th October 1915. There is no dispute that if the second application was within time, the third application was also within time from the date of the second, and the only question, therefore, that has been argued before us is whether the second application for execution filed on the 22nd August 1914, was or was not barred by the three years' rule of limitation.

Now, it appears that after the first application for execution had been made, the judgment-debtor put in an objection to the effect that the properties attached and sought to be sold were not transferable, and secondly, that the said properties were his own personal and individual properties and not the properties of the father, the original judgment-debtor. On that objection proceedings continued from the 7th June to the 8th January 1912 and we find that on the 25th November 1911, both parties having in the meanwhile been directed to adduce evidence in support of their respective cases, the decree-holder filed a list of witnesses and intimated to the Court that he was ready to proceed with his case. On the application of the judgment-debtor the case was, however, adjourned to the 16th of December in order to enable the judgment-debtor to produce one of his witnesses. We are of opinion that this act of the decree-holder, namely, the filing of the list of witnesses and intimating to the Court that he was ready to proceed with the case, implied an application to the Court to take the evidence which he was prepared to adduce and to repel the objection taken by the judgment-debtor. In effect, therefore, we think that on a reasonable interpretation, this should be taken to be an application to the Court to take some steps in aid of execution; and in this view we are fortified by the decision reported as Fran Krishna Das v. Protap Chandra Dalai (1).

We, therefore, decree this appeal and remand the case to the original Court with directions that the decree-holder be now at liberty to proceed with the execution.

As, however, this appeal has succeeded on a point not taken in either of the Courts below we make no order as to costs.

Let the record be sent down to the lower Court without delay.

Appeal allowed.

The starting of a prospective trade is not a justifiable ground for alienation of family properties by the manager, whether the family is a trading or non-trading one. [p. 607, col. 1.]

The sale or mortgage of ancestral lands for the purpose of purchasing other lands can only be justified if there is clear benefit to the family. [p. 607, col. 1.]

When evidence as to the necessity for a sale is clear, the fact that all the adult members of the family joined in it would have an important bearing on its validity, but when there is no justifying necessity, the mere fact that all the adult co-parceners joined would not give any additional weight to the transaction. [p. 607, col. 2.]

In cases of unwarranted alienations by the manager the other co-parceners are not, as of right, entitled to mesne profits from the date of the alienation. Mesne profits being in the nature of damages, each case must be dealt with on its own merits. [p. 603, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, in Original Suit No. 21 of 1915.

JUDGMENT.

KUMARASWAMI SASTRI, J.—The plaintiffs, who are the appellants, sued for a partition of the properties specified in the plaint between themselves and their father, who was the first defendant, after setting aside the alienations made by the first defendant to the other defendants, The alienations complained of were made under four sale deeds, Exhibits B, C, D and F. The Subordinate Judge held that the alienation under Exhibit C was binding on the plaintiffs and dismissed the suits as regards the items comprised therein. He found that the alienations under B, D and F were not binding, but passed a decree in favour only of the 2nd plaintiff for his share of the items. holding that the 1st plaintiff's claim was barred by limitation. The plaintiffs appeal in so far as the decree is against them.

As regards the question of limitation, the case so far as the 1st defendant's alienation is concerned clearly falls under Article 126 of the Limitation Act, which provides for a period of 12 years for suits by a Hindu governed by the law of the Mitakshara to set aside his father's alienation in ancestral property. The fact that the father executes the document as guardian of his son will not take the case out of Article 126 and bring it under Article 44, which applies to cases where property belonging to a minor is transferred by his guardian. In the case of joint family property the father is co-owner with the sons. He sells property as the managing member of the family and the mere fact that he describes himself as guardian of the sons would not take the case out of the express terms of Article 126. In Lachmi Narain Prasad v. Kishan Kishore Chand (1), which was a case where property had been conveyed by the father and grandfather, the Article that was held applicable was Article 126 and the suit was dismissed on the ground that the alienation was more than 12 years before suit. In Ramkishore Kedarnath v. Jainarayan Ramrachpal (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council treated a suit by the sons to set aside a partition by the father giving to a stranger properties as a suit governed by Article 126. I might also refer to Soundararajan v. Saravana Pillai (3) and Kishan Lal v. Shib Narain (4) and Asaram v. Ratansingh (5). The plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to a decree so far as his one-third share in the properties covered by Exhibits B and C is concerned.

As regards the alienation under Exhibit C, I am unable to agree with the Subordinate Judge. The 1st defendant and his father, who died before 1909, conveyed about 46 acres 45 cents of Nanja land and 3 acres 65 cents of Punja for Rs. 5,000. The recital as to consideration runs as follows:—"Owing to the distance between the said Palli Vialkam village and Mudikondan village where we live, the cultivation and other business have been interrupted and a great deal of loss has been occasioned. Intending, therefore, to discharge the present small debts of our family and to purchase lands in the village where we reside and to better our prospects by carrying on money dealings you and we entered into an agreement on the 29th October last, and under this we receive Rs. 500 in cash, and the amount received by us this day from you is Rs. 1,500 and the the amount with which we are debited under the agreement to receive in the presence of the Sub-Registrar of Nannilam from you is Rs. 3,000."

The distance between the village where the lands sold are situate and the 1st defendant's village is admitted to be within 10 miles, and it is difficult to see why cultivation should be interrupted and a great deal of loss occasioned because of the distance. Families often own lands few miles away and this would not justify a Hindu father in alienating the lands.

(4) 3 Ind. Cas. 505; 6 A. L. J. 614.

(5) 32 Ind. Cas. 242; 12 N. L. R. 12.

So far as the debts are concerned, all that is stated is that there were some "present small debts," and there is no evidence either as to the extent of the debts or as to any debts having been paid off. The transaction was not very old and the existence of debts could easily have been proved. The family was not a trading family or one carrying on moneylending business and the starting of prospective moneylending transactions is no ground for alienating family properties. The observations of the Privy Council in Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Deivasikamony Pandara Sannadhi (6) apply with equal force to sales of joint family properties by non-trading families. Though there is nothing said in the sale deed as to any difficulties having been experienced owing to the want of irrigation facilities, from evidence of the defendants' witnesses the sale does not seem to be justified. The lands sold consisted of 46 acres 45 cents of wet land and it appears from the evidence of 3rd defendant that irrigation supply was improved by Government in 1904 or 1905 (prior to the sale Exhibit C). He wants to make out that because the silt was not cleared by the Public Works Department, the harvest was poor for 4 or 5 years and that when the department removed the silt, the harvests were good. Defendants' 4th and 5th witnesses want to make out that the water supply was bad till shutters were fitted up to the irrigation channel and improved afterwards. It is not disputed that the Government completed the irrigation channel over two years before the sale. If all that was required to make the channel a success was the removal of the silt or the putting up of shutters, I cannot say that it was a prudent act to sell the lands after irrigation facilities were completed, as it was almost certain that the Government would do the needful to give a good supply of water. The sale or mortgage of ancestral lands to purchase other lands can only be justified if there was clear benefit to the family: Krishnasawmi Doss, In re (7), Subramania Nadan v. Ramasami Nadan (8), Adikesavan Naidu v. Gurunatha Chetti (9), and having regard to the ease with which such recitals can be made by an improvident father in order to raise money, I think Courts ought to be slow to find necessity unless on clear proof that the transaction was one manifestly for the benefit of the family. So far as the price of the lands is concerned, I do not think Exhibit 11, which is relied on by the Subordinate Judge, is a safe criterion. Thamarai Selvam Pillai, the purchaser under Exhibit 11, admits that he got the lands cheap. Subramania Iyer, the vendor, D. W. No. 4., admits that he purchased the lands for Rs. 3,600 and that he sold the lands for Rs. 3,000 as he had debts to the extent of Rs. 3,600. The sale deed shows that Rs. 3000 went to discharge debts and the price at which a needy debtor sells is no safe criterion as to value. Having regard to the other sale-deeds filed in the case the value per acre is certainly much more than the price for which the lands have been sold under Exhibit C.

I am not unmindful of the fact that the 1st defendant's father also joined in the sale-deed. When evidence as to necessity is not clear, the fact that all the adult members of the family joined would have an important bearing, but when there is no justifying necessity the mere fact that all the adult co-parceners joined would not give any additional weight to the transaction.

I am of opinion that the sale of the land under Exhibit C is not binding on the plaintiffs. As, however, it is proved that the lands covered by Exhibit 11, dated 9th April 1908, were purchased for Rs. 3,000 out of the sum of Rs. 5,000, the consideration for Exhibit C, the plaintiffs, if they seek to avoid the alienation under Exhibit C, cannot get any share of the lands purchased by 1st defendant under Exhibit 11. Their claim to these lands, items Nos. 2 to 27 specified in schedule B to the plaint, is, therefore, dismissed and the property will be declared to be the separate property of the 1st defendant.

As regards the claim for mesne profits,

(7) 13 Ind. Cas. 648; (1912) M. W. N. 167; 11 M. L. T. 182.

(8) 21 Ind. Cas. 656; 25 M. L. J. 563.

(9) 39 Ind. Cas. 358; 40 M. 338; 32 M. L. J. 180; (1917) M. W. N. 171; 5 L. W. 425; 22 M. L. T. 300.

I do not think plaintiffs are of right entitled to mesne profits from the date of alienation. Mesne profits are in the nature of damages and each case must be dealt with on merits. I think the correct principle has been laid down in Bhirgee Nath v. Narasingh Tewari (10).

In the result, the degree of the Subordinate Judge will be modified by decreeing to the plaintiffs a third share in the properties alienated under Exhibits B and C in addition to a third share decreed to the 2nd plaintiff. The decree of the Subordinate Judge dismissing the suit as regards alienation of the items covered by the sale-deed Exhibit C is set aside, the plaintiff getting $\frac{1}{3}$rd share in the said items (the 1st plaintiff getting 1/6th share). As plaintiffs elect to take the lands in Al schedule to the plaint which represent lands exchanged for some of the family lands covered by Exhibit C they will get $\frac{1}{3}$rd share of the lands covered by schedules A and A1 to the plaint. The plaintiffs' suit as regards items covered by the sale deed Exhibit VII (B schedule properties) will be dismissed. The alienees defendants Nos. 2 to 6 will have a charge on the properties covered by Exhibit VII, except those alienated under Exhibit F, to the extent of a third of the consideration paid by them under Exhibit C. There will be a preliminary decree for partition on the above terms. Each party will bear his own costs of the appeal.

WALLIS, C. J.—I agree and will only say that I concur in what my learned brother has said as to the question of mesne profits in a case like this being determined upon a consideration of all the circumstances of the case.

Decree varied.

RATAN SINGH—PLAINTIFF

versus

KHEM KARAN—DEFENDANT.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. II, Arts. 5, 17 (iii) —Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 95—Suit for declaration of occupancy rights—Court-fee payable.

A suit for a declaration of occupancy rights under section 95 of the U. P. Tenancy Act falls under Article 5, Schedule II, of the Court Fees Act and the plaint in such a suit should bear a Court-fee of eight annas. [p. 609, col. 1.]

Article 17 (iii) of Schedule II, of the Act has no applicability to such a suit. [p. 609, col. 1.]

Office Report:—The suit being for declaration of the nature of tenancy under section 95 of the Tenancy Act a Court-fee of Rs. 10 must be paid by the plaintiff-appellant on this appeal irrespective of valuation, as held by this Court in Second Appeal No. 475 of 1912, dated the 16th of January 1913, Piare Lal v. Ganga Ram. This appeal is, therefore, insufficiently stamped by Rs. 7-12 0. There is also a deficiency of Rs. 9-8-0 due from the defendant-respondent on his appeal to the lower Appellate Court.

Objection to Office Report.—The Stamp Reporter's report absolutely overlooks the provisions of the Court Fees Act, Schedule II, Article 5. A Court-fee of 8 annas only was payable on the memorandum of appeal.

The earlier case referred to by the Stamp Reporter contains no reference to this provision, consequently the decision cannot be accepted as it is contrary to an express provision of law.

Office Report:—With reference to the objection taken by the learned Vakil for the plaintiff-appellant that a plaint or memorandum of appeal in a suit brought under section 95 of the Tenancy Act is governed by Article 5, Schedule II, of the Court Fees Act, I have grave doubts. This question came up once before when Mr. Burkitt was the Taxing Officer. He referred a similar question to the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Aikman as Taxing Judge, who held that a memorandum of appeal in a suit under section 95 of the Tenancy Act must be stamped with a fixed fee of Rs. 10. The same view was taken by the Hon'ble Sir H. D. Griffin as a Judge of this Hon'ble Court (both rulings are put up). If you think that these rulings are not binding in this case in view of the objection taken by the appellant's Vakil the matter may be referred to the Hon'ble Taxing Judge for a third decision.

Taxing Officer's Report.—This is a suit under section 95 of the Tenancy Act for declaration of occupancy rights, on which a Court-fee of 8 annas has been paid. Office objects that the fixed fee of Rs. 10 for a declaration without consequential relief should be paid, while the appellant points to Article 5 of Schedule II of the Court Fees Act. I see no reason why the suit should not be held to come under that Article both in the lower Courts and in this Court, but as the two rulings placed below, though for some reason they do not consider this specific question, appear to be against me, I put the case up for your orders under section 5 of the Court Fees Act.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal in a suit brought by the appellant for a declaration, under section 95 of the Tenancy Act, that he has occupancy rights in a certain holding. The suit is purely a declaratory suit. The question is, what is the Court-fee payable on the appeal. Prima facie the suit falls clearly within Schedule II, Article 5, of the Court Fees Act, which lays down that on a plaint or memorandum of appeal in a suit to establish or disprove a right of occupancy a Court-fee of eight annas should be paid. The only difficulty in the case arises by reason of two previous Judges of this Court having in similar cases directed that a fee of Rs. 10 was payable. In neither of these decisions was Schedule II, Article 5, apparently considered. The suit is not one to which Article 17 (iii), Schedule II, of the Court Fees Act is applicable. As I have said above, it is purely a declaratory suit, and nothing more, in which the plaintiff seeks to establish that he has a right of occupancy. In my opinion the law is plain and the appeal is governed by Schedule II, Article 5, of the Court Fees Act and the Court-fee payable is eight annas according thereto. I so direct.

Order accordingly.

THAKURDAS—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 20 (c)—Suit on contract—Cause of action—Place of suing—Jurisdiction.

Where in a suit on a contract it appears that the place where the contract was made, is not within the jurisdiction of the Court, the Court still has jurisdiction if the place where the contract was to be performed, or where in its performance the money to which the suit relates was expressly or impliedly payable, is within the jurisdiction of the Court. [p. 610, col. 1.]

Mr. J. C. Chatterjee, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. Dutt, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit upon a promissory note. The suit was filed in the District Court, Mandalay, and the plaintiff alleged that the note had been executed in Mandalay. The defendant denied that he had been present in Mandalay at the time, or had executed the note.

In the course of the hearing the Judge had reason to believe that the note was not executed in Mandalay, and framed an issue accordingly. The plaintiff produced one witness who gave evidence that the note was executed in Taunggyi, and upon this the District Judge returned the plaint under Order VII, rule 10. The plaintiff now comes to this Court in appeal.

The point does not appear to be free from difficulty, and the rejection of the plaint did not necessarily follow as a matter of course, as the District Judge appeared to think, upon proof that the note had been executed outside the jurisdiction of the Court.

Section 20 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a suit may be brought in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the cause of action wholly or in part arises. What was meant by this was explained in the third explanation to the corresponding section 17 of the old Code, and although that explanation has been omitted in the present Code, it has been omitted because the present Code expressly gives jurisdiction where the cause of action wholly or in part arises. Explanation 3 to section 17 of the old Code settled the signification of the term "cause of action" in the case of suits arising out of contract, see Salig Ram v. Chuba Mal (1). It is true that the place where the contract in the present suit was made was not within the jurisdiction of the Court; but the Court still had jurisdiction if the place where the contract was to be performed, or where in its performance the money to which the suit relates was expressly or impliedly payable, was within the jurisdiction of the Court.

It is apparently urged by the plaintiff-appellant that the cause of action did arise in Mandalay because it was not merely the promissory note but previous transactions. But it appears to be clear that the plaint as it stands was based upon a promissory note only; as it was filed within three days of the expiry of the period of limitation, the previous promissory note in substitution of which the note sued upon is said to have been executed would not have afforded a cause of action, nor would the previous transactions in the course of which the money became due.

The main contention of the plaintiff-appellant, however, is that the contract was to be performed in Mandalay or that in its performance the money to which the suit related was impliedly payable in Mandalay. It is clear that the money was not expressly made payable in Mandalay and the Court certainly did not have jurisdiction from any express agreement that the contract was to be performed there.

The only question, therefore, which remains was whether the money was impliedly payable in Mandalay. The only Indian case which I have been able to find is that of Raman Chettiyar v. Gopalachari (2) but this case appears to be exactly in point. There a note payable on demand and not payable at any specified place—a description to which the note in the present suit answers—had been executed within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Tanjore Court by the defendant, who resided at Tanjore; the plaintiff, residing at Kumbakonam, brought his suit in the Kumbakonam Court, and the question was, had that Court jurisdiction. Both the Judges held that it had not. Sir Arnold White, C. J., said, "I do not think it necessary to decide whether the question of the implication of payment in a particular place is to be considered only with reference to the terms of the contract, or whether the circumstances in which the contract was made may also be taken into account. I assume that, for the purpose of applying explanation 3" (section 17 of the old Code of Civil Procedure) "you must look at the contract and at the facts which existed at the time the contract was made, and then determine whether, having regard to the terms, the contract was one which ought to be performed within the jurisdiction." And the Judge went on to say that in deciding that the Court had jurisdiction, the District Judge appeared to have had only in mind the ordinary rule that a debtor should follow his creditor. He said: "I do not think this general rule can be relied on as controlling the express words of a Statute prescribing the conditions which give a Court local jurisdiction....Such a view would involve the proposition that unless the contract or the circumstances in which the contract was made, gives rise to a contrary implication, a creditor may sue in any Court within the local jurisdiction of which he happens to be when his right to sue arises"—a conclusion which, I think there can be no doubt, would be quite inconsistent with the express provisions of section 17.

Miller, J., was also of the same opinion and said: "But it seems to me clear that by the phrase 'expressly or impliedly payable' we are to understand payable according to the terms of the contract, which are expressed or can be inferred on a construction of the language, or from the circumstances."

Both Judges held that illustration (b) to section 17, which is repeated as illustration (b) to section 20 of the present Code, was a useful guide in interpreting the meaning of the section, since if the plaintiff's place of residence gave rise to an implication as to the place where the money to which the suit relates was payable, A would have been entitled to sue B and C at Simla (Sir Arnold White, C. J.); or, as Miller, J., remarked the framers of the Code had an excellent opportunity of making it clear in drafting illustration (b) that a plaintiff should be allowed to sue at his place of residence to recover debts due to him in pursuance of contracts made elsewhere in the absence of a contract to the contrary, and the fact that they did not avail themselves of the opportunity supported, in his opinion, the view taken.

(1) 11 Ind. Cas 712; 34 A. 49; 8 A. L. J. 1160.
(2) 31 M. 223; 4 M. L. T. 97.

I think there is no doubt that this view is correct. The fact that the defendant had previously bought goods from the plaintiff in Mandalay and had paid for them in Mandalay, if it is a fact, though the evidence of the witnesses called by the defendant to prove transactions which had taken place outside the jurisdiction of the Court seems to throw some doubt on it, was not sufficient in my opinion to show that there was an implied contract to pay the money in Mandalay. The plaintiff's only witness says that as the plaintiff asked him to write to the defendant to pay a debt on an old on-demand note, he took a form from the plaintiff and sent it to the defendant to Taunggyi who returned it from Taunggyi duly filled in, and he then sent the defendant the old on-demand note.

This is the contract sued on and the circumstances are not sufficient in my opinion to prove an implied contract to pay in Mandalay.

I may add that, although it is true that under section 64 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, where a promissory note is payable on demand and is not payable at a specified place, no presentment is necessary in order to charge the maker thereof, the ordinary rule that a debtor must seek his creditor is not given effect to in section 70 of the same Act, which provides that a promissory note not made payable at a specified place must be presented for payment at the place of business, if any, or at the usual residence, not of the holder but of the maker.

I see no reason to interfere and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Hindu law—Alienation by Hindu female—Reversioners, consent of—Presumption as to legal necessity, strength of—Consent—Attestation mere, whether proof of consent.

Where it is clearly proved that the nearest reversioners for the time being gave their real consent to an alienation made by a Hindu female, i. e., they did so with a full knowledge of the effect of their consent upon their interests and with an intelligent intention to consent to the production of that effect, there is a strong presumption that there was legal necessity in fact, or that the alienee acted with circumspection and made inquiries which induced the honest belief that such legal necessity did in fact exist, and the alienation is valid and binding on the actual reversioners if the said presumption is not rebutted by very cogent proof. [p. 615, col. 1.]

Mere attestation of the deed of transfer is not sufficient proof of consent to the alienation, there must be clear proof of real consent. [p. 615, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated the 6th September 1916.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, Pandit Jagmohan Nath Chak and Pandit Harkaran Nath Misra, for the Appellants.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These four appeals arise out of two suits which were tried together by the Additional Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki. The defendants in both the suits consisted of the same parties, 16 defendants in all. These defendants represent a joint family and the principal member of the family who figures in these cases is one Suraj Bali. He is the defendant who has given evidence in the case and professes to know the full details of the transactions which are called in question. There are two sets of plaintiffs. One suit was filed by a plaintiff Ram Adhin alone. That suit was numbered 21/35 of 1916 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. The claim of Ram Adhin was decreed in part and both parties appealed to the District Judge against the decision of the Subordinate Judge. Those appeals have been called up to this Court for decision. In the other suit which was numbered 20/34 of 1916, there were six plaintiffs, the principal ones being Ram Dat and Ram Ratan. These claims were brought for the recovery of shares of certain immoveable property which once belonged to a person named Dal Chand. Dal Chand died many years before these suits were brought. The exact date of his decease has not been ascertained, but there is reason to believe that he died at least 30 years before the present cases were instituted. Dal Chand left two widows Musammat Hansa and Musammat Janaka and he also left a son named Asharfi Lal, who died very soon after he came into possession of his father's property. Musammat Hansa and Janaka both lived long after the decease of Asharfi Lal. Janaka was the mother of Asharfi Lal and it seems that after the latter's death she took possession of the estate, but admitted her co-widow Musammat Hansa to possession over the property. Hansa died before Musammat Janaka and the latter died in the year 1904. The precise date of Janaka's death was one of the matters in dispute in the lower Court and was of importance, because one of the pleas set up by way of defence was that both the suits were barred by limitation, having been brought more than 12 years after the date of Musammat Janaka's death. The plaintiffs in the two suits claimed to be the reversioners who were entitled to the property after Janaka's death. Of the property which was in possession of this lady the plaintiff Ram Adhin claims a one-third share whilst the plaintiffs in the other suit, that is to say Ram Dat and others, claim the remaining two-thirds.

The main defence put forward by the defendants was a defence of title based upon a conveyance which was executed in favour of one of the defendants Balwant on the 1st of December 1897. This deed is marked Exhibit A 10. It was executed by two persons, namely, Ram Adhin the plaintiff in one of the suits before me and the widow Musammat Janaka. The document was registered on the 2nd of December 1897 and the case for the defendants shortly put is this, namely, that by this deed of sale they acquired an absolute title to the property in dispute and that the plaintiffs are not in a position to maintain any claim for recovery of any portion of it. As against the plaintiff Ram Adhin it is pleaded that he was a party to this transfer and cannot now be allowed to impeach it. As against the other plaintiffs Ram Dat and Ram Ratan, the defence was that they were also debarred from bringing this suit inasmuch as their fathers, two men named Baij Nath and Debi Din respectively, were attesting witnesses to the deed of transfer just named and had given their consent as reversioners to the transfer which was made by Musammat Janaka. The other plaintiffs in the suit to which Ram Dat and Ram Ratan were parties were said to have no title to the property as reversioners, as they were lower in degree than the reversioners who were in existence at the time when Musammat Janaka died.

The Court of first instance decreed both the claims in part. Dealing with the document of transfer of the 1st of December 1897 the Subordinate Judge came to the opinion that a part of the consideration represented debts which had been incurred by Musammat Janaka for legal necessity, and decrees were given subject to the payment by the plaintiffs of their shares of the sum so found. With regard to the suit in which Ram Dat and five others were concerned, the Subordinate Judge held that only the first two plaintiffs Ram Dat and Ram Ratan had any claim to a share in the property. The claims of the other plaintiffs were dismissed on the ground that they had no title. There are cross-appeals against the decisions in each of the two suits and it will be convenient to deal with the cases together.

I will take first the appeals filed by the defendants which are respectively No. 158 of 1916 and No. 29 of 1917. Three points have been argued on behalf of the defendant-appellants in these two appeals, the first being the question of limitation. The point taken for the appellants is that the lower Court ought to have found that the claims were time-barred. The limitation which governs both the suits began to run admittedly from the date of Musammat Janaka's death. It was the case for the defendants that Janaka died on the 25th of March 1904 and that as these suits were not brought till the 6th of April 1916 they had been put in after the expiry of the period of 12 years. On the other hand the case for the plaintiffs was that Musammat Janaka died on the 15th of April 1904 and that the suits were consequently just within time. So far as this question of limitation is concerned, I think the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge was perfectly correct and that the defendants-appellants cannot hope to succeed here on this issue. A good deal of criticism has been offered concerning the evidence which was put forward by the plaintiffs in the Court below to establish the date of Musammat Janaka's death. I do not think it necessary for me to discuss all this evidence, or to consider the question whether some of it, and in particular an entry in the Chaukidar's register of deaths, was admissible in evidence. There is one piece of evidence which, in my opinion, is conclusive of the matter and that is the statement of the plaintiffs' witness No. 5, the village Patwari, a man named Ram Adhin. It is proved beyond all doubt that very shortly after the death of Musammat Janaka, a claim for mutation was made in the Revenue Courts in respect of her property. The original record of these proceedings was before the Subordinate Judge, and Exhibit 3 on the record is a certified copy of the statement which was made by the Patwari Ram Adhin before the Revenue Court. Ram Adhin in his evidence in the Court below stated that, some 5 or 6 days after the death of Musammat Janaka, he was taken to the Tahsil by the plaintiff Ram Adhin. He deposes that an application for mutation was made and that his statement was recorded in connection with that application. According to what we find in Exhibit 3, the copy of the statement made by the Patwari in the mutation case, Musammat Janaka died on the 15th of April 1904. As the learned Subordinate Judge observes this is a very important piece of evidence for it cannot be suggested that at the time these mutation proceedings were taken, it was to the interest of anybody and least of all to the interest of this Patwari to make a false statement regarding the date of Musammat Janaka's death. There can, I think, be no reason whatever for doubting the statement of the Patwari to the effect that he made this statement only a few days after Janaka had died and while the event was still fresh in his memory. I am satisfied, therefore, that for the purposes of this case it must be taken that Musammat Janaka died as deposed to by the Patwari on the 15th of April 1904 and that consequently the suits were within time. I need only add that the evidence put forward by the defendants in support of their case relating to the date of Janaka's death consisted of the statement of a solitary witness, a man named Mahabir. I regard his evidence as absolutely untrustworthy and consider that the Subordinate Judge was right in rejecting it.

I may deal here shortly with a defence by way of estoppel which was raised against the two plaintiffs Ram Dat and Ram Ratan. It was argued that these men in the year 1911 received from the defendant Suraj Bali grants of land in consideration of their giving up any claims they professed to have to a share of the property which had been in Janaka's possession. Two documents were produced on behalf of the defence, namely, Exhibits A 18 and A 19. These documents show that grants of 4 bighas were made (1) to Ram Dat and (2) to Ram Ratan and his brother Sant Bakhsh, who has since died. The plaintiff Ram Dat gave evidence as to the transactions evidenced by these two documents. He admitted that these deeds had been executed and that these grants had been made, but his story was that they had been in consideration of his and Ram Ratan's undertaking not to sell their rights of redemption with respect to certain property which was held in mortgage by the defendant Suraj Bali. On the other hand, the defence produced three witnesses for the purpose of showing that these grants were made with the object of buying off claims which Ram Dat and Ram Ratan threatened to make in respect of the property now in dispute. The learned Judge of the Court below disbelieved the evidence produced for the defence on this issue and I am satisfied that his decision was correct. The man who gave the most detailed evidence regarding this part of the case was the defendants' witness Lalta. He deposed that in consequence of the threats which were being made by Ram Dat and Ram Ratan it was decided to have the matter settled amicably between them and Suraj Bali. Lalta says that he and two other men were called in as Punches to settle the dispute and that it was on their suggestion that Suraj Bali made these grants of 4 bighas to Ram Dat and Ram Ratan. This witness Lalta fared badly in cross-examination, and as for the evidence of Puttu Lal and Ram Prasad it was, if anything, worse than that of Lalta. In short the whole story told by these witnesses seems on the face of it to have been concocted for the purposes of this case. We are asked to believe that Ram Prasad who was one of the Punches and the other man Puttu Lal, who also acted in the same capacity, decided this dispute between the parties without knowing what the dispute was about. As is pointed out by the Court below, there is not a word in either of the documents Exhibit A 18 or A 19 relating to the grants of these lands to indicate in any way that this property was given for the purpose of satisfying the claims of Ram Dat and Ram Ratan with respect to the property now in dispute. It was on the pleadings for the defendants to establish the estoppel against these two plaintiffs. I agree with the Court below that they have failed to do so.

I come now to what is really the principal issue in the case. It has been mentioned that Ram Adhin was a party to the document Exhibit A10, which was executed on the 1st of December 1897. It is also proved, and that fact is no longer in dispute, that this conveyance was attested by Ram Adhin's two brothers Baij Nath and Debi Din. Baij Nath is dead and is now represented by Ram Dat, the first plaintiff in one of the suits. Debi Din is likewise dead and was represented in the same suit by his two sons Ram Ratan and Sant Bakhsh, of whom the latter died after the suit was instituted. The defendants' plea was that by reason of Ram Adhin joining in the execution of this deed of transfer and by reason of the fact that Baij Nath and Debi Din attested the document the transfer is binding and cannot be called in question either by Ram Adhin himself or by the representatives of his two brothers Baij Nath and Debi Din.

It is now admitted that at the time when Musammat Janaka died Baij Nath, Ram Adhin and Debi Din, who were all brothers, were the nearest reversioners to the last male owner of this property. It was indeed sought to be made out in the Court below that there existed a family custom by which not only the nearest reversioners but also the more remote reversioners were all admitted to succeed together, and it was on the strength of this custom that three of the plaintiffs in the suit brought by Ram Dat and others were joined as parties. The object of raising this plea of custom was of course to show that Baij Nath, Ram Adhin and Debi Din between them could not by their consent affect the interests of other reversioners who were entitled to succeed with them. However, it is sufficient to say that no reliable evidence of this unusual custom was produced before the Court below. The Subordinate Judge found that no such custom existed and although an attempt has been made to press the point here it was only very faintly argued. I dismiss this part of the case at once with the remark that no custom of this kind was established.

We have it, therefore, that at the time when the succession opened the three reversioners who would have been entitled to the property once belonging to Asharfi Lal were Ram Adhin and his two brothers Baij Nath and Debi Din; and what we have to consider now is the legal effect of these persons having taken part in the execution of the sale-deed upon which the defendants base their title. Ram Adhin, as has already been said, was one of the executants of this document, while it is proved beyond all doubt that Baij Nath and Debi Din affixed their signatures to the deed as attesting witnesses. Consequently the defence is that the consent of the nearest reversioners having been obtained to this transfer long before the succession opened, the validity of the transfer can no longer be called in question. The law on this part of the case may for the sake of convenience be briefly referred to here. It has, in my opinion, been very clearly expounded in the judgment of a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court reported as Debi Prosad Chowdhry v. Golap Bhagat (1). It was there held that an alienation made by way of mortgage by a Hindu widow of a portion of the estate of her deceased husband, without proof either of legal necessity or of reasonable inquiry and honest belief as to its existence, but with the consent of the next reversioner for the time being, is valid and binding on the actual reversioner if the presumption of legal necessity or of reasonable inquiry and honest belief raised by such consent is not rebutted by more cogent proof. Where the consent of the nearest reversioners is given to an alienation made by a Hindu female the consent is evidence, and strong evidence, to show either that there was legal necessity in fact, or that the transferee acted with circumspection and made inquiries which induced the honest belief that such legal necessity did in fact exist. Before this presumption can be raised, it must be well established as a fact that the consent of the reversioners was given to the transaction. Mere attestation of the deed of transfer is not sufficient proof of consent to the alienation. There must be clear proof of real consent, and for this purpose it is necessary to show that the consent was given with a knowledge of its effect upon the interest of the person who gave it and it should, moreover, be established that there was an intelligent intention to consent to the production of that effect. The strength of presumption does, of course, vary with the circumstances and would, for example, be much stronger in the case where the reversioner was actually a party to the conveyance than in the case where he merely signed the document as an attesting witness. In the cases now before me we have it that one of the parties, namely, Ram Adhin, joined in executing the deed. Then again the presumption arising from consent would be very much stronger in cases where it was shown that consideration was given for the consent of the reversioners. In the present case an attempt was made by the defendants to show that the two attesting witnesses Debi Din and Baij Nath were paid Rs. 500 each in consideration of their consent to the transaction. But I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that this is a point upon which the defendants' case broke down. It will be necessary now to discuss the evidence in some detail, but it is to be observed that the record is for the most part a welter of perjury and it is almost impossible to extract the few grains of truth which lie hidden under a huge mass of false testimony. There are, however, certain circumstances which assist us in coming to a decision upon which side the balance of truth lies. Of the persons who took part in the execution of this document only Ram Adhin and the defendant Suraj Bali are alive. All the attesting witnesses, four in number, are dead. There is in addition the evidence of the scribe, a man named Mohammad Ishaq, who drew up the deed and who was examined as a witness for the defence. According to Mohammad Ishaq's evidence upon which I do not wish to lay any great stress, although the Subordinate Judge seems to have accepted it, the terms of this document of transfer were fully explained not only to the executants Janaka and Ram Adhin but also to the two attesting witnesses Baij Nath and Debi Din. It is probable that this document was read over and explained to the parties, but it seems to me, after a consideration of some of the other facts which have been brought to light, that there was very little need to explain the operation of this deed of transfer to Ram Adhin and his two brothers, for I am convinced from other evidence in the case that they knew perfectly well what was being done and what the result of the transaction on their own interests was likely to be.

Ram Adhin has given evidence in the case, and all that I can say about his statement is that it is a tissue of falsehoods from beginning to end. He has lied in the most unblushing way and given a denial to practically every fact which was suggested for the purpose of showing that he was fully cognizant of all that took place when the sale-deed was written out and registered. It is to be noted that the deed of transfer conveys not only the property which was in possession of Musammat Janaka but also a certain small share amounting to $1\frac{1}{2}$ pies which belonged to Ram Adhin himself and which he had acquired in a pre-emption suit to which the defendant Suraj Bali was also a party. Ram Adhin got this 1½ pies under a decree by which he was made liable to pay Rs. 900 for the privilege of pre empting. There is no doubt that he borrowed this money from the defendant Suraj Bali in order to deposit it in Court and that at the date of the execution of this sale-deed this 1½-pies share stood mortgaged to Suraj Bali for Rs. 900, which the latter had advanced by way of a loan.

A few remarks regarding the contents of the deed will not be out of place here, for I have to record my emphatic dissent from the finding which the Subordinate Judge has come to, namely, that the intention and the operation of this deed was to transfer only the life-interest which was held by Musammat Janaka as a Hindu female. That opinion is utterly erroneous and I find some difficulty in following the reasoning by which the Subordinate Judge arrived at this conclusion. If there ever was a document in which the language clearly imported the intention to transfer an absolute estate and not a mere life-interest, this is that document. It would, I think, be superfluous for me to elaborate the point by referring to the various clauses in the deed. It is sufficient for me to say that it was stipulated that the purchaser was to redeem the mortgages already existing on the property and was to take possession as a proprietor. And further it is important to note that in the document it was declared that the sale was being effected with the consent of the heirs and relations (warisan o aizzae) of the family. I am satisfied, therefore, that it never occurred to anybody acquainted with the negotiations which ended in the execution of this deed that Musammat Janaka was only transferring the minor interest in the property which she had as a Hindu female. As for Ram Adhin's story that he knew nothing about this transaction and that he was only interested so far as the transfer of his own share was concerned, this has been rejected with scorn by the Subordinate Judge, and rightly so. It is an absolutely untrue story and I do not propose to say anything more about it except this, that it is proved that a considerable time before the deed was executed the stamp for the conveyance had been purchased by Ram Adhin himself. No one could possibly accept what Ram Adhin says now, namely, that he and his two brothers, the attesting witnesses, knew absolutely nothing about the circumstances attending the transfer of Janaka's share. It is proved that not only did they know that Janaka was transferring but it is shown that Debi Din and Baij Nath took a much more lively interest in the proceedings than that of mere attesting witnesses. Ram Adhin presented the document for registration on the 2nd of December 1897 and Baij Nath and Debi Din both attended the registration office and assisted in the identification proceedings. So far as Ram Adhin's own interest in this document is concerned, I have already mentioned that his share was mortgaged to the defendants' family for a sum of Rs. 900. Ram Adhin has had to admit that when this document was executed he was paid a sum of Rs. 1,400 although Suraj Bali stated that the amount was Rs. 1,470. Ram Adhin asked the Court to believe that the sum of Rs. 1,400 received by him represented the value of his 1½-pies share. On the contrary Suraj Bali's evidence was that out of this sum Rs. 500 had been paid to Ram Adhin for his consent to the transfer of Janaka's share. While I am not prepared to accept many statements of Suraj Bali as gospel in this case, I am inclined to believe that this part of the story is true. I do not believe that the 1½-pies share which Ram Adhin was disposing of was worth Rs. 1,400. As I have said above Ram Adhin got it under a pre-emption decree and paid only Rs. 900 for it; and I think it highly probable that this sum of Rs. 900 represented as much as the property was worth. I am disposed, therefore, to hold that so far as Ram Adhin is concerned, he was paid a sum of Rs. 500 for joining as a co-executant in this deed.

The case against the two attesting witnesses Baij Nath and Debi Din is of course not so strong, but there is other evidence which to my mind excludes any theory that they were ignorant of the terms of the transaction and of what the result on their interests would be. I have mentioned in an earlier part of the judgment that Dal Chand, the man who once owned the share in dispute, died more than 30 years before these cases were brought. His son Asharfi Lal succeeded him only for a short time and after his death there were left three persons at least who had claims to be maintained out of this property, namely, Dal Chand's two widows and Musammat Makhana, the widow of Ram Charan who was a son of Dal Chand and predeceased his father. The plaintiffs' own evidence establishes one fact beyond all doubt, and that is that after the death of Asharfi Lal Ram Adhin and his two brothers took over the management of the property which was in the hands of these widows. There can be no doubt that Ram Adhin, Baij Nath and Debi Din all lived as members of a joint family. They occupied a house close to the house inhabited by the widows and we have the statements of two daughters of Dal Chand, namely, Musammat Lallo and Musammat Chhogar, to show that Ram Adhin and his brothers looked after the whole of the management of the estate. It is impossible therefore to imagine that during the years that elapsed after the deaths of Dal Chand and his son Asharfi Lal these three brothers could possibly have remained in ignorance of the condition of the family left by Dal Chand. Dal Chand, so far as I can gather from the record, cannot have been in very affluent circumstances. He had but a small share in this village and he had a very large family consisting of six daughters and two sons, one of whom predeceased him. The defendants gave evidence to show that at the time when Dal Chand died, his two daughters Musammat Lallo and Chhogar were not married and that money had to be borrowed by the widows to defray the marriage expenses. A strong attempt was made on behalf of the plaintiffs to make out that these two girls were married before their father's death and the two women themselves gave evidence to that effect, which the Subordinate Judge has rejected. I think after a careful perusal of the record that he was right in doing so, for the evidence of these two women, apart from its being highly interested, is extremely vague and unsatisfactory. They have no notion of time or of numbers and the impression which I have gathered from a perusal of their statements agrees with the impression which was made upon the mind of the lower Court, namely, that they had been tutored and put forward to give false evidence in the case. On the other hand, the defence seems to me to be more reliable in this respect and it indicates these two girls were married after their father's death. I have mentioned these facts for the purpose of showing that these widows, after they came into possession of this property, were in all probability pressed for money and that was a fact which was well understood by Ram Adhin and his two brothers who were looking after the widows' interest.

Further, there is abundance of evidence on the record to show that various documents executed by the widows for the purpose of raising loans were attested by Ram Adhin and in one, if not in two instances, there is proof that one of the other brothers also attested documents of a similar kind. Ram Adhin was confronted with several documents to which he had put his name as a witness and was called upon to explain why he had attested them. He took refuge in a lie by saying that he either remembered or knew nothing about the circumstances. These facts appear to me to lend support to the conclusion at which I am arriving, namely, that Ram Adhin and both his brothers were fully alive to the legal consequence of the execution of this deed of transfer, Exhibit A 10.

I now come to what appears to be the most conclusive piece of evidence, which is to be found in two documents on record, namely Exhibits A30 and A31. I have in an earlier part of the judgment referred to the mutation proceedings which took place in the Revenue Courts after the death of Musammat Janaka. In the course of those proceedings Ram Adhin was examined in the Revenue Court and Exhibit A 30 is a certified copy of his statement. The original record was, as I have mentioned, before the Court below. In the course of that statement Ram Adhin deposed as follows:— "About four years ago Musammat Janaka sold the property to Suraj Bali of Gursel and she sold it with our consent (ham logon ki razamandi se)." He made a further statement saying, "We people have made no claim", and then he wound up by adding, "we are about to sue for cancellation of the sale-deed." It is important to observe who are meant by the 'we' referred to in the statement. This is explained by Exhibit A31, from which it appears that Baij Nath, Debi Din (the brothers of Ram Adhin), Mata Din and Ganga Ram were also examined before the Revenue Court. Mata Din was one of the collateral relations of Asharfi Lal and he is now represented by Bachchu Lal, who is the sixth plaintiff in the suit brought by Ram Dat and others. Ganga Ram, according to the pedigree, is the man who appears in the same suit as plaintiff No. 4. These four men were examined by the Revenue Court and Exhibit A 31 is a certified record of their statements. What they said is this: "Our story is the same story as has been told by Ram Adhin." The record shows that the signature of each one of the four persons is attached to the deposition. These documents were pressed strongly on the attention of the learned Subordinate Judge. He admitted that so far as Ram Adhin was concerned, his statement Exhibit A 30 was a strong piece of evidence against him for the purpose of showing that he had consented to the transfer with a full knowledge of all the facts. But so far as Baij Nath and Debi Din were concerned, the Subordinate Judge treated the Exhibit A31 as not containing any admission made by them to the effect that they too had consented to the transfer. In this the Subordinate Judge appears to me to be clearly wrong. There can be no doubt whatever that Ram Adhin's statement was made in the presence and hearing of these four others and that they expressed their assent to every statement which was made by him, including the statement that they had been consenting parties to the transfer made by Musammat Janaka in favour of Suraj Bali. I can conceive no stronger evidence of a true and full consent on the part of Debi Din and Baij Nath than what is contained in this deposition which was made more than seven years after the transfer had taken place; and I decline altogether to accept the view taken by the Subordinate Judge that Debi Din and Baij Nath, although they put their names as witnesses to the deed, cannot be treated as having had that full knowledge which is essential in order to make out a case of real consent. Indeed in dealing with this question the Subordinate Judge has involved himself in contradiction. I find in one part of his judgment that he says that he has no doubt that Ram Adhin and his brothers were aware on the 1st of December 1897 that Musammat Janaka was about to sell her property, and he further says that they were well aware that they were the next reversioners and that their action in connection with the execution of this document amounted to more than a mere attestation. Afterwards, however, he proceeds to evolve a theory for the purpose of showing that, although these reversioners were aware that a transfer was being made by Musammat Janaka, they must have been under the impression that what she was transferring to Suraj Bali was merely her limited interest in the property. In the earlier part of his judgment on this issue the learned Judge set down the law regarding consent of the reversioners quite correctly and in much the same sense as that in which I have referred to it above. But having in some way or other come to the opinion that the document represented only a transfer of Musammat Janaka's limited interest, the Subordinate Judge proceeded at a later stage to lay down some rules of Hindu Law which have no merit except perhaps that of novelty. He says that in dealing with questions of consent by reversioners to transfers made by Hindu females there are two kinds of consent to be considered, namely, one where the reversioners assent to the alienation by a widow of her limited interest. Where this is the case, says the Subordinate Judge, the consent of reversioners is evidence of the propriety of the transaction and of the legal necessity. Then he goes on to say that the other kind of consent is where the reversioners agree to the destruction of their rights in expectancy and allow the widow to pass absolute title. From this statement it appears to me that the Subordinate Judge has not properly understood the law on this subject. I know of no authority for the proposition invented by the learned Judge of the Court below that the reversioners' consent is required to the alienation by a widow of her limited estate in the property of her husband. I have already expressed my opinion before, that no question arises here of the transfer of life-interest. On the face of it the deed clearly conveys a full estate and was intended to do so.

Turning now to the two statements Exhibits A30 and A31, Ram Adhin, as might be expected from the tenor of the rest of his evidence, attempted to give the lie to his previous statement. He was confronted with his own statement as recorded in Exhibit A30 and he had the impudence to assert that the record was not correct. He asked the Court to believe that the statement he made before the Revenue Officer was that the transfer had been made not with, but without, his consent. Bachchu Lal the sixth plaintiff in the other case, who is the son of Mata Din, one of the other men who made a statement to the Revenue Court in Exhibit 31, also had the audacity to depose in the same terms as Ram Adhin. This evidence may be disregarded altogether as being entirely false. With regard to Bachchu Lal the only observation I need make for the purpose of explaining his false evidence is that he is the person who has found the funds for the prosecution of both these suits with which I am now dealing. We have it then that Ram Adhin, Debi Din and Baij Nath in the year 1897 were fully aware of all the dealings by the two widows with the property which had been left by Dal Chand. They were themselves parties as witnesses to some of the transfers which had taken place and they were thoroughly acquainted with the financial situation in which these ladies found themselves. We find that with this knowledge they took part in the execution of this deed of the 1st of December 1897 and that more than seven years afterwards, when there was really no occasion for them to make any statement against their own interest, they assured the Revenue Officer who was dealing with the mutation application that this sale in the year 1897 had been effected with their consent. I can imagine no proof more conclusive than this of a consent which the law regards as binding upon the persons who gave it and who at the time the consent was given were the persons entitled to take the property on Musammat Janaka's death. It is a fact to be considered that, although Musammat Janaka lived on from the year 1897 till the year 1904, none of these reversioners ever took any steps to have the alienation set aside, and in fact it is only when limitation has all but expired that we find them coming into Court, 19 years after the alienation has taken place, for the purpose of having it set aside in their favour. For these reasons I hold that the defendants here have succeeded in establishing, as against Ram Adhin, Debi Din and Baij Nath, that being the nearest reversioners they gave a full and intelligent consent to the transfer which was made in December 1897, and on the authorities I hold that this transfer is binding and cannot be called in question either by Ram Adhin himself, who was one of the executants of the deed or by the other plaintiffs Ram Dat and Ram Ratan, who claim through Debi Din and Baij Nath respectively. In my opinion the Subordinate Judge ought to have held that the transaction was binding and ought to have dismissed both these suits. In view of these findings it is not necessary for me to enter into a discussion regarding the proof of legal necessity, for each of the items which go to make up the consideration of the deed in question. Once the factum of consent by the nearest reversioners has been established and once it has been proved that this consent was given with full knowledge of its effect and with a thorough appreciation of all the circumstances in which it took place, the presumption is so strong as to be practically conclusive. I do not, of course, intend to say that such a presumption is ever conclusive, but it must be overturned by very cogent evidence; and in these suits I can find no evidence of this description whatever. Even the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs will hardly contend that Ram Adhin's statement can in any way be treated as cogent evidence which can be relied on for the purpose of overturning the presumption. I hold, therefore, that the decrees of the Court below are wrong and must be reversed Both the suits should have been dismissed and I now dismiss them both with costs.

The result, therefore, is that the appeals filed by the defendants, namely, First Civil Appeal No 158 of 1916 and First Civil Appeal No. 29 of 1917, are allowed with costs and the appeals filed by the plaintiffs, namely, First Civil Appeal No. 138 of 1916 and First Civil Appeal No. 30 of 1917, are dismissed with costs.

Appeal allowed.

MA TIN—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 6, O. XXIII, r. 1—Death of defendant before judgment—Judgment, whether can be pronounced—Withdrawal of suit, whether can be allowed.

The provisions of Order XXII, rule 6, of the Civil Procedure Code, though they cover the case where a judgment is delivered in ignorance of the fact that a party has died between the conclusion of the hearing and the delivery of judgment, also provide for the delivery of judgment where the Court is aware of such death, and they make it clear that the death of a party is not sufficient cause for refusing to deliver judgment or allowing the withdrawal of a suit which has been completed in every respect except for such delivery of judgment. [p. 620, col. 2; p. 621, col. 1.]

The provisions of Order XXIII, rule 1, of the Civil Procedure Code should not be arbitrarily applied. [p. 620, col. 2.]

Mr. S. Mukerjee, for the Applicant.

Mr. C. G. S. Pillay, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—One Ma Tin filed a suit in the District Court, Magwe, sitting at Yenangyaung, against her husband, Maung Po Kan, for divorce and for partition of property. The suit was defended and proceeded to trial, witnesses were examined and arguments heard, and on the 22nd December 1916 was adjourned for judgment till the 3rd January 1917. On that date it was again adjourned for the same purpose till the 20th January 1917. It appears that on the 17th of January 1917 the defendant died, and on the 20th of January the plaintiff applied for leave to withdraw the suit. On this the Judge passed the following order:—"Plaintiff applies to withdraw the suit on the ground that the defendant died on the 17th January 1917. She applies under Order XXIII, rule 1, and asks for permission to institute a fresh suit in respect of the property. Under Order XXIII, rule 1 (ii), plaintiff is permitted to withdraw from her suit on payment of the defendant's costs, with liberty to institute a fresh suit in respect of the property claimed." On the 26th of January one Ma Kin Nyun, claiming to be adopted daughter of the deceased, applied for pronouncement of judgment making her legal representative in place of the deceased. This application was refused and she now comes to this Court in revision under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The application is in effect that the District Judge acted with material irregularity in allowing the withdrawal of the suit without sufficient grounds. The Judge's order does not state why permission was granted to the plaintiff to withdraw the suit. It is clear that clause (2) (a) of Order XXIII, rule 1, did not apply and that he can only have given permission under clause (2) (b). This clause lays down that permission may be given where the Court is satisfied that there are other sufficient grounds for allowing a plaintiff to institute a fresh suit for the subject-matter of the suit or part of a claim. It is clear that the meaning of this is that a suit may be withdrawn where there are sufficient grounds for allowing the plaintiff to withdraw from a suit in order to institute a fresh suit for the subject-matter thereof, or to abandon part of a claim continuing the suit as far as the balance of the claim is concerned. It is obvious here that the defendant having died, there could be no question of the plaintiff bringing a fresh suit for a divorce, nor did she desire to abandon a part of her claim continuing the suit for the balance. It would seem, therefore, that Order XXIII, rule 1, under which the Judge purported to act, had no application. Possibly the Judge was under the impression that the suit abated upon the death of the defendant, but if this was so, he would seem to have been in error in view of the terms of Order XXII, rule 6, and if the suit abated, this was clearly not a reason for allowing its withdrawal. The provisions of Order XXIII, rule 1, are not to be arbitrarily applied. They have been framed to allow a plaintiff to obtain an adjudication where, owing to some formal defect, or for other sufficient grounds, which must be bona fide grounds, urged in good time and not to the prejudice of the defendant, the plaintiff would but for this rule fail in his suit and be unable to obtain the assistance of the Courts in enforcing a just claim. The provisions of Order XXII, rule 6, though no doubt they cover the case where a judgment is delivered in ignorance of the fact that a party has died between the conclusion of the hearing and the delivery of the decision, also undoubtedly provide for the delivery of judgment where the Court is aware of such death, and they seem to me to make it clear that the death of a party is not sufficient cause for refusing to deliver judgment or allowing the withdrawal of a suit which has been completed in every respect except for such delivery of judgment. It was pointed out in Ramacharya v. Anantacharya (1) that the practice in English Courts of Equity was in such cases to disregard the fact of the death of a party occurring while the Court was considering, and to deliver judgment and draw up the decree as though he was still living; and the judgment of the Lord Chancellor of Ireland is quoted with approval in which it is stated that "nothing is better settled than that where a cause is heard and merely stands over for consideration, the Court will pronounce judgment though the plaintiff or defendant died"; and in Surendro Keshub Roy v. Doorgasoondery Dossee (2), quoted in the same case, the Privy Council, notwithstanding the death of one of the parties pending consideration, delivered judgment and remitted the case to the Indian Courts for disposal without requiring the record to be amended.

It is argued for the respondent that Order XXII, rule 6, merely lays down that judgment may in such case, i.e., after the death of one of the parties, be pronounced. The rule is not mandatory and this Court should not interfere if the Court fails to pronounce judgment, as a discretion is vested in it to deliver or not to deliver judgment. But this discretion must be exercised judicially, and I think it is clear that the Judge did not have the provisions of Order XXII, rule 6, in his mind at all, nor did he purport to act under that rule. The case of Mahipat Shamla v. Nathu Vithoba (3) may be referred to. It appears to be on the face of it desirable that judgment should be delivered in the present suit, which will then decide various matters in dispute between the parties by which the legal representatives of the defendant will be bound, whereas, otherwise, it will be necessary for one or the other of the parties to bring a fresh suit and to go largely into the same matters though upon a different cause of action.

In allowing the plaintiff to withdraw her suit, the Court acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction with material irregularity within the meaning of section 115 (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure, and there will be an order setting aside the order of the District Court allowing the suit to be withdrawn and directing the Court to proceed to deliver judgment.

The respondent will pay the costs of this application.

DEOTA DIN—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Mortgage to two persons—Shares in mortgage-money not specified, effect of—Co-mortgagees, position of—Presumption—Redemption, partial, effect of.

Where money is advanced by two co-mortgagees without any specification of shares, the presumption is that each of them advances half the money; and if one of them accepts satisfaction of his interest as mortgagee from the mortgagor, the result is that the only mortgagee interest outstanding is the interest of the other co-mortgagee which extends to one-half of the mortgage-money. [p. 622, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 22nd May 1917, affirming the order of the Probationary Munsif, Gonda, dated the 30th April 1917.

Babu Basdeo Lal, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is up for admission under Order XLI, rule 11. I have heard the learned Advocate for the appellants and I am satisfied that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is correct.

The suit was brought by two plaintiffs who are the appellants here, namely, Ram Datt and Ghirrao. The defendant was one Deota Din and the suit was for possession of certain plots of land and for mesne profits.

It appears that these plaintiffs claimed title under a mortgage which was executed in their favour by one Sukha, who was an occupancy tenant.

The mortgage was a mortgage with possession and was executed on the 11th of January 1912. After the date of this deed the mortgagees were dispossessed by the present respondent Deota Din. They brought a suit against him for recovery of possession and won their case. In that case Deota Din put forward a plea that Sukha had no interest in the property. Later on, that is to say in the year 1915, Sukha the mortgagor executed a deed of gift in favour of Deota Din by which he handed over all his property including the plots which are now in dispute. After this Sukha brought a suit against Deota Din for cancellation of the deed of gift. While this suit was pending, Sukha died and the case was continued by his legal representative who is one of the present plaintiffs, namely, Ram Datt. Eventually Ram Datt and Deota Din settled the case by a compromise. Ram Datt surrendered his interest in all the property of Sukha, including the plots in dispute, in consideration of a payment of a sum of money by Deota Din. Now the present suit has been brought by Ram Datt and Ghirrao mortgagees.

On the facts I have mentiond Ram Datt would appear to be completely out of Court, but he has sought to maintain that when he made the ccmpromise with Deota Din to which I have just referred, he had no intention of surrendering his rights as mortgagee. The suggestion is that all he parted with was his interest in the property as the representative and heir of Sukha. The learned Judge, on the other hand, and rightly in my opinion, has held that Ram Datt intended to divest himself of all his interest in the property in consideration of the money which he was to receive from Deota Din. I am quite clear, therefore, that Ram Datt had no locus standi to maintain the suit for possession. On the other hand Ghirrao, who was no party to the compromise, can claim that his interest in the property has not been affected and the Courts below have given effect to his claim and upheld the mortgage to the extent of one-half. Relief has been given to Ghirrao on these terms.

It has been argued here again that Ram Datt did not, by the compromise, divest himself of his interest as a mortgagee in this property, but I am unable to agree. The terms of the sulehnama, which I have had read to me, do not suggest that there was any reservation by Ram Datt of any interest in the property.

Then it is said that Ram Datt had no power by entering into this compromise to affect the legal relation which exists between the mortgagor and the joint mortgagees. I am not disposed to yield to this argument. It seems to me that when the money was advanced without any specification of shares, the presumption is that each of the co-mortgagees advanced half the money, and as one of them has accepted satisfaction of his interest as mortgagee from Deota Din, the result is that the only mortgagee interest now outstanding is the interest of Ghirrao, which extends to one-half of the mortgage-money. The decision of the Court below is, in my opinion, correct.

I dismiss the appeal.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, para. 1—Arbitration—Court acting as arbitrator—Award, finality of—Appeal, whether lies.

The general principle is that an award is final and cannot be questioned except upon such grounds, as corruption or an illegality apparent upon the face of the award, as are set out in the Second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, and there is no reason for departing from the principle where the Court itself has been appointed and has accepted the office of arbitrator. [p. 623, col. 2.]

Where the Court itself is appointed to act as an arbitrator, no separate award need be passed inviting the parties to put in objections before passing a decree: such an award in itself is a decree. [p. 623, col. 2.]

Where the parties to a suit agreed that after the Judge had examined the documentary evidence and inspected the ground he should give his decision without any witnesses being called, and that they would abide by his decision:

MAUNG KALA v. MAUNG MEIK.

Held, that the decision was in the nature of an award and that no appeal lay against it.

Mr. S. Mukerjee, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. G. S. Pillay, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit to recover possession of a certain piece of land, together with mesne profits. The defendant filed a written statement in which he traversed the statements in the plaint, and an issue was framed. The parties then filed a number of maps and an application, in which they stated that they agreed that after the Judge had examined the documentary evidence and inspected the ground, he should give his decision without any witnesses being called, and they agreed to abide by this decision as final. The Judge accordingly visited the site and gave the plaintiff a decree as prayed for. The defendant, Maung Kala, then appealed. The District Judge held that the Judge had been appointed sole arbiter in the dispute, and that the District Court could not question his decision. The defendant now comes to this Court in second appeal under section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It is urged that the submission by the parties did not amount to a submission to arbitration, that if it was, the award was subject to the procedure laid down in the Second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, that the Judge of the first Court exercised a double function as arbitrator and Judge and that the award did not operate by itself and ripen into a decree, that the plaint should have been dismissed upon the plaintiff-respondent's producing no evidence, that the alleged wrongful dispossession and damage claimed has not been established, and that the Judge of the lower Appellate Court should have decided the appeal upon its merits.

There appears to be good authority for the view taken by the District Court. It was held in Baikanta Nath Goswami v. Sita Nath Goswami (Sita Nath v. Baikuntha Nath) (1) that when, after the hearing of the suit had commenced before a Munsif, both parties agreed to leave the questions in dispute between them to the determination of the Court after the Court had made a local inspection, and also agreed not to raise an objection to the same or to prefer an appeal, the decision of the Munsif is in the nature of an award and that no appeal lay to the District Judge. Further that no appeal lay from the decision of the District Judge to the High Court, though the High Court might interfere under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Much the same view was taken in the Madras case of Nidamarthi Mukkanti v. Thammana Ramayya (2). At page 117 of Sanji's Law of Arbitration, 1916, it is stated that where the Court itself is appointed to act as an arbitrator, no separate award need be passed inviting the parties to put in objections before passing a decree, such an ward in itself is a decree and an objection to the award can be raised only by way of appeal against the decree to the Appellate Court. The authority for this is said to be Nimmagadda Peda Naganna, In re (3), which is not available in this Court. If the law as laid down therein is correctly summarized, this appears to dispose of the objection that the parties should be given an opportunity of putting in objections before passing a decree, and it would seem probable that any appeal could only attack the award upon the grounds set out in the Second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure as grounds for invalidating an award. It does not appear that in the District Court any such grounds were set out. The general principle is that an award is final and cannot be questioned except upon such grounds, as corruption or an illegality apparent upon the face of the award, as are set out in the Second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, and I see no reason for departing from the principle where the Court itself has been appointed and has accepted the office of arbitrator. It would seem from a perusal of the maps filed by the parties that they did sufficiently substantiate the plaintiff's case, and I think the District Court was justified in refusing to interfere.

The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal from the decree of the Second Additional District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 22nd December 1916, upholding that of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 17th January 1916.

The Hon'ble Syed Wazir Hassan and Syed Ali Mohammad, for the Appellants.

Syed Shahanshah Hussain Rizwi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Having heard Counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants in these two appeals I consider that the order of the lower Court must be set aside. The facts of the case may be briefly stated as follows:—

The plaintiffs came into Court alleging a right to redeem mortgages affecting certain property described as consisting of a 7 annas share in the village called Purania. I understand at present the matters in dispute between the parties are confined to only 6 annas out of this 7-annas share. There were two plaintiffs in the case, Farkhund Ali and Mahabir Prasad, and they claimed to have derived title to bring this suit for redemption from a person called Ali Bahadur. This Ali Bahadur was represented as having inherited the equity of redemption in 6 annas of the mortgaged property. It is perfectly true that in the pedigree which was filed with the plaint there was an error committed with respect to Ali Bahadur's relationship to one Umrao. He was shown as the son of Umrao, whereas it subsequently turned out that he was not related in this way. He was the son of Umrao's mother's sister. An application was made to the Court sometime after the trial had begun and as a result of this application the true relationship between Ali Bahadur and Umrao was set out in the plaint as amended. It is to be observed that when this order for amendment of the plaint was made, the defendants put in no plea by way of answer to the amended pleading. The inference is, therefore, that they had no answer to give. After the case had been tried out, the Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that it was established that Ali Bahadur was the heir of Umrao and that for this reason he was able to pass to the plaintiffs a good title which would enable them to maintain this suit for redemption. The result of the case was that a decree for redemption was passed on payment of a particular sum. Both parties brought an appeal to the District Judge. The plaintiffs-appellants objected to the sum which had been declared to be payable in respect of redemption. With that matter I am not concerned at present. The defendants brought an appeal and the gist of their case before the Judge was that Ali Bahadur was not heir of Umrao and that, therefore, he could not transfer to the plaintiffs a good right to redeem the property. For the first time in the history of the case the plea was put forward on behalf of these defendants-appellants that even assuming Ali Bahadur to be related to Umrao in the manner mentioned in the amended plaint, nevertheless one Qasim Hussain who was a brother of Ali Bahadur's mother was a nearer heir and would consequently exclude Ali Bahadur. The learned Judge, for reasons, which I am unable to accept, allowed this new case to be pleaded before him and eventually he gave judgment for the defendants-appellants on the ground that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that Qasim Hussain was dead and that consequently Ali Bahadur was the nearest relative of Umrao. It is complained here, and I think with justice, that the defendants-appellants were allowed to raise a new case in the Court of first appeal. The learned Judge has written a great deal explaining why he allowed this defence to be raised, but I am quite unable to follow the reasons which he gives. It cannot be pretended for a moment that the defendants were in any way prejudiced by the mistake which was made in the pedigree which was filed with the plaint. The learned Judge seems to have thought that the defendants had been misled by this pleading but I am unable to agree with him. There was before the Court a clear statement made on the 16th of July 1915 that the pedigree contained a clerical error. The true relationship of Ali Bahadur to Umrao was disclosed and, therefore, it is idle for these defendants here to contend that after this they were under any misapprehension as to the real nature of the title which Ali Bahadur was pleading. It is to be noted that in the written statement which was filed in answer to the plaint as it originally stood, these defendants did not merely deny in a general way the title which Ali Bahadur set out, but they took upon themselves the responsibility of naming certain persons who were described as the true heirs of Umrao, namely, Waris Ali and Gauhar Ali etc. Who these "etc." are is, of course, best known to the defendants. There is nothing on the record to show who they are. Perhaps it is suggested now that they include Qasim Husain. Consequently when we find that these defendants undertook to put forward a special defence and named certain persons as the heirs of Umrao they cannot now be heard to make any complaint on the ground that an erroneous pedigree was filed in the Court of first instance which had the effect of misleading them. There was nothing in the pedigree as it stood originally which could have led to the pleas in which were raised the jus tertii of "Waris Ali, Gauhar Ali, etc." I am informed by the learned Counsel for the respondents that the defence which was put forward in the lower Appellate Court in connection with the mention of Qasim Husain as a nearer heir was suggested by a statement which was made by Ali Bahadur in a Revenue Court in connection with mutation proceedings in the year 1908. A certified copy of this document is on the record Exhibit A 13. There no doubt it is stated by Ali Bahadur that his mother was Musammat Munga and that her sister was Badshah Begam and that both the ladies "had" a brother named Qasim Husain; but there is not a word in the statement to indicate that Qasim Husain was in existence at that time. It is further to be noted that Ali Bahadur was never asked a question about this matter in the course of the trial of the present suit before the Subordinate Judge and so it all comes to this that an obscure passage in the certified copy of Ali Bahadur's statement made in the year 1908 is fastened upon. Not a question is asked from Ali Bahadur in the witness-box in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, but when the case comes up before the Additional Judge in appeal we have Qasim Husain trotted out for the first time as being an heir of Umrao who stood in the way of Ali Bahadur's inheritance. Altogether it seems to me that the lower Court has erred grievously in allowing this new case to be set up and it is for this reason that I accept these appeals and set aside the decree of the Court below. As this was the only point which the learned Additional Judge decided, the result is that both these appeals, namely, Nos. 104 and 106 of 1917, will go back to the Court of the Additional Judge for disposal on the merits. Costs here and hitherto will abide the result.

Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 17—Water discharged over surplus weir of tank—Easement, right of, acquisition of.

Section 17 of the Easements Act implies that a right of easement in connection with the use of water of artificial channels or of water derived from artificial tanks or pools can be acquired by prescription. [p. 626, col. 2.]

A person can acquire a right of easement with respect to water which is discharged over the surplus weir of a tank and which flows therefrom in a defined channel, if he has been using and enjoying the water for a sufficient length of time and as a matter of right as laid down in section 17 of the Easements Act. [p. 626, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Court, Nellore, in Appeal Suit No. 234 of 1915, preferred against that of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Nellore, in Original Suit No. 281 of 1914 (Original Suit No. 538 of 1914, District Munsif's Court, Kavali).

Messrs. T. V. Venkatarama Aiyar and T. R. Vaidyanatha Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Krishnaswami Aiyangar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant is the owner of certain land, through which the water of a tank belonging to another person flows in a defined channel on to the respondents' land. The case of the appellant is that since the water that is turned into this artificial channel is what overflows the surplus weir of the tank in question, therefore no right of easement can be acquired with respect to that water. It must be noted that the owner of the tank has not raised the question, but objection was raised only by the owner of the intermediate land through which water flows before reaching the respondents' land. We think there can be no doubt that a person can acquire a right of easement with respect to water which is discharged over the surplus weir of a tank if he has been using and enjoying the water for a sufficient length of time and as a matter of right, as laid down in the Indian Easements Act.

The learned Vakil for the appellant relied very strongly on Arkwright v. Gell (1) and Wood v. Waud (2). These cases enunciate the principle that if a person in using his own land pumps out the drainage water and throws it over another's land, the person on whose land the water is so thrown, cannot acquire an easement by prescription so as to enable him to say to the person from whose land the water is allowed to come by way of drainage that he must be prevented from so altering the user of his land as will stop such drainage water flowing to the lower land. But as pointed out by Lord Abinger in Arkwright v. Gell (1), the water in that case was pumped and discharged by the owner of the dominant land for his own convenience and for temporary purposes, and he also observes that the question would be different where the owners of intermediate land tried to intercept the flow of water so discharged. Reliance has also been placed on a ruling of the Privy Council in Ramessur Persad Narain Singh v. Koonj Behari Pattuk (3), where their Lordships cited Wood v. Waud (2) with approval. The proposition laid down in Ramessur Persad Narain Singh v. Koonj Behary Pattuk (3) is to the effect that the right to enjoyment of water of an artificial channel or tank can be acquired either by grant or by some arrangement of that nature, but that a grant may be presumed in a proper case. In fact in that case, their Lordships found that there was a grant of the right to enjoyment of water discharged from a large artificial lake. Supposing this case applied, there should be no difficulty in presuming a grant in the present case.

Section 17 of the Easements Act, however, which is in force in this Presidency, implies that a right of easement in connection with the use of water of the artificial channels of of water derived from an artificial tank or pool can be acquired by prescription; and this question has been settled, so far as this Presidency is concerned, by the decision in Rayappan v. Virabhadra (4) which we have no hesitation in following. The law laid down in that case has not, so far as we are aware, been doubted hitherto. The whole gist of the learned Vakil's argument is based upon the fact that the water that flows on to the respondents' land is what he called the surplus water of the tank. But there is a substantial difference between a case of this nature and the one that is dealt with in Arkwright v. Gell (1). Here there is a tank which is fed by rain water as well as surface water from neighbouring lands, and the mere fact that the owner of the tank does not want more than a certain quantity of water and allows the rest to pass through the surplus weir, does not suggest that nobody else can acquire a right in connection with the water which is allowed to flow therefrom in a defined channel. We may further observe that the system of irrigation by means of connected tanks, which so largely prevails in this Presidency, has been in existence from time immemorial and this is indisputable proof that the law in this Presidency is not as suggested by the learned Vakil for appellant.

We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 38—Mortgage—Co-mortgagees, whether joint promisees—Payment to one co-mortgagee, whether discharges debt.

Co-mortgagees are joint promisees and the payment of the mortgage debt to one of them discharges the whole debt. [p. 628, col. 1.]

(Case-law discussed.)

In view of the difference in the conditions of social life in India and in England, it is doubtful whether and to what extent the presumption that when a claim is on a money bond to two or more obligees, they are tenants-in-common and not joint tenants of the debt with the consequence that the discharge by one obligee cannot be set up as a defence against the other obligee suing for his share of the debt, which in England prevails only in cases in which equitable relief is claimed, should have effect given to it in India. [p. 628, col. 1.]

Mr. M. Johannes, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Pillay and Pershad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's case was that he had mortgaged certain land to the two defendants and the deceased husband of the 1st defendant, that he had redeemed the mortgage by payment of the mortgage money to the 1st defendant but the 2nd defendant refused to deliver possession. The 1st defendant admitted the claim, while the 2nd defendant stated that as he had not received the mortgage money, he was entitled to retain possession of the land.

The Court of first instance held that the defendants mortgagees were partners and that the 2nd defendant was bound by the payment to the 1st defendant, and decreed the plaintiff's suit. Upon appeal the District Court apparently held that there was fraud and dismissed the suit, and the plaintiff now comes to this Court in second appeal under section 13 of the Upper Burma Civil Courts Regulation.

It is clear that neither in his written statement nor in his examination before issues did the 2nd defendant plead fraud, and there does not seem to be any suggestion throughout the evidence that the plaintiff was acting in collusion with the 1st defendant. There were in fact no grounds whatever for the conclusion arrived at by the lower Appellate Court, which was clearly wrong.

The facts are not in dispute. The mortgage document was produced and admitted, and in it, after the description of the land, it is set out that U Pa Si, Ma Po and Maung Po Mya deliver Rs. 325 to Maung Nyan Mo and receive the said lands in mortgage with possession. "If it is required to redeem the lands, the redemption shall be made only after three years from the date of execution of this document." There is the usual clause as to interference by third parties, and the document is signed by the three persons named as mortgagees.

The evidence does little more than prove the mortgage and the redemption, though it appears from it that the 2nd defendant was son-in-law of the 1st defendant and her deceased husband, that at one time they lived together and that up to the time of Maung Pa Si's death, the 2nd defendant worked with the 1st defendant. The 1st defendant said in her evidence that the 2nd defendant was merely an agent of her husband; she did not attempt to prove it, and he is clearly described in the document as mortgagee. The 2nd defendant gave evidence that the mortgage money belonged jointly to him and to his father-in-law and mother-in-law, who had a joint income and did joint business and no partition had been made up till the time of suit.

There appears to be no authority for the view taken by the Court of first instance that the defendants were partners, though they may have occupied a position analogous to that of partners. They were co-mortgagees or co-promisees and in the absence of fraud or collusion, the only question which arises is whether the mortgagor is entitled to redeem by making payment to one of them, and whether payment to a co mortgagee has the effect of discharging the joint debt. Upon this question there appears to be a difference of opinion in the Indian Courts. The latest reported case is that of Umes Chandra Banerjee v Dinabandhu Mahanti (1). It was there held that payment to one of several joint mortgagees was not a good payment as against the plaintiff and another co-mortgagee. Reliance was placed on Husainara Begum v. Rahmannessa Begum (2), in which it was stated that the principle of law applicable to cases of this description was fully explained. The explanation referred to shows that the principle is based upon the English presumption of equity, that when a claim is on a money-bond to two or more obligees, the presumption is that the obligees are tenants-in-common and not joint tenants of the debt, with the consequence that the discharge by one obligee cannot be set up as a defence against the other obligee suing for his share of the debt, and the doctrine stated by Wills, J., in Steeds v. Steeds (3) is quoted with approval, that "although the mortgagees take a joint security each means to lend his own money and to take back his own." It was added, "there is nothing to indicate that the intention of the parties was that each of the persons in whose favour the mortgage obligation was created was a creditor for the whole." Whether co-promisees are joint or several is a question of fact. In view of the difference in the conditions of social life in India and in England, it appears to me to be doubtful (as stated in Cunningham and Shephard's Contract Act, 11th Edition, at page 182) whether, and to what extent, this presumption, which in England prevails only in cases in which equitable relief is claimed, should have effect given to it in this country. Although in Umes Chandra Baner ee v. Dinabandhu Mahanti (1) referred to above, the mortgagees are referred to as joint mortgagees, it was held that in view of the terms of the mortgage instrument which stated explicitly that the mortgagors would pay the loan to the two mortgagees, they were thus under an obligation to tender to both the mortgagees. In the present case there is no such stipulation and the presumption (assuming, but not admitting, that it is applicable in India) that the mortgagees were tenants-in common, which is a rebuttable presumption, appears to me in the present suit to be rebutted by the evidence. Both the mortgagees agree that at the time of the mortgage they were working together, and the 2nd defendant's statement that they held their property jointly and that there was no division, has not been contradicted and may be accepted as correct.

But there appears to be a still further conflict of opinion as to whether in the case of joint promisees, payment to one discharges the debt. In Mannava Annapurnamma v. Uppala Akkayya (4) the Full Bench, by a majority of two Judges to one, held that one of several payees of a negotiable instrument can give a valid discharge of the debt without the concurrence of the other payees. From this view the Chief Justice dissented, and his opinion has been referred to in the case of Umes Chandra Banerjee v. Dinabandhu Mahanti (1), quoted above, as a weighty dissent which appeared to the Judges of the Calcutta Bench to enunciate the correct rule on the subject. The learned Chief Justice of Madras held that section 33 of the Contract Act dealt with the case of an offer which was not accepted, and although the last paragraph of the section is general and is not restricted to an offer which has not been accepted, apparently the Legislature were not contemplating the legal consequences of an offer which had been accepted, but the legal consequences of an offer which had been refused; and the Chief Justice thought that it was impossible to infer from this enactment that the Legislature intended to lay down by implication that the acceptance of payment by one of several promisees operated as a discharge of the claims of the others. But I am bound to say that the opinion of the majority of the Bench appears to be more in conformity with reason. If it is admitted that an offer to one of several joint promisees, whether accepted or not, has the same legal consequences as an offer to all of them, the only possible conclusion appears to be that the acceptance of the offer discharges the obligation. It seems to me that the answer to the question can be found within the four corners of the Contract Act, and that it is not necessary, therefore, to look to the general law. Even if this view is not correct, it appears to me that apart from the presumption referred to above, which is of doubtful application in India, there can be no real question as to what the law is: the only question is as to what the facts in each particular case are. I hold, therefore, that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed. If the presumption is admitted to arise that the creditors were tenants-in-common, and not joint tenants, it was rebutted in this case, and if the presumption does not arise, a fortiori the mortgagees were joint promisees and the payment to one of them discharged the whole debt.

The appeal must, therefore, be allowed, and the decree of the Court of first instance is restored with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17—Agreement by reversioner not to enforce right to declaration, whether compulsorily registrable.

An agreement by the reversioners of a deceased Hindu not to enforce their right to a declaration in respect of a gift of the property of the deceased made by the latter's widow is not a document conveying any right, title or interest or purporting or operating to extinguish any right, title or interest, vested or contingent, in immoveable property and is not, therefore, compulsorily registrable. [p. 630, col. 1.]

Civil miscellaneous reference from the Under-Secretary to Government, United Provinces, to this Court.

Mr. Lakshmi Narain, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Damodar Das, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference under Rule 17 of the Rules and Orders relating to the Kumaun Division of 1894. The facts are simple. Musamamt Bhana, a Hindu widow having a widow's estate, executed a deed of gift in favour of her husband's sister's sons. The plaintiffs are the presumptive reversioners. After the deed of gift had been executed they were preparing to bring a suit for a declaration that the deed of gift was not binding upon them. The donees and the plaintiffs came to terms. The plaintiffs executed an agreement in favour of the donees, under which they agreed not to enforce their right to the declaration which they were about to seek in consideration of the donees transferring to them half of the property and also undertaking to support Musammat Bhana for the rest of her life and to pay off her debts. The donees executed an agreement at the same time, under which they agreed that they would transfer half the property to the plaintiffs and would support Musammat Bhana and pay her debts. In spite of this agreement the plaintiffs have brought the present suit, in which they ask for a declaration that they are heirs to the property and that the deed of gift should be set aside as against them. The Court of first instance held that in view of the agreement the plaintiffs' suit was barred and dismissed it, the defendants being fully willing to carry out their terms of the contract. The plaintiffs appealed. The Appellate Court held that the agreement ought to have been registered under section 17 of the Registration Act and as it had not been registered, it was not admissible in evidence and this evidence having vanished, it gave the plaintiffs a declaration that the deed of gift was not binding upon them. We are asked our opinion as to whether the decree passed by the Commissioner was correct, and if not, what decree should have been passed in the case. We have examined the agreement. In our opinion it was not compulsorily registrable under section 17 of the Registration Act. It conveyed no right, title or interest, nor did it purport or operate to extinguish any right, title or interest, vested or contingent, in immoveable property of the value of Rs. 100. All that the plaintiffs agreed to do was to forego their right to sue for a declaration for a certain consideration. As reversioners they had no transferable right, title or interest in the property, nor did they purport to transfer, any such right They simply agreed not to sue for the declaration for which they have now sought by this suit in Court. The document was clearly admissible in evidence. In the circumstances of the case as stated above, we think that the plaintiffs' suit was rightly dismissed by the Court of first instance. It is nowhere alleged that the defendants have refused to carry out their agreement. In the course of the suit the defendants expressed their willingness to be faithful to their word. There was consideration for the agreement and we think that the plaintiffs were bound thereby. In our opinion the decree of the Appellate Court should be set aside and that of the Court of first instance should be restored and the defendants should have their costs in all Courts including the costs of this reference. The costs in this Court will include Rs. 50, Pleader's fees of the defendants.

Appeal decreed.

Malabar Law—Uralan and Samudayi, position and functions of—Principal and agent—Prescription, acquisition of title by, by Samudayi to Devaswom properties—Right of suit by Samudayi—Possession, proof of—Limitation Acts 1859, 1871, 1908—Pleadings, construction of—Litigating large rights in trivial proceedings—Practice—Court, duty of.

A Samudayi cannot accurately be described in all cases as the agent of the Uralan. There may be a temple in which the Uralan is the person in whom the property and the management vest and such a temple may have a Samudayi who will be the agent of the Uralan. In such a case, the Samudayi will not be entitled to sue or defend actions in his own name. There may be institutions in which an absentee Uralan performs only the functions of a supervisor or controller, leaving the management and legal ownership of the Dewaswom properties in the Samudayi. The Uralan in such a case will have very nearly the powers of a Temple Committee and the Samudayi those of a trustee. The right of suit will be in the Samudayi in these institutions. There may be a temple in regard to which the founder's family which exercised the Uraima right ceased to exist generations ago. In such a case the Samudayi will be the real Uralan. [p. 633, col. 2; p. 634, col. 1.]

In the case of hereditary Samudayis, the declarations and acts of a Samudayi will not bind his successor-in-office belonging to the same family. [p. 636, col. 1.]

Alike under the Limitation Act of 1908 as under the earlier Acts of 1859 and 1871 it was competent for the Samudayi to acquire a title by prescription to the Devaswom properties and to be recognised as a trustee. [p. 635, col. 1.]

Kesava Pillai v. Pedu Reddi, 1 M. H. C. R. 258, dissented from.

A Samudayi, therefore, is entitled to sue for recovery of the Devaswom properties on proof of possession adverse to that of the Uralan and of repudiation of his agency. It is not necessary for him to show that he became a trustee. It is enough if he proves possession and the management of the temple affairs. [p. 637, col. 2.]

Per Napier, J.—A hereditary Samudayi, whose office entails the doing of many acts of management, is not a mere agent of the Uralan affected by the ordinary principles of agency. [p. 638, col. 2.]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—Courts should, as far as possible, refuse to allow plain plaints to be construed as containing hidden causes of action and pronounce opinion thereon. Litigants should not convert trivial and innocuous proceedings into suits for adjudication of grave issues and substantial rights. [p. 631, cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.

SECOND APPEAL No. 924 OF 1916.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The plaintiff styling himself as the Uralan and Udama of the Kottaseri Devaswom, sues to redeem a Kanom of the year 1898 granted by him to the Tarwad of defendants Nos. 1 to 11. Defendants Nos. 12 to 18 are now in possession of the properties. The 19th defendant obtained a surrender of the properties from defendants Nos. 1 to 11 and claimed to be the real Uralan of the Devaswom. The defendants denied that the plaintiff was the Uralan and disputed his title to recover the demised properties. Both the Courts below, though not for the same reasons, dismissed the plaintiff's suit. Hence this second appeal.

Before dealing with the merits of the case, it is desirable to draw attention to a feature of Malabar litigation which amounts almost to an abuse of the machinery of civil administration. I do not in the least feel influenced by considerations of the quantum of Court-fees paid. If the Legislature has framed its provisions in such a way that a right can be litigated by paying a small fee, the litigant is entitled to avail himself of that privilege to his best advantage. But where litigants are permitted to avail themselves of the indulgence of the Court to convert what on the face of it appears to be a trivial and innocuous proceeding into a suit in which grave issues involving very substantial rights and large properties are adjudicated upon, it is the duty of the Court to use all its powers to prevent such an abuse.

To come to particulars. The present suit is based on a Kanom, but the matter decided has practically no bearing on that question. It is the right of rival Uralans, that of the plaintiff and of the 19th defendant, that has been considered in judgments of enormous length which necessitated the examination of numerous documents old and new. With what result? In second appeal we are called upon to pronounce our opinion on findings which in some instances we can treat as dealing with facts, and which in very many respects necessitate an enquiry into mixed questions of fact and law. If the respective rights of the plaintiff and of the 19th defendant were directly in issue, the suit would have been filed in a different Tribunal from which a first appeal would have been preferred to this Court. I cannot help feeling that the leniency with which such litigations are treated may enable a suitor to choose his own time and forum for prosecuting his rights. Fortunately the integrity of the subordinate judiciary in this country is so well established that there is not much fear of miscarriage of justice by such devices. But it is not difficult to imagine circumstances which may lend themselves to the unscrupulous handling of a clever suitor to the detriment of his opponent. I hold very strongly with Mr. Justice Wilkinson that Courts should, as far as possible, refuse to allow a plain plaint to be construed as containing hidden causes of action and to pronounce an opinion thereon. The parties suffer more severely than the Government revenue through such an indulgence. I feel no doubt that the use of all the powers conferred on Courts relating to the addition or deletion of parties, to the returning of plaints for amendment or for presentation to the proper Court with reference to the substantial questions in issue, would tend to advance justice and not to retard it. It may discourage,—what is now pursued as a fine art—the compelling of Courts to deal with questions which ex facie have no relevancy to the reliefs stated in the plaint.

Before I leave this subject, let me refer to another concrete instance taken from this second appeal, which enforces in a marked degree the necessity for the above caution. For nearly half a century the plaintiff's Illom and the 19th defendant's Kovilagom have been playing a game of hide and seek. They dared not face each other. In suits for rent and for redemption, tenants were encouraged to set up the rights of the 19th defendant's Kovilagom. Documents were summoned from and produced by the rival claimant Some of them were characterised as impudent forgeries in the earlier litigation; but as time has rolled on, they have gained sanctity by age: they have now risen to the distinction of being reverentially handled lest they crumble to pieces and to the dignity of being regarded by the translator as undecipherable in places as to words, syllables and phrases. I am referring to Exhibit VII in particular; let us look at the result. On the present occasion, the Subordinate Judge, differing from the District Munsif and differing from a previous Subordinate Judge, has held that the document is genuine. In second appeal, we are perforce compelled to accept that finding. If in the earlier litigation, the Court had refused to raise any issue on the rival claimants' rights or to permit subpœnas to be taken out on those issues, the question would soon have been brought to a head and the parties would have directly raised the point earlier. I have made these prefatory remarks, as I feel that the laxity of the Courts helps dishonest litigants to resort to devices for stifling justice and for availing themselves of the processes of law to gain an undue advantage over honest litigants.

Now I shall deal with the case, bearing in mind the limitations which the law imposes on a Court sitting in second appeal. Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar for the appellant and Mr. T. R. Ramachandrier for the respondent have placed before us all that can be said in favour of their respective clients. The main points for decision are:—

(a) Whether the Kovilagom of the 19th defendant has a subsisting Uraima right in the plaint Devaswom;

(b) Whether the plaintiff is only a Samudayi; if so, what are his functions and privileges,

A large number of subsidiary issues have to be considered in connection with these two questions. The history of the Uraimaship of the Devaswom is lost in antiquity. It is not disputed that three Nambudri Illoms were entitled originally to contribute each one Uralan to the temple. Two of them became extinct before 1841. The last Illom, which may for brevity's sake be called the Oravil Illom, had an undoubted claim to one Uralan. From Exhibit XV, it is clear that the last surviving member of the Oravil Illom assigned the Uraima right to the Padinhare Kovilagom, of which the 19th defendant is the present Thamburatti. From subsequent documents which it is not necessary to refer to at length, it appears that the transferor regarded himself as jointly entitled with the Padinhare Kovilagom to be the Uralan of the temple. It may be that the last member of the Oravil Illom acquired the rights of the two other Illoms by Attaladakkam right. It is unnecessary to pursue this enquiry. The Oravil Illom became extinct in 1843.

To my mind, it admits of no doubt that originally the plaintiff's predecessors regarded themselves only as agents of the Uralan. It is the subsequent development of their rights and the extinction or supersession of the rights of the 19th defendant's Kovilagom that have to be considered in this case. I may at once say that the pretension of the plaintiff to style himself as the Udama or the owner of the Devaswom has not a shred of evidence to support it. Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar did not argue the case on that footing. His contention was that since 1860 the plaintiff's predecessors have been setting themselves up as the sole managers of the Devaswom and have thereby acquired an indefeasible right to manage its affairs, by whatever name they may be called. He also argued that the 19th defendant's Kovilagom lost the right, if they possessed it at any time, by the bar of limitation.

It is common ground that the transfer referred to in Exhibit XV was incapable of conferring a legal right to the Uraimaship. Mr. Ramachandrier contended that by exercising the rights of a Uralan since 1841, the 19th defendant's Kovilagom acquired a prescriptive title to be Uralans, that the management by the plaintiff was only in his capacity as Samudayi, that the latter did not and could not acquire the Uraima right, and that, therefore, plaintiff has no right to recover possession of the demised properties.

These arguments of the learned Vakil necessitate an enquiry into the respective rights and duties of a Uralan and of a Samudayi. It has to be borne in mind, in this connection, that the plaintiff's Illom have been the hereditary Samudayis of the Devaswom long before 1841. Before referring to the cases which deal with the functions of the various dignitaries connected with a Devaswom, it may be useful to enquire into the history of their offices. In Malabar, as on the East Coast, temples, in most instances, owe their existence to the munificence of some ruling chief or nobleman. But it would be inaccurate to say that all of them have been so founded. In a small village, the villagers might establish a temple—not a few instances of this kind are to be found on the East Coast, and I do not suppose religious evolution has been working differently on the West Coast. Whenever an influential chief or Karnavan founded a Devaswom, he would in addition to being its founder be its Uralan also. Distance from the temple and other considerations might induce him to appoint others to manage the affairs of the Devaswom. The word Samudayam denotes an assembly of persons. That is its etymological meaning. The chief inhabitants of a village where the temple is founded would naturally be the persons to whom the management would be entrusted. They may among themselves select a person to be their agent, or it may be that the founder himself might ask one person among the villagers to be the manager. In course of time, the successive discharge of duties by the members of the same family would ensure to that family the privilege of giving the manager from its members. This is the process by which the principle of heredity has been evolved all over the world; and in a country like India, where reverence for established institutions and for long-continued practices is a sort of fetish, heredity gains recognition far more easily than elsewhere. In Malabar these conservative tendencies are at their highest. In my opinion, this process accounts for the existence of what are known as hereditary Samudayis. There are other hereditary offices connected with a Devaswom. I feel no doubt that at its inception the Samudayi was only the agent of the Uralan, if there was one, but the reasoning by which a hereditary Samudayi can be regarded as a perpetual agent is a conception of law which demands serious consideration. Further, it is not correct to assume that the Samudayi remained an agent, pure and simple, even after the extinction of the house which founded the Devaswom. The suggestion of Mr. Ramachandrier that, if the Tarwad or Kovilagom which founded the Devaswom became extinct, the right of the Uralan would escheat to Government requires more authority to support it than the learned Vakil has given us. After the policy declared in Act XX of 1863 it is open to argument that the Government divested themselves of their right to claim this particular kind of escheat, even if the proposition is unexceptionable that the right of trusteeship which vested in the owner of temporal properties would pass by reversion to the Crown by virtue of his private properties having escheated. It is more natural to suppose that the disappearance of the hereditary Uralan will be followed by the development of the Samudayam into the Uralan. In Moore's Malabar Law this process is hinted at as of constant occurrence. Mr. Justice Holloway seems to have set his face against this practice.

Before passing away from this subject, I may say that the main conditions regarding the respective functive functions of these officers of the temple are not to be gathered from a priori notions regarding their rights as understood in ancient times, but from the usages of the particular institutions concerned. There may be a temple in which the Uralan is the person in whom the property and the management vest and such a temple may have a Samudayi who will be the agent of Uralan. In such a case, the Samudayi will not be entitled to sue or defend actions in his own name. There may be institutions in which an absentee Uralan performs only the functions of a supervisor or controller, leaving the management and legal ownership of the Dewaswom properties in the Samudayi. The Uralan in such a case will have very nearly the powers of a Temple Committee and the Samudayi those of a trustee. The right of suit will be in the Samudayi in these institutions. There may be a temple in regard to which the founder's family which exercised the Uraima right ceased to exist generations ago. In such a case, the Samudayi will be the real Uralan.

On the merits, the first point raised by Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar was that the suit should be confined to the consideration of the question whether defendants Nos. 1 to 11 have any valid defence to surrendering property which they obtained under the demise of 1898 and that the rival claims of the plaintiff and of the 19th defendant should not be gone into in this case. He argued that the 19th defendant was impleaded, not because he claimed the Uraima right, but on the ground that he was the assignee of the other defendants. In view of the principles enunciated by me in the opening paragraph of this judgment, I would have been prepared to strike out all the averments on either side which do not relate to the question of surrender, had it not been for the fact that the plaintiff deliberately challenged the title of the 19th defendant and invited a decision upon the respective titles of the parties. Even this may be ignored, but for the fact that the questions involved in the suit have been elaborately gone into in the two Courts and it would result in sanctioning a waste of judicial time and energy, if, at this stage, the plaint is directed to be amended by striking out the contentions relating to the 19th defendant or is directed to be presented to the proper Court on the ground that the substantial relief claimed in the plaint should be properly valued. The plaintiff apparently felt emboldened by his successes against tenants behind the back of the 19th defendant and was prepared to meet him in the open field. The 9th defendant thought that this was her last chance and concentrated all her strength upon establishing her case. Much as I regret that the Courts below should have allowed this suit to be treated in the way it has been done, I am not prepared to wipe out all that has been put on the record by either side and to treat the suit as one for redemption, pure and simple. In this view, I do not consider it necessary to express any opinion on the interesting question of estoppel by tenant argued by the learned Vakil for the appellant.

The next contention was that the Kovilagom of the 19th defendant had no right to the Uraima right. Until the Judicial Committee ruled in Rajah Vurmah Valia v. Ravi Vurmah Kunhi Kutty (1) that an assignment of the trusteeship was opposed to public policy, it seems to have been the practice, not only on the West Coast, but also on the East Coast to transfer such rights. But the pronouncement of the Committee must be deemed to have declared the pre existing law. Therefore, the question is whether the Padinhare Kovilagom acquired a prescriptive title to be the Uralan of the Devaswom. The learned Vakil for the appellant, contended that beyond an acknowledgment by the plaintiff's Illom of their liability to render accounts, the Padinhare Kovilagom was not shown to have had any possession of the Devaswom properties either actually or constructively and that consequently no adverse possession was acquired. The documents to which the learned Vakil for the respondent drew our attention show that the 19th defendant's Kovilagom was in management of the properties through the plaintiff's Illom. Exhibits XXXIII, XIII, I, LXXXVII, I(a) and XII, among other documents, prove active participation in the affairs of the Devaswom. The Subordinate Judge has found that up to 1860 the Padinhare Kovilagom "took an active part in looking after the affairs of the plaint temple"; and I think there is ample evidence to support this finding. I, therefore, hold that the 19th defendant's Kovilagom would have acquired a prescriptive title to the Uraimaship by the year 1860 if the law permitted them to do so. As regards the suggestion that that acquisition must be restricted to the right of one of the Uralans alone and that the plaintiff must be deemed to have adversely enjoyed the other two Uraima rights, it is enough to say that there is no trace in any of the numerous documents filed in the case that the plaintiff's Illom prescribed for the rights of the two Uralans of the two extinct Illoms.

The finding of the Subordinate Judge on this question is stated in these terms at the end of paragraph 18: "From 1886 onwards plaintiff's Mana was allowed to have its own way in all matters". Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar contended that, as under the old Limitation Acts in force up to the year 1871, there was no provision for acquisitive prescription, even granting that the 19th defendant's Kovilagom had possession of the Devaswom properties through their agents, they were not entitled to be regarded as Uralans. I was at first inclined to agree with this contention, but the course of decisions in the other Presidencies to which Mr. T. R. Ramachandrier drew our attention shows that even under the old Limitation Acts and Regulations, title by prescription was held to have been acquired. The decision in Gunga Gobind Mundul v. Collector of 24-Pergunnahs (2) certainly lends support to this proposition. At first it looks as if the suit brought by the plaintiff in that case was dismissed as being barred by limitation, but the observations on page 362 suggest that even under the old Acts a prescriptive title could have been acquired. This was the interpretation of that decision adopted in Brindabun Chunder Roy v. Tara Chand Banerjee (3). The Calcutta High Court have taken that view consistently. See Gossain Das Chunder v. Issur Chunder Nath (4) and Ram Chunder Ghosaul v. Juggutmonmohiney Dabee (5). In Jagamba Gosvamini v. Ram Chandra Goswami (6) Justices Rampini and Pratt reviewed all the earlier decisions of their Court and said that notwithstanding the fact that there was no provision in the earlier Regulations and Acts of Limitation similar to section 29 of the Act of 1871, title by prescription could have been acquired under the old Act, see page 317. In Jagrani Bibi v. Ganeshi (7) the same view was enunciated, following Gossain Das Chunder v. Issur Chunder Nath (4) and the decision of the Judicial Committee in Gunga Gobind Mundul v. Collector of 24-Pergunnahs (2). In Radhabai v. Anantrav Bhagvant Deshpande (8) the Full Bench of the Bombay High Court accepted this view of the law. See the judgment of West, J., at pages 228 and 229. As against these decisions there is an old decision of this Court in Kesava Pillai v. Pedu Reddi (9), in which it was pointed out that under the Act of 1859 no prescriptive title could be acquired. I do not think that it is safe to follow this ruling in preference to the pronouncement of the Judicial Committee which has been accepted in all the other High Courts. It is to be borne in mind that under the English Law even before the Statutes contained any provision by way of prescription the English Courts held that continued long possession adversely to the owner would confer title to the property. I, therefore, am of opinion that the 19th defendant's Kovilagom must be deemed to have acquired a prescriptive right to the property before 1860.

The next contention of the learned Vakil for the appellant was that since 1860 the 19th defendant's Kovilagom ceased to manage the temple affairs and that the plaintiff's Illom acquired a prescriptive title thereto as Uralan. Mr. Ramachandrier's answer was two-fold. He relied on the principle that "once a Samudayi always a Samudayi", and contended that the plaintiff's Illom was incapable of acquiring a prescriptive title so long as it did not divest itself of the functions of a Samudayi, secondly, he contended that the course of conduct pursued by the plaintiff's Illom showed that they only prescribed for a Samudayi's right and for no more.

As regards the first contention the learned Vakil referred to section 109 of the Evidence Act. It is true that once a relationship like that of principal and agent is established, it would require very strong evidence to show that that relationship was abandoned and that a new right was asserted to the knowledge of the principal. But the position in the present case is not that of an agent appointed by the principal. As I stated before, it is a case of hereditary agents under hereditary principals. What I understand by the term hereditary agent or Samudayi is this: that ordinarily you will have to look to the family of the Samudayi for a person to manage the affairs of the Devaswom. On the death of the previous Samudayi and by the fact of a member of the Samudayi's family entering upon the duties of a Samudayi, it may be taken that he was impliedly appointed by the then Uralan to discharge the duties of an agent. It would not follow from this that the acts and declarations or omissions of the previous Samudayi who was a member of the same family would be binding upon the succeeding Samudayi. I do not say that there should be a sannad of appointment in the case of each successor, but I would require very strong authority to convince me that each succeeding agent, though he belonged to the same family, was bound by the acts or conduct of his predecessor-in-office. Therefore, granting for the sake of argument that by Exhibits VII and XLIV the Samudayi in office at the time recognised the right of the 19th defendant's Kovilagom, it does not follow that that acknowledgment would affect his successor. The Subordinate Judge has given the dates of succession of the various Samudayis from 1843. It is clear from that statement in paragraph 3 that the Samudayi who acknowledged the title of the 19th defendant's Kovilagom in 1843 was succeeded by one Parameswaran Nambudri who died in 1852, that this man was succeeded by Naryanan Somayajipad in 1872-1873 and that the plaintiff succeeded to the management in 1892 93. Now if there is evidence from 1892 onwards that the plaintiff repudiated, to the knowledge of the 19th defendant's Kovilagom, the title of that Kovilagom and asserted his right to be independent of that Kovilagom, I fail to see why the recognition by his ancestor in 1843 should be against his setting up a right in himself. In 1892-93 there was a very important proceeding to which sufficient attention has not been paid by the Subordinate Judge. In that year the Government contemplated instituting proceedings in escheat regarding the properties and rights possessed by the Oravil Illom. It is conceded that to this proceeding the plaintiff's Illom as well as the 19th defendant's Kovilagom were parties. Mr. Ramachandrier relied upon these proceedings on the ground that the Government dropped their intention of claiming the properties by escheat because the 19th defendant's Kovilagam established its right to them. It may be that that consideration operated on the Collector to give up his idea of claiming the properties of Oravil by escheat, but at the same time it is clear that the plaintiff's Illom set up its independent right to manage the Devaswom to the exclusion of the 19th defendant's Kovilagom. As the 19th defendant's Kovilagom was a party to these proceedings, her predecessors-in interest must have been aware of the adverse claim set up by the plaintiff's Illom.

Now the question is as to whether this assertion conferred a right on the plaintiff's Illom to manage the properties without the intervention of the 19th defendant's Kovilagom. I am not now concerned in saying that the assertion amounted to claiming Uraima right itself. It may be that the plaintiff did not until 1902 set up a right as Uralan, but if the plaintiff's predecessor Narayanan Somayajipad asserted that he was entitled to manage the properties of the Devaswom on the ground that there are no Uralans for the temple, will not that confer a right upon him to sue in his own name to recover property on behalf of the Devaswom? Mr. Ramachandrier strongly relied upon the decision in Patinharipat Krishnan Unni Nambiar v. Chekur Manakkal Nilakandan Bhattathiripad (10) for the proposition that a Samudayi can never sue to recover trust property. I have examined this case very carefully. I do not think that the present case is covered by that judgment. At the same time, I must express my respectful dissent from some of the very broad propositions enunciated by the learned Chief Justice. Mr. Justice Innes' judgment is not really in conflict with my view. It was apparently found in that case that there was an Uralan in active management and that the hereditary Samudayi was appointed by that Uralan. The learned Judge points out that the religious institution was in the hands of trustees or Uralans. In that view of the facts the learned Judge was right in holding that the Samudayi could not maintain a suit in his own name. The learned Chief Justice states that the powers of the Samudayi are confined to the management of the temple and that when occasion requires, resort should be had to the course of applying to the Uralans to lend their names. If it was intended to lay down as a general proposition of law that under no circumstances could a Samudayi institute a suit in his own name, I would respectfully dissent from the proposition. But, as I said before, the facts of the case justify the conclusion arrived at in the judgment of the Court. The other case relied upon is Kunjunneri Nambiar v. Nilakunden (11). The judgment in that case is very short and from the statement of facts it is clear that the Samudayam was a hereditary one and that the Samudayi executed the Kanom deed as the agent of an existing Uralan. Rama Varar v. Krishnen Nambudri (12) was a case where the Samudayi managed the temple affairs under a written agreement executed to the Uralan. On the other hand, we have some unreported decisions in which it has been held that a Samudayi can maintain a suit in his own name. Second Appeal No. 61 of 1881, Second Appeal No. 1688 of 1888 and Second Appeal No. 2256 of 1914. The truth is, in a conservative country like Malabar, where the dead weight of pre-existing custom is found to be intolerable, recourse is being had constantly to circumvent that custom by circuitous methods. It may not be the province of the Court to encourage such devices, but where a long-standing practice has come into existence which is not in strict conformity with preconceived notions and which is not opposed to reason or justice, Courts will not be justified in falling back upon old usage and to refuse to pay attention to the course of development in recent years. It may be that a Samudayi was not originally intended to usurp the functions of a trustee, but it would be idle to deny that they have successfully usurped the duties of the trustee in recent years, have completely ignored the Uralans, and have placed themselves in possession of the Devaswom properties. I am not, therefore, prepared to accede to the contention of Mr. Ramachandrier that the moment a person is described as a Samudayi he must be confined to the exercise of the functions which in ancient times were considered to be his, and that he should not be permitted to acquire new rights and obligations. The cases quoted by him only show that there must be an open and notorious disavowal of agency before a new right is prescribed. Williams v. Pott (13), Burdick v. Garrick (14), Attorney General v. Corporation of London (15), Corea v. Appuhamy (16) and Lyell v. Kennedy (17) are all cases where the Courts required the strongest proof on the part of the agent who set up a title adverse to the principal. I do not take these decisions to lay down that under no circumstances can an agent prescribe for the rights of the principal. On the facts of the present case I am prepared to hold that there has been a distinct repudiation of agency by the plaintiff's Illom and the acquisition of an independent right to manage the Devaswom affairs without recourse to an Uralan. It is not necessary for me to say that the plaintiffs have become trustees. As was pointed out by the Judicial Committee in the case of Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Hemanta Kumari Debi (18), in order to enable a person to sue on behalf of a religious institution, all that is necessary is possession and management of its affairs. If both these are found, it does not matter by what name the person is known. Moreover since 1892 the plaintiff's Illom had been granting demises in their own name and have been instituting suits to recover demised properties in their own name. The 19th defendant's Kovilagom never instituted any suit or granted any demise since at least 1860. Under these circumstances, I have come to the conclusion that the right to institute a suit on behalf of the Devaswom has become vested in the plaintiff's Illom and that it is not open to defendants Nos. 1 to 11 to refuse to surrender the properties which they obtained on demise from the plaintiff.

On the question of what would suffice as repudiation of agency, I may refer to Dadoba v. Krishna (19), Nabab Mir Sayad Alamkhan v. Yasinkhan (20) and Sankaran v. Krishna (21) quoted by Mr. Kutti Krishna Menon. It is true that in Travancore and Cochin, the Samudayi is regarded as being entitled to sue for rents but not to sue to recover possession. See Nilakandaru v. Nilakandan (22). These cases must be confined to Samudayis who have been appointed by the Uralans. In conclusion I must guard myself by saying that I do not decide that the 19th defendant has no rights in the temple. Whether she is still Uralan, and if she is, whether her rights are only those of supervision and control may have to be decided. It is enough for the disposal of the present litigation to say that the plaintiff has acquired a prescriptive right to manage the Devaswom properties by granting Kanoms and by instituting suits for redemption, etc., and is entitled to possession. I must, therefere, reverse the decree of the Court below and remand the appeal. There is issue No. 8 regarding improvements which have to be decided by the Court of Appeal. In the circumstances of this case, having regard to the extravagant rights set up by the plaintiff and to the fact that the 19th defendant is not altogether an interloper, I think it is proper that each party should be directed to bear its own costs hitherto incurred.

NAPIER, J.—I agree and only wish to add that in my opinion the proposition that a hereditary Samudayi whose office entails the doing of many acts of management, is a mere agent of the Uralan and thus affected by the ordinary principles of agency, if that is what is intended to be laid down in the early cases, requires reconsideration.

SECOND APPEAL No. 925 OF 1916.

This second appeal follows the decision in Second Appeal No. 924 of 1916. The lower Appellate Court will have to decide issue No. 11 as well.

SECOND APPEAL No. 926 OF 1916.

Following the judgment in the principal case, the decree of the lower Appellate Court is reversed. The Subordinate Judge will now decide issues Nos. 2 and 6.

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES NOS. 394 AND 395 OF 1917.

Present:—Justice Sir Ali Imam, KT.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17—Compromise containing lease, whether requires registration—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 29—Compromise enhancing rent in contravention of section, legality of.

A compromise between landlord and tenant creating a lease and not incorporated in a decree of Court requires registration under section 17 (1)

SRIKISHUN LAL v. SHEOBALAK GOPE.

(d) of the Registration Act and is not admissible in evidence unless so registered. [p. 639, col. 2.]

An enhancement of rent of an occupancy holding in excess of that allowed by section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act agreed to by means of a compromise is illegal. [p. 639, col. 2; p. 640, col. 1.]

Appeals from decisions of the Additional District Judge, Gaya, dated the 11th January 1917.

Messrs. K. P. Jayaswal and Lakshmi Kant Jha, for the Appellants.

Mr. B. Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

S. A. No. 394 of 1917.

The plaintiffs-appellants instituted the suit for a declaration that the annual jama of the land in suit was Rs. 39-4-6, including road cess and public works cess, and that the orders of the survey authorities giving in the Record of Rights the jama at Rs. 20 with cesses may be cancelled. The defendant-repondent resists the suit and contends that the amount of the jama mentioned in the Record of Rights is the correct amount.

The plaintiffs-appellants base their claim to the higher jama on the ground that in a previous suit between the parties a compromise had been effected and that the petition of compromise filed in that case contains the clear agreement between the parties that the jama to be paid to the plaintiffs-appellants would be Rs. 39-4-6 with cesses per year. The Munsif who tried this case dismissed the suit. The learned Additional District Judge, who heard the appeal, has delivered a judgment confirming the decision given by the Munsif.

There are two grounds on which evidently the suit of the plaintiffs-appellants failed before both the Courts below.

The first ground is whether the petition of compromise filed in a previous litigation does not amount to a lease and as such was it not a document that should have been registered under section 17, clause (d) of the Registration Act.

The second ground taken is that the agreement would be invalid, inasmuch as it was to secure an enhancement of rent contrary to the provisions of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

As regards the first point Mr. Jayaswal appearing on behalf of the plaintiff-appellants has contended that the petition of compromise was not a lease and that it amounted to no more than a mere agreement. He has relied for this contention on Panchanan Basu v. Chandi Charan Misra (1). The facts of that case are different from those of the present one. In that case the compromise petition did not amount to a lease within the meaning of clause (d) of section 17 of the Registration Act, because it was no more than a mere agreement to create a lease at a future date. This distinction was kept in view when that case was finally decided. In order to understand the compromise petition on which the contention of the plaintiffs-appellants is based, I have had the original read out to me and it seems to me that a proper construction of the intent, the meaning and purpose of that petition can leave no doubt in one's mind that it was a lease and not an agreement to create a lease in future. In this connection it may also be mentioned that the terms of this petition of compromise were not embodied in the decree that was drawn up in that suit. Therefore, the defect regarding non-registration of this petition of compromise remains insurmountable. In the circumstances it was rightly rejected as any evidence in this case.

With reference to the second ground, learned Counsel contends there is nothing to show that any enhancement within the meaning of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has taken place. In this connection the presumptive evidence of the correctness of the Record of Rights must be taken against the plaintiffs-appellants. The lower Appellate Court points out that there was no evidence to rebut the presumption. In the absence of such evidence it is not open to me to hold that the rent of this holding was not that which is contained in the Record of Rights. That being so, the question then is whether there has been an enhancement and whether that enhancement is contrary to the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Evidently it is far in excess of that which is permitted by the section. The Record of Rights shows that the holding in question is in the occupancy right of the defendant and there is nothing to show that the defendant is not an occupancy raiyat. The enhancement therefore, is illegal. I, therefore, hold that the view taken by the two lower Courts of the two points of law raised before me by the learned Counsel on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants was the correct view. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

The learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants has asked me to give him at least a modified decree in respect of the rent of the years in suit. His contention is that even if it be held against him, as I have already held, that the rent was Rs. 20 including cesses, he ought to get relief in respect of that. I am wholly unable to consider this question at the present stage of the hearing of this case. I also notice that no such claim was advanced as a ground in the memorandum of appeal filed in this Court.

The plaintiffs-appellants in this case instituted this suit basing their claim to the reliefs contained in the plaint on a kabuliyat alleged to have been executed by the defendant-respondent. The whole basis of the plaintiffs' case is this document. The lower Appellate Court has declined to place any reliance on this kabuliyat, which is unregistered. The finding of fact, therefore, with regard to the genuineness of the kabuliyat is against the plaintiffs-appellants. One of the grounds taken by the learned Judge in refusing to accept this document as a genuine one is that although there was a previous suit between the parties the plaintiffs had not dared to use this document in evidence, though they have relied on it in this case as the very basis of their suit. As a finding of fact the trying Court also came to the same conclusion and alluded to the fact that this kabuliyat had never been in the previous proceeding between the parties put forward and that for the first time it saw the light of day was in the trial of the present suit.

The learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants has invited me to examine the document in question and drawn my attention to two seals—one of them purports to be of 1912 and the other of 1914. The present suit was instituted in 1915. Evidently, therefore, if these two seals are authentic, the impressions contained therein were impressions that were made before the institution of this suit. It is contended that these two seals represent the seals of Courts that decided the previous proceedings between the parties and that the impressions ought to be sufficient in themselves to establish the error into which on this point both the lower Courts have fallen. I have looked at these two seals with some care but even accepting that these two are genuine impressions there is nothing before me to satisfy me that these two seals were put down, firstly, by the authorities of the Courts they purport to be seals of, secondly, that they were made at or about the time when they purport to have been made, and thirdly, that they are seals of Courts that tried the previous proceedings between the parties. In the circumstances I am unable to get any help from an examination of the seal impressions that might support the contention of the learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants. In the course of the address on this point I was invited to look into a certified copy of some deposition that was taken in some of these previous proceedings. It was suggested that if I looked into these copies it would have appeared that the kabuliyat in question had as a matter of fact been used in the trial of proceedings between the parties on previous occasions. I declined to look into this deposition inasmuch as it was not brought on the record in the trial of this case, nor did I feel disposed to allow this deposition to be put in at this stage of the case without the other side having an opportunity of meeting any conclusion that might be deducible from an examination of this document.

In the circumstances and in the absence of any other point of law disclosed in the hearing of this second appeal, I have no option but to dismiss it with costs.

The learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants has asked me to give him at least a modified decree in respect of the rent of the years in suit. His contention is that even if it be held against him as I have already held that the rent was Rs. 20 including cesses, he ought to get relief in respect of that For the same reasons as given in Second Appeal No. 394 of 1917 I am unable to allow the plaintiffs-appellants any relief for the admitted rent of the years in suit.

Appeals dismissed.

A. RANGAPPA NAIDU—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT IN S. A. No. 1439 OF 1914.

Madras Estates Land Act (I Mad. of 1908), ss. 3 (4), 13 (3)—Landlord and tenant—Tenancy, incidents of—Improvements, what are—Mathiri kasavu and sadalwar cesses, legality of - Irrigation with well water—Garden rates, levy of, legality of—Contract and usage, suit based on—Presumption—Pleadings, construction of—Court, duty of.

Mathiri kasavu (straw rent) and sadalwar are charges incidental to a ryot's holding and are payable with the rent. [p. 642, col. 1.]

Venkata Perumal v. Ramudu, 27 Ind. Cas. 688; 39 M. 84; 28 M. L. J. 81; (1915) M. W. N. 132; 17 M. L. T. 129, followed.

A landlord is entitled to charge garden rates for crops grown with the aid of water from wells sunk by a ryot if they are based on any contract, express or implied, with the ryot or any local usage. [p. 643, col. 1; p. 644, col. 1.]

Section 13 (3) of Madras Act I of 1908 does not preserve the distinction between local usage and contracts for rents, express or implied, contained in section 11 of Act VIII of 1865. [p. 643, col 1.]

Where, therefore, a claim for enhanced rent is not based expressly in the plaint on a contract with the ryot, express or implied, but on custom, it is competent for the Court to go into the question whether the usage is the result of a valid contract. [p 643, col. 1.]

Arunachelum Chetty v. Syyad Ahamed Ambalam, 31 Ind. Cas. 539; (1916) I M W. N. 247; 2 L. W. 1117; 19 M. L T. 138, dissented from.

Pleadings in the Mufussil Courts, which are loosely drawn up and do not contain exhaustive statements as to the basis of claims and defences, describing in accurate legal language the alternative and distinctive ways of founding and describing the rights put forward therein, should not be taken too literally and the substance of the averments should be looked into. [p 643, col. 1.]

Where enhanced rent has been paid by tenants for a long period of time, not only can the existence of an agreement to pay rent at such rate be presumed but the consideration for the same can also be presumed. Both presumptions are presumptions of fact. [p. 642, col. 2.]

Section 13 (3) of the Madras Estates Land Act would not affect the liability of ryots to pay enhanced rents, if the improvements were made before the Act and if there had been a contract between the landlord and the tenant entered into before the passing of the Act to pay rent at such rates. [p 642, col. 1.]

Where wells are sunk by a ryot in estate porambоke, the mere abstention of the landholder from charging rent on the sites occupied by the wells might amount in law to a consideration for a contract to pay enhanced rates. [p. 642, col. 1.]

An improvement made by a ryot which prejudicially affects another land of the landholder, if made without his consent in writing, would not be an improvement of which the ryot could claim the advantage provided by section 13 (3) of the Act. [p. 642, col. 1.]

Second appeals against the decrees of the District Court, North Arcot, in Appeal Suits Nos. 792, 670, 718 and 719 of 1913, preferred against the decrees of the Court of the Revenue Divisional Officer, Chandragiri Division, in Summary Suits Nos. 434, 1316, 1317 and 1318 of 1912.

The Hon'ble Mr. S. Srinivasa Iyengar, Advocate-General (with him Messrs. S. Gopalasami Iyengar and K. Srinivasa Iyengar), for the Appellants.

These second appeals along with Second Appeals Nos. 1440 to 1447 of 1914 coming on for hearing on the 15th and 19th February 1917 and having stood over for consideration till the 28th February 1917, the Court (Sadasiva Aiyar and Spencer, JJ.) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—In all these second appeals the appellant is the Mahant of Tirupati and the respondents are the ryots of Karvetnagar Estate. In all of them the question arises whether the landholder was entitled to charge garden rates for crops grown with the aid of well water. In Second Appeals Nos. 1437 to 1439 and 1440 to 1447 there is a question whether the landholder was entitled to charge for a second crop cultivated on dry land with the aid of well water. In Second Appeals Nos. 1440 to 1447 there is a further question whether the District Judge was right in disallowing the charge for mathiri kasuvu (straw rent), and in Second Appeals Nos. 1437 to 1439 whether he was right in disallowing the charge for sadalwar (stationery) which he allowed in the former batch.

In Venkata Perumal v. Ramudu (1)

(1) 27 Ind. Cas. 688; 39 M. 84; 28 M. L. J. 81; (1915) M. W. N. 132; 17 M. L. T. 129.

mathiri kasuvu and sadalwar were treated as charges incidental to the tenure of the land and payable with the rent. Following that decision we allow the appeals in this respect.

On the question common to all these appeals, the lower Courts are unanimous in finding that the wells were sunk at the cost of the ryots without any assistance from the landholder, but they have not decided whether they were sunk before or after the introduction of the Madras Estates Land Act, nor has the District Judge recorded any finding as to the length of time that these garden rates have been in force, although the Sub-Collector stated in his judgment that it was admitted that these rates had been accepted in all faslies from 1243 onwards. There is evidence that a number of wells are outside the holdings which they irrigate and are either in poramboke or in the patta land of other ryots. The District Judge was of opinion that it was immaterial whether the well was actually situated in the plaint lands or not. We cannot accept this view. In certain conditions it would be very material. An improvement which prejudicially affected another land of the landholder, if made without his consent in writing, would not be an improvement of which the ryot could claim the advantage provided by section 13 (3) of the Act vide the definition of improvement in section 3 (4).

In a similar case, coming from the same district, this Court in Govind Doss v Gurram Chinnappa Naidu (2), dealing with the case of wells sunk in estate poramboke, held that the mere abstention of the landholder to charge rent on the sites occupied by the wells might amount in law to a consideration for a contract to pay enhanced rates.

In Govind Doss v. Gurram Chinnappa Naidu (2) and Venkata Perumal v. Ramudu (1) it was decided that section 13 (3) would not affect the liability of ryots to pay enhanced rents if the improvements were made before the Act and if there had been a contract between the landlord and the tenant entered into before the passing of the Act to pay at such rates.

(2) 27 Ind. Cas. 869; 28 M. L. J. 136; 2 L. W. 142.

It was, moreover, held in Govind Doss v. Gurram Chinnappa Naidu (2) and in Arumugam Chetti v. Raja Jagaveera Rama Venkateswara Ettappa (3) that an implied contract to pay increased rent might be presumed from a continued payment for a number of years at such rates.

We do not follow the learned Judges who decided Arunachelum Chetty v. Syyad Ahamed Ambalam (4) that only the existence of agreements can be presumed by such payments spread over a long period of time but that consideration for such agreements cannot be presumed. Both presumptions are presumptions of fact. There is no principle by which Courts are to be enabled to make the one presumption and disabled from making the other. In Armugam Chetty v. Jagaveera Rama Venkateswara (5) this is recognised by one of the learned Judges who decided Arunachelum Chetty v. Syyad Ahamed Ambalam (4). For he says there—"Of course the consideration may be of the same implied nature as the covenant to pay."

In Arumugam Chetti v. Raja Jagaveera Rama Venkateswara Ettappa (5) Subramania Aiyar, J., declared that a presumption of consideration might be justified on the lost grant principle, on the ground that after a great many years it would be unfair to compel the landholder to prove consideration; but he declined to presume consideration on the facts of tha case, for the reason that there would be no difficulty in the landholder proving what the consideration was if payments had been made at a higher rate for short periods ranging only from one to 18 years. It was contended that as the plaintiff did not claim the enhanced rate on the basis of a contract supported by the consideration proceeding from him in the shape of an undertaking not to charge rent for the well—poramboke sites on which the tenants had sunk wells, and as he did not even set up an implied contract to be presumed from very long continued payments of higher rents, this Court could not in second appeal allow him to raise for the first time the question of the right of enhancement based on contract. Reliance is placed for this contention on the decision in Arunachelum Chetti v. Syyad Ahamed Ambalam (4), already quoted. But the distinction between contract rates and customary rates is a very subtle one as between landlords and tenants. No doubt section 11 of Act VIII of 1865 makes some distinctions between local usage and contracts for rents, express or implied, but section 13 (3) of Madras Act I of 1908 does not preserve this distinction. It is impossible to expect to find in the pleadings in Mofussil Courts exhaustive statements as to basis of claims and defences, expressing in accurate legal language the alternative and distinctive ways of founding and describing the rights put forward in the pleadings. The facts and the evidence to prove a contract, where the contract is a very old one, are almost the same as those on which a custom to pay enhanced rents has to be proved if such a custom is valid. In the cases of Govind Doss v. Gurram Chinnappa Naidu (2) and Venkata Perumal v. Ramudu (1) the claim put forward to enhanced rent was based on usage and the question whether the usage might have been the result of a valid contract was gone into by this Court without objection. As the learned Judges in the case reported as Arunachelum Chetty v. Syyad Ahamed Ambalam (4) refused to allow the claim to enhancement to be based on a contract owing to their construction of the language of Sir Subramania Aiyar's judgment in Arumugam Chetti v. Raja Jagaveera Rama Venkateswara Ettappa (3) (as regards whether consideration can be presumed from the evidence of long usage to pay higher rent) and as we differ from that construction, we do not feel ourselves bound by that decision to decline to make a remand so as to have a finding from the lower Appellate Court on the question of express or implied contract.

We must, therefore call for fresh findings from the District Judge on the following questions :—

(1) In which of these appeals are the wells which irrigate the ryot's holding situated in land for the occupation of which the landlord might legally but has not in fact, charged any additional rent?

(2) In each of these cases were the wells constructed before or after the passing of Madras Act I of 1908 ?

(3) For how many years in each case have the ryots been paying these increased garden rates without protest ?

The findings should be returned within two months from this date. Fresh evidence may be adduced Ten days are allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment the District Judge of North Arcot submitted the following

FINDINGS.

I am directed to submit findings on three new issues as specified in the judgment of the High Court.

2. In Appeal Suits Nos. 364 to 371 of 1913 corresponding to second Appeals Nos. 1440 to 1447 of 1914 on the file of the High Court, the parties have entered into a compromise that the rates of rent claimed in Fasli 1319 are to be considered as the proper rates payable by the ryots and that the suits should be dismissed accordingly, each party bearing his own costs throughout. Findings are, therefore, unnecessary in these suits.

3. As regards the other four suits the defendant in Appeal Suit No. 792 of 1913 and the plaintiffs in Appeal Suits Nos. 670, 718 and 719 of 1913 are ex parte. The appellant called the Village Monegar who is also a ryot owning lands there. He says he knows the lands of the plaintiffs in Appeal Suits Nos. 670, 7 8 and 719 of 1913 (Second Appeals Nos. 1437, 1438 and 1439 of 1914), but he does not know the defendant in Appeal Suit No. 792 of 1913 (Second Appeal No. 1126 of 1914). No new wells have been dug in the last 10 or 12 years, and all wells have been in existence as long as he can remember (he is now aged 30). When crop-war rent is charged the sites of the wells are allowed free of rent. No rents other than crop war have ever been paid. The plaintiff in Appeal Suit No. 718 of 1913 was examined as P. W. No. 1 in the lower Court, and he then alleged that he had dug a well three years previously and bought another one, and he had never previously raised wet crops. He, however, accepted a patta in the usual general terms. On the other hand P. W.

No. 4, plaintiff in one of the compromised suits, stated that the rates now entered in the pattas had been entered in pattas as long as he could remember, that is for more than 50 years, and that such rates had been collected. P. W. No. 3, plaintiff in Appeal Suit No. 719 of 1913, stated in the original trial that he irrigated his crops with water from wells dug by him, but he has not now appeared to say when he dug his wells.

4. As regards Appeal Suit No. 792 of 1913 (Summary Suit No. 434 of 1912) the karnam stated in the original trial that no well had been sunk during his time, but he does not seem to have had knowledge of the village prior to Fasli 1319. The ryot's witness stated that wells had been sunk 10 years previously and he admitted that the rates of rent claimed had been in force to his knowledge for 20 or 25 years.

5. As regards the issues now remanded by the High Court I must find that :—

(1) in no case has the landlord charged rent for the sites of wells though he might legally have done so;

(2) the wells concerned in these suits were constructed before the passing of Madras Act I of 1908 and

(3) the ryots have been paying these rates without protest from time immemorial.

6. With reference to the new third issue, I might perhaps remark that these suits relate to lands in the Karvetnagar Zamindari, in which it has been the immemorial custom to issue pattas based upon the original crop sharing principle. These pattas provided rates for all crops and if a ryot grew an inferior crop he paid less rent, but if he grew a superior crop he paid more rent irrespective of the source of irrigation The contract is the original and ancient one, though clauses or rates relating to superior wet crops may not come into operation, unless or until water is available for irrigation. One consideration for paying higher rates when superior crops are raised is the understanding that lower rates or no rent at all shall be paid when inferior crops are raised or the lands lie waste from unavoidable circumstances. The system is, in accordance with the custom of the country to adjust the demand in accordance with the ability of the individual to pay.

These second appeals coming on for final hearing this day after the return of the findings of the lower Appellate Court upon the issues referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

SECOND APPEAL No. 1126 OF 1914.

The findings are accepted.

The result is that the second appeal is allowed and the decree of the lower Appellate Court is varied accordingly with costs in this Court to be paid to the appellant by the respondent.

SECOND APPEALS NOS. 1437 TO 1439 OF 1914.

The findings are accepted and the suits are dismissed with costs throughout of the appellant. Vakil's fee in each case is Rs. 12.

(Second Appeals Nos. 1440 to 1447 of 1914 were adjourned for one week to enable the parties to file properly stamped petitions of compromise).

Appeals allowed.

Raja PARTAB BAHADUR SINGH—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), ss. 53, 107B, Ch. VII A—Tenant holding at favourable rent—Ejectment—Procedure—Resumption.

Section 107B of the Oudh Rent Act supersedes, in the case of tenants holding at a favourable rate of rent, section 53 of the Act. [p. 645, col. 1.]

Where there is a special provision governing a special class of cases the latter should be dealt with under it, and not under the general provision governing general cases. [p. 645, col. 1.]

A tenant holding at a deliberately, and not accidentally, favourable rate of rent comes under section 107B of the Oudh Rent Act, and is subject to resumption proceedings under Chapter VII A of the Act and cannot be ejected by notice as an ordinary tenant. [p. 645, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Commissioner, Fyzabad, dated the 24th October 1916.

JUDGMENT.

FERARD, J. M.—The plaintiff-appellant, Ram Kumar, contested ejectment notice on the ground that he was a permanent lessee at a favourable rate of rent, and that this had been decided in a previous suit of 1903. The Assistant Collector accepted this plea and granted decree on the ground of res judicata. The Commissioner in appeal has examined the record of the 1903 suit and found that the lease to the original lessee, predecessor of plaintiff-appellant, was not heritable—it ceased to be 'permanent' when the original lessee died. I have also examined the 1903 record ending with the Board's (Mr. J. B. Thomson) order of 18th July 1904, and I find that so far the Commissioner's view is correct. The original lessee could not be ejected during his lifetime, but this immunity did not pass to his successor, plaintiff-appellant. The only point that his Counsel now presses before me is that the rent was and is favourable. Of this there is no doubt. The Commissioner's judgment of 1903 shows it, and it was clearly deliberately favourable. Plaintiff-appellant is now a tenant at a favourable rate of rent, but with no right to hold on at it. The only question that presents itself to me is whether respondent was right in proceeding against him by notice instead of under the resumption Chapter VII A. The Commissioner is right in his statement that there is nothing in the nature of a "grant" about a permanent lease but appellant is certainly holding, or holding over, to use the Commissioner's expression, land at a favourable rate of rent, and such land comes under section 107B, Oudh Rent Act. Hanuman Datt v. Thakurain Sri Ram Kuar (1) bears on this point. I do not agree with it. When there is a special provision governing a special class of cases the latter should be dealt with under it, and not under the general provision governing general cases. Section 107B supersedes section 53, Oudh Rent Act, in the case of tenants holding at a favourable rate of rent.

The notice of ejectment was, therefore, bad and I would allow the appeal and restore the finding of the first Court Costs to appellant. I may note further that if Commissioner's appellate order was to stand, a remand for decision of original issue No. 3, on the question of compensation, would be necessary, as the lower Courts have left it without decision.

CAMPBELL, S. M.—The rent in this case was deliberately, and not accidentally, favourable. The Board have repeatedly held that in such circumstances ejectment was inadmissible and that Hamuman Datt v. Thakurain Sri Ram Kuar (1) was inapplicable. I agree in the proposed order.

Appeal allowed.

Appeal from the decree of the First Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, dated 23rd August 1915.

Messrs. W. Wallach, S. N. Sen, Shahanshah Husain, Gulab Chand Srimal, Bahadur Lal, and Kalindri Prasad, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Rai Gokal Prasad Bahadur and Messrs. Ram Chandra and Chhail Behari Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh Kayesth was a member of the family of Kanungos of Rampur Kalan in the Sitapur district. Daryao Singh was the head of the family at the time of annexation. He had three sons Anant Singh, Balwant Singh and Hardeo Bakhsh Singh. There was a dispute as to the status of the family and the rule of succession, which was eventually decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Shankar Baksh v. Hardeo Baksh (1). Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh was the son of Hardeo Bakhsh Singh. On the death of his father he succeeded to certain rights in certain villages and he was entitled to make a Will by which he could devise has property after his death to whomsoever he pleased. He was married about 1888 and he signed a document, which he called a Will, on the 6th August 1892. He died on the 27th June 1898. He had no children. His widow Ram Kali succeeded to the whole of his property. She executed a deed of endowment on the 8th August 1904. She died on the 23rd August 1913.

Ganga Bakhsh Singh, the son of Balwant Singh, instituted the suit out of which this appeal arises in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur. He claimed the estate of Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh as reversionary heir. He stated that Shankar Bakhsh Singh, the son of Anant Singh, was alive at the time of Ram Kali's death (he is alive still) but asserted that, although Shankar Bakhsh Singh would, if not disqualified, have been entitled to a reversionary interest equivalent to that of the plaintiff. Shankar Bakhsh Singh was disqualified from inheritance by reason of insanity. He, therefore, claimed the whole estate as reversioner.

He instituted the suit against the president of the trust formed under the deed of the 8th August 1904. The reply was that Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh had authority to devise his estate as he wished after his death, that he exercised that authority and executed the Will, to which reference has been made, on the 6th August 1892, and devised a full estate to his widow Ram Kali, to which she succeeded on the death of the testator, that Ram Kali made the whole estate the subject of an endowment, and that the plaintiff had no right of any kind. It was further stated that Shankar Bakhsh Singh was not insane. To this plaintiff replied, that Bisheshar Baksh Singh had the right to devise his property by Will, but that he had impaired his mind by excessive drinking to such an extent that he was incapable of making an intelligent and valid disposition on the 6th August 1892, and that further at the time that he affixed his signature to the alleged Will he was completely intoxicated, and did not know what he was doing. The plaintiff's first point thus was, that he contested the execution of the Will. He was not satisfied with that. He continued that, even if the execution of the Will was established, on its interpretation it transferred nothing more than a qualified life-estate to Ram Kali. There, as we understand it, he left the case. He did not set up any argument based on the provisions of Act I of 1869. At original page 244 it is clearly stated, that the suit would be determined under the provisions of the Mitakshara Law. It is further clear that he set up no title as the heir of Ram Kali. He claimed as the reversioner of Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh.

The learned Subordinate Judge decided that Shankar Bakhsh Singh was not insane, that Bisheshar Singh was not disqualified by intemperate habits from making a valid Will, that he was not intoxicated at the time that he made the Will, that the Will effected a valid disposition, and that on its interpretation it transferred a complete estate to Ram Kali. He dismissed the suit accordingly. The present appeal is filed by the plaintiff.

The position taken up in appeal is different to the position taken up in the lower Court. The learned Counsel for the appellant has not argued on the question of the insanity of Shankar Bakhsh Singh. He has devoted practically no argument to the allegation that Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh's power of making an intelligent disposition was weakened by a general habit of intemperance. He has argued very faintly in support of the suggestion that Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh was intoxicated at the time that he made the Will. He has based the greater part of his argument on the question of the interpretation of the Will, but he has added a plea which is not only a new plea but which is in direct opposition to the case advanced for the plaintiff in the lower Court. He now puts forward the argument that on the showing of the defendant Ram Kali's estate derived from her husband was stridhan, and that as stridhan it would devolve in such a family as this on the heirs of her husband, that is on Shankar Bakhsh and himself, and as heir to the stridhan he challenges the validity of the deed of endowment. We have already stated that the plaintiff clearly and distinctly based his claim to succeed on the plea that he is the reversionary heir of Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh and not that he is heir of the lady It is true that in the twelfth paragraph of the plaint he suggested that in any circumstances he was the sole heir. But the decision on the 19th issue shows his position. The learned Subordinate Judge writes:—"The plaintiff does not claim the property in suit as the representative of Th kurain Ram Kali so as to be bound by the deed executed by her. He claims the property as the reversionary heir of the lady's husband under the Hindu Law." By taking this attitude in the lower Court he avoided a discussion on the question of limitation. Having had the point of limitation decided in his favour he has now adopted an absolutely inconsistent position and placed the defendant-respondent at a disadvantage. We shall refer to the admissibility of this plea later.

We now proceed to decide the various points one by one.

The first point is as to the insanity of Shankar Bakhsh Singh. The learned Subordinate Judge after considering the evidence arrived at the conclusion that Shankar Bakhsh Singh is not insane. The learned Counsel for the appellant has not argued on the point. He has not withdrawn the plea but has not supported it. We have examined the evidence, and we find that the learned Subordinate Judge's conclusion is perfectly correct, and that Shankar Bakhsh Singh is not insane. Thus in any circumstances the appellant can only succeed in respect of half of his claim.

We next take up the allegation that Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh was so addicted to the use (or rather to the abuse) of alcohol that he was incapable of making a Will or in fact of any intelligent act. Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh was a Kayesth, and as a Kayesth had no religious objection to the use of alcohol. Amongst the large majority of Kayesths it is not considered discreditable to take alcohol in moderation, and the circumstance that Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh was not an abstainer from alcohol reflects nothing upon his intelligence or his character. The evidence on the point leads us to the conclusion that Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh was a regular drinker, and that he was not invariably moderate. To use a colloquial expression, he was a fairly hard drinker, and in the course of his life was intoxicated on several occasions. But it is impossible to arrive at a conclusion that he was a drunkard, and the suggestion that he was so saturated with alcohol as to be incapable of making an intelligent disposition of his property or doing any other act which the law permitted him to do, is extravagant and unsupported by the right view of the evidence on the record. The plaintiff has recklessly put in a mass of false evidence to support his suggestion that his cousin was a besotted drunkard. By his own recklessness he has afforded a strong answer to his argument. Witness after witness has given suborned and perjured evidence to show that the deceased was practically a dipsomaniac, that he drank three or four quarts of spirit every day, that he was never sober and that he was incapable of any sort of intelligent action. The story so told is a tissue of absurdities. If Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh had been as he is thus represented to be, if he had become a dipsomaniac at an early age, he would not have lived as long as he did. While the falsity of this evidence is exposed by its extravagance, and its intrinsic worthlessness is palpable on examination, the evidence given on the other side with regard to the habits of the deceased is moderate, reliable, and candid. Respectable Kayesth gentlemen have deposed that they knew Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh well, that he indulged in liquor, that he may have been occasionally intoxicated, but that there can be no suggestion that he was a hopeless drunkard or a dipsomaniac. There we may leave the point, noting that, inspite of the fact that the learned Counsel for the appellant has shown a wise discretion in not pressing this portion of the case, we have nevertheless examined critically the evidence upon the subject and that we are in complete accord with the conclusions of the learned Subordinate Judge to the effect that, before the execution of the Will, Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh was addicted to drink and at times used to drink to an excess, but that his mental capacity was not impaired by this act.

The next suggestion is that Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh was dead drunk at the time that he executed the Will. This Will was registered at the residence of Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh. Kazi Hadi Hasan, the Sub-Registrar who registered the document, was called as defendant's witness No. 2. If his evidence is believed, there can be no doubt as to the fact that Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh was in no way under the influence of liquor when he executed the Will, that he thoroughly understood its contents and that the Will expresses the deliberate intention of a man who was legally competent to make the disposition which it effected. The case in favour of the non-intelligent execution of the Will is as follows. A certain Raghubar, P. W. No. 22, who was formerly a table servant of Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh, has deposed that on the day of the execution of the Will Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh was lying dead drunk in his house and that while the witness was rubbing oil on his head for a purpose which he did not disclose, the Sub-Registrar and a certain Sheo Dayal, now deceased, who was the manager of the estate, entered the room with the Will and induced Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh to sign the Will without reading it. If this witness's evidence is believed, the Sub-Registrar was party to a disgraceful conspiracy and performed an act which rendered him liable to dismissal and prosecution. This witness was in receipt of Rs. 2 a month and his food and clothes from Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh. After the death of the latter he obtained employment on slightly better wages from another master, and at the time he gave his evidence was out of work. His evidence is on the face of it untrue. Another witness Lalta Prasad, P. W. No. 36, who was formerly a servant of Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh, has deposed that the deceased Sheo Dayal had discussed the continual drunkenness of Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh with a certain Ram Charan, now deceased, in presence of the witness, that these two persons had argued that, as Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh might become insane at any time, it would be advisable to cause him to execute a Will, the contents of which he would not understand, by which he should leave the whole of his property to his wife, putting in clauses by which Sheo Dayal and Ram Charan and others should be retained in their employment and that the conspiracy resulted in the execution of the document, under which he (Lalta Prasad) was to be given something. He was then servant of Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh. Lalta Prasad has stated that it so happened that he was not present at the time that the Will was executed. The learned Counsel for the appellant has been unable to show us what the conspirators stood to gain by such a proceeding. It is to be noted that, if Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh had died without making a

Will, his widow would have succeeded to his estate during her lifetime as a Hindu widow with limited powers of alienation. As these persons, according to the witness, were only intent on keeping on good terms with the lady and securing their own interests, and as they were apparently on good terms with her already, all that was necessary was that she should succeed to the estate. They were not likely to survive her and as the evidence shows did not survive her. Under the terms of the Will (as it will be seen) the lady had authority to dismiss them. This story appears to us to be a very foolish story and singularly unconvincing. Now it is to be remarked that this man Lalta Prasad since the death of Ram Kali has gone into the employment of the plaintiff. He is the plaintiff's man, and has every reason to desire the success of the plaintiff's claim. His evidence we regard as absolutely false. We now come to the evidence of a certain Matadin, P W. No. 3. Matadin has stated that the Will was executed intelligently, that Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh was perfectly sober at the time of its execution, that he thoroughly understood its contents, and that it contained his wishes. It is clear that the appellant cannot utilise anything which Matadin has said to support his case. But his position is that Matadin became his own servant, that Matadin had advised him to institute the suit, that Matadin had offered to give evidence in support of his claim, and that finally Matadin had turned on him and given evidence against him. It is true that Matadin had taken service with the plaintiff, that he assisted in the preparation of the plaint, and that after doing this he has given evidence in support of the authenticity of the Will. We find that Matadin is an absolutely untrustworthy witness, except with regard to that portion of his evidence in which he deposed to having attested the Will. He did attest the Will. It is sufficiently established that he at first took the side of the plaintiff, and has subsequently come up to give evidence for the defendant. But this circumstance does not help the plaintiff It shows that Matadin is a very untrustworthy person, and that his evidence as to the habits of Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh and the manner in which the Will came to be executed is unreliable.

The next point taken for the plaintiff is that the scribe of the Will Baz Bahadur, who is still alive, was not called as a witness. Baz Bahadur was like Lalta Prasad a servant of Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh. We do not know why the plaintiff has not chosen to produce him. But the fact of his non-production does not help the appellant's case. So far the case stands, that one apparently respectable and independent witness Kazi Hadi Hasan has given evidence which, if believed, shows that the Will is a valid Will. One witness Matadin has proved that he attested the Will, as he certainly did, and given other evidence. We place no reliance on the remainder of his evidence. Two witnesses Raghubar and Lalta Prasad have given evidence against the Will which is palpably false. The learned Counsel for the appellant has criticised the evidence of Kazi Hadi Hasan on one point. He has pointed out to us that Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh, while leaving the property to his wife, did not mention her name and told the Sub-Registrar that he did not know his wife's name. From this he would have us infer that Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh must have been drunk at the time. We do not find the inference established. Among Hindu gentlemen of the class of Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh it is not uncommon to find some who do not know their wives' names. Another point, which was taken in the Court below but was not taken in appeal, was that the Will was registered in an upper room. The significance here was that, if the executant had not been drunk, he would have executed it in a lower room. The learned Counsel for the appellant has laid no stress upon this point. Before we leave the evidence as to the intelligent execution of the Will we should refer to the depositions of three gentlemen, Babu Mahadeo Prasad, D. W. No. 6, a Deputy Collector in the United Provinces, Thakur Sripal Singh, D. W. No. 16, a member of a family of Talukdars in the Sitapur district, and a certain Radha Kishen, D. W. No. 18, who is a member of this family of Kayesths. All these three gentlemen have deposed that Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh told them of the contents of the Will after he had executed it. The evidence of these gentlemen is absolutely reliable. On the question of intelligent execution we arrive at exactly the same conclusion as the learned Subordinate Judge. We find that Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh executed the Will while in full possession of his senses and his intelligence, and understanding exactly what he was doing.

We now come to the interpretation of the Will. The language in which it is written is not the language of a trained draftsman or a skilled conveyancer. The draft was prepared by an amateur or a layman, and the Will must be interpreted remembering the conditions under which it was prepared. As there has been some dispute with regard to the exact meaning of the words employed we have considered it advisable to translate this Will ourselves. The translation that we have made has been carefully explained to the Counsel who have had opportunities of the rendering of the Hindustani words into English. This is the final translation at which we have arrived:—

"Will executed by Thakur Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh, Taluqdar of Rampur Kalan and Biswan.

"1. I, Thakur Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh, son of Thakur Hardeo Bakhsh Singh, by caste Kayesth, resident of Kasba Biswan Khas, am a Talukdar of Rampur Kalan, Biswan, Paprawan, etc., situate in the Tahsils of Sidhauli, Biswan, Misrikh and Sitapur in the district of Sitapur.

"2. Whereas no reliance can be placed in any wise on this inconstant life, and whereas up till now I have no male issue from my loins, and besides this it is incumbent and necessary that I should nominate my heir and future representative in my lifetime, and at the same time should, by setting out those modes which are considered better and proper for the protection and good management of the estate and the rights attached to the taluka owned and possessed by me, declare my inmost intentions, therefore, while I am in a state of sound mind and right understanding and in keeping with all the rights, Shastric and legal, (I undertake) to put down those necessary points in the manner following, which will be acted upon after my demise.

"3. Firstly, that it is necessary to state this fact that the executant's father Hardeo Bakhsh Singh, having acquired the villages pertaining to the estate possessed by me as against other co-sharers of the family in the taluka with reference to specification and division in the khewat by virtue of a decree of the Civil Courts of the Province of Oudh and the Privy Council, got (his share) partitioned from other co sharers by the Civil and Revenue Courts, under which some entire villages, some pattidari villages and some entire mohals (partitioned) had been received by him; and after the death of Thakur Hardeo Bakhsh Singh, executant's father, 5-annas share of this estate out of the 16 annas in the entire taluka has come into my proprietary possession exclusively by way of succession, without being shared or claimed by anyone as ancestral, divided and separate property and that there is no other sharer or claimant to the property owned and possessed by the executant nor can there be any; and the executant is in every way entitled to dispose of the property and to nominate a legatee.

"4. Secondly, that I make this devise in favour of my wife to the effect that after my death my wife, daughter of Chaudhri Rudra Prasad Saheb, Talukdar of Nanpur Koili, will remain owner with all the powers and (sic) transfers of a proprietor, and in possession and in enjoyment of the profits, and the ruler of the estate, and my wife as my successor shall possess all the powers and (sic) transfers in their entirety which I have in this property and estate.

"5. Thirdly, that by reason of the observance of the custom of pardanashini my wife is unable to exercise herself (i.e., personal) supervision and management over the estate, therefore, it is to be specially borne in mind that whatever agents and old servants, in whom I repose confidence and reliance up to the time of the execution of this (Will) and whose names are written hereafter in this paragraph, will remain managers of the estate and also of the domestic arrangements, etc, subject to the orders of and in obedience to my wife:—

"Munshi Sheo Dayal, Lalta Prasad Karinda, Baz Bahadur, Ram Charan Dube, Lalta Muqaddam, and Bhajju Khidmatgar,

"6. Fourthly, that the maintenance of the employees mentioned above will be made, on condition that they remain honest and efficient, and discharge their duties satisfactorily, from the collection of the profits of the estate, but should at any time the aforesaid servants be guilty of faults of dishonesty and causing injury to the estate, the legatee will have power to dismiss and discharge the above-mentioned agents, and this is also put down that Ram Charan will remain manager throughout his lifetime and after his death his brother Sitaram will be manager.

"7. Fifthly, that in default of my having male issue, I authorize my wife to construct a shivala and thakurdwara and along with the expenses of the shivala and temple to establish a charitable allowance, in order to give help to travellers, the needy, orphans, and helpless widows, and from the collection of the profits of the estate which will be utilised in this work to entrust and transfer the profits by way of endowment in the name of the manager and administrator without power of sale or mortgage or transfer. Therefore, the deed of Will has been executed, that it may serve as an authority and be of use when needed."

Many reported decisions have been quoted to us which, it is suggested, provide the canons of the interpretation to be adopted in arriving at the meaning of a document like the present. But it is not necessary for us to refer to authority upon a point as simple as the interpretation of this Will. All that is necessary to interpret a Will like the present is to give the plain meaning to the words used, neglecting grammatical errors, and remembering the limitations and deficiencies of the draftsman. Upon the reading of this document the impression left on our minds is that the testator gave the draftsman the following direction:—

He told him that he wished to leave his property to his wife absolutely and entirely, that he would like her to retain certain old servants in her employment as long as they behaved themselves, and that if she wished to utilise the powers which she possessed in order to make an endowment of a religious or a charitable nature, such an object would meet with his approval, though if she did this he would be opposed to her giving the manager of the endowment too free a hand.

These instructions appear to us to have been carried out perfectly correctly and clearly by the draftsman, although in his use of language he has not been skilful, and has not always been grammatical. The learned Counsel for the appellant has in argument treated the document as though it was drafted by a lawyer, and has endeavoured to find an exact connection between every paragraph. Such a form of construction is impossible. Words are used loosely. Intentions are expressed that are not always fulfilled. There is much overlapping and there is considerable surplusage.

But even if the method of interpretation which he would have us employ, were adopted, the result would not be essentially different. Great stress has been laid on the fact that, if the testator's main desire was to provide for the integrity and prosperity of his estate, that object would not be attained by his giving to his wife, a pardanashin lady aged at the time that the Will was made about 18 years, a free hand to dispose of the property as she wished. This argument begs the question. The testator is proved to have been greatly attached to his wife. His devotion to her was considered remarkable by his friends. The lady is proved to have possessed some education, and to have possessed—which is more important—a character and capacity for business affairs which are unusual amongst pardanashin ladies of her class. Upon the evidence we would be disposed to think that she was the stronger character of the two. There is no reason to suppose that the testator would not have been justified in an opinion that for the benefit of the estate itself it would be better that it should be absolutely under the control of his wife, that she should have an unfettered discretion to provide for the succession in any manner in which she pleased and that she could be trusted with complete powers of alienation. The wording of the fourth paragraph can leave no doubt as to the nature of the estate conferred. In the plainest words that an unskilled man could use, the draftsman has devised a complete estate to the lady. It is impossible upon the wording of the fourth clause to arrive at a conclusion that the estate awarded was merely the estate to which the lady would have been entitled, if Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh had died intestate. The learned Counsel for the appellant goes further. According to his view the testator's object was to give the lady an estate even less than that of a Hindu widow. If that were his object, he could not possibly have assented to the terms of the fourth paragraph. Not only does he describe the lady as "owner:" he describes her as "owner with all the powers and transfers," by which is clearly meant "all the powers of transfer," "of a proprietor and in possession." He adds the rather meaningless expression "and in enjoyment of the profits." But he continues "and the ruler of the estate." The learned Counsel for the appellant would have us translate the words here as meaning the owner of the profits, with all the powers of transfer as proprietor with regard to the profits, and in possession of the profits, and in the enjoyment of the profits. Such a translation is opposed to the clear meaning of the words and would still leave the important words "and the ruler of the estate" untouched. Further he continues "and my wife as my successor shall possess all the powers and transfers (i. e., the powers of transfer) in their entirety which I have in this property and estate." Even if the remainder of the Will contained statements repugnant to this clause, it would be difficult to arrive at a conclusion that a limited estate was devised to the lady. There is, however, no repugnance in any of the remaining clauses. It is true, that he continues by directing his wife to retain certain old servants in her employment subject to her orders and subject to the qualification that they should remain obedient to her, and continues that such servants are to be supported from the profits of the property, so long as their work is satisfactory and honest. This provision is nothing more than an attempt to restrain his wife from dismissing these servants arbitrarily and unjustly. How far the servants could have pleaded this clause against an arbitrary and unjust dismissal, it is not necessary for us to discuss. Upon the facts the lady showed no indication to treat any of them unfairly. It is sufficient for our purpose to examine this clause on the allegation that it is a restriction of the powers of the owner of a full estate. We do not consider that there is anything in this clause which detracts from the lady's full power to dispose of the property as she pleased.

We now come to the last portion with regard to the power of the lady to make an endowment for religious or charitable purposes. This portion is obvious surplusage, as the lady had the full power to do what she wished to the property. She could make any endowment that she pleased. There is no direction here to the lady to make an endowment. All that the testator says is that such an endowment would not be displeasing to him—a pious expression of opinion which has no effect in detracting from her full powers to dispose of the property. On the question of interpretation we note that, after a careful consideration, we find that the restriction of the power of transfer is a suggestion that if such an endowment should be made, it would be advisable that the manager of the endowment should have no power of transfer of any kind. We are thus satisfied that under the Will the lady had a complete estate.

We now come to the endowment made by the lady. We are in some doubt as to whether we should have permitted the appellant to argue on this point at all. In the lower Court he had clearly not claimed through the lady, but, inasmuch as the lower Court had taken a large mass of evidence as to the validity of the endowment, we with some diffidence permitted argument upon the point for the purpose of arriving at a short conclusion on the merits. Ram Kali belonged to a Kayesth family, many of the male members of which were connected with the legal profession. In this family the subject of the education of their caste-fellows and the improvement of the position of Kayesths by affording them facilities for instruction was clearly of absorbing interest. The lady's brother Chaudhri Mahadeo Prasad, who was examined at unnecessary length as a witness in the case, is a wealthy gentleman of high position who has practically made the improvement of education amongst the Kayesths his life-work. He has himself given half a lac of rupees to the educational institution at Allahabad known as the Kayestha Pathshala and has created a trust in respect of his own property, by which half the profits will go towards the foundation of scholarships for Kayesth students. Ram Kali, as has been already stated, was a lady of exceptional intelligence and some education. After her husband's death she appears to have applied her mind to the best use that she could make of her fortune towards the increase of religious merit for her husband and the improvement of the position of the members of her own community. After careful deliberation and close examination of various projects, after rejection of many proposals made to her, she finally selected a certain scheme to which the property left by her husband should be devoted. That scheme is embodied in the deed of endowment. There is a mass of evidence to show that she took advice from various persons—advice not the less valuable because some of her advisers were members of her own family and because all of them were philanthropic gentlemen intensely interested in the improvement of the Kayesth community. She did not always accept the advice proffered and after mature deliberation she settled on a scheme, reasonable and intelligent, which combined the perpetuation of her husband's memory and the acquisition of religious merit by him, the advancement of the religious principles which she had at heart, and the improvement of the condition of the poorer members of her own community. A mass of evidence has been called upon this point and the endowment has been made the subject of much criticism in this Court which, in spite of its ingenuity, can only be described as infructuous. It was considered advisable in the interests of all parties to register the deed, not in Sitapur where the property was situated, but in Allahabad where the lady happened to be residing, and, to enable the deed to be registered in Allahabad, Chaudhri Mahadeo Prasad presented the lady with a little piece of land of no great value in Allahabad. She added this land to the other property endowed and thus enabled herself to register the deed in Allahabad. There was a decision of the Allahabad High Court in Sheo Dayal Mal v. Hari Ram (2), which stated that such a registration is bad in law. That decision was, however, dissented from in Gulzari Lal v. Daya Ram (3) and was overruled by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Hari Ram v. Sheodayal Mal (4). There can be no doubt as to the fact that the registration was good in law. The learned Counsel for the appellant, when the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council was brought to his notice, frankly withdrew his argument upon this point. But he continued to urge that the evidence on the record, if properly considered, must lead to the conclusion that the deed of endowment was bad, that the execution had not been established, and that the evidence showed that the deed had been executed under undue influence. There are many decisions as to the safeguards that must surround a pardanashin lady in executing a deed. It is unnecessary to refer to more than one in which their Lordships of the Privy Council have summed up the law on the subject in a comparatively recent case. That decision will be found in Kali Bakhsh Singh v. Ram Gopal Singh (5). At page 89* their Lordships say:—"In the first place the lady was a pardanashin lady, and the law throws around her a special cloak of protection. It demands that the burden of proof shall in such a case rest, not with those who attack, but with those who found upon the deed, and the proof must go so far as to show affirmatively and conclusively that the deed was not only executed by, but was explained to, and was really understood by, the grantor. In such cases it must also, of course, be established that the deed was not signed under duress, but arose from free and independent will of the grantor. The law as just stated is too well settled to be doubted or upset. It was expressly re-affirmed by this Board in the case of Sajjad Husain v. Wazir Ali Khan (6), and nothing that is now said can, or is intended to, disturb it." At page 92* it is added:—"Their Lordships, as already mentioned, have fully in view the fact that the lady was a pardanashin lady, but the evidence as to her strength of will and business capacity, and the fact that the deed as granted is not in the circumstances of her life in any way an unnatural disposition of part of her property, go far, taken together with the evidence in this case, to convince them that the deed was granted by her as the expression of her deliberate mind and apart from any undue influence exerted upon it. In short, their view is that if independent outside advice, which is an essentially different thing from independent outside control, had been obtained, the lady would have acted just as she did. Much as their Lordships support and approve of the protection given by law to a pardanashin lady, they cannot transmute such a legal protection into a legal disability."

We have been taken through, but we need not refer to, the mass of the evidence called. It has been thoroughly discussed by the learned Subordinate Judge with whose conclusions we are in complete accord. Here the case in favour of the validity of the deed is even stronger than in the case just quoted. The burden of proof has been put upon those who founded upon the deed. The evidence shows affirmatively and conclusively that the deed was explained to and thoroughly understood by the lady. It was executed by the lady. It was not signed under duress. It arose from the free and independent will of the grantor. There was no undue influence. The disposition of the property was a most natural disposition. The lady had strength of will and business capacity. In addition she had outside advice. In many cases that outside advice came from members of her own family, and in all cases it came from gentlemen who were interested in the promotion of the objects which she had at heart. But the advice was independent. Upon the evidence as it stands there can be no possible doubt as to the fact that the deed of endowment is a valid and legal disposition.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has added one small point. He objected to the refusal of the learned Subordinate Judge to call certain witnesses at the close of the case—a point which he states is referred to at original pages 27 and 28 of the learned Subordinate Judge's judgment. We have only to say upon this point that we approve the action of the learned Subordinate Judge. The plaintiff's evidence was closed on the 2nd June 1915. The defendant's evidence was closed on the 7th July 1915. The plaintiff's rebutting evidence was called from the 7th July 1915 onwards. It was the business of the plaintiff to have applied for the examination of the five witnesses in question before the 7th July 1915. He did not do so until the 26th July 1915 and the learned Subordinate Judge rightly refused his application.

There are many other points taken in the grounds of appeal, but we need not refer to any of them, as with the exception of the points that we have already decided the remainder were withdrawn in argument.

We conclude that Bisheshar Baksh Singh executed a valid and effective Will by which he devised a full proprietary estate to Ram Kali and that Ram Kali made a valid and effective endowment which leaves the appellant no interest of any kind in the property in dispute. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal. The appellant will pay his own costs and those of the respondent.

Appeal dismissed.

JADUBANS PANDAY—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—APPELLANT

versus

EKRAM RAI AND OTHERS—DECREE-HOLDERS—RESPONDENTS.

Res judicata -Execution proceedings—Objection disposed of at one stage, whether can be raised at subsequent stage.

JADUBANS PANDAY v. EKRAM RAI.

Where in execution an objection is raised and gone into, the same objection cannot be considered on any subsequent application in execution. If it is decided against the judgment-debtor it is decided for good and all against him, and if decided in his favour is equally binding [p. 656, col. 2.]

Where a decision of the execution Court is that no property of a judgment-debtor can be attached, that decision is final. [p. 657, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Shahabad, in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 50 of 1917, dated the 2nd April 1917, affirming that of the Sub-Judge, Shahabad, Arrah, in Suit No. 9 of 1917, dated the 17th March 1917.

FACTS.—The decree-holders-respondents obtained a decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6, of the Civil Procedure Code against Ambica Panday, Jamadar Panday and their sons and grandsons. Subsequent to the decree Ambica Panday and Jamadar Panday made an application to be declared insolvents and were so declared on 5th May 1913. On 13th December 1913 the decree-holders made an application for execution of their decree against the entire body of the judgment-debtors, viz., Ambica, Jamadar and their sons and grandsons. An objection was filed on behalf of the judgment-debtors that their property was not liable to be sold as they had been declared insolvents The Court allowed the objection and held that the entire joint family consisting of Ambica, Jamadar and their sons and grandsons had been declared insolvent and that the property had become vested in the Receiver and that, therefore, the execution could not issue against them. Subsequently on 22nd December 1916 the decree-holders made a second application for execution of their decree against the sons and grandsons of Ambica and Jamadar and prayed for attachment and sale of their shares in two houses. An objection was taken on the ground that the judgment-debtors having been declared insolvents, the decree-holders were not entitled to proceed with the execution of the second application for execution of their decree. Both the Courts below found that the insolvency proceeding was against Ambica and Jamadar only and not against their sons and grandsons and that notwithstanding Ambica and Jamadar's having been declared insolvents the decree-holders could proceed against their sons and grandsons, who were no parties to the insolvency proceeding and against whom no declaration or order had been made in that proceeding. A second appeal was preferred to the High Court against the order of the Courts below.

Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal, for the Appellant, contended that the Court below had no jurisdiction in the second execution proceeding to decide whether the appellant was or was not a party to the insolvency proceeding. In the previous execution proceeding it was decided that the insolvency proceeding was against the entire joint family consisting of Ambica, Jamadar and their sons and grandsons. No appeal was filed against that order and, therefore, that order became final. The present application is barred by the principle of res judicata. When once a point is decided in an execution proceeding and is allowed to become final, the same point cannot be raised and decided in a subsequent execution proceeding. He relied on Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (1), Khosal Chandra v. Ukiladdi (2), Mazzem Hossein Mondal v. Sarat Kumari Debi (3), Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (4), Beni Ram v. Nanhu Mal (5), Manjunath Badrabhat v. Venkatesh Govind Shanbhog (6) and Bisheswar Dayal v. Rup Kishore Lal (7).

Mr. Panchanan Banerjee, for the Respondents.—The fact that the sons and grandsons of Ambica and Jamadar are in possession of the properties sought to be attached and sold in the present execution proceeding, shows that the properties in dispute had not vested in the Receiver. Unless the property is vested in the Receiver appointed in the insolvency proceeding the judgment-debtors are not entitled to any benefit on account of the insolvency proceeding.

(7) 41 Ind. Cas. 675; 3 P. L. W. 13.

Ambica and Jamadar were the only persons who were parties to the insolvency proceeding, their sons and grandsons had nothing to do with it. The order in the insolvency proceeding was quite clear that the proceeding was against Ambica and Jamadar personally. The construction placed upon the order by the execution Court in the previous execution proceeding was a wrong construction. A wrong construction placed upon a document by a Court cannot operate as res judicata.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are that the appellants before us were members of a joint family of which the kartas were Ambica and Jamadar. Ambica and Jamadar were declared insolvents and their property vested in a Receiver. On the 12th January 1917 the present opposite party made an application to execute a decree obtained against the joint family by the attachment and sale of the family dwelling house. Various objections to his execution were taken by the appellants and the following judgment thereon was written:—

"The decree-holder wants to execute his decree against two houses belonging to the judgment-debtors Ragho Bans, Jadu Bans and others. They object on the ground that the managing members of the joint family named Ambica and Jamadar were declared insolvents and so the property belonging to the joint family cannot be seized in execution of the decree. On reference to the insolvency proceedings it is clear that Ambica and Jamadar were declared as insolvents in their personal capacity, so the objection cannot stand. It is also clear that the houses sought to be proceeded against did not vest in the Receiver, but were released on the ground that they had been purchased by one Deo Narain so the objections have no legs to stand upon. The insolvency proceedings came to an end on 15th July 1916. The present application for execution was put in on 13th January 1917. It is further contended that the present application for execution is barred. On reference to the copy of the order-sheet it appears that the previous proceeding came to an end on 2nd March 1914. So no bar of limitation applies. The previous objection was decided on 17th August 1912 against Malicka, to which the present judgment-debtors were not parties. The objections are disallowed and execution is to proceed."

In this Court it is contended that this judgment must be set aside, on the ground that the point in issue had already been decided by a judgment written on the 2nd March 1914 upon an application made to sell the houses of two other members of the joint family. It is conceded in argument that in these proceedings the whole joint family, including all the sons and grandsons of Ambica and Jamadar, were on the record. The existence of this judgment was apparently not brought to the notice of either of the Courts below. We have, therefore, to consider whether the judgment of the 17th March 1917 decides issues which had already been decided. For it is settled law that where in execution an objection is raised and gone into, the same objection cannot be considered on any subsequent application in execution. If it was decided against the judgment-debtors it was decided for good and all against them, and if decided in their favour it is equally binding. The learned District Judge at the hearing of the appeal before him substantially adopts the Subordinate Judge's decision. He advances practically no new arguments of his own but merely elaborates the arguments of the first Court. We propose, therefore, to take the judgment of the first Court and compare it with the judgment which is said to be a bar to the execution.

The first half of the judgment deals with the question whether Ambica and Jamadar were declared insolvents in their personal capacity or by the insolvency the whole joint family had become insolvent. This fact was substantially in issue on the first application for execution. It was specifically found in the Court deciding the objection on 2nd March 1914 that the father as managing member of the joint undivided Hindu family represents the entire estate and in the Insolvency Court represents the entire family. The issue, therefore, that the learned Judge set himself to decide in the first part of the case, that is to say, that part of the case which dealt with the effect of the insolvency of Ambica and Jamadar, had already been specifically decided in the previous proceedings. On the second part of the case the question was whether the particular property now pursued had been released by the Receiver to Indra Narain. This question did not, in our view, arise. The release of the property to a third party by the Receiver would not render it liable to pursuit. It is urged before us that the houses now under attachment and sale were not the same houses as were previously pursued. Whether this is so or not, there is not sufficient material before us to show; but we hold that where a decision of the execution Court is that no property of a judgment-debtor can be attached that decision is final. It could not for instance be asserted that if on a decree made against A, B and C, C's cattle were attached, and on his plea that he could not be proceeded against under the decree the cattle be released, the decree-holder is entitled on the following day to seek to attach his ploughs and re-open the whole question of liability. Being of opinion that the order passed is res judicata, we must set aside the orders of the Courts below and direct that there be no further attempt to execute the decree by attachment and sale of the property of this joint family by this decree-holder. In view of the fact that the document upon which we have decided this case was not brought to the notice of the Courts below we make no order as to costs at any stage of this case.

Order set aside.

BORADA KANTA JANA—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 34—Administrator pendente lite, position of—Probate Court, power of, to direct Administrator pendente lite to advance to widow contesting Will money for maintenance and conduct of case.

The position of an Administrator pendente lite in Probate proceedings is closely analogous to that of a Receiver in a partition suit and section 34 of the Probate and Administration Act gives ample power to the Court to direct the Administrator pendente lite to do such acts as may be necessary in the interests of the several parties to the proceedings. [p. 658, col. 1.]

A testator left immoveable property, the annual income of which was ten thousand rupees, and also cash and money lent out at interest. By a Will purporting to have been made by him, the widow was allowed Rs. 20 a month and her minor sons were given shares in the estate much less than what they would get by the law of inheritance. During the Probate proceedings the widow, who contested the Will, claimed on behalf of herself and her minor sons sums reasonably sufficient for their maintenance and also sufficient to enable her to contest the Will and to put her case adequately before the Court:

Held, that the Administrator pendente lite should be directed by the Court to advance to the widow one thousand rupees and thereafter under the orders of the Court such sums as might be found to be reasonably necessary for the maintenance of the widow and her minor sons and for the proper conduct of their defence in the Probate proceedings. [p. 658, cols 1 & 2.]

Rule against the order of the District Judge, 24-Pergannas, in Original Suit No. 28 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury (with him Babu Satya Charan Sinha), for the Petitioners.—The District Judge was wrong in holding that he could not direct the administrator pendente lite to pay to the widow her necessary costs for conducting her and her minor sons' defence in the Probate proceedings Even where the defendants are minors the Court has authority to make order for the payment by the plaintiff to the guardian ad litem the costs of conducting the defence. The position of an Administrator pendente lite is analogous to that of a Receiver in a partition suit, and section 34 of the Probate and Administration Act gives ample power to Court to direct the Administrator to do such acts as may be necessary for the protection of the interests of the parties to the proceedings. If the order of the District Judge be allowed to stand, the widow and her minor sons will be prevented from contesting the genuineness of the Will.

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Manmatha Nath Roy), for the Opposite Party.—The Court has no jurisdiction to direct a party to a proceeding to pay to the other party the costs of conducting the litigation. The learned District Judge was perfectly justified in holding that in the absence of any express provision in Act V of 1908 or in Act V of 1881 he could not make any such order. The widow is not entitled to ask the Court to be paid by the Administrator pendente lite to enable her to contest the validity of the Will.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is directed against an order of the District Judge of the 24-Pergannas, by which he has declined in certain Probate proceedings to make an order upon the Administrator pendente lite to advance to the widow of the deceased (who was contesting the Will that has been propounded partly on her own behalf and partly on behalf of her two minor sons) sums reasonably sufficient for their maintenance and also sufficient to enable the widow to contest the Will and put her defence adequately before the Court. The learned District Judge appears to be of opinion that there is nothing in the law which enables him to make such an order. But here it appears to us that he has fallen into error. The position of an Administrator pendente lite in a Probate proceeding is closely analogous to that of a Receiver appointed for instance in a partition suit, and section 34 of the Probate and Administration Act gives ample power to the Court to direct the Administrator pendente lite to do such acts as may be necessary in the interests of the several parties to the proceedings. In this case it appears that the annual income from the immoveable property alone exceeds or at least amounts to ten thousand rupees. It also appears that there is cash money in hand and also money lent out at interest. By the Will that has been propounded the widow, we are informed, has been allowed maintenance only at the rate of Rs. 20 a month and the share in the estate that would fall under the ordinary law of inheritance to her two sons has been reduced from, say, seven annas to five. It is obviously essential that in the interest of the widow and her two minor sons the person who propounds the Will should be required to prove that it was in fact duly executed by the testator and that every opportunity should be given to the widow on her own behalf and on behalf of her two minor sons to contest that position.

We, therefore, direct that at the moment one thousand rupees be advanced to the widow, the payment to be made within this day fortnight, and that thereafter under the orders of the Court such sums as may be found to be reasonably necessary for the maintenance of the widow and her children and for the proper conduct of their defence be advanced to them from time to time. The Rule is accordingly made absolute with costs, three gold mohurs. Let the record be sent down at once.

Rule made absolute.

Landlord and tenant—Mokurrari tenure—Dispossession of tenure-holder from portion of holding—Tenure-holder, whether can withhold rent.

Where a lessor is directly or indirectly concerned in the dispossession of a tenure-holder from a mokurrari, the tenure-holder is entitled to withhold payment of the entire rent to the superior landlord. [p. 659, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Bhagalpur, dated the 2nd February 1916, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Bhagalpur, dated the 28th May 1915.

FACTS.—The plaintiffs brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Bhagalpur, claiming arrears of rent from the defendant in respect of a mokurrari tenure of 204 bighas comprised in 4 separate plots on a yearly jama of Rs. 484-8-0 besides cesses at a rate of Rs. 2-6-0 per bigha. The suit was contested by the defendant, on the ground that the plaintiffs shortly after making the settlement with him as aforesaid settled an area of 94 bighas, one of the said 4 plots, with certain other persons, which prevented the defendant from obtaining actual possession of the said 94 bighas and that therefore the entire rent for the mokurrari tenure should be suspended. The Subordinate Judge held that the conduct of the plaintiffs amounted to an active participation in keeping the defendant out of possession of the aforesaid area of 94 bighas and he, therefore, dismissed the suit. An appeal against his decision before the District Judge of Bhagalpur was also dismissed. Hence the second appeal.

Mr. Pugh (with him Mr. Lal Mohan Ganguli), for the Appellants.

Messrs. P. C. Manuk and Sultan Ahmad (with them Messrs. Naresh Chandra Singh and Surendra Mohan Das), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

SHARFUDDIN, J.—The plaintiffs who are the appellants gave a mokurrari to the defendant of about 204 bighas of land. One of the plots is a plot of 94 bighas odd and this plot of 94 bighas is situated to the north of the river Goghri.

The defendant withheld payment of rent, on the ground that through the connivance of the lessors he was dispossessed from that portion of the mokurrari. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit; hence the present appeal.

On behalf of the appellants it has been conceded that the law is that when the lessor is directly or indirectly concerned in the dispossession of a tenure-holder from a mokurrari, the tenure-holder is entitled to withhold payment of the entire rent to the superior landlord, but it was contended that the appellants' case depends on a kabuliyat executed by the defendant, wherein it was stipulated that in case of dispossession from any portion the defendant would be entitled to claim a proportionate abatement of rent. There is no doubt that there is such a provision, but that provision does not say that the defendant will not be entitled to withhold payment of any rent. Besides, we have to consider that clause in relation to what precedes it. Reading the kabuliyat as a whole, it is clear to me that what was provided was dispossession of the lessee from the mokurrari in consequence of litigation or owing to the action of the river. The clause relied upon is to the following effect:—"If under any circumstances this executant or his heirs and representatives be, in future, dispossessed of any portion of the said land, or if under a decision of the Court any portion of it be taken out of the possession of this executant or his heirs and representatives, then this executant and his heirs and representatives will be entitled to a decree in the rent at the rate mentioned above to the extent to which they will be dispossessed."

If we were to accept the argument on behalf of the appellants it would amount to nullifying the whole mokurrari, because if a wide meaning is given to this part of the kabuliyat, the lessor himself would be able to continue dispossessing the lessee till the latter is absolutely dispossessed from all the mokurrari lands. The meaning seems to me to be this: That in case of dispossession through an action in Court, or if by any act of God the lessee is dispossessed, he will be entitled to claim a proportionate abatement of rent. According to this kabuliyat the lessee was entitled to the produce generation after generation. There is also a very clear provision of the right to claim abatement owing to the action of the river. This being the view I take, I dismiss the appeal with costs.

ROE, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Kachin Hill Tribes Regulation (I of 1895), ss. 1 (3), 11—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 9, 20—Jurisdiction—Regulation, whether applies to Kachins outside hill-tracts.

The Kachin Hill Tribes Regulation applies to Kachins in the defined hill-tracts and does not apply outside those hill-tracts [p. 660, col. 2.]

Section 11 of the Kachin Hill Tribes Regulation applies to suits triable within a hill-tract by an officer exercising jurisdiction therein. It is permissive and gives the Special Court power to try any suit of the nature described, but it does not lay down, and it cannot be inferred, that where a suit is triable outside a hill-tract, the jurisdiction of the ordinary Civil Courts is superseded [p. 661, col. 1.]

PAUSKI HOW v. SINWA NAUNG.

Appeal against the order of the District Court, Myitkyina.

Messrs. Lentaigne and Pillay, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit upon a mortgage which was filed in the District Court, Myitkyina, by the plaintiffs, a Chinese firm carrying on business in Bhamo and Mogaung. The defendant is a Kachin described in the plaint as residing in Kansi, Kamaing Sub-division, Myitkyina District. It is apparently admitted that Kansi is a hill-tract as defined in the Kachin Hill Tribes Regulation No. I of 1895, that is to say, a hill-tract to which that Regulation has been extended. The plaint was returned by the District Judge to the plaintiff on the ground that he had no jurisdiction, and the order directs that the plaint be returned for presentation to the proper Court, which under the Kachin Hills Regulation is the Court of the Assistant Superintendent, Kamaing.

This appeal is under Order XLIII, rule 1 (a), of the Code of Civil Procedure. The District Judge held that the suit was one between a Kachin as defined in the Kachin Hills Regulation and a non-Kachin, that the subject-matter of the suit lay in the Kachin Hills and that the defendant was a permanent resident there. The suit was, therefore, in the opinion of the District Judge, controlled by section 11 of the Kachin Hills Regulation and should be tried by the Special Court established under the Kachin Hills Regulation and under the special law and procedure laid down therein.

The grounds of appeal are that the District Judge was in error in holding that the District Court, Myitkyina, had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, that the cause of action arose at Mogaung which is not a hill-tract and as such the District Judge had jurisdiction, that the Judge erred in holding that the suit was barred under section 11 of the Kachin Hills Regulation, and that he should not have returned the plaint for presentation to the Assistant Superintendent, Kachin Hill Tracts, Kamaing.

The extent of the Kachin Hill Tribes Regulation is laid down in section 1 (3) of the Regulation, which declares that it shall extend to such hill-tracts and shall apply to such hill tribes as the Local Government may by notification direct, and sub-section 3 goes on to declare that section 11 shall apply to all persons who may be parties to a suit or other proceeding of a civil nature in which any of the parties is a member of a hill tribe to which the Regulation applies. The wording of this clause is not perhaps very clear, but there seems to be no reason for supposing that it extends, or was intended to extend, the operation of the Regulation beyond the local area to which by clause (3) of section 1 it is specifically extended. The District Judge, Myitkyina, would appear to interpret this clause as extending the operation of the Act to members of a hill tribe outside the hill-tracts. If that is so, apparently a Kachin ordinarily resident in a hill-tract might come to Mandalay, contract debts in the bazaar and plead the Regulation as a bar to the jurisdiction of the Local Courts in the Mandalay District. Apart from the actual wording of the Regulation, it appears to me very improbable that it was the intention of Government that this should be possible. It is true that the Regulation is extended to such hill tribes as the Local Government may, by notification in the Burma Gazette, direct, and by a notification, Political Department No. 17, dated the 29th July 1914, the Lieutenant-Governor directs that the Regulation shall apply to the undermentioned hill tribes in certain defined tracts, namely, Kachins and others. I think that this notification must be taken to mean what it says, that is to say, that it applies to Kachins in the hill-tracts defined and does not apply outside those hill-tracts. Section 3 defines what enactments are in force and apply to members of a hill tribe in a hill-tract, and declares that no other enactment shall be deemed to apply to members of a hill tribe in a hill-tract. It seems to me that it would be impossible to interpret this section as meaning that the enactments set out in the schedule apply to members of a hill tribe outside a hill-tract without straining the plain meaning of the words.

Section 11, which is referred to in section 1 of the Regulation and on which the learned District Judge relies, lays down that the Deputy Commissioner and every Assistant Commissioner exercising jurisdiction within a hill-tract may try any suit or other proceeding of a civil nature between parties any one of whom is a member of a hill-tribe. Nothing is said about the subject-matter of the suit or about one of the parties being a permanent resident in a hill tract. This section, therefore, clearly applies to suits triable within a hill-tract by an officer exercising jurisdiction therein. It is permissive and gives the Deputy Commissioner or Assistant Commissioner power to try any suit of the nature described but it does not lay down, and it cannot be inferred, where a suit is triable outside a hill tract, the jurisdiction of the ordinary Civil Courts is superseded. Section 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure declares that the Courts shall have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature excepting suits of which their cognizance is either expressly or impliedly barred, and section 20 lays down that subject to certain limitations, every suit shall be instituted in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction, among other things, the cause of action wholly or in part arises, and there can be no doubt that the plaintiff may select the forum in which to bring his suit, provided that he complies with the provisions of section 20. Here it is his case that the mortgage upon which he sues was executed in Mogaung, that is to say, within the jurisdiction of the District Judge of Myitkyina. There is no doubt therefore that even if the Kachin Hill Tribes Regulation extends beyond the limit of a hill tract, the fact that it lays down that the Deputy Commissioner or Assistant Commissioner may try a suit, cannot be a bar to the jurisdiction of the ordinary Civil Courts.

There will, therefore, be an order setting aside the order of the District Judge and directing him to admit the plaint and proceed to deal with it according to law.

Costs will follow the final result.

Order set aside.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 114—Presumption as to correctness of official acts—Burden of proof Procedure—Execution—Sale, suit to set aside—Court, duty of.

There is a presumption under section 114 of the Evidence Act that an official act has been regularly performed but when an applicant before the Court is attempting to rebut that presumption, it is not for the Court itself to give assistance to the other side or to deal with the matter otherwise than impartially. [p. 662, col. 2.]

When a Court-sale is challenged, it is not the business of the Court to collect materials upon which the sale may be supported for the sake of the reputation of the Court [p. 662, col. 2.]

Civil Revision from a decision of the Munsif, Banka.

Mr. Lalit Mohan Ghosh, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Naresh Chandra Sinha and Surendra Mohan Das, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—We are asked in revision to consider the following judgment:—"This is an appeal against the decision of the Munsif of Banka setting aside a sale held in execution of a decree. The judgment of the learned Munsif deals also with another application to set aside the decree. This tends to cause confusion and should not have been done. The applicant before him had only a share in the land sold and her relations contested the suit and appeared in the execution proceedings. This has not been noticed by the learned Munsif who has dealt with the case in a perfunctory manner. The auction-purchaser should have been summoned and the sale should not have been set aside in his absence. He has appeared in this Court and objected to the proceedings below, and rightly so. There is an order by the learned Munsif that the execution record should be sent for, but strange to say these have not been produced and the case has been dealt with without them, a most unsatisfactory proceeding The question whether the application was barred by limitation has not been considered at all. This was necessary, as unless the provisions of section 18 of the Limitation Act were applicable the application is barred. To talk of the fraud of the decree-holder without specifying it is to beg the question at issue. The error in the plaint in describing the applicant as a widow cannot be held to be a material irregularity justifying the setting aside of the sale. Nor because the service of sale-proclamation and attachment was not proved can fraud be declared. The learned Munsif should certainly have inspected the execution record and examined the serving peon. The latter is an officer of his Court and the reputation of the Court is at stake if the peon is guilty of misconduct. I wish this view were borne in mind by judicial officers. It is impossible to support the findings of the Munsif. The application should have been dismissed as being barred. This appeal is allowed and the order of the lower Court set aside with costs and Pleader's fee Rs. 8."

We would suggest to the learned Judge that a Superior Court, when upbraiding a Subordinate Court for perfunctoriness, should be particularly careful not to lay itself open to the same charge.

Two applications had been made in the Court of the Munsif, one for the setting aside of a decree obtained ex parte on the ground that no summons had been served, the other that the sale held in execution of that decree be set aside on the ground of material irregularities in the conduct of the sale. The issues raised on these two applications were tried together by consent of parties. The learned Judge says that this should not have been done because it tends to cause confusion. Why it should cause any confusion at all we cannot see. The whole proceedings were closely interwoven. If the decree was obtained by fraud, the probability that the sale was fraudulently conducted was enhanced. If it was honestly obtained, the probability that the sale was honestly proclaimed was also enhanced. The learned Munsif found on the evidence that the summons in the suit had not been served on the applicant and that the sale-proclamation had been fraudulently suppressed. He, therefore, set aside both the decree and the sale. The decree-holder did not appeal against the order setting aside the decree and the original suit is, we understand, now being re-tried. The auction-purchaser did not appeal against the order setting aside the sale. The decree-holder did appeal. The learned Judge says that the auction-purchaser should have been summoned and the sale should not have been set aside in his absence. The learned Munsif had been at pains to record that a notice had been served on the auction-purchaser and that the auction-purchaser had been carefully kept out of Court at the instance of the decree-holder, with whom he was in collusion. The whole judgment of the learned Judge indicates that he is of opinion that when a Court-sale is challenged, it is the business of the Court to collect materials upon which the sale may be supported for the sake of the reputation of the Court. This we consider a view unfair to those who contend that a sale has been improperly conducted. There is a presumption under section 114 of the Evidence Act that an official act has been regularly performed, but when an applicant before the Court is attempting to rebut that presumption it is not for the Court itself to give assistance to the other side, or to deal with the matter otherwise than impartially. The real issue in the case was: Were the sale-proclamations fraudulently suppressed? The learned Munsif found that they were. If that is correct the sale was fraudulently held, and fraudulently concealed from the applicant and limitation saved by section 18. The issue has not been touched by the learned Judge. All that he says is that fraud cannot be declared merely because the service of the sale-proclamation has not been proved and that it is impossible to support the findings of the Munsif. We are of opinion not only that the judgment is not a judgment in accordance with law, but also that it is no judgment at all. It is merely an indignant protest against the setting aside of a sale held by officers subordinate to the Judge. The learned Judge had no jurisdiction to reverse the order of the lower Court without writing a judgment in accordance with law. We, therefore, set aside the order made, and direct that the appeal be re heard. In view of the attitude of the learned Judge towards the respondent's case we direct that it be re-heard by the District Judge of Monghyr.

Order set aside.

Madras Estates Land Act (I Mad. of 1908), s. 4—Landlord and tenant—Varam tenure—Lands left waste, liability for rent for—Custom, reasonable—Burden of proof—Agricultural holding, use of, as house site—Rent, liability for, at punjah rate—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Finding in Civil Court as to landlord's right, whether res judicata in suit for rent in Revenue Court.

Section 4 of the Madras Estates Land Act does not override any custom or agreement not to charge rent upon portions left waste in a tenant's holding. [p. 665, col. 1; p. 663, col. 2.]

Where lands are let on waram tenure, it is open to the tenant to claim exemption from rent for portions that were left fallow through no default of his. [p. 664, col. 2.]

A ryot cannot claim exemption from rent by reason of his having put an agricultural holding to some other use. The landlord is entitled to claim rent at punjah rate for use of agricultural land as a house site. [p. 664, col. 1.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—A custom to let lands lie waste without regard to reasonable area and without regard to good or bad seasons and existence or absence of facilities for irrigation for indefinite periods at the tenant's will and pleasure, with absolute freedom from liability to payment of any rent, is not a reasonable custom which can be recognised by the Courts. [p. 664, col. 1.]

The onus is on the ryot to prove that the lands were left waste through no default of his. [p. 664, col. 2.]

A mere finding by a Civil Court as to the existence of any right in a landlord will not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit in a Revenue Court having exclusive jurisdiction over such a suit. But where the right is embodied in the decree of a competent Court in the former suit, such decree is res judicata between the parties as regards the rights established thereby. [p. 664, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 640 of 1915, preferred against that of the Court of the Revenue Divisional Officer, Pattukottai Division, in Summary Suit No. 130 of 1914.

The Hon'ble Mr. T. Rangachariar, for the Appellants.

Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri, for the Respondents.

This second appeal and the memorandum of objections filed by the respondents coming on for hearing on the 22nd and 23rd February 1917, and the case having stood over for consideration till the 28th February 1917, the Court (Sadasiva Aiyar and Spencer, JJ.) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are the appellants in this case. The plaintiffs are landlords and the defendants are tenants under the Madras Estates Land Act. The only questions involved in the second appeal and in the connected memorandum of objections are: (1) whether the plaintiffs are entitled to claim rent on the lands left waste in the defendants' holding if the defendants do not establish that the lands were so left waste without their default, (2) whether the defendants are bound to pay ordinary dry rate of rent on the area of a house site included in the defendants' holding and whether that question is res judicata in favour of the defendants (as the defendants contend) or in favour of the plaintiffs (as the plaintiffs contend), and (3) whether the plaintiffs are entitled to claim rent for the house site, item 70, at Nanja rates and not merely at Punja rates.

As regards the first point, I have come to the conclusion (after the best consideration that I have been able to give to the question) that the law on this point has been correctly expressed in the judgment in Arunachallam Chettiar v. Mongalam (1), where all the principal authorities have been carefully considered. Under section 4 of the Madras Estates Land Act, the land-holder is entitled to collect rent in respect of all Ryoti land in the occupation of a Ryot and it does not make this right subject to any custom. Prima facie, section 4 entitles the landlord to collect rent on the land left waste by the tenant. [See Segu Rowthen v. Alagappa Chetty (2).] The intention of the parties was, however, held in the above case to override section 4. In the case in Arunachalam Chettiar, In re (3), the custom of allowing a reasonable portion of land in a tenant's holding to be left fallow without being charged rent on it was held a valid custom. In Imandi Appalaswami v. Rajah of Vizianagaram (4) it was held that if the tenant chooses to build on the agricultural site instead of using it for agricultural purposes, he cannot escape payment of rent on the basis of its continuing to be agricultural land. I think the observations in the judgment in Arunachallam Chettiar v. Mangalam (1) establish that the tenant is bound to pay rent on land left waste, unless he establishes an agreement or custom allowing a reasonable extent in area to lie fallow for reasonable periods or some other reasonable custom or a contract for consideration exempting him from payment of rent on lands left waste out of the lands in his holding.

In Vedanta Chariar v. Ayyasami Mudali (5) Innes and Kindersley, JJ., express an opinion that the landlord had the right to collect the whole rent notwithstanding that a portion of the land was left uncultivated through want of rain. In Nagu Chetty v. Bhaskara (6) it was held that for the protection of the "just interests of the Zamindar" it is reasonable to have a provision in a Pattah that the Ryot must pay Melwaram or Theerwa if through his fault the lands are not cultivated. I do not think that a custom to let lands lie waste (without regard to reasonable area and without regard to good or bad seasons and existence or absence of facilities for irrigation) for indefinite periods at the tenant's sweet will and pleasure, with absolute freedom from liability to non-payment of any rent, is a reasonable custom which can be recognised by Courts. In the present case, it is such a custom that seems to have been set up. I think the learned District Judge was right in throwing on the Ryots the burden of proving that the lands were left waste not through the default of the Ryots. I would, therefore, decide the first point in plaintiffs' favour.

As regards points 2 and 3, I am clear that the former decision (see Exhibits A, B, C and D) establishes and declares the plaintiffs' right to get a reasonable rate of rent on the site on which the tenants chose to build houses.

If the judgment in the former suit, which was instituted in a Civil Court, merely contained a finding on the question of the plaintiffs' right, such a finding may not be res judicata in the present suit for rent brought in a Revenue Court which has now exclusive jurisdiction over such a suit. But the plaintiffs' said right was embodied in the decree (see Exhibit B) in the former suit and a decree of a competent Court is clearly res judicata between the parties as regards the rights established thereby.

Sites which are capable of being used for house-building are presumably dry holdings and not wet holdings, and I do not think I could interfere with the lower Court's view that the plaintiffs are entitled only to claim the dry rate of rent on such sites.

It follows from the preceding that the memorandum of objections filed by the plaintiffs and which relates solely to the rate at which the rent due on the house sites has to be calculated has to be dismissed with costs.

As regards the second appeal, I was at first inclined to take the view that we might dismiss the second appeal also at once, accepting the findings of the District Judge (1) that the defendants had failed to prove a contract or a custom that they are entitled to let any lands lie waste at their pleasure without liability to pay rent thereon, and (2) that the defendants had failed to prove that the lands lay waste without any default on their part.

But my learned brother is not satisfied that the District Judge did not arrive at his second finding of fact above referred to more on presumptions than after duly considering the whole evidence in the case and I shall, therefore, concur with him in remanding the case for a fresh and definite finding on this question. In submitting such a finding, the District Judge is requested to indicate whether or not all the lands left waste were so left uncultivated for identical reasons in each of the two Faslis in question.

RAMASAMI SERVAIYENGAR v. ATHIVARADHA CHARIAR.

SPENCER, J.—The main question in this second appeal is whether the appellants were liable to pay rent for lands in their holding left uncultivated, the tenure upon which they hold being 'varam' tenure, according to which the crop is divided between the land-holders and the Ryots.

The District Judge observed that if there had been a fixed money rent or a fixed grain rent on the lands, the Ryots would have been bound by section 4 of the Act to pay rent so long as the land was in their holding.

If he meant by this observation that where a money assessment is fixed on the lands the provisions of section 4 would override any custom or agreement not to charge rent upon portions left waste, he was wrong; vide Segu Rowthen v Alagappa Chetty (2), Udayal v. Arunachala Chettiar (7), Arunachalam Chettiar, In re (3) and Arunachallam Chettiar v. Mangalam (1).

For the holdings concerned in this suit the Varam system admittedly prevails, and as regards such lands the 2nd plaintiff and his 2nd, 4th, 5th and 6th witnesses admitted in their evidence that hitherto Varam had only been collected for lands cultivated and not for lands left waste.

The District Judge was conscious of this. For he says: "It is true that Varam has never been paid for waste lands, but I do not think this fact establishes a custom not to pay for waste under any circumstances. I, therefore, find the appellants are entitled to Varam for the waste lands."

If he was of opinion that certain circumstances would justify the non-payment of rent and that certain other circumstances would not do so, it was his duty to find what the special circumstances were that differentiated the defendants' case from others.

Now in the plaint it was alleged that items Nos. 28 to 69 were wantonly left waste in Faslis 1321 and 1322, owing to defendants' carelessness and bad intention. In the written statement it was alleged that some of these lands were not fit for cultivation and that the rest had been left waste for over twelve years owing to want of proper rain and water.

(7) 27 Ind. Cas. 872; 2 L. W. 145; (1915) M. W. N. 190.

Which of these versions is true is not found by either of the lower Courts.

The District Judge notices that in Fasli 1271 the lack of Ryots was the cause of non-cultivation and he states that there is really no evidence in this case that the lands could not be cultivated. He then proceeds to the presumption that the Ryots have deliberately omitted to cultivate the waste lands.

There must be some foundation either in law or in fact for such a presumption being made, but the judgment does not refer to any.

I think the case should be remanded for a definite finding as to what was the cause of the lands, which were left waste in the suit Faslis, not being cultivated in those years.

Either side may adduce fresh evidence on this point. Two months for finding and ten days for objections.

Item No. 70, schedule 17, is occupied by house. I am of opinion that the District Judge was right in allowing rent to be paid for this land at the Punjah rate. So long as the Ryots' right to use the land for agricultural purposes subsists, they cannot claim to be exempted from paying rent by reason only of their having put it to some other use: vide Imandi Appalaswami v. Rajah of Vizianagaram (4). The memorandum of objections must be dismissed with costs.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the District Judge of Tanjore submitted the following

FINDING.

The High Court has remanded this suit for a finding as to "what was the cause of the lands, which were left waste in the suit Faslis, not being cultivated in those years."

2. Fresh evidence has been taken. The evidence on both sides, however, is so vague that it is difficult to come to any conclusion. The plaintiff's case is that the defendant has left the lands waste in order to spite him and to compel him to dispose of the Melwaram right also to him. This explanation seems to me a little far-fetched. The defendant's case is that the lands are unfit for cultivation except at considerable cost, the Punja being overgrown with prickly pear and the Nanja buried in mud and sand; that the tanks are in bad repair and cannot hold water for a larger extent than the present cultivation and that this deficiency affects both Nanja and Punja, as the only crop suitable for the Punja land is Ragi which also requires water to be baled from the tanks. No definite evidence has been given as to the reason for any particular field lying waste. But it is at least evident, I think, that much of the present waste has been waste for many years (see the evidence of the 1st plaintiff under cross-examination and that of P. W. No. 6 and P. W. No. 1 at the original trial). The statement of P. W. No. 2 in the original trial that there is no immemorial waste is clearly false. The evidence of P. W. No. 7, the Village Munsif, so far as the reason for waste is concerned, is hearsay and of no assistance. P. W. No. 8 is a fellow Melwaramdar of the plaintiff and clearly interested in the plaintiff's case. He admits, however, that there is waste even in the lands wholly owned by the Melwaramdar and that the tanks have not been properly repaired. He asserts that the tanks will fill without a dam being constructed in the river, but the Village Munsif contradicts him on this point. It is admitted that no dam has been put up for several years. The evidence on the plaintiff's side is wholly insufficient to show that the waste is due to neglect by the defendants with a deliberate purpose to spite him. The defence witnesses examined state that the tank is badly out of repair and that on that account and on account of lack of labour the lands lie waste. The defence witnesses Nos. 6 and 7 seem to me disinterested.

3. It is the duty of the Melwaramdars to have the tanks put into order and it is, therefore, their neglect if the tanks are not repaired. On such evidence as there is, I record a finding that the lands left waste in the suit Faslis were left waste chiefly because the tanks are out of repair and partly perhaps because of the lack of labour. No distinction is made by any witness between the conditions affecting each suit Fasli and, therefore, the finding applies equally to both Faslis.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—We accept the finding that the omission to cultivate items Nos. 28 to 69 was not due to the fault of the appellants.

They are, therefore, not liable to pay rent on those items. The appeal is allowed so far as the lower Appellate Court's decree makes the appellants liable to pay such rent also and the lower Appellate Court's decree will be modified accordingly.

The respondents will pay $\frac{3}{4}$ths of the appellants' costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court and bear their own. The order of the first Court as to costs of that Court will stand.

Appeal partly allowed;
Decree modified.

ABINASH CHANDRA—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

SHEKHAR CHAND AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (i) (vi)—Pre-emption suit—Suit decreed in respect of part of property and dismissed as to remainder—Appeal—Court-fee payable.

Plaintiff sought to pre-empt five villages on payment of Rs. 2,500, alleging that the sum of Rs. 41,000 entered in the sale-deed was the ostensible amount of consideration. The suit was dismissed in respect of three villages and decreed in respect of the remaining two on payment of Rs. 21,000. The plaintiff appealed:

Held, (1) that the appeal being divisible into two parts and the sole question which arose in the part relating to the two villages being a question of consideration, the appellant must pay an ad valorem Court-fee on the amount by which he was seeking to reduce the amount made payable by the lower Court; [p. 668, col. 2.]

(2) that as regards the rest of the claim as the right to pre-empt was in dispute, the Court-fee in respect thereto must be calculated according to section 7 (vi) of the Court Fees Act. [p. 668, col. 2.]

Office Report.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. In the plaint filed in the Court below the plaintiff asked for possession by right of pre-emption of certain shares in 5 villages on payment of Rs. 2,500, the actual sale consideration, alleging that Rs. 44,000 entered in the sale-deed was the ostensible amount of consideration. A Court-fee of Rs. 180 was paid on the plaint on Rs. 3,100 being 5 times the Government revenue of the shares to be pre-empted. The Court below decreed the claim for possession of the property specified in the plaint situate in Mauza Parkariar and Mauza Cheontaha on condition of the plaintiff's depositing Rs. 21,000 as the proportionate amount of sale consideration in respect of those villages. The claim for possession of the three remaining villages, viz., Rampur, Lachmipur and Jotepur, was dismissed.

Against the decree of the Court below the plaintiff has filed this appeal valuing it for purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 25,000 and for payment of Court-fee at Rs. 3,100, being 5 times of the Government revenue of all the 5 villages as said above, and paying a Court-fee of Rs. 180 on the latter valuation. The relief sought in this appeal is that the decree of the Court below be varied and the claim decreed in toto. A reference to the pleas urged in the memorandum of appeal to this Court will show that the plaintiff not only claims possession of the 3 villages named above in regard to which the claim has been dismissed, but he also contends that the actual sale consideration of all the properties claimed is Rs. 2,500 and not Rs. 44,000 as found by the Court below, and so the claim in respect of Mauzas Parkariar and Cheontaha ought to have been decreed on payment of the proportionate amount of the actual sale consideration. Practically there are two reliefs asked for in this appeal, viz., (1) to obtain possession of the three villages in regard to which the claim has been dismissed, and (2) to reduce the proportionate liability in respect of two villages decreed in plaintiff's favour. As regards (1) the Court-fee ought to be paid on 5 times the Government revenue of the three villages, viz., Rampur, Lachmipur and Jotepur. According to the plaint 5 times of the revenue of these three villages is Rs. 1,741-4-0. In regard to (2) the Court-fee should be paid on the difference between the amount decreed against the plaintiff-appellant and that admitted by him as the actual sale price. According to the plaintiff's allegation as to the actual sale consideration the rateable contribution of the value of the two villages decreed should be in proportion to Rs. 44,000, 2,500, 21,000.

This comes to Rs. 1,193. The value of this relief is, therefore, Rs. 21,000 minus Rs 1,193=19,807. Adding the two reliefs the value of this appeal should be Rs. 21,584-4-0 and on this valuation a Court-fee of Rs. 815 is payable. A Court-fee of Rs. 180 having been paid there is, therefore, a deficiency of Rs. 635 due from the plaintiff appellant in this Court.

Objection to Office Report.—The report is not correct. The nature of the suit has not been changed in appeal and the subject-matter of the dispute between the parties is the right of pre-emption, the value of which for the purposes of Court-fees is to be determined in the manner directed by section 7, clause (vi), of the Court Fees Act. The matter is concluded by the following observation of their Lordships sitting in Full Bench (sic) in the case of Hafiz Ahmad v. Sobha Ram (1): —

"We are of opinion that where an appeal is preferred in a suit for pre emption on the grounds that the right to pre-empt has or has not been established, as the case may be, no matter what other pleas may be taken, the value of the subject-matter in dispute for the purposes of the Court Fees Act must be determined as in terms provided in Article (sic) (vi) of section 7 of the Act. But when the question in appeal relates solely to the amount to be paid by the pre-emptor then we think that it should be calculated ad valorem on the difference between the amounts alleged as the sale price on the one side and the other."

The present appeal not relating solely to the amount to be paid by the pre-emptor, the view taken by the Stamp Reporter is legally unsustainable and no additional amount of Court-fee is leviable.

(1) 6 A. 488 (F. B.); A. W. N. (1884) 179; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 142.

ABINASH CHANDRA v. SHEKHAR CHAND.

Taxing Officer's Report:—In this case the plaintiff claimed the right of pre emption in certain shares of five villages on payment of Rs. 2,500, the actual consideration alleged being Rs. 44,000. In regard to three villages the claim was dismissed, and in regard to the other two it was decreed on condition of the payment of Rs. 21,000, the sum of Rs. 44,000 being accepted as the true consideration. In appealing the plaintiff pays a Court-fee based on five times the revenue of the villages. Office suggests that as regards the two villages Pakariar and Cheontaha, in the case of which the sole question now at issue is the amount of consideration, the Court-fee should be paid ad valorem on the difference between the consideration claimed and that accepted by the lower Court. Both office and the learned Vakil for the appellant rely on the Full Bench ruling in Hafiz Ahmad v. Sobha Ram (1). It is there laid down that when an appeal is preferred on the grounds that right to pre empt has or has not been established, as the case may be, no matter what other pleas may be taken, the value of the subject-matter in dispute for the purposes of the Court Fees Act must be determined as provided in clause vi) of section 7 of the Act. But where the question in appeal relates solely to the amount to be paid by the pre-emptor, there it should be calculated ad valorem on the difference between the amounts alleged as the sale price on the one side and on the other. The appellant maintains that it is impossible to split up this appeal, that the whole consideration is one, and that the first part of this ruling must apply to the whole. Office on the other hand contend that the nature of the appeal is quite different as regards the villages Parkariar and Cheontaha, and that the appeal as regards them must be taxed as laid down in the second part of the ruling quoted. I think that office is right, but as there appears to be no clear ruling as to whether an appeal, which like this has two distinct parts with two different natures owing to the form of the decree of the lower Court, can be practically treated as two different appeals for Court fee purposes, I refer the question for your decision.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are fully set out in the referring order of the Taxing Officer. The present appeal is divisible into two parts. In regard to the three villages Rampur, Lachmipur and Jotepur, the suit has been dismissed and it has been held that the plaintiff has no right of pre-emption in these villages. In regard to Parkariar and Cheontaha the Court below has held that the right to pre-empt exists and it has directed the plaintiff to deposit the sum of Rs. 21,000 as the value thereof. The whole sale-deed purported to be for the sum of Rs. 44,000. The plaintiff sought to pre-empt the whole property upon the payment of Rs. 2,500. The Court below has held that Rs. 44 000 is the correct amount and in respect of the two villages Parkariar and Cheontaha it has directed the payment of a proportionate part, namely, the sum of Rs 21,000. The appellant claims to be allowed to appeal on the payment of Court-fee based upon five times the revenue of all five villages. The Taxing Officer's opinion is that the appeal being divisible into two parts and the sole question which arises in one part of the appeal respecting the two villages being a question of consideration, the appellant must pay an ad valorem Court-fee as laid down in the ruling in Hafiz Ahmad v. Sobha Ram (1). In regard to the three remaining villages, as the right to pre-empt is in dispute, the Court-fee in respect thereto must be calculated according to section 7, clause (vi), of the Court Fees Act. On behalf of the appellant it is urged that the question of consideration arises on the whole appeal and as that is not the sole question, inasmuch as the right of pre-emption is in dispute in respect to at least three villages, under the ruling quoted he need only pay Court-fees on five times the Government revenue as mentioned above, on the whole estate. In my opinion the appeal is divisible into two clear and distinct parts and the report of the Taxing Officer is correct. In regard to the two villages of Parkariar and Cheontaha, the Court-fee will be calculated ad valorem on the difference between 21/44 of Rs. 2,500 and Rs. 21,000. The Court-fee in respect of the other three villages will be calculated according to section 7, clause (vi), on the basis of 5 times the Government revenue. If the appellant so pleases he may amend his plaint of which notice will have to be given to the other side, and the office will calculate the Court-fees after the amendment has been made. I allow three weeks for the making of the amendment and after it has been made, a necessary period will be allowed for the payment of any deficiency that may then be found due.

Order accordingly.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 69, 70—Calcutta Municipal Act (III B. C. of 1899), ss. 171, 228—Consolidated rate, payment of, by owner of premises—Owner, whether can recover half share from occupier.

In view of the provisions of section 228 of the Calcutta Municipal Act, which make the consolidated rate a first charge upon the building or land in respect of which it is payable, the owner of such building or land is a person interested in the payment of the rate within the meaning of section 69 of the Contract Act, and having paid the share of the occupier he is entitled to recover it from the latter under section 69 or 70 of the Contract Act. [p. 670, col. 1.]

Rule against an order of the Small Cause Court Judge, Sealdah.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Kali Prosonna Piplai, for the Petitioner.—Plaintiff is the owner of premises No. 35, Harish Mookerjee Road, defendant is the tenant. The finding is that there was no contract for payment of Municipal taxes. Under the Calcutta Municipal Act, section 171, defendant is bound to pay the occupier's share. This is a suit for recovery of the half share, i.e., the occupier's share. The occupier's share was paid by me after it fell due. Under section 228 of the Calcutta Municipal Act I am ultimately responsible. The Corporation may proceed against me and need not proceed against the defaulter. It will remain the first charge upon the premises. Under section 69 or 70 of the Contract Act I can recover the sum from the defendant.

Babu Biraj Mohan Majumdar (with him Babu Suresh Chandra Talukdar), for the Opposite Party.—There was no agreement in the lease for the payment of the tax. The plaintiff should, therefore, pay the whole tax and I shall pay him a consolidated rent Under section 214 of the Calcutta Municipal Act the occupier's share is to be separately paid and the payments were made by him voluntarily - see section 222 Where the owner failed the whole amount is to be realised from the occupier.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is directed against an order of the Small Cause Court Judge of Sealdah, by which the Small Cause Court Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit for recovery of a sum of Rs 543-1-6. The plaintiff, it appears, is the owner of premises No. 35, Harish Mookerjee Road, and the defendant was his tenant and occupier of the said premises. The sum sued for represented payment of consolidated rate made by the plaintiff, and his case was that under the lease executed in favour of the defendant, defendant was liable to pay the whole rate. In the lease that was produced there was a stipulation to the effect that the consolidated rate should be paid in full by the tenant occupier. It has been found in a suit between the parties that that stipulation was fraudulently inserted. That being so, it is obvious that the plaintiff could not recover the sums, he had paid, in full; but under section 171 of the Calcutta Municipal Act, in the absence of any contract to the contrary, half of the consolidated rate is payable by the owner and the other half by the occupier. Falling back upon this provision of the law the plaintiff says that he should now be given a decree for half the amount he claimed.

The case for the opposite party before us is that on removal of the clause fraudulently inserted, the contract between the parties was not that the defendant should pay the whole of the consolidated rate but that the plaintiff should do so. He further contends that inasmuch as no suit or any other action was brought or taken by the Municipal Authorities in order to recover the sums paid, the payment by the plaintiff was a voluntary payment and he could not on that ground recover. From the contention he now puts forward it is quite clear that the defendant was determined not to pay either the whole or half of the consolidated rate.

It has been suggested that the plaintiff should have waited until a suit was brought against him, or that he should have left it open to the Municipal Authorities to proceed against the defaulting occupier by way of distress and sale under the provisions of section 213 and the following sections of the Municipal Act. In view, however, that such distress and sale would have the effect of removing the plaintiff's, the landlord's security for his rent, and in view of the provisions of section 228 of the Act which make the consolidated rate a first charge upon the building or land in question, it is clear that the plaintiff is a person who under the provisions of section 69 of the Contract Act, is interested in the payment of this money. The defendant has made it clear that he did not in fact intend to pay; if the plaintiff has paid it, he is clearly entitled to be reimbursed. In other words, section 69 or section 70 of the Contract Act is applicable, the plaintiff not having made this payment with the intention of doing so gratuitously is entitled to recover from the defendant the payments actually made in so far as such payments should have been made by the defendant.

Other defences are also put forward. It is suggested, for instance, that the plaintiff has not actually made the payments he alleges. It is further represented to us that for the period covered by these payments the defendant was not in occupation of the building. All these, however, are questions of fact into which we cannot enter here.

We, therefore, set aside the order complained of and remand the case to the Court of Small Causes in order that after ascertaining the facts the learned Judge may proceed to pass a decree for such amount, if any, as may be justly recoverable from the defendant.

Costs of this Rule will be costs in the suit. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

Order set aside.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 27 (b)—Appellate Court, power of, to admit additional evidence.

Order XLI, rule 27 (b), of the Civil Procedure Code does not mean that in order to enable the Appellate Court to pronounce judgment in favour of a particular party additional evidence should be admitted in appeal; it means only that where it is impossible to pronounce judgment at all on the evidence the Court may call for a document. [p. 670, col. 2; p. 671, col. 1.]

Where the plaintiff on whom the onus lay failed to discharge it owing to the non-production of a document which it was in his power to produce, but for the production of which he took no steps:

Held, that the provisions of Order XLI, rule 27 (b) of the Civil Procedure Code could not be used in his favour and that he could not be allowed to produce the document in appeal. [p. 671, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Bhagalpur, dated the 25th June 1915, confirming that of the Munsif, Madhepura, dated the 9th January 1915.

Mr. Rajendra Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Krishna Sahay, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this suit sued upon a bond, in which it was set forth that the consideration upon which this bond was given was an existing consideration under a previous bond and account. The Court of first instance refused to accept the oral evidence given in support of this consideration and pointed out that it was impossible to give the plaintiff a decree without reliable accounts, the previous bond itself and a close inspection of these papers.

Upon appeal from the decree of the first Court dismissing the plaintiff's suit, the appellant offered to place before the District Judge the original bond whereby the original consideration might have been proved. The learned District Judge refused to accept the bond and dismissed the plaintiff's appeal. Against that decision an appeal is made to this Court. The short point, therefore, is what document should an Appellate Court accept under Order XLI, rule 27. Rule 27 (a) has nothing to do with the case before us, and the case comes under rule 27 (b): "If the Appellate Court requires any document to be produced .....to enable it to pronounce judgment, or for any other substantial cause, the Appellate Court may allow such evidence to be produced." This does not mean that in order to enable the Appellate Court to pronounce judgment in favour of a particular party additional evidence should be admitted in appeal; it means only that where it is impossible to pronounce judgment at all on the evidence the Court may call for a document. In this case the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff and in the absence of proof of the consideration the Court was in a position to pronounce judgment in favour of the defendant. The document was not required to enable the Court to pronounce judgment. The highest at which this can be put is that it might have been required in order to enable the Court to pronounce judgment in favour of the plantiff, which is an entirely different thing. The question remains whether sufficient cause was shown for admitting the document in the lower Appellate Court. From the record of the case as tried before the learned Munsif it is clear that the plaintiff was fully aware of the precise place, namely, the record room at Bhagalpur, in which this document might have been found. He took no steps to search for it and and produce it in time for use during the adjudication of his claim, and the learned District Judge exercised, in our view, a very sound discretion in refusing to regard the pure laziness of the plaintiff in the lower Court as sufficient cause for giving him a peculiar license in the Appellate Court.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Partition suit—Preliminary decree—Appeal—Final decree as regards portion of joint property—Supplementary final decree—Jurisdiction

In an appeal from a preliminary decree in a suit for partition, the High Court during the pendency of the appeal stayed proceedings upon the preliminary decree, in so far as it related to a joint business. In the meanwhile the trial Court on the report of the Commissioner made a final decree partitioning all other properties involved in the suit. Subsequently upon the dismissal of the appeal by the High Court an application purporting to be under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, made by the plaintiff to the trial Court for the partition of the joint business, was refused with the remark that the only course open to the plaintiff was an application for review under Order XLVII, Civil Procedure Code:

Held, that the trial Court had refused to exercise a jurisdiction which was vested in it, inasmuch as it was quite competent to deal with as much of the suit as had not already been dealt with in the final decree and to make a supplementary final decree in regard to the joint business. [p. 672, col. 2.]

Rule against the order of the Sub-Judge, Howrah, in Title Suit No. 51 of 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Manmatha Nath Ganguly, for the Petitioner.—The learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in refusing to partition the karbar on the ground that the suit had already been disposed of. The suit was not disposed of, and the decree, as it stands, shows that it was passed in terms of the report of the Commissioner, and the Commissioner clearly excluded the karbar. Moreover, certain orders passed after the passing of the final decree, viz., orders requiring the defendant to file the khata books of the karbar, the list of assets, etc., show also that the suit is still pending. No doubt, the petition under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, invoking the inherent powers of the Court for the rectification of the decree was made, but your Lordships would take this into consideration that no such rectification was necessary, and the petition was made under wrong advice. As the suit is still pending the partition of the karbar should be allowed. Refers to Muhammad Abdul Majid v. Muhammad Abdul Aziz (1).

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter (with him Babu Debendra Nath Mandal), for the Opposite Party.—The remedy of the petitioner is by way of review or by suit. The partition of the other properties was effected before the disposal of the High Court appeal, and the final decree in the suit was passed, and the suit was disposed of, so that the karbar cannot be partitioned in this suit. It was understood by both the parties that the suit was disposed of, and when it was found that the time for review of the decree under Order XLVII, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, was gone, the petition under section 151 was made. The order made by the learned Subordinate Judge is, under the facts and circumstances, correct and should not be interfered with.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—This Rule was issued at the instance of the plaintiff in a suit for partition. The properties to which the suit related consisted of moveable and immoveable properties and a partnership business or joint karbar. A preliminary decree for partition was made by the Subordinate Judge in the trial Court on the 30th November 1914. From that decree the defendant, the opposite party before us, filed an appeal to the High Court. During the pendency of the appeal the High Court made an order staying proceedings upon the preliminary decree in so far as it related to the joint karbar, but no further. The trial Court thereupon appointed a Commissioner to effect a partition of the properties other than the karbar. The Commissioner's report was duly submitted and on the 14th April 1915 the matter came before the learned Subordinate Judge and he delivered judgment. The judgment states that there was no objection by any of the parties to the Commissioner's report and goes on to direct that the proceedings of the Commissioner should be confirmed and the suit decreed accordingly. The language of the decree follows that of the judgment. The question which arises is whether that decree was a decree finally disposing of the whole suit. Obviously it was nothing of the kind. The decree disposes of that part of the suit which had been referred to the Commissioner and with reference to which the Commissioner had submitted his report. When the Subordinate Judge spoke of the suit being disposed of, he clearly meant that the suit was disposed of in regard to that part of it with which the Commissioner had dealt. At that time the stay order made by this Court was in force and the Subordinate Judge had no power then to deal with the suit in so far as it related to the karbar.

The appeal to the High Court from the preliminary decree was dismissed on the 22nd June 1916. The plaintiff then applied to the trial Court, over which another Subordinate Judge was now presiding, for partition of the joint karbar. The application purports to have been made under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, apparently on the footing that the decree of the 14th April 1915 required some amendment. In my opinion in the circumstances it was quite unnecessary to amend that decree. All that the plaintiff had to do was to apply to the Court to go on with the suit and make a supplementary final decree in regard to the karbar. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, seems to have been puzzled by the form of the application and on the 8th August 1917 he made the order with reference to which this Rule has been issued. By that order he declined to accede to the application and suggested that the only course open to the plaintiff was to apply for a review of the decree under Order XLVII. That amounted, as it seems to me, to a refusal to exercise a jurisdiction vested in him. It was quite competent to him to deal with so much of the suit as had not already been dealt with. In this connection reference may be made to the case of Muhammad Abdul Majid v. Muhammad Abdul Aziz (1). It is conceded that if the suit can proceed without any amendment of the previous decree no question of limitation arises.

The result is that the Subordinate Judge's order of the 8th August 1917 should be discharged and the case remanded in order that the Subordinate Judge may proceed with the remainder of the suit and dispose of it in accordance with law. The Rule is made absolute in these terms. The petitioner is entitled to his costs of the Rule, which we assess at three gold mohurs.

Let the record be sent down at once.

Criminal Procedure Code Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 435 (3)— Government of India Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. V, C. 61), s. 107—Revision—High Court, whether can interfere with proceedings under Ch. XII of Code of Criminal Procedure.

Section 107 of the Government of India Act cannot be invoked so as to question proceedings which purport to be proceedings lawfully taken by a Magistrate under Chapter XII of the Code of Criminal Procedure. [p. 673, col. 1.]

If proceedings totally without legal foundation or legislative authority are taken by a Magistrate in the name of proceedings under Chapter XII but not seriously purporting to be taken under or to comply with the provisions of that Chapter and the High Court is satisfied of that fact by reliable evidence, there is clearly a case for interference. It is always open to a party in such a case to satisfy the High Court that the property of which he is entitled to possession has been dealt with by an order which has no legal authority at all, and he may do so by an affidavit or in any other reliable manner, and thereby invoke the superintending power of the Court, but he cannot ask the High Court to interfere in revision or to send for the record merely by showing that on the face of the judgment the Magistrate has neglected or misinterpreted some of the provisions of the Chapter. [p. 673, col. 2; p. 674, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Magistrate, First Class, Gorakhpur.

Mr. Satya Chandra Mukerji, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—I have no power to send for the record in an application for revision relating to proceedings under Chapter XII. Sub-section (3) of section 435, Criminal Procedure Code, absolutely prohibits that course. The law as laid down by the general current of authorities in this Province is that the superintendence section, which is now section 107 of the Government of India Act, cannot be invoked so as to question proceedings which purport to be proceedings lawfully taken by a Magistrate under Chapter XII. It is well recognized that there is an irreconcilable difference of opinion on this point between some of the High Courts, notably two recent judgments, one delivered by my brother Knox and one delivered in Patna by the former Chief Justice of the Patna High Court based upon the course of authorities. It is obvious that having regard to the view established in this Province it is difficult to question proceedings of this kind at all. It has been said that proceedings which purport to be under Chapter XII may be improperly taken, improperly brought or conducted, and therefore may be treated as if they were no proceedings under the Chapter. This view is not a sound one and has been frequently dissented from—even by the Privy Council in cases of awards where the arbitrators so long as they act within their jurisdiction are masters of the situation. It has been sought by persons trying to get rid of an award to say that, if they have gone wrong either in law or procedure or something of that kind other than misconduct, although there is no appeal, the award is bad and therefore no award at all. In the same way it is sought to argue that proceedings under Chapter XII where, for example, all the proper parties are not required to attend Court and so forth, being proceedings which are defective and therefore bad, may be treated as though they were no proceedings at all. I think it is impossible to give effect to this view and there is the further difficulty as pointed out by Knox, J., that this cannot be determined without sending for the record. This is just what this Court cannot do.

On the other hand there is the difficulty in the other point of view, viz., that though the Legislature has vested in this Court a complete discretionary power of superintendence to check irregular proceedings of inferior Courts which may result in serious injury or injustice, if the view which I have just stated is correct—the view with regard to the sending for record or otherwise enquiring into proceedings under Chapter XII—the jurisdiction of this Court to superintend proceedings under Chapter XII may become a dead letter. I think that this is not necessarily so. There is at any rate one way in which it seems to me both views may be reconciled. If proceedings totally without legal foundation or legislative authority are taken by a Magistrate in the name of proceedings under Chapter XII but not seriously purporting to be taken under, or to comply with, the provisions of that Chapter and this Court is satisfied of that fact by reliable evidence, then I think there is clearly a case for interference. I myself interfered in one case which seemed to be a palpable and serious misunderstanding of the powers conferred by this section, where the Magistrate had not even had a report at all which dealt with any question of the breach of peace so that the legal foundation for his authority had never been laid, and in interfering in that case I adopted the dictum of Sir John Stanley who seemed to think that the superintendence section could be applied to any circumstances to which revision would apply if it had not been expressly excluded.

Somehow or other in that case, I do not know how the circumstances were before me, because the record had been sent for and the application had been admitted. It is always open to a party in such a case as this to satisfy the High Court that the property of which he is entitled to possession has been dealt with by an order which has no legal authority at all, and he may do so by an affidavit or in any other reliable manner, and thereby invoke the superintending power of the Court, but I do not think he can ask this Court to interfere in revision or to send for the record, merely by showing that on the face of the judgment the Magistrate has neglected or misinterpreted some of the provisions of the Chapter.

The application is rejected.

Burma Municipal Act (III of 1898), ss. 2 (6), 142 (d)—Lodging-house, what is—Receiving lodgers.

A lodging-house need not be let in lodgings: it is still a lodging-house if it is occupied to any extent in common by members of more than one family. The persons living in the lodging-house are lodgers, whether they pay rent or not and the owner of the lodging-house receives them when he allows them to occupy the building. [p. 674, col. 2, p. 675, col. 1.]

Mr. J. C. Chatterjee, for the Applicant.

Mr. H. M. Lutter, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant has been convicted and fined Rs. 30 under section 142 (d) of the Burma Municipal Act for failing to take out a license for a lodging-house kept by him.

The application states that the learned Magistrate has erred in law in holding that the petitioner was bound to take out a license under the Lodging-house Bye-laws, although it was not proved that he received any lodgers in his house or rented any portion of his house to others. Apparently it is the contention of the learned Advocate for the applicant that a lodger is a person who occupies rooms in a lodging-house upon payment of rent, and that it has not been shown that any rent was paid in respect of the premises here referred to. It is also urged that the premises do not constitute a lodging-house, and that whatever the meaning of the term "lodging-house" might be, the bye-laws framed by the Mandalay Municipality already showed that the Municipality did not contemplate treating a building of the kind here in question as a lodging-house or requiring its owner to take out a license for it.

It appears that the applicant is the owner of certain hackney carriages and that the premises are occupied by the drivers of these hackney carriages and the Syces attending to the ponies which draw them. The Magistrate states that the applicant admitted that he kept 12 drivers, 6 Syces and 2 watermen in the premises. He called witnesses who deposed that they drove the carriages on hire, that charges for food only were deducted from their wages, and that they did not pay any rent for the house.

"Lodging-house" is defined in section 2 (6) of the Municipal Act as a building or part of a building which is let in lodgings or occupied to any extent in common by members of more than one family. It is clear, therefore, that lodging-house need not be let in lodgings; it is still a lodging-house if it is occupied to any extent in common by members of more than one family. By a footnote it is explained that if there are kitchens, privies or other conveniences in common, the building will be a lodging-house, and I have no doubt that this is the case whether or no rent is paid either as rent or otherwise. It seems probable here that the fact that the applicant provides his employees with house room is taken into consideration in fixing their wages, and if this is so, no doubt their wages are less than they would be if they had to find lodgings for themselves, and in that case they certainly pay rent indirectly for the lodgings. But the definition does not make the question whether a building is a lodging-house or not depend upon the letting for rent; it is sufficient that the building is occupied in common by more than one family. I cannot see that the Lodging-house Bye-laws contemplate any condition of affairs inconsistent with or narrower than the terms of section 2 (6) of the Act. The persons living in the lodging-house are lodgers whether they pay rent or not, and the owner of the lodging-house receives them when he allows them to occupy the building. No doubt the definition is extremely wide, and the servants' quarters of a private house having a common latrine or kitchen would come within it. But this Court has to interpret the law as it is laid down, and it seems to me that there is no doubt as to the meaning of the words of section 2 (6) of the Municipal Act.

The application must be dismissed.

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Allahabad.

Messrs. G. W. Dillon and Peary Lal Banerji for the Appellant.

Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerji (Government Pleader), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—On the 26th of June last, in the morning, in a frequented part of the city of Allahabad, a scuffle took place between Yusuf Husain, who is the appellant now before this Court, and one Musi Raza. The two men came to the ground, the appellant being underneath and Musi Raza uppermost. When the scuffle ended Musi Raza was found to be bleeding profusely from wounds in the chest. There were two distinct wounds, one of which was on the right side of the chest and the other on the left, over the region of the heart. The wound on the right side was long and superficial, and so far as the medical evidence goes, might have been caused by the knife or other weapon which had just inflicted the wound on the right side slipping along the body. The wound on the left side was of a peculiar character and seems to have honestly puzzled the Medical Officers who examined it. The most remarkable feature about it was that it was angular in shape, with two distinct limbs, each about three quarters of an inch long. The Medical Officer whose evidence appears the more reliable was of opinion that this wound had most probably been inflicted with a knife, but that both the injuries on the chest looked as if they had been caused by a single blow, the knife having slipped round after penetrating and then slid along the body in the course of a scuffle. It so happened that the wound on the left side, while dangerous, did not prove fatal. The pleural cavity was not penetrated and, though one of the minor arteries was severed and there was serious effusion of blood, at one time threatening to prove dangerous to life, the injury yielded to skilful treatment and Musi Raza recovered. Yusuf Husain was committed for trial on a charge framed under section 307 of the Indian Penal Code. The learned Sessions Judge has found that Yusuf Husain stabbed Musi Raza with a knife, that he did so with intent to cause death, or at least to cause such bodily injury as he knew to be likely to result in death; but that even if death had resulted the case would have been covered by Exception 1 to section 300 of the Indian Penal Code, in that Yusuf Husain had acted under sudden and grave provocation. He has accordingly convicted the appellant under section 308 of the Indian Penal Code and has sentenced him to rigorous imprisonment for three years.

The memorandum of appeal to this Court, apart from calling in question the severity of the sentence, raises two distinct pleas. The first is whether the prosecution evidence, even if accepted at the value put upon it by the learned Sessions Judge, justifies a finding that the appellant intended to cause death or even injury likely to result in death. The other is that the appellant was acting in the lawful exercise of his right of private defence and is completely protected by the provisions of section 97 of the Indian Penal Code. On this latter point there has been considerable argument before me. With regard to the legal aspects of the case, I have been referred more particularly to three reported cases of this Court: Queen-Empress v. Nag Lal (1), Queen-Empress v. Tinmal (2), Emperor v. Gulla (3).

(1) 20 A. 469; A. W. N. (1898) 117; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 654.

(2) 21 A. 122; A. W. N. (1898) 208; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 787.

(3) A. W. N. (1904) 113; 1 Cr. L. J. 427.

The first of these rulings seems to have only a remote bearing on the facts now before me. It lays stress upon the provisions of section 105 of the Indian Evidence Act, and there can be no doubt whatever that, if the present appellant is to secure an acquittal on the ground that he acted in the exercise of his lawful right of private defence, it must be because the Court finds this affirmatively, after laying the burden of proof on the accused person. With regard to the second of these two cases, it seems to me that the head-note goes very considerably beyond anything that was decided in the case itself. The learned Judges did not confine their consideration of that case to the fact that the right of private defence had not been pleaded by the persons whose case they were considering. The contention before them on behalf of the prosecution did not limit itself to this fact, but it was pleaded "further that there was no evidence on the record upon which any circumstance could be inferred which would substantiate a plea of private defence." This was the contention which found favour with the Court and upon which the case was definitely decided. There is nothing to the contrary in the third of the cases to which I have above referred. The right of an accused to defend himself upon a criminal charge can only be limited by the provisions of the Statute Law, and in this case the provisions to be considered are those of section 105 of the Indian Evidence Act already referred to. I cannot see anything in the law to prevent a man on his trial on a charge of culpable homicide from setting up an alternative defence on some such lines as these:—"Firstly, I was not present at the occurrence referred to by the prosecution witnesses and they are giving false evidence against me; secondly, even if I fail to persuade the Court of this fact, I can show from the statements of the prosecution witnesses themselves that, if I had caused the death of any person in the manner and under the precise circumstances deposed to by their evidence, I should have been acting in the lawful exercise of a right of private defence."

Now in the present case the accused has done something like this, but not precisely this. He said that he was coming along the road on his bicycle when he was set upon and assaulted by Musi Raza, that he fell off his bicycle on to the ground and Musi Raza on top of him, the two of them being mixed up with the bicycle which fell to the ground at the same time. Musi Raza received his injuries in the course of this fall and they must presumably have been caused by some portion of the bicycle. The defence as thus set up was not substantiated by the evidence. If it were necessary for me to go into the matter, I could give my reasons for concurring in the finding of the learned Sessions Judge that Musi Raza was not injured by falling on the bicycle, but that he was struck in the chest by the appellant Yusuf Husain, holding a penknife or some similar implement in his hand. I do not feel called upon to go into this question in detail, because the appeal has been argued before me, in substance, upon the admission that this was what actually happened. It is unfortunate that Yusuf Husain was not sufficiently well advised to have admitted this fact frankly in the Trial Court. The result has been to involve him in the necessity for arguing two inconsistent defences, on which stress is laid in more than one of the rulings to which I have just referred. He endeavoured to support his position by calling a number of witnesses, and these witnesses themselves laboured under the disadvantage which the accused had imposed on the entire conduct of the defence. They gave evidences as to the circumstances under which the affray between the two men commenced, which evidence has in the main been accepted by the trial Court in preference to that of the prosecution witnesses. They described Musi Raza as the aggressor and as having set upon Yusuf Husain while the latter was riding by on his bicycle. They said that the two men fell together on the ground with Musi Raza uppermost; but there they had to stop, unless they were to give away the defence principally relied upon at the trial. None of the defence witnesses would admit that he saw Yusuf Husain strike a blow with any weapon or instrument whatsoever. They could only say that when the two men stood up Musi Raza was bleeding at the chest. The defence evidence given under these limitations cannot be relied upon further than it has been by the learned Sessions Judge himself. It was not accepted even by the assessors who would have preferred to find the accused not guilty. They were both of opinion that the injuries on Musi Raza's person were caused by a blow or blows struck by Yusuf Husain. On the principles already laid down, the only question which remains is whether the plea of private defence can be made out on the evidence of the prosecution witnesses themselves. I have to criticise that evidence in connection with the other plea taken in the memorandum of appeal and I need not anticipate those criticisms. It is sufficient for me to say that even the evidence of the witness Safdar Husain, who is certainly the most reliable of the prosecution witnesses, falls short of making out a satisfactory answer to the charge on the ground of private defence. He admits that he saw the two men struggling on the ground, that Yusuf Husain was underneath with Musi Raza on the top of him and that Musi Raza had his hands, one on the back of the accused's neck and one underneath it; then he says he saw two distinct blows struck by the accused, inflicting stabs on the chest of his opponent. We have no statement from Yusuf Husain himself that he was being throttled, that the pressure upon his neck was such as to inspire him with fear for his own life; in fact, we have no exposition from the accused himself of the motives for his action. On the evidence therefore as it stands, I am not prepared to find that the right of private defence of the person in favour of Yusuf Husain, even admitting such right to have arisen in consequence of an assault commenced by Musi Raza, was not vitiated by the fact that harm was caused more than was necessary for the purposes of defence.

At the same time I think that the case comes very near the limit, and that it is at least possible that a full defence on these lines might have been made out if the appellant had been better advised at his trial. It does not seem to me at all necessary to take as serious a view of this case as has been done in the Court below. The prosecution evidence is scanty to a degree. The statement of Musi Raza is corroborated by two witnesses only—Safdar Husain and a woman named Musammat Sakina. The learned Sessions Judge has distrusted the evidence of the woman, and I think it sufficient to say that the record discloses abundant grounds for putting her statement aside as altogether unreliable. The long and short of the matter is that Musi Raza elected to come into Court with a version of the facts which diverges very widely from the truth as regards the origin and commencement of the affray. He found it difficult to get any witness to support his false statements on this point. The learned Sessions Judge remarks that the investigating Police Officer found it difficult to obtain evidence because the sympathies of persons in the neighbourhood seemed to be with Yusuf Husain. He does not appear to have adequately appreciated the importance of this remark. What the investigating officer found difficult to obtain was evidence supporting Musi Raza's version of the facts, and his difficulty arose simply from the fact that the shopkeepers of the neighbourhood saw no adequate reason for perjuring themselves to oblige Musi Raza. Their sympathy for the accused amounted to mere disinclination to see him involved in a serious charge upon a version of the facts which they knew to be in material points untrue. When a number of them finally decided to come in Court as witnesses for the defence, they unfortunately thought themselves to be precluded, under the circumstances already referred to, from telling the whole truth; but their version of the commencement of the affray has been in substance accepted by the trial Court. The result of this is that Musi Raza has been disbelieved by the learned Sessions Judge in very material parts of his evidence and, this being the case, I do not find myself able to follow the learned Sessions Judge in accepting as established beyond reasonable doubt Musi Raza's version as to the particular manner in which he was struck by the accused. The medical evidence is not merely consistent with the assertion that only one blow was struck, but it tends to make that assertion probable. The appearance of the wounds as described by that Medical Officer, whose evidence I agree with the learned Sessions Judge in accepting as reliable, suggests that the theory formed by that officer as to the manner in which the injuries were caused is probably correct. I think it quite unlikely that Musi Raza is speaking the truth when he says that the superficial cut on the right side of his chest was inflicted first and was followed by a stab aimed directly at his heart. It is true that Musi Raza's statement on this point is to some extent corroborated by the evidence of Safdar Husain. The latter speaks of two distinct blows being struck, though of course he cannot say which of the two injuries was caused by which blow. In some respects Safdar Husain has shown himself an impartial witness and I do not see that the learned Sessions Judge was in any way justified in rejecting that portion of his evidence which bears out the statements of the defence witnesses as to the position of Musi Raza's hands at the moment when the accused struck him. It must be remembered, however, that this witness is admittedly a friend of Musi Raza and that his account of the manner in which the affray commenced has been rejected by the learned Sessions Judge, who has preferred the version given by the defence witnesses. It seems to me that to hold that Yusuf Husain struck two blows at his assailant, or even to hold that the curiously shaped injury on the left side of Musi Raza's chest was the result of a blow intentionally aimed at that portion of his anatomy, is to place an unwarranted degree of reliance on the veracity of Safdar Husain and on his opportunities of observing precisely what took place in what must have been a very brief scuffle.

In my opinion the prosecution evidence fairly considered, so far from warranting the conclusion that when Yusuf Husain struck at Musi Raza with the pen-knife, or whatever other implement he had about his person at the time, he did so with the intention or knowledge referred to in section 299 of the Indian Penal Code, does not even justify the conclusion that the hurt which he intended to cause or knew himself likely to cause was grievous hurt, reference being made to the provisions of section 322. The offence committed, therefore, would be that made punishable by section 324, were it not for the fact that the appellant acted on grave and sudden provocation. This has been found by the learned Sessions Judge himself and I agree with him. The offence committed, therefore, must be reduced to one punishable under section 334, Indian Penal Code. The result is that I set aside the conviction and sentence in this case, convict Yusuf Husain of an offence punishable under section 334, Indian Penal Code, and sentence him to pay a fine of Rs. 100. I allow one week within which the fine may be paid, the appellant's security remaining in force till that period. In default of such payment the appellant will suffer simple imprisonment for a period of one month.

Conviction altered; Sentence reduced.

NGA PO THA AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 304—Beating woman to death believing her to be possessed by evil spirit—Offence—Intention, what is.

Accused, believing the deceased to be possessed by an evil spirit, beat her to death in the hope of curing her. The deceased protested that she was not possessed and did not consent to be beaten:

Held, that the accused were guilty of an offence under the second part of section 304 of the Penal Code. [p. 682, col. 2.]

Intention is a question of fact which must be decided upon the circumstances of each particular case. It may be a legal fiction as, for instance, where knowledge is presumed in the case of a person who is intoxicated and intention is the inference drawn from such knowledge, or it may be proved by evidence of the particular circumstances in each case. [p. 681, col. 1.]

Mr. H. M. Lutter, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is a case of a kind which, though fortunately not common, is not unique. The deceased was believed to be possessed by an evil spirit and was beaten to death by four persons acting, it is alleged, under the mistaken belief that, by beating her, she would be cured of her unnatural illness. The 1st appellant who is a Burmese saya has been sentenced to death, and the other two appellants have been sentenced to transportation for life under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code. The 4th accused was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50 or to suffer three months' rigorous imprisonment under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code and this accused has not appealed.

The facts of the case are briefly as follows:—

Ma Chon, mother of Ma Me Te, called in the 1st appellant, who happened to be visiting the village, to attend her daughter, Ma Me Te, who had a sore upon her leg. The appellant, who apparently professes to be a specialist in the cure of witchcraft, took with him the two other appellants, fellow-villagers of the deceased, and one of them, Nga Shwe Pyan, a lover of Ma Me Te. He was also accompanied by Ma Me Tin, the 4th accused, who was said to be a natkadaw, described as a person who acts as a spirit medium, capable of becoming possessed by a nat. The 1st appellant, Po Tha, appears immediately to have assumed that the girl was possessed by an evil spirit and gave her a betel leaf to chew, and when she said that the leaf tasted hot, he declared that she was possessed by a spirit which must be exorcised by beating her. He and his companions thereupon beat and kicked her for a short time. She received several contusions described by the medical witness, and the treatment was evidently brutal enough to cause the mother, Ma Chon, to weep. Appellant, Po Tha, thereupon said the spirit had gone into Ma Chon. She was tested in the same way with a betel leaf and was then beaten from about 10 o'clock that night until just before dawn, when she succumbed to her injuries.

Although there is nothing on the record to show that the 1st appellant was called in to drive out an evil spirit, the evidence in fact being that he was not called to do so but to treat an ulcer, it appears to me possible that there may have been some suspicion on the part of the mother or the girl's relations that she was possessed. The man, who called in the 1st appellant, says he was called for that purpose, and there seems to be no doubt that he professed to be able to cure such cases. It is also difficult to understand the conduct of the appellant, Shwe Pyan, in beating the girl to whom he was paying his addresses and subsequently her mother, and of the villagers who, though they say they remonstrated, did not, as they certainly could have done, interfere more effectively and put a stop to the beating, if they had nothing more than 1st appellant's word to induce them to think that the girl and her mother were "possessed." But whether this is so or not there is no evidence upon the record that either the girl, Ma Me Te, or her mother, Ma Chon, gave any consent to the treatment to which they were subjected. On the contrary it seems clear that Ma Chon at least protested that she was not possessed by an evil spirit and that she should not be beaten.

The learned Sessions Judge in convicting the accused has referred to the case of Nga Po Kyaw v. King-Emperor (1), in which the persons who inflicted a fatal beating upon a woman alleged to be possessed by an evil spirit were found to have committed an offence under section 304A of the Indian Penal Code, and the Sessions Judge has questioned the correctness of that decision. But it was expressly stated in the judgment of my learned predecessor in that case that the evidence left no doubt that the girl's mother and her relatives contemplated that she should be beaten, and that the girl herself voluntarily submitted to that treatment. The girl would seem to have been suffering from hysteria or some similar complaint for years, and among her own people she was universally believed to be under the domination of an evil spirit that had located itself in her body.

The case, therefore differs from the present case in important particulars. Here there is no evidence upon the record that the girl was suffering from anything but an ulcer on her leg, or that there was any reason which would lead her relations to suppose that she was possessed of an evil spirit. As I have said above, it is possible that they did so, but there is not a particle of evidence to that effect. The woman whose death was caused, it is not suggested and there seems to be no reason whatever to suppose, was afflicted in any way. The only reason given for leading the 1st appellant and his assistants to suspect that she was possessed and to turn their attention to her was that she performed the perfectly natural act of weeping, probably loudly, when she saw her daughter being severely beaten. Neither she nor her daughter consented, and the evidence indeed goes to show that Ma Chon, so far from consenting, protested vigorously against being suspected of being possessed and beaten in consequence.

I have read the judgment of the Sessions Judge in Criminal Appeal No. 64 of 1893 which is referred to in Po Kyaw's case 1). It appears there that the girl had been afflicted for five years or so with hysteria or some form of hysterical mania; she was subjected to severe beating with sticks while in this condition by her relations. It does not appear that she submitted or consented to the treatment. The learned Sessions Judge held that it was clear that the accused had no intention of causing bodily injury likely to cause death, nor had they any knowledge that they were likely to cause death. No reason whatever was given for this conclusion, but it was not questioned by the learned Judicial Commissioner, who remaked, "the fact that the deceased died from the shock of the beating need not necessarily enter into the consideration of the question of punishment, and that death may have been accelerated by disease of the heart, but anyhow the appellants have not been convicted of the offence of causing death."

From the extracts of the medical evidence given in the judgment of the Sessions Judge in that case, it was apparent that there were very severe contusions on the body of the woman extending from the nape of the neck down to the thighs, and also on both shoulder joints extending to the elbows, that there must have been a repeated and protracted beating which was dangerous to life and which might have caused death. The medical witness thought that the woman's death was caused by severe shock produced by the injuries sustained. Her heart was a little fatty and that might have accelerated death. The accused were sentenced by the Sessions Judge to two years' rigorous imprisonment, which was reduced by the Judicial Commissioner for the reasons quoted in Po Kyaw's case (1) to six months' rigorous imprisonment.

Mr. Burgess found that the beating was administered in perfect good faith, but as he went on to say it was carried out to excess and no precautions were taken to guard against misadventure, it is clear that he used the words "good faith" in some other sense than that with which they are used in the Indian Penal Code. As section 52 lays down that nothing is said to be done or believed in good faith which is done or believed without due care and attention, it seems obvious that the beating carried out to excess, without precautions to guard against misadventure, cannot have been administered in good faith.

Nor do I think that the finding of the Sessions Judge was necessarily endorsed by the Judicial Commissioner or can be accepted, in the absence of any reasons, as authority for holding that where a number of persons inflict a beating upon a woman which in the ordinary course of nature is sufficient to cause death or which is likely to cause death, it can be assumed that there was no intention to cause death or to cause such injuries. Intention is a question of fact which must be decided upon the circumstances of each particular case. It may be a legal fiction as for instance where knowledge is presumed in the case of a person who is intoxicated and intention is the inference drawn from such knowledge, or it may be proved by evidence of the particular circumstances in each case.

It appears to me further that in considering the question of sentence in the case referred to, Mr. Burgess, for whose opinion I in common with other Judges of this Court have a great respect, did not deal with the whole aspect of the matter. It is no doubt incontrovertible that there is no reason for punishing ignorance as ignorance, but where a person is convicted of a brutal crime of a kind repugnant to the natural instincts of mankind, it is necessary to pass a sentence which will punish such brutality even where it proceeds from ignorance, and I am not aware that any protest has ever been raised against the provisions of the law under which persons who have taken part in proceedings sanctioned possibly by ignorance but also by a belief in certain religious teachings, are subject to very severe penalties, e. g., in the case of suttee.

It appears clear, moreover, that the occurrence of a case in 1917, even more brutal than that dealt with in Criminal Appeal No. 64 of 1893, goes to show that the punishment there considered appropriate has not had the effect of putting a stop to the practice complained of.

The fact in the present case that the deceased woman did not consent to be beaten makes section 304A of the Indian Penal Code inapplicable. If there was no intention to cause death or knowledge that death would ensue, the appropriate section would appear to be section 325 of the Indian Penal Code. If there was, the question is whether section 302 or 304 applies.

As to the 1st appellant, he described himself as a saya or doctor, and it must, therefore, be presumed that he had some knowledge, however slight and empirical, of the effects of violence upon human beings. The evidence goes to show that the deceased woman actually died while being beaten; the witnesses who went into the house as soon as the appellants had left it, found her dead. The evidence is that the woman was kicked with the bare heel, beaten and slapped with the fist or open hand, and also that her feet and hands were joined by a rope by which she was lifted from the ground and dropped. Although the witnesses did not depose to this last treatment in the Committing Magistrate's Court, it seems unlikely that they can have invented it, but whether it took place or not it is obvious from the medical evidence that the woman received injuries from which she could not possibly have recovered. She was a woman of 45 years of age or more, of weakly physique. The ordinary lay person looking at her would consider that she was somewhat weak. Her whole body and head were covered with a mass of bruises. Death was due to internal hæmorrhage and shock, and the Medical Officer said that these were sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause the death of a normally healthy person.

I think it is impossible to believe that the 1st appellant did not know that the treatment to which this woman was subjected, was likely to cause her death.

The question whether he intended to cause such injuries is not so easy to answer. Assuming that he did believe that she was possessed by an evil spirit, his primary intention no doubt was not to cause the patient's death but to drive the spirit out. There is no doubt that a belief in witchcraft is extremely common among Burmans, and it is difficult to imagine that if they did not think that the treatment of Ma Chon was justified and that it would have the desired effect, the villagers would not have interfered early in the proceedings. That they did not interfere is, however, no evidence that the conduct of the appellant was not unnecessarily brutal.

Great stress has been laid by the learned Advocate who has argued this appeal on the reply made by the 1st appellant to remonstrances, that he was not beating the woman but was beating the spirit and that the woman would not be marked by so much as a scratch. But it appears to me that very much stronger evidence would be necessary to prove that the appellant acted in the bona fide belief that the laws of nature would be suspended in this particular instance for his convenience. It is necessary to assume a certain standard of common sense among all persons accused of committing crime, in the absence of a plea or evidence of insanity or mental deficiency.

But I do not think that it is necessary to convict the appellant under section 302 of murder. He certainly had no intention, as far as can be judged, to kill the deceased and the intention, which may be inferred from knowledge, is not an intention which must necessarily be inferred in every case. Up to a certain point the appellant's acts, though in the circumstances probably criminal, did not endanger life and I do not think that it is necessary to infer that because he went beyond that point, he intended to cause injuries which he knew to be likely to cause death. Each of the blows struck by itself was probably comparatively light, and the prevailing intention throughout would seem to have been to drive out the spirit. In any case the reasons given by the learned Sessions Judge for passing the capital sentence appear to me to be too remote to be sound, and it was pointed out in Nga Tha Kin v. Emperor (2) that when the discretion as to punishment is vested in the Judge, it is his duty to exercise it and not to compel the executive Government to interfere by way of remission. The sentence of death may appropriately be passed in cases where from motives of revenge, anger or the like a person causes death by such means as make it clear that it was his intention that his victim should not escape.

In the case of the 2nd and 3rd appellants the same remarks apply, with this qualification that they were probably acting under the instructions and influence of the 1st appellant and that they had not the same means as he had of judging of the effect of their acts. I think, however, that in treating the deceased woman as the evidence shows they did treat her, the woman herself being elderly and weakly, they must have known that they were likely to cause death.

The convictions and sentences are set aside, and in lieu thereof, the 1st appellant, Po Tha, is convicted of an offence punishable under section 304 of the Indian Penal Code, second part, and Nga Po Tha sentenced to undergo transportation for seven years.

Nga Shwe Pyan and Nga Pyaing are convicted of an offence punishable under section 304 of the Indian Penal Code, second part, and sentenced to undergo two years' rigorous imprisonment each.

Convictions altered; Sentences reduced.

recorded by another Magistrate—Irregularity—Revision.

Section 350 of the Criminal Procedure Code applies as much to cases in which a Magistrate ceases to exercise jurisdiction by reason of the transfer of the case to another Court, as to cases in which the Magistrate ceases to exercise jurisdiction by reason of his own death or transfer to another post. In other words, the section covers cases of transfer as well as those cases in which the Court remains the same but the person of the presiding officer is changed. [p. 684, cols. 1 & 2.]

A complaint filed against the accused was referred for trial to a Second Class Magistrate, who recorded the whole of the prosecution evidence and a portion of the evidence for defence. The accused then applied to the District Magistrate for transfer on the express undertaking that in the event of transfer he would be satisfied if the Court, to which the transfer was made, pronounced judgment after recording the evidence of the remaining defence witnesses. The District Magistrate transferred the case to a First Class Magistrate, with the direction to proceed with the trial from the stage which it had reached in the Court of the Second Class Magistrate. The accused did not claim that the evidence should be recorded de novo and the First Class Magistrate passed sentence upon him after recording the rest of the defence evidence:

Held, (1) that inasmuch as the accused did not demand that any of the witnesses should be re-summoned and re-heard, proviso (a) to clause (1) of section 350 of the Criminal Procedure Code did not apply and could not be relied upon in support of an application for revision; [p. 685, col. 1.]

(2) (per Walsh, J.) that even if the Magistrate commited an irregularity it was curable by section 537 in the absence of circumstances showing a failure of justice. [p. 685, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—The case before us is a reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Ghazipore, recommending that the conviction of one Ram Das on a charge under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code and the sentence of rigorous imprisonment for one month passed on him be set aside, on the ground that the trial in the Magistrate's Court was vitiated by illegality. It appears that the complaint filed against Ram Das was referred for trial to the Court of an Honorary Magistrate exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the Second Class. This Court recorded the whole of the evidence for the prosecution and a portion of the evidence for the defence. When it had reached this stage, Ram Das applied to the District Magistrate to have the case transferred to some other Court. He gave an undertaking that, in the event of such transfer, he would not ask the Court to which the transfer was made to re-hear the entire evidence de novo, but would be satisfied if that Court proceeded to call and examine the remainder of the defence witnesses and pronounce judgment on the materials then before it. The case was then transferred by the District Magistrate to the Court of a stipendiary Magistrate of the First Class. Ram Das made no attempt to evade the undertaking which he had given to the District Magistrate, that is to say, he did not demand that the witnesses, or any of them, who had been already examined by the original trial Court should be re-summoned and re-heard. The First Class Magistrate accordingly heard and examined the remainder of the defence witnesses named on behalf of Ram Das, convicted him on the charge as framed under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced him to rigorous imprisonment for one month. The learned Sessions Judge has referred the case to this Court on the ground that the provisions of section 350 of the Criminal Procedure Code do not apply to cases which are transferred from one Court to another, and that the First Class Magistrate on receiving this case for trial was bound to commence the trial de novo by the examination of all the prosecution witnesses. There is authority for this proposition in one single case of this Court, Queen-Empress v. Angnu (1). That case was decided by a single Judge upon a reference by a Sessions Judge. The case was not argued and the judgment is of the briefest. We can only take it that in the opinion of the learned Judge of this Court who disposed of that reference the provisions of section 350 of the Criminal Procedure Code were not intended to apply to cases of transfer. There was a suggestion in the referring order in that case that the accused had been prejudiced by the course adopted. Apparently there had been some complaint on his part against the manner in which the evidence had been recorded by the original trial Court. We do not know how far the learned Judge of this Court was affected by this consideration in passing the order which he did. The learned Sessions Judge has referred to another decision of this Court, Queen-Empress v. Bashir Khan (2). He is entitled to rely upon the opinion expressed by the learned Judge who disposed of this case by way of obiter dictum; but the actual point for decision was different. On the facts of that case, even assuming that the provisions of section 350, Criminal Procedure Code, did apply, those provisions had been contravened and the order quashing the proceedings was obviously right on this ground alone. In a recent case, Emperor v. Nanhua (3), one of us has committed himself to a contrary view. Some stress was laid in deciding that case on the fact that the proceedings transferred from one Court to another were only an enquiry preliminary to commitment, and no doubt the question of possible prejudice to the accused person would require to be more carefully considered in the case of the transfer of a trial than in the case of an enquiry preliminary to commitment. At the same time it is quite clear that either the provisions of section 3 0, Criminal Procedure Code, do not apply at all to cases of transfer, or they apply to trials just as much as to preliminary enquiries. This decision is based on certain recent pronouncements of the Calcutta and Madras High Courts. It is sufficient to refer to the cases of Mohesh Chandra Saha v. Emperor (4), Kudrutullah v. Emperor (5) and Palaniandy Gounden v. Emperor (6). The last of these cases was also a case of an enquiry preliminary to commitment; but in this case, as well as in the two Calcutta cases, the principle was most clearly affirmed that section 350 of the Criminal Procedure Code applied as much to cases in which a Magistrate ceases to exercise jurisdiction, so far as the particular case in question is concerned, by reason of its transfer to another Court, as to cases in which the Magistrate ceases to exercise jurisdiction by reason of his own death or transfer to another post. It has been shown to us that the two Calcutta cases are not entirely consistent with certain prior decisions of that Court, but they do represent the latest views of that Court on the question for determination before us. On the wording of the section itself it seems impossible to deny that the words used are wide enough to cover cases of transfer, as well as those cases in which the Court remains the same, but the person of the presiding officer is changed. As the learned Judges of the Madras High Court have pointed out, the words "ceases to exercise jurisdiction therein" must be given their appropriate meaning; and certainly a Magistrate who takes cognisance of a case on the passing of an order of transfer by a competent Court has jurisdiction "therein", that is to say, in the said case, by reason of the order of transfer.

(1) A. W. N. (1889) 130.

On the ground of public convenience there seems to be no good reason why the words of the section should not receive a liberal interpretation, provided such interpretation is not inconsistent with the words themselves.

It seems to us that there is no good reason why the practice of this Court should not be brought into conformity with that of the High Courts of Calcutta and Madras, and we are prepared to hold that the provisions of section 350, Criminal Procedure Code, do apply under the circumstances of the case now before us.

It has been further suggested that we ought to interfere on the ground that Ram Das was prejudiced in his defence by the form of the order of transfer passed by the District Magistrate. The learned District Magistrate would have been better advised, if he had contented himself with calling attention to the fact that his order was made largely on an undertaking by Ram Das that he would not claim his right to have all the witnesses re-summoned and re heard. He went a little further than this, and by his order of transfer purported to direct the First Class

Magistrate to whose Court he transferred the case to proceed with the trial from the stage which it had reached in the Court of the Honorary Magistrate. If the applicant Ram Das had come before the First Class Magistrate and had repudiated the undertaking which he had given to the District Magistrate, and offered some explanation of his conduct in doing so, and had definitely claimed the right conferred by proviso (a) of clause (1) of section 350 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it may well be that other considerations would arise. Certainly the Magistrate who decided this case could not be bound in his judicial capacity by any direction in the order of transfer. It would have been his duty to consider the application and give such effect to it as he thought just and lawful. The fact remains, however, that Ram Das did not demand that any of the witnesses should be re summoned and re-heard. Proviso (a) to clause (1) of section 350 of the Criminal Procedure Code has no application to the facts before us and cannot be relied on in support of the application.

Something has been said as regards the severity of the sentence. This point was not taken in the application to the Sessions Judge and we are not prepared to interfere, on this ground, as the judgment convicting Ram Das seems to be a just and a proper one. We decline to accept the reference and order the record to be returned, the conviction and sentence to stand. If Ram Das has been released pending this reference, he must surrender to his bail and undergo the unexpired portion of his sentence.

WALSH, J.—I entirely agree. Apart from authority, I think the section is clear and too strong for the argument of the applicant in this case. Criticism has been made upon the construction of the section, but it seems to me a simple and compendious statement to cover all cases thus:—"Whenever any Magistrate ceases to exercise jurisdiction in a case and he is succeeded by another Magistrate having such jurisdiction" (that may occur by death, promotion, retirement or transfer by a superior authority), "the Magistrate so succeeding may act on the materials already before him."

Lest it should be supposed that the accused is caught by a strict application of the technical provisions of the Statute, I want to draw attention to one or two matters to which my brother has not referred. The appellant asks for reduction of sentence, on the ground that it was too severe. He called a number of witnesses to allege that he was not there at all and on the other hand he brought a cross-charge against a prosecution witness for assaulting him at the place in question. Under these circumstances, having a reasonable apprehension that he was going to be convicted, he applied for transfer. In my judgment the accused, Ram Das, got a very favourable order out of the District Magistrate and he is the one person who has no right to complain. I should want to hear considerable argument before deciding that under such circumstances in acting upon the evidence already recorded the Magistrate committed any irregularity which could not be cured by section 537 in the absence of circumstances showing a failure of justice. I entirely agree with my learned brother in the order that this reference must be rejected.

Reference rejected.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 435 (3)—Proceedings under s. 145—Revision—High Court, power of interference of.

Orders passed under Chapter XII of the Code of Criminal Procedure are not subject to revision, being expressly excluded from the operation of section 435 of the Code by clause (3) of that section. But in order to make the provisions of section 435, clause (3), applicable, that is to say, to deprive the High Court of the power of interference in revision, the proceedings must be proceedings under Chapter XII of that Code in fact, and not only in name.

Mr. Razak, for the Applicants.

Mr. Mitter, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to deal in revision with an order of the Headquarters Magistrate, Yamethin, passed, or purporting to be passed, under the provisions of Chapter XII of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The application is resisted on the ground that orders passed under Chapter XII are not subject to revision, being expressly excluded from the operation of section 435 of the Code by clause 3 of that section. There is no doubt that this is the case and any conflict of opinion which may exist in India appears rather to be due to questions affecting the construction of the charters of Chartered High Courts than the meaning of section 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. But there can be no doubt that in order to make the provisions of section 435, clause (3), applicable, that is to say, to deprive the High Court of the power of interference in revision, the proceedings must be proceedings under Chapter XII of that Code in fact, and not only in name. For instance in Maharaj Tewari v. Har Charan Rai (1) it was pointed out that the mere adding as a postscript to proceedings which were throughout taken under Chapter VIII of the Code of Criminal Procedure that a final order has been passed under section 145, will not make that order a proceeding under Chapter XII of the Code.

The only point for decision here is whether the proceeding was under Chapter XII of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is alleged that there is no finding that there was likely to be a breach of the peace. It is true that there was no such finding in the final order, but in an order in the diary under the 19th June 1917, the Magistrate recorded an order that from the papers filed it appeared that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace, existed. The procedure followed appears to have been in accordance with that laid down in section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

(1) 26 A. 144; A. W. N. (1903) 212.

The final order is attacked on the ground that the Magistrate went into questions of title and decided accordingly. But it is clear that the Magistrate did endeavour to ascertain and decide which of the parties was in possession and although he would seem to have decided erroneously in coming to a conclusion by questions of title, there is in fact a distinct finding that Aung Baw and Min Din were in possession of the land at the time of the order.

I have no hesitation in holding that the proceedings were under Chapter XII of the Code of Criminal Procedure and this Court is not entitled to interfere in revision.

The application must, therefore, be dismissed.

Application dismissed.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 302—Murder—Death caused by arsenic—Offence.

Accused administered arsenic to a boy of nine years of age with the object of preventing the boy's father from giving evidence against the accused in a criminal trial. The boy died from the effects of the poison:

Held, that the accused was guilty of murder, inasmuch as he knew that the act committed by him was so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause to the boy such bodily injury as was likely to cause death. [p. 688, col. 2.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Cawnpore.

Mr. E. A. Howard, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. E. Ryves (Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Gauri Shankar Bhat, aged fifty-eight years, has been found guilty by the learned Sessions Judge of Cawnpore on a charge framed under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code, the case against him being that he caused the death of a little boy named Parmanand by arsenical poisoning. The record is before us for confirmation of the sentence of death and a petition of appeal has been presented by Gauri Shankar through the Superintendent of the Jail in which he is confined. We have also had the advantage of hearing the case argued on behalf of the appellant by a learned Advocate of this Court. The story for the prosecution is that, on the 23rd of September last, in the course of the forenoon, the accused asked two little boys, Parmanand and Durga, the sons of his neighbours Lala and Jawahir Kurmis, to come to him at a certain temple in order to study. The accused's own boys were there studying their books just outside the temple. It is alleged that Gauri Shankar offered some sugar to the boys, Parmanand and Durga, taking precautions at the same time that his own sons should not receive any share of it. The boys ate the sugar on the spot and, after sometime, they were both taken ill with vomiting and purging. They were carried to the hospital and the first report was made at the Police station of Derapur on the 24th of September at 1 P. M., that is to say, within about twenty-four hours of the occurrence. In this report Lala, the father of the boy Parmanand, plainly accused Gauri Shaṅkar of having given the two boys some poisonous substance in sugar. He did this on the strength of the statements made to him by the boys themselves. The boys were treated at the hospital and it was apparent that the case of the younger of the two, Parmanand, who was only about nine years of age, was the more serious, and on the 24th of September the statement of Parmanand was recorded by the Tahsildar Magistrate. It is to the effect already explained. It alleges that Durga and Parmanand had been sent to the temple by their mother at Gauri Shankar's instance, that they were given sugar to eat, that they complained at the time that it had a curious taste, but were encouraged by the accused to eat it, and that they were taken ill shortly afterwards. The parents of the two boys removed them from the hospital on the morning of the 25th of September, perhaps injudiciously so far as regards Parmanand. The result was that, while Durga recovered, Parmanand died on the 26th September. The subsequent autopsy, taken in connection with the report of the Chemical Examiner, puts it beyond doubt that death was the result of arsenical poisoning. The hospital assistant who treated both the boys gives evidence to the same effect. The symptoms observed by him were those of arsenical poisoning and he suspected arsenic from the first.

The evidence on the record is not voluminous, but it seems straightforward and reliable as far as it goes. Musammat Jasoda is able to prove that Parmanand was sent to Gauri Shankar at the temple, at the latter's express request, and that when he returned home about noon he was vomiting and soon became seriously ill. The most important evidence in the case is the statement of the boy Durga. He says that he was given sugar by the accused at the temple along with Parmanand; that they both complained of the sugar tasting bitter, but the accused re-assured them, saying that there was pepper in it. There is one slight discrepancy between his statement and the dying declaration of Parmanand. According to the latter the boys were taken ill at the temple and had both of them vomited before they left it. According to Durga he was able to go away and visit his house and another place and had also eaten two puris, before he was taken ill. On a consideration of the evidence given by Lala the father of Parmanand and by Jawahir the father of Durga it seems probable that some confusion of memory on the part of the boy Durga is responsible for the discrepancy. The evidence of Lala as to what he was told by Parmanand clearly supports the version in the dying declaration. The point, however, does not seem of material importance, whatever the explanation of the discrepancy may be.

There is clear evidence of motive, although it may fairly be argued on the accused's behalf that the motive is not a strong one for the commission of such an offence as murder. There was a criminal prosecution pending against Gauri Shankar and the case was down for hearing before the Tahsildar Magistrate on the 24th of September. Lala had been active in arranging for the prosecution and was the most important witness in the case. Jawahir, father of Durga, had also been summoned as a witness. In the result Lala was unable to attend because he was waiting upon his sick son, and the complaint was dismissed without any regular trial, the Magistrate apparently accepting a statement made to him by Gauri Shankar and not considering himself called upon to make further enquiry in the absence of the principal witness for the prosecution.

The accused sets up no defence worthy of consideration, either in the Court below or in the petition of appeal which he has addressed to us. He denies all the facts alleged against him. He says he was not in the village at all on the 23rd of September and that the boys never came to him at the temple. In his petition of appeal to this Court he goes so far as to suggest that the parents of the two boys were so seriously at enmity with him that they administered poison to their own children in order to get him into trouble. A defence of the sort certainly does not help the accused. The assessors, as well as the learned Sessions Judge, were satisfied that the prosecution evidence was reliable and that Gauri Shanker had certainly administered arsenic to these two boys with the intention to make them ill. We have felt called upon to consider carefully the question as to the precise nature of the offence thereby committed by the accused. The learned Sessions Judge passes over the point somewhat lightly, with the remark that the accused must have known that he was likely to cause the death of Parmanand by giving him arsenic. The question requires to be considered somewhat more carefully with reference to the provisions of sections 299 and 300 of the Indian Penal Code. With regard to the former of these sections, we think there can be no doubt that Gauri Shankar intended to cause bodily injury to the two boys and that the bodily injury which he intended to cause by the administration of arsenic was of a kind likely to result in death, especially in the case of a little boy about nine years of age. Further, we are quite prepared to hold that in administering arsenic to these boys he knew that he was likely thereby to cause death. When we come to consider the provisions of section 300, clause (2), it becomes evident that the present case is one which lies very much on the boundary line. Somewhat similar questions have had to be considered by this Court in cases of dhatura poisoning and there has been some conflict of authority, as may be seen from the following cases:—

Queen Empress v. Tulsha (1), Emperor v. Bhagwan Din (2), Emperor v. Gutali (3).

Each case must, of course, be decided upon its own facts, but it seems a grave matter to hold that a man of the accused's age, administering a substance like arsenic, with the effects of which the agriculturist population of Northern India is well acquainted, to a boy of Parmanand's age, and actually causing his death thereby, is to be found guilty of any offence short of murder, even though his intention at the time may not have been (and probably was not) to cause the death of the child. Taking the provisions of the section in question as applicable to the facts of the case, we think we are bound to hold that Gauri Shankar, in committing the act proved against him, knew it to be so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause to the boys such bodily injury as is likely to cause death. The case, therefore, just falls within the definition of the offence of murder. Regarding it, however, as a case standing very much upon the border line, and accepting, as we do, the conclusion that the intention was not to cause the death of either of the boys, we do not think it necessary in this case to pass the severe sentence provided by law. We so far accept the appeal of Gauri Shankar that we set aside the sentence of death passed upon him, but affirm his conviction. We direct that he undergo transportation for life with effect from the 2nd of January 1918, the date of his conviction in the Sessions Court.

Provincial Small Causes Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 31—Suit for mesne profits of grove wrongfully received by defendant, whether cognizable by Small Cause Court—Jurisdiction.

A suit to recover mesne profits of a grove which the plaintiff has been wrongfully kept out of possession of by the defendant, falls under Article 31, Schedule II, of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act and is not cognizable by a Small Cause Court.

Civil Revision from an order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Fatehpur.

Mr. Purusottam Das Tandon, for the Applicant.

Mr. Mangal Prasad Bhargava, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision from the order of the Small Cause Court at Fatehpur returning the plaint to be presented to the proper Court. It appears that the plaintiff-applicant sued to recover mesne profits of a grove from which he said he had been wrongfully kept out of possession for three years by the opposite party. The learned Judge considered that the claim of the applicant fell under Article 31, Schedule II, of the Small Causes Courts Act and was not, therefore, cognizable by him. He accordingly returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. He is supported in the view of the law he has taken by a case of this Court, i. e., Sheo Bodh v. Surjan (1), as also by several cases of the Bombay and the Madras High Courts. For the applicant reliance is placed on the Full Bench ruling of Kunjo Behary Singh v. Madhub Chundra Ghose (2). The view taken by the Calcutta High Court seems to have been adopted by this Court about eighteen years ago in the case of Prasadi Lal v. Imdad Husen (3). The facts of that case are not quite the same as those of the present case. In the case of Prasadi Lal v. Imdad Husen (3) the plaintiff had sued for damages for wrongful eviction. In the present case the plaintiff is suing for the mesne profits of the property from which he was kept out of possession for three years. The case of Prasadi Lal v. Imdad Husen (3) does not apply to the present case. The application fails and is dismissed with costs. Let the original plaint be returned.

A co-sharer in joint lands can maintain a suit in ejectment against his other co-sharer, claiming joint possession with him where the latter is not only in exclusive possession of the lands but asserts in his written statement exclusive possession in denial of the title of the plaintiff. [p. 690, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rajshahi, dated the 4th January 1915, modifying that of the Munsif, Bonalia, dated the 27th February 1914.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chackerbutty and Gunada Charan Sen, for the Appellant.

Babus Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhry and Priya Sankar Mazumdar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff and the principal defendant No. 1 are co-sharers in certain lands. The lands are described in two schedules attached to the plaint. The land entered in Schedule (ka) is described as appertaining to the demarcated land of Touzi No. 1576 and the land in Schedule (kha) is described as appertaining to Touzi No. 218. In the former estate the share of the plaintiffs is 15 annas 8 gandas 1 kara 1 kranti and in the latter the share of the plaintiffs is one-sixth. In Estate No. 1576 the remaining share belongs to defendant No. 1 and in Estate No. 218 defendant No. 1 has a two-third share. The plaintiffs sued to recover joint possession with the defendant No. 1 of the lands of these two schedules on the footing that they had been ousted therefrom by defendant No. 1. There is abundant authority on the principle governing cases of this kind between co-sharers. The difficulty arises in the application of the principle to the facts of particular cases. In the present case it is clear that the plaintiffs by their plaint complained of ouster by defendant No. 1. The plaintiffs say that the defendant No. 1 has no right to hold exclusive possession of the said lands owned and held by the plaintiffs jointly and as appertaining to these demarcated shares by ousting the plaintiffs therefrom. It seems to me again that by his written statement defendant No. 1 in effect admitted that his possession of the lands in dispute had been possession in exclusion of the plaintiffs and in denial of the plaintiff's title. By his written statement he claimed the major portion of the land as appertaining to another Touzi No. 208 of which he was the sole owner. In that state of the pleadings, in my opinion, it was open to the plaintiff to sue the defendant No. 1 in ejectment. It has been suggested that the learned Judge has not found that the defendant No. 1 excluded the plaintiffs from those lands and denied their title. An examination of the judgment, however, will show that the learned Subordinate Judge intended to find an ouster of the plaintiffs by defendant No. 1. He was referred to reported cases on the subject and he distinguished those cases from the case he had before him on the ground that in those cases there was no question of ouster or exclusive possession on the part of the defendant and he came to the conclusion that there was absolutely no analogy between those cases and the present. In my opinion, the ouster necessary to support such a suit as this, has been sufficiently pleaded and found. The appeal should accordingly be dismissed with costs.

BEACHCROFT, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 24—Upper Burma Civil Courts Regulation I of 1896, s. 15—Costs—Appeal as to costs, when maintainable—Order of transfer and costs—Appeal, whether lies.

An appeal does not lie on the question of costs where there has been no appealable decree. [p. 691, col. 1.]

An order passed under the provisions of section 24 of the Code of Civil Procedure read with section 15 of the Upper Burma Civil Courts Regulation, is not a decree and is not appealable. No appeal, therefore, lies from an order as to costs forming part of such order. [p. 691, col. 1.]

Mr. S. Vasudevan, for the Appellants.

Mr. D. Dutt, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent in the course of a suit against the appellants for an injunction, applied for a temporary injunction, and being dissatisfied with the progress made by the Court which was trying the suit, applied to the Divisional Court praying that the suit should be transferred to the file of the District Judge, and that the Divisional Judge should take upon his own file the application for a temporary injunction. The Divisional Judge, without referring to, or noticing the latter application, transferred the suit to the file of the District Judge and directed that the present appellants who had opposed the application, should pay the costs, fixed at Rs. 50. Against this order requiring them to pay costs, the defendants appeal.

A preliminary objection is taken by the respondents that an appeal does not lie against the order of the Divisional Judge directing the appellants to pay costs. I think there is no doubt that this view is correct. The appellants relied on various Indian cases, among others Ranchordas Vithaldas v. Bai Kasi (1), where it was held that, where the Original Court has made an erroneous order for costs under a misapprehension of fact and law, an appeal lies from such order although the appellant complains of nothing else but the order for costs so erroneously made.

(1) 16 B. 676; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 929.

And in other cases, e. g., Kuppuswami Chetty v. Zamindar of Kalahasti (2) and Dildar Ali Khan v. Bhawani Sahai Singh (3), it was held that an appeal may be entertained on a question of costs only, when a matter of principle is involved, since costs are awarded in the exercise of the discretion of the Judge with reference to general principles.

But it does not appear to me that any of these cases are authority for holding that where there is no appealable decree, the Court may entertain an appeal on a question of costs. In each of the Indian cases which I have referred to, there was an appealable decree and the appeal was entertained as against that part of the decree which dealt with costs. Here the order of the Divisional Judge was an order passed under the provisions of section 24 of the Code of Civil Procedure read with section 15 of the Upper Burma Civil Courts Regulation, and the order was not a decree and was not appealable. No. appeal, therefore, lies.

Order accordingly.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), s. 76—Goods consigned under risk note B, loss of—Damages, suit for—Burden of proof.

In a suit for damages against a Railway Company for the loss or non-delivery of goods consigned under a risk-note in form B, the burden of proving the cause of loss or non-delivery is on the plaintiff. [p. 692, col. 2.]

Rule against the order of the Sub-Judge, First Court, Burdwan, exercising the powers of a Court of Small Causes in Small Cause Court Suit No. 141 of 1917, dated the 11th July 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. L. James (with him Babu Ambicapada Chaudhury, for the Petitioners.—I am not liable if the goods are lost in transit. The Judge disbelieved the plaintiff-opposite party's story that the bags fell short in Allahabad. The question is on whom does the onus lie to show how the loss occurred. The question is who will come within the exception? There are two cases on the point—Sheo Barat Ram v. Bengal and N. W. Railway Co. (1), East Indian Railway Co. v. Nilkanta Roy (2).

The risk-note is in form B. The Railway Company is not a common carrier according to Common Law of England and do not come under the Carriers Act. Those terms in the new form were put in for the benefit of the consignors and as it was put for his benefit, the onus is on him, when he took advantage of it and paid a lower freight for the consignment.

The principle in Sheo Barat Ram v. Bengal and N. W. Railway Co. (1) is exactly in point.

In East Indian Railway Co. v. Nilkanta Roy (2) the risk-note was under form H but the terms are exactly the same and it follows the case of Sheo Barat Ram v. Bengal and N. W. Railway Co. (1). The question of onus has been dealt with at page 579* in East Indian Railway Co. v. Nilkanta Roy (2). These two decisions are absolutely in point. The lower Court relies on certain decisions in Akhil Chandra Shaha v. India General Navigation and Railway Co. Ltd. (3) and Surendra Lal Chaudhuri v. Secretary of State (4).

Akhil Chandra Shaha v. India General Navigation and Railway Co., Ltd. (3) is the case of the river company and is the case of a common carrier, the principle of which does not apply to Railway Companies.

Surendra Lal Chaudhuri v. Secretary of State (4) is the case of the liability of a Railway Company under risk note A.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen, for the Opposite Party.—I rely on the finding of the Court below. The seven bags have not at all been sent from Bhatinda. The question of onus does not arise; even if it arises, the onus is on the other side and that I shall show from reported cases. The case of East Indian Railway Co. v. Nilkanta Roy (2) is a case relating to the entire loss of goods and has no application to his case. Sesham Patter v. L. M. Moss (5) is in point. In Surendra Lal Chaudhuri Secretary of State (4) the risk-note is not material. The risk-note is controlled by section 76 of the Railways Act. See section 76 of Railways Act of 1890. The risk-note gives a limited liability to the Railway Company otherwise the Railway Company will be entirely liable. See section 72 of the Railway Act. Section 76 does not make any difference whether there is limited or entire liability and lays down how the burden of proof is to be discharged. See Sesham Patter v. L. M. Moss (5).

The amount of liability maybe determined by the risk notes. See section 106 of the Evidence Act: the goods were in possession of the Railway Company. In Surendra Lal Chaudhuri v. Secretary of State (4) there is no mention of any risk note. In Sheo Barat Ram v. Bengal and N. W. Railway Co. (1) theft was proved. The case of Surendra Lal Chaudhuri v. Secretary of State (4) is contrary to Sheo Barat Ram v. Bengal and N. W. Railway Co. (1) and is upon the general principle governing all cases. See also Akhil Chandra Shaha v. India General Navigation and Railway Co., Ltd. (3).

JUDGMENT.—This is a Rule issued at the instance of the East Indian Railway Company Ltd., calling upon the opposite party to show cause why the judgment and decree of the Small Cause Court Judge of of Burdwan, dated the 11th July 1917, should not be set aside on certain grounds mentioned in the petition. The Rule relates to a consignment of 170 bags of flour and sooji which was delivered short at Burdwan by 7 bags. The decree awards the opposite party damages for the short delivery in accordance with the claim. The ground which has been taken on the petitioner's behalf is that the learned Small Cause Court Judge has misapplied the law inasmuch as he has thrown the burden of proving the cause of the loss or non-delivery on the petitioner.

It appears that the goods were carried under a risk-note in form B. When goods are so carried, the consignor in consideration of the reduced freight charged, engages "to hold the Railway Company harmless and free from all responsibility for any loss, destruction or deterioration of, or damage, to the said consignment from any cause whatever except for the loss of a complete consignment or of one or more complete packages forming part of a consignment, due either to the wilful neglect of the Railway administration, or to theft by or to the wilful neglect of, its servants, transport agents or carriers employed by them before, during and after transit over the said Railway."

As these words stand, they have the effect of throwing the burden of proving in what manner a particular consignment or part of a consignment is lost, on the consignor or the person claiming damages from the Railway Company. This view is in accordance with two previous decisions of this Court in Sheo Barat Ram v. Bengal and North Western Railway Company (1) and East Indian Railway Company v. Nilkanta Roy (2).

The learned Pleader appearing for the opposite party, has in the course of his argument laid stress on the provisions of section 76 of the Railways Act. The same argument was used in the second of the two cases cited and used without success. The learned Pleader has suggested that that case is distinguishable because it was a case relating not to the loss of a complete package but to the loss of the contents of a tin. The learned Judges though they held no doubt that the delivery of a tin with the contents missing, was not the loss of a complete package, nevertheless were clearly of opinion that assuming that there was loss of a complete package, the burden of proving how the loss was caused, lay on the consignor and not upon the Railway Company. The cases cited by the learned Pleader are distinguishable. In the case of Sesham Patter v. L. M. Moss (5) no question arose as to the special contract incorporated in form B. The same observation may be made with regard to the case of Surendra Lal Chaudhuri v. Secretary of State (4). As to the case of Akhil Chandra Shaha v. India General Navigation and Railway Company Ltd. (3), the liability dealt with there, was not the liability of a Railway Company but the liability of a common carrier. Under the Railways Act of 1890, the liability of a Railway Company differs from that of a common carrier. That decision, therefore, has no bearing.

In view of the authorities to which I have referred, this Rule must be made absolute. The petitioner is entitled to his costs which we assess at one gold mohur.

BEACHCROFT, J.—I agree.

Rule made absolute.

Contract Act IX of 1872), ss. 134, 137—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 5—Principal and surety—Suit dismissed as against principal—Surety, whether discharged.

Plaintiff sued a principal debtor and the surety for the price of goods sold. Service of summons could not be effected upon the principal debtor and the plaintiff applied that he should be dismissed from the suit. The suit proceeded against the surety alone and the plaintiff obtained a decree:

Held, that the legal consequence of the act of the plaintiff was to discharge the principal debtor within the meaning of section 134 of the Contract Act, so that he had no further right of suit against the surety. [p. 694, col. 1.]

Mr. L. K. Mitter, for the Applicants.

Mr. C. G. S. Pillay, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sued to recover the price of goods sold. The 2nd defendant was the principal debtor and the 1st defendant was the surety. The plaintiffs were unable to serve the 2nd defendant, they applied that he should be dismissed from the suit and proceeded against the surety. They obtained a decree in the Court of first instance which was reversed in appeal on the ground that, the principal debtor having been discharged by the creditor, the creditor could not recover from the surety. Against this the plaintiffs now come to this Court in revision on the ground that the ruling relied upon by the lower Appellate Court was not sound law. The lower Appellate Court referred to Maung Pho Tha v. Ko Min Pyu (1).

It is urged that the defendant did not abandon his claim or waive his claim against the principal debtor but that it should be taken that he was unable to ascertain the principal debtor's residence and that the order of the Court was passed under Order IX, rule 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and various Indian rulings of which Nathabhai Tricamlal v. Ranchodlal Ramji (2) is the latest, are relied upon. In that suit it was held that there was some difficulty in serving the 1st defendant whose name was struck out; as a year had not elapsed, presumably this was done if not at the request, at least with the consent, of the plaintiff, and that the striking off of the 1st defendants's name was a procedure under Order IX, rule 5, rather than under Order XXIII, rule 1. It was said that "all the authorities in all the Courts of India who have had this question under consideration,... are in agreement that the mere omission of the plaintiff to pursue his suit against one of the defendants with the result that that defendant's name is struck off and the suit dismissed against him under Order IX, rule 5, does not discharge the surety, provided the suit be still in time against the principal."

The terms of Order IX, rule 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure are as follows:—"Where, after a summons has been issued to the defendant, or to one of several defendants, and returned unserved, the plaintiff fails for a period of one year from the date of the return made to the Court by the officer ordinarily certifying to the Court returns made by the serving officers, to apply for the issue of a fresh summons and to satisfy the Court that he has used his best endeavours to discover the residence of the defendant who has not been served, or that such defendant is avoiding service of process, the Court may make an order that the suit be dismissed as against such defendant." And clause 2 lays down that in such a case the plaintiff may, subject to the law of limitation, bring a fresh suit.

I am at a loss to understand how a Court can be said to be adopting a procedure under this section which expressly enables it to take certain action after the period of one year when it takes that action before the expiry of the year. But assuming the view taken in the Bombay, case to be correct, it would appear that there the Court struck the 1st defendant's name off without any application in that behalf by the plaintiff. In the Lower Burma case relied upon by the lower Appellate Court, it was pointed out that in the Indian cases there referred to, the plaintiff did not, by his own act, relinquish his claim, whereas in that case he expressly waived his claim against the principal, and the same distinction was drawn in the case of Williams, F. G. v. King, T. (3), where the plaintiff's Advocate told the Judge that his principal debtor had absconded, he would waive claim against the principal and would obtain decrees against the sureties. I think that that distinction is sound. In the present case, the diary shows that the plaintiff informed the Court distinctly that he waived his claim against the principal debtor.* * * * * * * * * * This entry in the diary was made on the 26th February 1916, the suit having been filed on the 8th January 1916. I am of opinion that this amounted to much more than mere forbearance within the meaning of section 137 of the Indian Contract Act. It was an act or omission the legal consequence of which was to discharge the principal debtor within the meaning of section 134, for it was a distinct waiver of the plaintiff's claim against the principal debtor and the plaintiff had no further right of suit against the principal debtor.

There are no grounds for interference on the facts and this application must be dismissed with costs.

Application dismissed.

THE BENGAL PROVIDENT AND INSURANCE COMPANY LTD.—DEFENDANT —PETITIONER

versus

KAMINI KUMAR CHOUDHURY—PLAINTIFF—OPPOSITE-PARTY.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 20, 21—"Cause of action," meaning of—Suit on policy of insurance—Place of suing—Death of assured, whether part of cause of action.

One R sent proposal forms for two policies of life insurance from some place in the District of Chittagong to the head office of the defendant company at Calcutta, and the policies were made out in that office and thence despatched to the assured R. R. subsequently died in the District of Noakhali. Thereafter R's son brought a suit in the Munsif's Court at Feni in the District of Noakhali upon the policies issued to R. by the defendant company. Objection was taken at the trial that the Court at Feni had no jurisdiction, but it was overruled and the suit was tried on the merits:

Held, that although the objection as to jurisdiction was taken at the earliest possible opportunity and before the issues were settled, yet having regard to the provisions of section 21 of the Civil Procedure Code and to the fact that evidence had been taken at length in the Feni Court, this was not a case in which the High Court should interfere in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction as no attempt was made to show that the company had been prejudiced in any way by the case being tried at Feni or that the disposal of the suit had been prejudicially affected on the merits. [p. 697, col. 1.]

Per Richardson, J. (Beachcroft, J. not expressing any opinion).—The death of the assured being a part of the plaintiff's cause of action and the death having taken place within the Feni jurisdiction, a part of the cause of action arose there and the Feni Court had jurisdiction to try the case. [p. 696, col. 2.]

The expression 'cause of action' means the whole cause of action, or every fact which must be either admitted or proved before the plaintiff can succeed. [p. 696, col. 1.]

It is not justifiable to interpret the language of section 20, clause (c) of the Code of 1908 now in force by reading into it a repealed explanation, viz. explanation III of section 17 of the repealed Civil Procedure Code of 1882. [p. 696, col. 1.]

Rule against the order of the District Judge, Noakhali, dated the 11th July 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Prokash Chandra Majumdar, for the Petitioner, submitted that the Courts below were wrong in holding that the Feni Court had jurisdiction to try the suit inasmuch the assured had died within the jurisdiction of that Court. Section 20 clause (c) of Act V of 1908 should be construed with reference to Explanation III of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. See Salig Ram v. Chuba Mal (1). The cause of action arose in the District of Chittagong whence the assured sent proposal forms for the policies of life insurance upon which the suit was brought. If section 20 (c) of the Code of 1908 were construed with reference to the repealed explanation of the Code of 1882, then the Feni Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The contract with the defendant company had been made from the district of Chittagong, and the cause of action did not arise within the jurisdiction of the Feni Court.

Babu Bhagirat Chandra Das, for the Opposite Party, submitted that the language of the Code of 1908 could not be interpreted by reading into it a repealed explanation from the repealed Code of 1882. Section 20, clause (c), must be construed with reference to the wording of the section itself. See Bank of England v. Vagliano (2), Norendra Nath Sarcar v. Kamalbasini Dasi (3). The expression "cause of action" was defined in several cases. Doya Narain Tewary v. Secretary of State (4), Dobson v. Bengal Spinning and Weaving Company (5), Seshagiri Row v. Nawab Askur Jung (6). The cause of action arose partly within the jurisdiction of the Feni Court where the assured died, and, therefore, the Feni Court had jurisdiction.

Even assuming that the Feni Court had no jurisdiction, the case had been tried at Feni, evidence had been taken at length in the Feni Court, and, therefore, as no attempt had been made either in the Courts below or in the High Court to show that the Company had been prejudiced in any way by the case having been tried at Feni, the High Court should not, having regard to the provisions of section 21 of the Civil Procedure Code interfere in revision. Hamidunnissa Bibi v. Gopal Chandra Malakar (7), Raghunath Charan Singh v. Shamo Koeri (8), Govinda Menon v. Karunakara Menon (9), Wahidullah v. Kanaya Lal (10).

Babu Prokash Chandra Majumder in reply.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Rule issued at the instance of the petitioner (The Bengal Provident and Insurance Company Limited) calling upon the opposite party (Kamini Kumar Choudhury) to show cause why the decree of the District Judge of Noakhali, dated the 11th July 1916, should not be set aside or why such other order should not be made as to this Court may seem fit. The matter arises out of a suit brought by the opposite-party upon two policies of life insurance issued by the petitioner Company to his father Ram Gour Choudhury now deceased. It appears that Ram Gour Choudhury the assured, sent proposal forms for those policies from some place in the Chittagong District to the head office of the Company at Calcutta and that the policies were made out in that office and thence despatched to the assured. The assured subsequently died at Baspara in the District of Noakhali and this suit was instituted in the Court of the Local Munsif at Feni in that district. Objection was taken at the trial that the Court at Feni had no jurisdiction. That objection, however, was overruled and a decree was made in favour of the plaintiff. The case then went on appeal to the District Judge who agreed with the learned Munsif on the question of jurisdiction, but for reasons into which we need not enter, has set aside the decree of the Trial Court and has remitted the case to that Court with certain directions.

The sole point taken before us in support of the Rule, is the point of jurisdiction. The question is whether the Munsif's Court at Feni is a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the cause of action in this case has in part arisen within the meaning of clause (c) of section 20 of the present Civil Procedure Code. learned District Judge has held that inasmuch as the assured died within the jurisdiction of the Feni Court and the death of the assured was a part of the cause of action, therefore, a part of the cause of action has arisen at Feni and the Court there has jurisdiction. The learned Pleader for, the petitioner contests that view. He has argued that clause (c) of section 20 must be construed with reference to an explanation which found place in section 17 of the Code of 1882 but which has not been reproduced in the present Code. Under that section every suit not previously provided for was to be instituted in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction either the cause of action arose or certain other conditions were fulfilled to which we need not now refer. At the end of the section there was an Explanation III dealing particularly and especially with suits arising out of contract. It is said for the petitioner that if the provisions of that explanation be read into the present Code and applied to the present case then the Feni Court had no jurisdiction, and in this connection reference is made to the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Salig Ram v. Chuba Mal (1). It may be doubted whether that decision goes as far as is now contended. Speaking for myself upon the point as it is put to us, I cannot suppose it justifiable to interpret the language of the Code now in force by reading into it a repealed explanation from the repealed Code.

In the case of Bank of England v. Vagliano (2) Lord Herschell dealt in a well-known passage with the interpretation of codifying Statutes. His observations were cited at length by Lord Macnaghten in the case of Norendra Nath Sarcar v. Kamalbasini Dasi (3), which turned upon the meaning of section 111 of the Indian Succession Act.

The Court designated by clause (c) of section 20 of the present Code is the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction "the cause of action wholly or in part arises." It appears to be well settled that the expression "cause of action" (especially when part of the cause of action is also referred to) means the whole cause of action, or every fact which must be either admitted or proved before the plaintiff can succeed. Doya Narain Tewary v. Secretary of State (4), Dobson v. Bengal Spinning and Weaving Co. (5), Sashagiri Row v. Nawab Askur Jung (6). The cases cited were decided under clause 12 of the Letters Patent which gives the High Court original jurisdiction in all cases other than the case of suit for land, "if the cause of action shall have arisen, either wholly, or, in case the leave of the Court shall have been first obtained, in part, within the local limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction." That provision bears a close analogy to clause (c) of section 20 and I can see no reason why the similar language of clause (c) should not be similarly interpreted. If then in relation to suits generally, the term "cause of action" in clause (c) means the whole cause of action, it would be difficult to give it a more restricted meaning for the purposes of the clause in relation to suits arising out of contract.

In the case before us, it is not disputed for the petitioner that the death of the assured is a part of the cause of action, using the term in the sense indicated, and as authority for that proposition the learned Pleader for the opposite-party has cited the case of Cailland v. Champion (11) though he is unable to refer us to any more recent case precisely in point. Confining myself, therefore, to the language of the existing Code, I can see no escape from the conclusion that the death of the assured being a part of the plaintiff's cause of action and the death having taken place in British India within the Feni jurisdiction, a part of the cause of action arose there and the Feni Court has jurisdiction. In other words I am not satisfied that the contention upon which the petitioner relies, can be supported. The question, however, may be one of some importance to Insurance Companies and if it were necessary for us to express a final opinion upon it, I might have preferred to take time for consideration. It is sufficient perhaps without actually deciding the question to say that the Rule may be disposed of on another ground.

The present Code contains a new provision, section 21, which runs as follows:— "No objection as to the place of suing shall be allowed by any Appellate or Revisional Court unless such objection was taken in the (11) (1797) 7 T. R. 205; 101 E. R. 933.

Court of first instance at the earliest possible opportunity and in all cases where issues are settled at or before such settlement, and unless there has been a consequent failure of justice." Now it is not disputed that the objection here was taken in the Trial Court at the earliest possible opportunity and before the issues were settled. But it is contended for the opposite party that the petitioner has not shown that the trial of the suit at Feni has led to any failure of justice. The lower Appellate Court was as much bound as we are, by the Rule enacted in section 21. No attempt seems to have been made there to show that the Company had been prejudiced in any way by the case being tried at Feni or that the disposal of the suit had been prejudicially affected on the merits. The petition on which this Rule was issued, is entirely silent upon this question. In fact the learned Pleader for the petitioner has candidly admitted that the point had not occurred to him till it was raised in the course of the argument. There is apparently no reported case in which this provision has been applied but there are several cases decided upon the analogous provision in section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act which may serve to show the intention and the object of the Legislature in the present connection, for example Dinesh Chunder Roy v. Sarnamoyi Debi (12), Hamidunnissa Bibi v. Gopal Chandra Malakar (7), Raghunath Charan Singh v. Shamo Koeri (8), Govinda Menon v. Karunakara Menon (9) and Wahidullah v. Kanaya Lal (10). The effect is to confer a qualified or conditional jurisdiction on the Court in which the trial actually takes place. In the circumstances, having regard to section 21 and to the fact that evidence has been taken at length in the Feni Court, in my opinion, this is not a case in which we should interfere in the exercise of our revisional jurisdiction.

The result is that the Rule will be discharged with costs. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs BEACHCROFT, J.—I agree that the Rule should be discharged, not on the ground that the Court at Feni had jurisdiction, as to which I express no opinion, but because section 21 applies to the case.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 86 OF 1916.

GIRDHAR DAS AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

SIDHESHWARI PRASAD NARAIN SINGH AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 91, 92, 93—Execution—Sale—Property sold twice over—Suit by second purchaser to recover purchase-money, maintainability of.

Where the property of a judgment-debtor has once been sold by Court-auction, he has no interest in the property subsequent to the sale and a purchaser at a second sale of the same property, therefore, acquires no interest by his purchase and is entitled to maintain a suit for the refund of the purchase-money paid by him against all the creditors of the judgment-debtor to whom payments have been made out of that money.

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Benares.

Messrs. Jawahirlal Nehru and Harnandan Prasad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Brij Nath Vyas and Kanhya Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The essential point raised by this first appeal is quite a simple one. Certain house property situated within the city of Benares belonged to one Rajendradhari Singh, who seems to have been heavily in debt. There were two auction sales of the house property in question: One on the 15th of February, 1906, resulting in a purchase by Ram Prasad Singh, and another on the 18th of March 1907, resulting in a purchase by the present plaintiffs-respondents. The latter paid their purchase-money into Court and that money passed under the orders of the Court into the hands of a large number of creditors of Rajendradhari Singh, who had applied for rateable distribution in respect of any money which might be realised by the auction-sale. Subsequently Ram Prasad Singh brought a suit, in which he impleaded the judgment-creditor on whose application the attachment resulting in the sale of March the 18th, 1907, had been made, and also the present plaintiffs, the auction-purchasers at the said sale. The result of that suit was a decision, between these parties, that the same property had been sold twice over, first to Ram Prasad Singh in February 1906, and then to the plaintiffs in March 1907. It followed as a necessary consequence that on the date of the latter sale, the judgment-debtor Rajendradhari Singh had no saleable interest in the property purchased by the plaintiffs. The latter had, therefore, obtained nothing by their purchase and became entitled to maintain a suit against all the judgment creditors of Rajendradhari Singh to whom payments were made out of the money which the plaintiffs had paid into Court. The law on this point is clearly settled, as may be seen by referring to the cases of Kishun Lal v. Muhammad Safdar Ali Khan (1) and Muhammad Najib Ullah v. Jai Narain (2). The Court below has accordingly decreed the plaintiff's claim against a large number of defendants, in accordance with the sums found to be respectively due from each defendant, or group of defendants. The appeal now before us is by five of the defendants only. The question as to the maintainability of the suit must be decided against the appellants in accordance with the rulings above referred to. The question whether the present suit was or was not within limitation, has already been up to this Court in appeal and has been decided in the plaintiff's favour. The report may be found in Sidheswari Prasad Narain Singh v. Mayanand Gir (3).

There are pleas taken in the memorandum of appeal before us which are apparently intended to suggest that the decision in the suit brought by Ram Prasad Singh has in some way been used against the present defendants improperly in this litigation. The plaintiffs were obviously entitled to prove that they had lost the benefit of their auction-purchase by reason of the fact that Ram Prasad Singh had succeeded in proving that he had himself purchased identically the same property at the auction-sale of February 1906. This fact could most readily be proved by the record of the suit in which Ram Prasad Singh was the plaintiff and the present plaintiffs, along with the attaching creditor of Rajendradhari Singh, were the defendants. Beyond this, I do not think that the Court below has made any use of the record of this previous litigation. The contesting defendants, other than original attaching creditor, were allowed to raise every question of fact which could have been raised by them if they had been defendants in the suit brought by Ram Prasad Singh. They could not as a matter of fact have been made defendants in that suit, because it had been instituted before the order for rateable distribution of the sale-proceeds of the sale of March 1907, had been passed. This, however, I only mention incidentally. The questions of fact requiring determination at this trial, were the identity or otherwise of the property purchased at the two sales of February, 1906 and March 1907, and secondly, the validity or otherwise of the plea taken by these defendants that Ram Prasad Singh was merely a benami purchaser for the benefit of the judgment-debtor, Rajendradhari Singh. The identity of the properties sold at the two auction-sales has been established by abundant evidence and the point scarcely admits of argument. The truth of the matter is that Rajendradhari Singh had purchased a number of contiguous houses in the city of Benares and had then built himself a residence, with suitable out-houses and other appurtenances, situated within one single enclosure covering the sites of the various houses purchased by him. At both the auction-sales, everything within the enclosure, the boundaries of which were clearly specified in the sale-proclamation, was put up for sale and was purchased by Ram Prasad Singh in February 1906, and by the present plaintiffs in March 1907. There is no force in the contention that different house numbers were mentioned in the sale proclamations of the two years. The identity of the property sold is sufficiently established by the sale proclamations and by the evidence of the Court official who conducted the sales. Ram Prasad Singh was at any rate the ostensible purchaser at the sale of February 1906. The evidence by which the defendants in this suit have sought to show that he was a benamidar for Rajendradhari Singh, is of very little substance. Certain evidence has been produced tending to show that Rajendradhari Singh was in funds in the month of February 1906, so that he could have made this purchase if he wanted to do so. The case for the defendants can scarcely be said to go beyond this. It is true that Ram Prasad Singh does not appear to have taken as yet effective possession of the whole of the property sold to him; but the evidence on the record supplies abundant explanation of this fact. When the time for delivery of possession came, Rajendradhari Singh was lying seriously ill inside the house, and it would seem that he died there shortly afterwards. The evidence for the defendants does not carry us beyond the fact that Ram Prasad Singh has not hitherto taken steps to evict Rajendradhari Singh's widow from the premises. This may be due to sympathetic consideration on his part, or it may be that he does not desire to contest the possible question of the widow's right of residence. Moreover, it must be remembered that Ram Prasad Singh's position has been complicated by the subsequent auction-sale of 1907 and by the litigation in which he has been involved in order to enforce his title. The decision of the High Court in his favour was not pronounced until the month of November 1909. On the whole, there seems no valid basis for a finding that the purchase effected by Ram Prasad Singh at the auction-sale of February 1906 was benami on behalf of the judgment debtor, or was anything but a bona fide purchase for his own benefit. The defendants have further raised another very curious plea, suggesting that the auction-purchase by the plaintiffs themselves in the month of March 1907 was also benami on behalf and for the benefit of Rajendradhari Singh or his heirs. In fact this seems to have been treated as the main issue in the case. We have been taken through the evidence on the point, and it is really unnecessary for us to say more than that we find no reason for dissenting from the opinion formed by the trial Court regarding that evidence. We can find no real reason for doubting, that the purchase-money paid in connection with the auction-sale of March 1907, was found by the plaintiffs themselves and that the purchase was effected on behalf of the plaintiffs, for their benefit, by their agent, Sheodhar Prasad.

The only remaining plea in the memorandum of appeal before us is that Ram Prasad Singh's decree invalidating the sale of March 1907, and affirming the validity of his own purchase at the sale of February 1906, was obtained by some sort of fraudulent collusion between himself and the then defendants. There is no basis for that contention, beyond the fact that the present plaintiffs did not choose to appeal against Ram Prasad Singh's decree; but the matter was fully fought out by the principal defendant, the attaching judgment-creditor, and the essential issues of fact were found in favour of Ram Prasad Singh after contest, as they have again been found in his favour after contest in the present litigation. There is, therefore, no force in this appeal. We dismiss it with costs.

By the Full Bench.—The findings of an Appellate Court as to instances of usage, the genuineness of documents put forward as regards usage and the credibility of witnesses, are findings of fact and the High Court cannot, in second appeal, review the evidence on these matters and interfere with such findings. [p. 716, col. 1.]

Kakarla Abbayya v. Raja Venkata Papayya, 29 M. 24 16 M L J. 8, overruled.

The liability to pay thunduwaram is a well-known incident of mirasi tenure in the Chingleput District but as it is not universally applicable, it is for the mirasidar to show that he is entitled to enforce it by the custom of the estate or the neighbourhood. [p 715, col. 1.]

Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Goundan, 2 M. 149; 4 Ind. Jur. 560; 1 Ind Dec (N. S.) 375, followed.

The recognition of a mirasidar's right to swantantram or thunduvaram in the Settlement Register is of great evidentiary value as a strong instance of the assertion of the right on the estate and is, therefore, entitled to great weight while, on the other hand, the refusal of the Settlement Officer to register the swantantram, is not conclusive as he has no authority to determine the question and does not detract from the weight of other evidence relating to the mirasidar's right by custom to collect such dues. [p. 712, col. 1.]

A written agreement by a tenant to pay the swantantram or thunduvaram is admissible as an admission of the evidence of custom unless the tenant explains away the admission and its effect cannot be discounted or neutralised on the ground that the admission is recent. [p. 716, col. 2.]

Per Wallis, C J.—The words 'usage having the force of law' in section 100, Civil Procedure Code, are little more than words of amplification and do not give the Court any larger powers of interference with findings as to custom in so far as they are findings of fact, than with any other findings of fact. [p. 714, col. 2.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar and Phillips, JJ.—It is competent to a Divisional Bench of the High Court to refer to a Full Bench, not merely a question of law but the whole matter of an appeal. [p. 712, col. 1; p. 714, col. 1.]

In dealing with second appeals the High Court is bound by the lower Appellate Court's opinion on the reliability of evidence but the value to be attached to the evidence (provided it is not mere opinion evidence) supposing it is accepted as true, and the relevancy of evidence, are questions to be considered by the High Court also. If notwithstanding uncontradicted instances ranging over a long period and recognised judicially in several cases, the lower Appellate Court finds against the existence of a proper custom on the ground that in its opinion the instances are insufficient in number, the High Court is entitled to hold that on the facts found by the lower Appellate Court, the custom is legally established. [p. 713, col. 2; p. 716, col 2.]

By the Division Bench, (Sadasiva Aiyar and Napier, JJ.)—The thunduvaram cess claimed by a mirasidar is not of the nature of rent but comes under the general expression 'dues' in Article 13 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act. [p. 700, col. 2.]

The refusal of Government to recognise the thunduvaram does not amount to a 'refusal' by the tenant to pay the due to the mirasidar within the meaning of Article 131 of the Limitation Act. [p. 701, col. 1.]

In dealing with evidence of custom, Courts should examine the evidence covering the whole period of the custom. It may be that the earlier evidence is not sufficient to establish the custom: it may be that it is sufficient but that later evidence establishes a discontinuance—all these aspects must be considered. [p. 702, col. 1.]

Where abandonment of a customary due is pleaded it is for the tenant to prove it and mere non-receipt of the due will afford very weak evidence of such abandonment. [p. 702, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Chingleput, in Appeal Suit No. 542 of 1911, preferred against, that of the Court of the District Munsif, Chingleput, in Original Suit No. 12 of 1910.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 5th and 6th of September 1916, and having stood over for consideration till the 20th of September 1916, the Court (Sadasiva Aiyar and Napier, JJ.), delivered the following JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the appellant. He brought the suit to recover Thunduwaram alleged to be due to him as Mirasidar by the defendant who is a Government Ryot in a Mirasi village. A preliminary objection was raised by the respondent's learned Vakil (Mr. T. R. Ramachandrier) that no second appeal lies as the suit was of a small cause nature and the value of the claim is less than Rs. 500. In our opinion, Mirasi right is an interest in the village lands, though it may not now be a proprietary interest therein. The Thunduwaram payable to the Mirasidar (assuming it to be payable) might have once been part of the Kudivaram produce, but it is now claimed merely as the fee due to the Mirasidar as such by custom. Hence it is not of the nature of "rent" (like Jodi), but comes under the general expression "dues" in Article 13 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act.

We, therefore, overruled the above preliminary objection. We are unable to agree with the learned District Judge that the plaintiff's claim to obtain Thunduwaram (a part of the Mirasidar's Swathantram) from the defendant became barred in 1890, because the Government refused some time prior to 1878 to recognize the custom under which the Mirasidar claimed such dues. Evidently the learned District Judge has applied Article 131 of the Limitation Act as he states that "there must have been a refusal" (by the defendant to pay the Thunduwaram to the Mirasidar) " prior to 1878. ". The learned Judge then on this sole ground of the Government's disinclination in 1878 to recognize the custom in favour of the Mirasidar considered that he would be legally justified in finding that " there must have been a refusal " (by the defendant) " prior to 1878." We think that such a finding must be treated as one based on no legal evidence and cannot be accepted. The recent Full Bench decision in Seshachala Chetty v. Para Chinnasami (1) does not deal directly with the Mirasidar's right to Thunduwaram (the question directly in issue in that case being the Mirasidar's alleged right to eject occupiers of Nattam Poramboke land sites held under Pattahs). There are, however, passages in two of the judgments in that case which relate to Thunduvaram and which are entitled to great respect. We, therefore, refer to them. Mr. Justice Ayling says " there are undoubtedly certain incidents, which have been claimed as attaching to it " (the Mirasi tenure) " from ancient times and have to some extent been recognised, " one of such incidents being " the right to certain fees (Thunduwaram) on lands granted for cultivation to non-Mirasi cultivators (Payakaris) by the Government." Then the learned Judge says that this right also requires to be separately established by the Mirasidar and that he ought to adduce proof of the existence of the custom to pay such dues, and he refers to Sakkaji Rau v Latchmana Goundan (2). Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri refers to the opinion of the Collector of Chingleput in 1839 which admitted the Mirasidar's right to collect Thunduwaram, Swatantrams, etc., in the Sheikal lands. In another place the learned Judge quotes the opinion of the Board of Revenue in 1892 as follows :— " Briefly, the system, as it at present exists, rests on the claims of the Mirasidars to all the waste lands in their villages and to the levy of Swathanatram or fees from Payakarees or non-Mirasidars who may take up land for cultivation. This claim was fully recognised in the new settlement carried out in 1876—78 (Vide, Government Order dated 15th February 1876, No. 221) and after full consultation with the Mirasidars, a memorial fee (Swatantram), fixed at an average rate of 2 annas on every rupee of Government assessment, was declared to be leviable by the Mirasidars not only on every field lying waste in each village, but also on all lands now held by the Mirasidars themselves and included in their Pattas, should such land be subsequently relinquished and taken up by a non-Mirasidar. The fee claimable on each field, was duly entered in the settlement registers against every field liable to it. The only lands against which fees were not entered, were those which had already been obtained by strangers and which were held under lease or Patta from Government. " Then the learned Judge refers to the Government Orders passed on the 19th October 1903 about Swatantrams as follows :—"The right of the Mirasidars to levy a fee at the rate of 2 annas in the rupee of the assessment of both dry and wet lands, has been recognised by Government except in the case of the undermentioned fields which are free of Swatantrams so long as they are held under the terms of the original grants". Next the learned Judge referred to Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Goundan (2) in which it was held that "where the right was denied there should be enquiry whether by custom it prevails on the estate or if there are not sufficient instances on the estate to afford grounds for a decision, on similar estates in the neighbourhood. "

In the result, following the decision in Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Goundan (2) which was recognised as good law by the Judges who decided the above Full Bench case, we hold that where (as in this case) the tenant denies the right of the Mirasidar to Thunduwaram, the burden of proof is on the Mirasidar to prove the existence in himself of the right by establishing a custom to pay such dues.

Now the learned District Judge in considering the evidence in this case as to custom has fallen into several material errors. He thinks that documents relating to other than the plaint lands which establish the claim of the Mirasidar to Thunduwaram, are not of much value. But the decision in Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Goundan (2) which states that evidence even as to neighbouring villages and estates is admissible, is clearly against the District Judge's view. Then he seems to think that Exhibits H, E and K do not relate to plaint lands, but it has been shown that they do relate to some of the lands against which no Swatantram is shown as due in Exhibit J. It is contended for the respondent that the lands to which those documents refer, were waste lands granted by Government after the year 1878 when an arrangement was made between the Collector and the Mirasidars by virtue of which they were to be allowed Swatantrams on such lands in consideration of their waiving their claim in respect of lands already granted by Government and lands taken up by the Mirasidars themselves and abandoned. This may or may not be so but we are at present only concerned with the question how these documents have been dealt with by the District Judge and there is no doubt that he has fallen into an error of fact. Then he thinks that the omission in the documents Exhibits III to V (b) and VII to VIII (b) of any reference to Thunduwaram, is strong evidence in the defendant's favour. Most of them are, however, sale-deeds and it is not usual or necessary in such deeds to insert a recital that a purchaser should thereafter pay the Theervai or Thunduwaram payable on the lands sold. It is the duty of the purchaser to do so, whether it is mentioned in the sale deed or not. The District Judge has declined to give any weight to old documents on the ground that it is admitted that Mirasidars had many more privileges in the old days. (Vide, paragraph 5). This method of dealing with a question of custom is not correct. The evidence covering the whole period must be examined. It may be that the earlier evidence is not sufficient to establish the custom: it may be that it is sufficient but that later evidence establishes a discontinuance—all these aspects must be considered, which admittedly has not been done in this case. The agreement, Exhibit B, again, is brushed aside by the District Judge as a document executed without consideration. If, of course, we assume that the Mirasidar has no right to Thunduwaram, Exhibit B was executed without consideration. But that is the very point in issue. Anyhow, Exhibit B is a clear acknowledgment by the tenant of the Mirasidar's right to Thunduwaram and must be given whatever consideration it is worthy of, in arriving at a conclusion on the question of the Mirasidar's right by custom to claim Thunduwaram. The Diglot Register Exhibit VII read with Mr. Puckle's report and the subsequent conduct of the Mirasidar in not claiming Thunduwaram for 16 years before 1905, may afford evidence that the Mirasidar had no right by custom to claim Thunduwaram on waste lands which he had not been cultivating and which had been granted as waste by Government to outside Payakaree tenants and it can even afford evidence that he abandoned his customary right so far as those lands are concerned. But as regards those lands in respect of which the right to Thunduwaram is recognised in the Diglot Register itself, it is for the defendant to prove that the Mirasidar has abandoned such customary rights and mere non-receipt of the dues will afford very weak evidence of such abandonment. There are other matters in which the judgment is unsatisfactory, notably the statement in paragraph 4, line 35 that the defence witnesses deny payment of Thunduwaram. This is not correct. They admit payment but seek to explain it away.

(1) 40 Ind. Cas. 909; 40 M. 410; 32 M L. J. Sup 1.
(2) 2 M. 149; 4 Ind. Jur. 560; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 375.

We cannot accept findings based on incorrect tests as to custom and mistakes of fact as to the effect of documents. We, therefore, send back the records to the District Judge for fresh findings on issues Nos. 1 and 2 with reference to the above observations and for findings on the 3rd and 4th issues. The time for submission of findings will be four weeks from the receipt of records and 10 days for objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the District Judge of Chingleput, submitted the following

FINDINGS.

The High Court has called for findings on issues Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4.

2. This was a suit to recover arrears of Thunduwaram or Mirasi perquisites alleged to be due to the plaintiff from the defendant, a Ryot of Chittamur village.

3. Chittamur is a Government village in Madurantakam Taluk. It is undoubtedly a Mirasi village and it is not disputed that the plaintiff is the sole Mirasidar.

4. The plaintiff bases his right, (1) on custom, and (2) on Exhibit B, an agreement alleged to have been executed by the defendant in his favour in 1905. In his written statement the defendant denied the plaintiff's right. As laid down in Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Goundan(2) and the remand order of the High Court in the present case, the main question for consideration is, whether by custom prevailing in the village, the plaintiff is entitled to Thunduwaram. The defendant's holding consists of A and B schedule lands attached to the plaint, the former being wet lands and the latter dry. As regards the wet lands, in the settlement register, Exhibit J, no Swatantram fee is entered, but in respect of the first seven fields, viz., Nos. 5, 6, 20, 22, 24, 45, 48 and 129 in B Schedule, it is entered and against No. 114 B the remark is, no Swatantram is due until resigned.

5. The earliest documents filed in the suit are Exhibits L and L (1) of the year 1826. There was litigation between the plaintiff's grandfather and one Nagammal and her son. The question of Mirasi right was not directly involved in it. The parties compromised the matter, Exhibit L (1) being a copy of the compromise petition. The then defendants executed an agreement, Exhibit C, in pursuance of the compromise. These documents are relied upon on behalf of the plaintiff as showing that the plaintiff's predecessor's title to collect Thunduwaram and other Mirasi dues was recognised. It has to be observed that the dispute was not between the Mirasidar and Sukhavasi Ryots and that the question of the right to collect Mirasi dues, was not formally adjudicated upon by the Court. The next set of documents relied upon by the plaintiff are Exhibit C series, C (1) to C (15). Exhibit C (1) purports to be an agreement of the year 1829 executed by Ulkudi Sukhavasis and Parakudi Sukhavasis recognising the Mirasi right of the plaintiff's grandfather and undertaking to pay Mirasi dues to him. The District Munsif suspected the genuineness of this document. The writing looks too fresh to be as old as it purports to be. Some of the other documents in the Exhibit C series purport to be debt bonds for arrears of village Adaya income and there is no reference to Thundu or Thunduwaram in them. The rest, however, are debt bonds for arrears of Thunduwaram. Exhibits C series were not filed in the suit of 1905 which was brought by the defendant against the plaintiff. Further Exhibit C (1) refers to lands leased by the Mirasidar, and with regard to the other documents, which refer to Thunduwaram, it is not stated to what lands they refer and it is possible that they also refer only to lands leased by the Mirasidar. The practice in the case of such lands cannot be invoked in proof of a customary right to Mirasi dues from tenants introduced by the Government. Exhibits F and G have next to be considered. Exhibit F was a joint statement prepared by the then Kurnam and the agent of the plaintiff's grandfather at the time of the settlement in 1878. Having regard to the fact that the Government did not act upon it, as is clear from the settlement register, not much importance can be attached to it. As regards Exhibit G, which is a copy of the shares of the Mirasidars, it has to be observed that it is not signed by any one and it does not convey any information as to what lands are included in it and it is, therefore, doubtful whether it included also lands not included in the Mirasidar's patta.

6. The next set of documents relied upon by the plaintiff are Exhibits E, H and K. Exhibit E is a mortgage of the year 1887 in favour of the defendant. The mortgagee is therein directed to pay the Government Tirvai and Tundu. According to the plaintiff, Tundu mentioned therein, refers to Thunduwaram due to the Mirasidar. Exhibit H is a mortgage deed of the year 1885 in favour of one Narayana Chetty. The mortgagee was therein directed to pay Circar Tirvai and village Tundu and there is a reference to the existence of arrears of Thunduwaram to the villagers (Gramattar). Exhibit K is also a mortgage deed in favour of the defendant wherein the mortgagee was directed to pay Tirvai and Tundu. The lands referred to in Exhibits H and K are 177 (B) and 137 (E), and 245 respectively, and in the settlement register no Swatantram fee is entered against them. This certainly indicates that the Mirasidar has a right to Thunduwaram even on lands against which no Swatantram fee is entered in the settlement register. On behalf of the defendant, it is urged that Exhibits E, H and K are not sufficient to prove a general custom, especially as they relate only to a small extent of land. I think, there is considerable force in this argument.

7. Next we come to recent documents Exhibits B and D series. Exhibit B is an agreement taken from the defendant himself in 1905. Exhibit D series are similar agreements taken from other tenants and attested by the defendant. I do not think any importance should be attached to these documents as they are recent.

8. Coming to the documents filed on behalf of the defendant, reliance is placed on Exhibit X, the partition deed in the plaintiff's family in which no reference is made to Mirasi dues. I do not think any inference can be drawn from the omission of Mirasi dues in this document. The other documents relied upon are sale-deeds and mortgage deeds, Exhibits III to VIII series, in which no reference is made to the payment of Tundu by the purchaser or the mortgagee. It is urged on behalf of the defendant that the omission, though not a conclusive piece of evidence, suggests that there is no such general custom as is set up by the plaintiff.

9. The plaintiff has examined nine witnesses including himself. When giving evidence in the suit of 1905, he stated he had no personal knowledge of the estate prior to 3 years when he entered upon it, but now he says he saw Thunduwaram being collected by his predecessor. He admits he has not collected Thunduwaram from any one. He does not produce any account regarding payment of Tundu kept by his predecessor. P. W. No. 2 was Kurnam at the time of settlement. He speaks to Exhibits F and G. His evidence is that Tundu was being paid to Muttu-rama Reddi, a former Mirasidar by Sukhavasi Pattadars. He says he saw a collection account of Thunduwaram which is not now produced. He gives instances of persons holding Sukhavasi Patta lands, not paying Thudunwaram. He is now plaintiff's Gumas-tah and cultivates a land under him. He admits he was dismissed from the office of Kurnam, though he says he was restored on appeal. He also admits having given evidence in a dacoity case against the defendant. P. W. No. 3 says he was Gumastah under the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title, Muthurama Reddi. He merely says that there is a custom to pay Thunduwaram to the Mirasidar. According to him there was no account for the collection of Thundu-waram. P. W. No. 4 says that he holds lands in Chittamur and that he used to pay Thunduwaram. He states that he pays it even to the plaintiff. It will be re-membered that the plaintiff himself says that he has not collected Thunduwaram. Later on, in his deposition he admits that since the plaintiff's advent no collection has been made. He cannot say who else paid Tundu. He admits he gave evidence against the defendant in a criminal case. P. W. No. 5 says he used to pay Thundu-waram and obtained receipts. In cross-examination he says he does not know who paid Tundu for wet lands. P. W. No. 6 is an Inamdar and is connected with Nagammal referred to in Exhibits L and L (1). He says he used to see some ten-ants pay grain to the Mirasidars of the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title. He cannot give details. When giving evidence in the suit of 1905, he said he could not give the names of persons who paid Thunduwaram. He admits that in respect of certain lands which were transferred to himself he does not pay Tundu. According to him the practice of paying Thunduwaram has not been in existence for about 16 years past. P. W. No. 7 in chief examination says that there is a custom for Sukhavasi tenants to pay Tundu to the Mirasidar, but in cross-examination he states that it became dis-continued 12 or 15 years ago. His master is the plaintiff's brother-in-law. P. W. No. 8 has no land at Chittamur and yet says he used to see collections of Tundu some 15 years ago. He cannot mention any one who paid it. P. W. No. 9 gives similar evidence. He admits that a con-tribution used to be made by the villagers for the temple of the village goddess. From the above oral evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff, it is clear that Thunduwaram has not been collected for many years past and that, according to some of them, the practice was discontinued.

10. The defence witnesses Nos. 1 to 6 say that no Tunduwaram was ever collected. They have attempted to make out that the contribution to the festival of a village goddess is called Tundu, but it cannot be said that they have succeeded. The defendant tries to explain Exhibits E and H by saying that the Tundu referred to therein was a contribution to a temple and not the Mirasi perquisite known as Tundu.

11. For the defendant, much stress is laid on the Settlement Register, Exhibit J. It is urged that the distinction between pangu lands, durkhast land and waste lands should be borne in mind, and that what we have to consider is how far did the Government recognise the custom set up by the plaintiff. Though the Government cannot take away any pre-existing rights enjoyed by the Mirasidar, the fact that it recognised them only to a certain extent, cannot altogether be ignored. The plaintiff has to show not merely that the perquisites which he claims were paid at some former period of time, but also that he can enforce their payment now. The settlement register is, therefore, an important piece of evidence. The learned Vakil who appears for the defendant relies upon the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Secretary of State for India v. Bai Rajbai (3) and refers to page 29 of the recent Full Bench decision* on Mirasi tenure: "What we have to consider is whether this power to evict under the circumstances contemplated by the reference is an incident of Mirasi and whether it has been recognised by the Government. That the latter is a necessary condition of enforceability has been laid in the most stringent terms by their Lordships of the Privy Council, etc." The learned Vakil for the plaintiff points out that the above decision of the Privy Council applies only to the state of things that prevailed when the British Government first assumed sovereignty and not to any subsequent period. He further urges that the Government at first fully recognised the rights of Mirasidars and only gradually began to curtail them. In my opinion the settlement register must be regarded as a Record of Rights showing how far the Government was prepared to recognise the claims of the Mirasidar. The Ryots knowing as they did that there was a conflict between the Mirasidar and the Government would have naturally refrained from paying all the dues claimed by the Mirasidar. The settlement register coupled with the oral evidence shows that there was interruption in the enjoyment of the Mirasidar's right to Thunduwaram. It is urged on behalf of the plaintiff that the burden lies on the defendant to show that the Mirasidar abandoned his right. The explanation offered on behalf of the plaintiff for the discontinuance or interruption of his right is that the plaintiff's predecessor was a woman and her agents failed to collect the Mirasi dues. This explanation cannot be accepted, for the evidence shows that the payment ceased to be made even earlier when males were in possession of the estate. No doubt when a custom has been proved to exist, any subsequent interruption cannot by itself extinguish it, but if the interruption is not due to natural or incidental causes, a presumption arises against the existence of the custom itself. In the present case, in my opinion, Exhibits E, H and K are the only instances which may be said to afford evidence of the custom set up by the plaintiff. There is no evidence that the Mirasidar has attempted to enforce his right in a Court of law during all these years. Under these circumstances the interruption raises a presumption against the existence of the custom.

12. I, therefore, hold that the plaintiff is not entitled by custom to collect Thunduwaram and this applies even to the lands in the B Schedule some of which are liable to Swatantram fees according to the settlement register, and I find accordingly on issue (2).

13. Issue (1).—Whether the plaint agreement bears no consideration. Exhibit B is the plaint agreement. The defendant brought a suit in 1905 to declare that it was not genuine. Both the Court of first instance and the Appellate Court found it to be genuine. The consideration for it is said to be the pre existing liability of the defendant to pay Thunduwaram. In the view I have taken, I hold that there was no consideration for it, and find accordingly.

(3) 30 Ind Cas. 303; (1915) M. W. N. 563; 19 C. W. N. 1087; 13 A. L. J. 953; 29 M. L. J. 242; 18 M. L. T. 179; 2 L. W 731; 17 Bom L. R. 730; 39 B 625; 23 C. L. J. 1; 42 I. A. 229 (P. C.).

14. Issue (3).—Whether the plaintiff's right to the dues became barred by limitation to any and to what extent. The contention raised on behalf of the plaintiff is that the plaint claim is not one for rent but for a customary due and that the article of the Limitation Act which applies to it is Article 120. On behalf of the defendant it is urged that Thunduwaram is in the nature of rent as the Mirasidar is a middleman between the tenant and the Government. The plaintiff relies on the observations in the remand judgment in the present case. Following Venkatavaraga v. District Board of Tanjore (4) and Rathna Mudaliar v. Tiruvenkata Chariar (5), I hold that it is not rent but a customary due. I find that the article applicable is 120 of the Limitation Act, and, therefore, the suit is not barred by limitation.

15. Issue (4).—What sum, if any, is due to the plaintiff? If it is held that the plaintiff is entitled to Tundu, I hold that, according to Exhibits B and D, he is entitled to it at 15 Marakals per Cawni of wet for the 1st crop $7\frac{1}{2}$ Marakals for the 2nd crop, and $3\frac{1}{2}$ annas per Cawni of dry land and that he is not bound to collect only at the rate of 2 annas in the rupee as laid down in the settlement register. I find accordingly on issue No. 4.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on 3rd May 1917 and on 7th August 1917, after the return of the findings of the lower Appellate Court upon the issues referred to by this Court for trial, upon perusing the grounds of appeal, the judgments and decrees of the lower Appellate Court and the Court of first instance, the findings of the lower Appellate Court upon the said issues and the memoranda of objections to the said findings, and upon hearing the arguments of Messrs. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar and D. V. Nilameghachariar, for the Appellant, and of Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Respondent, and the case having stood over for consideration till the 15th August 1917, the Court (Sadasiva Aiyar and Phillips, JJ.) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The plaintiff is the appellant. This litigation commenced in December 1909 (nearly 8 years ago) but I have felt it advisable that the whole matter of this second appeal should be referred to a Full Bench as some questions of law of more than ordinary importance are involved in its decision. Without expressing a final opinion on any of the questions involved or as to what should be the final result of the second appeal, I shall set out the material questions of fact and law making provisional comments here and there.

The suit was brought for recovery of Rs. 168 11-3 being the amount of Thunduwaram perquisites due to the plaintiff as Ekaboga Mirasidar of Chittamur village (in the Madurantakam Taluk, Chingleput District) from the defendant who is a Ryot in the village, the Thunduwaram being claimed at 15 Marakals per Cawni of wet land for the first crop, $7\frac{1}{2}$ Marakals per Cawni for the second crop and $3\frac{1}{2}$ annas per Cawni of dry land. The Thunduwaram was claimed by the plaintiff by virtue of his Mirasi right over the village and also by reason of an agreement, that is, a registered Muchilika, dated 26th January 1905, Exhibit B, executed by the defendant. The District Munsif held, (a) that the Mirasidar's right to collect the plaint perquisites "fell into disuse" about 1870, that "it was too late in the day for him now to seek its enforcement as subsisting right on the basis of the general custom in the village;" (b) that the defendant executed the Muchilika, Exhibit B of 1905, possibly "in order to help the plaintiff in his endeavours to resuscitate the plaintiff's primitive right which had fallen into disruption" and that it was also possible "that the defendant executed a document under a misapprehension as to the exact right of plaintiff to enforce the fee at present" and the District Munsif finally thought that "on the whole there was no legal consideration" for the plaint agreement. He, therefore, dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

On appeal, the learned District Judge (Mr. Booty) held that as in the settlement register (Exhibit J of 1878) it was recorded that "the lands for which Pattas had been given by Government to Payakaris or on Dharkast to Mirasidars were exempted from Swatantram fees" and as the plaintiff had failed to prove that the plaint lands fell under the category of lands other than those exempted from Swatantram fees according to that settlement register and as the defendant had probably refused prior to 1878 to pay Thunduwaram to the Mirasidar on the strength of the statement in the settlement register, "the Mirasidars' right was dead by limitation in 1890." He further held that the Muchilika, Exhibit B of 1905, had absolutely no consideration to support it. He, therefore, dismissed the appeal.

When this second appeal first came on for hearing on the 17th December 1914 before a Divisional Bench of this Court, it was adjourned sine die for the decision of the Full Bench to which the general question of Mirasidars' rights were referred in Seshachala Chetty v. Para Chinnasami (1). The opinions of the Full Bench in that case were pronounced on the 17th February 1916 and they are reported as Seshachala Chetty v. Para Chinnasami (1) (see from page 447*). The present second appeal then came on for hearing before myself and Mr. Justice Napier in September 1916. We found ourselves unable to accept the finding of the District Judge "that the plaintiff's claim to obtain Thunduwaram" (a part of the Mirasidar's Swatantram) "became barred in 1890." Then as regards the right of the Mirasidar to collect Thunduwaram, I shall here quote from my above order of the 20th September 1916 concurred in by Mr. Justice Napier. "Mr Justice Ayling [in Seshachala Chetty v. Para Chinnasami (1)] says: 'There are undoubtedly certain incidents, which have been claimed as attaching to it' (the Mirasi tenure) 'from ancient times and have to some extent been recognised,' one of such incidents being, 'the right to certain fees (Thunduwaram) on lands granted for cultivation to non-Mirasi cultivators (Payakaris) by the Government.' Then the learned Judge says that this right also requires to be separately established by the Mirasidar and that he ought to adduce proof of the existence of the custom to pay such dues, and he refers to Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Goundan (2). Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri refers to the opinion of the Collector of Chingleput in 1839 which admitted the Mirasidar's right to collect Thunduwaram, Swatantrams, etc., in the Sheikal lands. In another place, the learned Judge quotes the opinion of the Board of Revenue in 1892 as follows:—'Briefly the system, as it at present exists, rests on the claims of the Mirasidars to all the waste lands in their villages and to the levy of Swatantram or fees from Payakarees or non-Mirasidars who may take up land for cultivation. This claim was fully recognised in the new settlement carried out in 1876-78 (Vide Government Order, dated 15th February 1876, No. 221) and after full consultation with the Mirasidars, a memorial fee (Swatantram), fixed at an average rate of 2 annas on every rupee of Government assessment, was declared to be leviable by the Mirasidars not only on every field lying waste in each village, but also on all lands now held by the Mirasidars themselves and included in their Pattas, should such lands be subsequently relinquished and taken up by a non-Mirasidar. The fee claimable on each field was duly entered in the settlement registers against every field liable to it. The only lands against which fees were not entered were those which had already been obtained by strangers and which were held under lease or Patta from Government.' Then the learned Judge refers to the Government Orders passed on the 19th October 1909 about Swatantrams as follows:—'The right of the Mirasidar to levy a fee at the rate of 2 annas in the rupee of the assessment of both dry and wet lands, has been recognised by Government except in the case of the undermentioned fields which are free of Swatantrams so long as they are held under the terms of the original grants.' Next he refers to Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Goundan (2) in which it was held that 'where the right was denied, there should be enquiry whether, by custom, it prevails on the estate or if there are not sufficient instances on the estate to afford grounds for a decision, on similar estates in the neighbourhood.' In the result, following the decision in Sukkaji Rau v. Latchmana Goundan (2) which was recognised as good law by the Judges who decided the above Full Bench case, we hold that where (as in this case) the tenant denies the right of the Mirasidar to Thunduwaram, the burden of proof is on the Mirasidar to prove the existence in himself of the right by establishing a custom to pay such dues."

After thus indicating our opinion that the custom of paying Thunduwaram when set up by the Mirasidar is one to be proved by the Mirasidar by adducing proofs of instances of levy of such fees in his own estate and similar estates in the neighbourhood, we sent back the record to the District Court for fresh findings on issues Nos. 1 and 2, pointing out some of the errors which, in our opinion, occurred in the judgment of the District Judge. The issues Nos. 1 and 2 are as follows:—

(1) "Whether the plaint agreement, Exhibit B, bears no consideration?

(2) Whether the plaintiff is entitled to the dues claimed, even apart from the agreement?"

On remand, the case was heard in the District Court by another District Judge (Mr. Venugopala Chetty) and he recorded findings against the plaintiff, his material conclusions being as follows:—

(a) In the settlement register, Exhibit J of 1878, Swatanteam fee due to the Mirasidar is entered only in respect of some fields, namely, Nos. 5, 6, 20, 22, 24, 46, 48 and 129 in the plaint B schedule (which relates to dry lands in defendant's Patta). Against No. 114 B in that same schedule, the remark in the settlement register is that no Swatantram is due until the land was relinquished, that is, until it was given up by the then Pattadar and taken up by another. Against the wet lands in the A schedule, no Swatantram fee is entered in the appropriate column as due to the Mirasidar. "The settlement register must be regarded as a Record of Rights showing how far the Government was prepared to recognise the claims of the Mirasidars." "The Ryots knowing as they did that there was a conflict between the Mirasidar and the Government, would have naturally refrained from paying all the dues claimed by the Mirasidar. The settlement register coupled with the oral evidence shows that there was interruption in the enjoyment of the Mirasidar's right to Thunduwaram. There is no evidence that the Mirasidar has attempted to enforce his right in a Court of law during all these years. Under these circumstances, the interruption raises a presumption against the existence of the custom."

(b) Exhibits L and L1 of the year 1826 relate to litigation between the plaintiff's grandfather and certain Maniamdars (not Sukhavasi tenants). Though the plaintiff's predecessor's right to collect Thunduwaram and other Mirasi dues was recognised therein, the dispute there was not between the Mirasidar and the Sukhavasi Ryots and the question of the right to collect Mirasi dues was not formally adjudicated upon by the Court. (Though the District Judge does not expressly say that these ancient documents of 1826 are, therefore, not of much value, he evidently means to suggest it).

(c) The documents Exhibits C2 to C15 beginning with 1864 are debt bonds executed to the Mirasidar by Sukhavasi tenants. Some of them are for arrears of village Adaya income and others expressly state that they are debt bonds for arrears of Thunduwaram. "It is possible that they refer only to lands leased by the Mirasidar." "The practice in the case of such lands cannot be invoked in proof of a customary right to Mirasi dues from tenants introduced by the Government." (The reasoning in this part of the learned District Judge's judgment is not quite clear, but he evidently means that as the settlement register, Exhibit J, does not mention the Swatantram fees with reference to most of the plaint lands, the defendant's predecessor-in-title must be deemed to have been a tenant introduced to those lands by the Government and a customary right to collect Mirasi dues from such lands can only be proved by evidence of payment made specifically for such lands).

(d) As regards Exhibits F and G, Exhibit F was a statement prepared by the then Kurnam and the agent of the plaintiff's grandfather at the time of the settlement in 1878. Having regard to the fact that the Government did not act upon it as is clear from the settlement register, Exhibit J, not much importance can be attached to it. As regards Exhibit G, it is not signed by any one and does not convey any information as to what lands are included in it and it is, therefore, doubtful whether it included also lands not included in the Mirasidar's patta (that is, lands for which Government issued Pattas directly to the tenants).

(e) Exhibits E, H and K, (two of them executed to the defendant himself) no doubt refer to the right of the Mirasidar to receive Melwaram Thundu from certain lands in the village. They are of the years 1885, 1887, and 1889, long after the settlement register, and though in the settlement register, Exhibit J. Swatantram is not entered against the lands mentioned in these mortgage deeds, the right of the Mirasidar is acknowledged in these documents. The District Judge, however, held that there was "considerable force in the defendant's argument that these documents are not sufficient to prove a general custom, especially as they relate only to a small exent of the lands."

(f) As regards B and D series, Exhibit B being the plaint agreement executed by the defendant himself in 1905 and the other Exhibits agreements taken from other tenants, though attested by the defendant himself, the District Judge thinks that no importance should be attached to these documents of 1905 as they were "recent".

(g) Then the District Judge refers to some document on defendant's side on which it was argued that the omission to expressly mention Thunduwaram in those documents was against the plaintiff's claim and to the fact that no Thunduwaram has been collected for several years before suit. (The question whether Exhibit B was supported by consideration or not, is so closely interwoven with the question whether the Mirasidar has a right by custom to recover Thunduwaram that it might be said to stand or fall with it. As regards the rate of the Thunduwaram, the District Judge decided that if the plaintiff was entitled to it at all, he was entitled at the rates claimed by him).

Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar, the learned Vakil for the appellant, strenuously contended (a) that he was entitled to argue on the whole evidence adduced as to custom just as if it were a question of fact the finding on which might be attacked in a regular appeal preferred to this Court, (b) that even if he was bound to accept particular facts and pieces of evidence which the lower Court held to be not established or false as conclusive, he was entitled to argue that on the facts held to be established and the pieces of evidence accepted as genuine by the District Judge, the District Judge ought to have found as a matter of law that the custom set up by the plaintiff was established; (c) that the learned District Judge was mistaken in his statement that Exhibit G is not signed by any one, and (d) that he was not justified in making a distinction between the right to collect Mirasi dues from tenants introduced by the Government and tenants introduced by the Mirasidar and in rejecting the evidence indicating the collection of Thunduwaram on the mere ground that it was not specifically shown that that evidence related to the former class of lands.

I shall deal now with the first question, namely, that as this second appeal relates to a question of custom, we are entitled to consider the whole evidence ourselves including the evidence which was not believed by the District Judge to be true or genuine. As I said in the very beginning, I do not intend to deal finally with any of these questions as I have considered it advisable that the whole case should be decided by a larger Bench.

In Kakarla Abbayya v. Raja Venkata Papayya Rao (6) Sir S. Subramania Aiyar, Officiating Chief Justice, and Boddam, J., refer to Hanumantamma v. Rami Reddi (7), Mirabivi v. Vellayanna (8) and Vishnu v. Krishnan (9) (the last of which was decided by a Full Bench) as establishing that a finding as to the non-existence of an alleged local custom could be revised by the High Court on second appeal on the evidence. They then refer to the language of section 584 of the old Civil Procedure Code, [corresponding to the present section 100 (a)] which contains the words "the decision being contrary to (some specified) law or usage having the force of law." The learned Judges then continue: "This language is so explicit as to render superfluous the seeking for the reason of the provision though that is not difficult to discover, viz., that a usage of the kind mentioned, being in its nature such as must necessarily affect, not only parties to the particular litigation and their privies, but whole bodies of people, stands on a footing similar to a matter of law derived from other sources than usage. The very limited scope which is allowed to usages in England, due to special historical causes (See Pollock and Maitland's History of English Law, 1st Edition, Vol. 1, page 163), accounts for questions as to their existence being treated as falling under the category of questions for the Jury. Of course, it is otherwise in this country where from the days of Manu it has been laid down that 'custom is transcendent law.' It is clear, therefore, both upon authority which is binding upon us as the opinion of a Full Bench, and as the right interpretation of the provision in question of section 584 of the Civil Procedure Code, that, though the section disallows a second appeal with reference to findings of fact, yet, the existence or non-existence of a usage having the force of law is unaffected by such disallowance. Consequently, it is the duty of this Court, when it has to pronounce upon that question, to examine the evidence bearing upon it, not only as to the sufficiency thereof to establish all the elements (antiquity, uniformity, etc.,) required to constitute a valid usage having the force of law, but also the credibility, of the evidence relied on and the weight due to it. Accordingly we heard Mr. Rangachariar upon the evidence in support of the alleged usage." Thus according to this decision even the credibility of pieces of evidence adduced in support of local usage can be considered by the High Court on second appeal. In Mahamad Meeran Bibi v. Mahamed Rowther (10) Spencer and Phillips, JJ., have held that the question whether the parties in a suit are governed by the Hindu or Muhammadan Law, is a question of fact and does not relate to any usage having the force of law. The parties in that case were Muhammadan Labbais of the Trichinopoly District. It seems to me fairly arguable with the greatest respect to the above decision, that the question whether the local usage among these Labbais had the force of a law which made their rights of succession governed by the rules of Hindu Law, comes under section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure though the rules of both the Hindu and Muhammadan Laws always have the force of law. [The learned Judges refer to a prior decision in Kunhambi v. Kalanathar (11) decided by Tyabji and Spencer, JJ.] The most recent case which I have come across in this Court (decided in November 1916 is that reported as Pankajammal v. Secretary of State for India (12), by Ayling and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ. That related to the custom as to the order of succession of trustees of a particular Kattalai in the Conjeevaram temple. The following observations occur: "Before we send the case down, it is desirable to advert to the extreme contention that was put forward in this Court that in all cases where evidence as to custom has been let in, we are bound to weigh such evidence and decide for ourselves upon the materials. Mr. Ramachandrier, who came in at a later stage of the case, conceded that this contention is not supported by authority. The learned Vakil argued that the question, whether on the facts as found, the Courts below were justified in saying that a custom has not been proved, is a point on which the High Court is entitled to draw its own inference. To the proposition thus advanced, we see no objection. But we must point out that the value to be attached to the evidence let in, its reliability and, in a measure, its relevancy are all matters for the Court below and that the High Court would not be justified in weighing the evidence, as if it were sitting to hear a first appeal. It is open to doubt whether the expression, 'a usage having the force of law' in section 100 (a) of the Civil Procedure Code, should not be confined to the usages of the country or of the community as suggested by Petheram, C. J., in Nirath Singh v. Bhikki Singh (13). Customs like pre-emption, the law merchant and usages like those referred to in section 11 of Act VIII of 1865, seem to have been in the contemplation of the Legislature. It seems doubtful whether a private right, like the one we are considering, falls within section 100, clause (a). However that may be, we feel no doubt that the High Court should not be called upon to examine the oral and documentary evidence relating to a private custom as if it were hearing a first appeal." I must, however, say that the decision of this Court in Kakarla Abbayya v. Raja Venkata Papayya Rao (6), following the Full Bench decision in Vishnu v. Krishnan (9), is not adverted to by the learned Judges who refer to the case in Nivath Singh v. Bhikki Singh (13), which seems to have never been followed in this Court as law. I shall now refer to a very recent decision of the Privy Council in Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Deivasikamony Pandara Snnadhi (14). There a custom of granting permanent leases of the property of a particular temple was set up. Their Lordships of the Privy Council say at page 13*: "It has, however, been pressed on behalf of the appellants that there are two findings: one by the Munsif and one by the Subordinate Judge, who agrees with him, that the ancient custom relied upon has been proved, and that, as that is an issue of fact, it must be accepted. No doubt, two findings upon questions of pure fact must be accepted by this Board, but questions of the existence of an ancient custom are generally questions of mixed law and fact; the Judge first finding what were the things actually done in alleged pursuance of custom, and then determining whether these facts so found satisfy the requirements of the law. This latter is a question of law—not fact." I think that this case gives to the expression "local usage" a much wider meaning than Sir C. Petheram, C. J., was inclined to allow in the case of Nivath Singh v. Bhikki Singh (13). I shall now turn to the case of Kailas Chandra Dutta v. Padma Kishore Roy (15), decided in April 1917. Here Mookerjee, J., reviews the authorities, dissents from Kakarla Abbayya v. Raja Venkata Papayya Rao (6), and Vishnu v. Krishnan (9), and sums up as follows: "But this does not entitle the High Court in second appeal to determine whether the evidence of the existence of the alleged usage is or is not credible, though the High Court is competent to determine, whether the usage, proved by evidence to exist, does or does not possess the force of law..... The substance of the matter is that while the question whether a given state of facts establishes a binding custom or usage is a question of law, the question whether such a state of facts has been proved by the evidence is a question of fact." In this conflict of authorities, in view of the facts that Vishnu v. Krishnan (9), was decided by a Full Bench of this Court consisting of four very learned Judges (Turner, C. J., Innes J., Kindersley, J., and Muthusami Aiyar, J.) and was followed in Kakarla Abbayya v. Raja Venkata Papayya Rao (6), and having in view the fact that this question of Mirasi rights is reaching its final stage, I think that not only the mere questions of law, (namely, whether the High Court in second appeal can go into the credibility of the evidence, whether it can consider the weight to be given to the evidence which is believed by the lower Appellate Court and whether the evidence taken as a whole is legally sufficient to establish the custom and the legality and binding force as law of the custom, etc.,) but even the decision of the whole matter might be left to a larger Bench.

The Appellate Side Rules of the High Court, page 3, rule 2, says: "The following matters shall ordinarily be heard and decided by two Judges," and then among the matters are mentioned "appeals from the decree of a Civil Court" which I take it, includes a second appeal. So, a second appeal is treated as one of the "matters" to be heard by a Bench of two Judges. Then it says "provided both Judges agree that the determination involves a question of law, they may order that the matter, or the question of law, be referred to a Full Bench." I think that this empowers us to refer not only a question of law but the whole "matter" of the second appeal to a Full Bench. If a question of law alone is referred, then rule 3 (page 4) would apply and the "matter" (or the case) would ultimately come back to us.

I have thus dealt with the contentions (a) and (b) of Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar. As regards contention (c) about the learned District Judge's alleged mistake in his statement that Exhibit G is not signed by any one, Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar has not printed the whole of Exhibit G and I think it is better to leave it to the Full Bench to decide whether they would allow him to have it printed in order to prove his contention.

As regards the last contention (d), I think there is much force in his argument that the District Judge ought not to have rejected the evidence afforded by Exhibit C series on the ground that such evidence is valueless unless it was shown to specifically relate to lands granted by Government. I am also inclined to hold that the Government's non-recognition in the settlement register of the Mirasidar's right to collect Swatantrams from such lands cannot be said to detract in any appreciable manner from the weight of the other evidence relating to the Mirasidar's right by custom to collect such dues having regard to the history of the Mirasi tenure rights and to the fact that the Government has been trying to gradually restrict such rights. I might also state that as at present advised (assuming that this Court is entitled to weigh the evidence), I should be inclined to hold that the learned District Judge has not given sufficient weight to Exhibits E, H, K, B and the old legal records Exhibits L and L1. (I would accept the rate of Thunduwaram found by the District Judge if the plaintiff is held entitled to collect Thunduwaram.) I am inclined further to doubt very much the soundness of the view of the District Judge that even as regards the plaint lands, fields Nos. 5, 6, 20, 22, 24, 45, 48 and 129 which are specially mentioned in the settlement register itself as liable to pay Swantantram fee to the Mirasidar, the custom set up should be held to be not proved because the custom is not (in the learned Judge's view) proved as regards the other lands also and because there has been an interruption for several years. However, as I said, I would, having regard to the difficulty and importance of all the questions involved, refer the whole matter to a Full Bench.

PHILLIPS, J.—This suit was remanded for a finding on several issues the most important of which is issue No. 2 "whether the plaintiff is entitled to the dues claimed even apart from the agreement." The dues claimed consist of what is called Thunduwaram, and the plaintiff alleges that, as Mirasidar, he is, according to custom, entitled to levy those dues from the defendant. The District Judge has tried the issue and has found that no custom has been proved to exist under which the plaintiff is entitled to make this claim. This finding is a finding on custom and it is now sought to impeach it upon the evidence.

No doubt, a question of the existence of a custom is a question of mixed law and fact, and under section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a second appeal may lie to the High Court on the ground that the decision is contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law. The question of custom has been repeatedly considered and it has been held that the question of the mere existence of a custom is a question of fact [vide in Hureehur Mookerjee v. Judoonath Ghose (16) and Syud Ali v. Gopal Doss (17)], and this has also been the view of the Judicial Committee in Muhammad Kamil v. Imtiaz Fatima (18) and in Anant Singh v. Durga Singh (19). In Ramratan Sukal v. Nandu (20 it was held by the Judicial Committee that, "no Court of second appeal can entertain an appeal upon any question as to the soundness of findings of fact by the Court of first appeal, and if there is evidence to be considered, the decision of the Court, however unsatisfactory it might be, if examined, must stand final."

In Ramgopal v. Shamskhaton (21) this principle was approved, although it was held that in that particular case, which related to a custom, the facts found need not be questioned, but the soundness of the conclusions from them was in question and that was a matter of law. In Mohesh Chunder Dhal v. Satrughan Dhal (22) it was held that the question of the existence of a custom of lineal primogeniture as the rule of succession was a question of fact. In Kunhambi v. Kalanathar (11) it was held by this Court that "whether an alleged custom can be enforced at all or whether it is uncertain, irregular or unreasonable and as such ought not to be recognised, is a question of law, but the question whether the custom exists and if it exists, it applies to a particular person or set of persons, is a question of fact," and this seems to me to correctly describe the principle laid down by the Judicial Committee in the above cases. In the present case, the question that has to be decided is whether the plaintiff is entitled to collect Thunduwaram from the defendant, the right claimed being based upon an alleged custom. The existence of this custom in certain places has been held to be true and the right has been held to rest in certain Mirasidars as such. The Full Bench decision reported as Sehachala Chetty v. Para Chinnasami (1) has recognised this customary right of levying Thunduwaram but the Court was of opinion that its existence in any particular case was a matter of proof. When, therefore, it is not a question as to whether a certain set of circumstances forms a custom having the force of law, but where the question is whether a custom which has already been recognised by Courts as having the force of law, exists in a particular locality or between particular parties, it seems to be a question of fact, and if the matter were res integra, I should feel inclined to hold that the present finding of the District Judge to which exception has been taken, is a finding of fact with which this Court cannot interfere in second appeal. In Kakarla Abbayya v. Raja Venkata Papayya Rao (6), however, it was held that when the finding was as to an alleged local custom, the finding could be examined in second appeal and a conclusion arrived at. The decision was based upon the decisions in Hanumantamma v. Rami Reddi (7), Vishnu v. Krishnan (9) and Mirabivi v. Vellayanna (8) in all of which cases a question of custom has been considered by this Court in second appeals, but in which the contention had not been put forward that such a question could not be raised in second appeal. In Kakarla Abbayya v. Raja Venkata Papayya Rao (6) this Court went, as it seems to me, considerably further than the dictum laid down by the Privy Council in Ramgopal v. Shamskhaton (21), which was that the facts found need not be questioned but the question of the soundness of the conclusion arrived at, was a matter of law, for it held that where the existence or non existence of a usage having the force of law was in question, "it is the duty of this Court. . . . to examine the evidence bearing upon it, not only as to the sufficiency thereof to establish all the elements (antiquity, uniformity, etc.,) required to constitute a valid usage having the force of law, but also the credibility of the evidence relied on and the weight due to it." If this be accepted as correct law, a Court in second appeal would be bound to examine the whole evidence relating to an alleged custom and to see what weight is to be attached to each particular portion of it, and I decide whether the evidence was reliable and witnesses worthy of credit. This appears to be somewhat inconsistent with the usual understanding that in a finding of fact upon the evidence, the lower Appellate Court's decision is final; and in Kailas Chandra Dutta v. Padma Kishore Roy (15), Kakarla Abhayya v. Raja Venkata Papayya Rao (6) has been expressly dissented from. In a recent case in Pankajammal v. Secretary of State for India (12) another Bench of this Court remarked that the contention put forward that, in all cases where evidence as to custom had been let in, the Court was bound to weigh such evidence and decide upon the materials was not supported by authority, but apparently the decision in Kakarla Abbayya v. Raja Venkata Papayya Rao (6) was overlooked. The learned Judges proceeded to say that the question whether, on the facts as found, the Courts below were justified in saying that the custom had not been proved. was a point on which the High Court was entitled to draw its own inference, and that in accordance with the abovementioned dictum of the Privy Council in Ramgopal v. Shamskhaton (21). In Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Devasikamony Pandara Sannadhi (14), the Judicial Committee also remarked that "questions of the existence of an ancient custom are generally questions of mixed law and fact, the Judge first finding what were the things actually done in alleged pursuance of custom, and then determining whether these facts so found satisfy the requirements of the law. This latter is a question of law—not fact." If we apply this principle to the present case it would appear that the finding that the custom of levying Thunduwaram does not exist as between plaintiff and defendant, is a finding of fact. In view, however, of the decision in Kakarla Abbayya v. Raja Venkata Papayya Rao (6), I agree that it is advisable that the question should be submitted to a Full Bench, and as my learned brother wishes to refer, not an abstract question, but the whole of this case, I concur.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing in accordance with the above Order of Reference, on the 12th of November 1917, upon perusing the grounds of appeal, the judgments and decrees of the lower Appellate Court and the Court of first instance and the material papers in the suit and upon hearing the argument of Counsel on both sides the case having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—As regards the question of law referred to us I am of opinion that the decision in Kakarla Abbayya v. Raja Venkata Papayya Rao (6) must be overruled. In the cases to which Sir Charles Turner was a party the Court no doubt examined the evidence in detail to see if it was sufficient to support the custom, but in no case did they interfere with the findings except in Mirabivi v. Vellayanna (8) and thereafter referring to the findings they observed that the question before them was "whether there is evidence on which such custom could reasonably have been found to exist." They came to the conclusion that the evidence was not reasonably sufficient to support the custom. No question of the limits of the Court's right of interference in second appeal was raised or decided in these cases. As regards Kakarla Abbayya v. Raja Venkata Papayya Rao (6) I am unable with great respect to agree with the observations of Subramania Aiyar, J., as to the effect of the words "usage having the force of law." in that section. This section has a long history going back to the days of the Sudder Court. Act XVI of 1853 gave a special appeal to the Sudder Courts from any decision passed on a regular appeal in any of the Subordinate Civil Courts "1st on the ground that the decision hath failed to determine all material points in difference in the cause, or hath determined the same or any of them contrary to law or usage having the force of law." Under that section, as under this, where one of the material points in the case is the existence of a custom, that, as the Privy Council has recently laid down, is a mixed question of fact and law; and the Sudder Court was only entitled to interfere if the Subordinate Court had determined it "contrary to law or usage having the force of law," and not, also, as in ordinary appeals, on the ground that the Subordinate Court had determined the point contrary to the weight of the evidence The words "usage having the force of law" in the section appear to me to be little more than words of amplification, and in any view not to give the Court any larger powers of interference with findings as to custom in so far as they are findings of fact than with any other findings of fact. This section was re-produced in the successive Codes of Civil Procedure with alterations that in no way affect its scope so far as the present question is concerned. The more recent decisions of Ayling and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ. [Pankayammal v. Secretary of State for India (12),] and of Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ., in Kailas Chandra Dutta v. Padma Kishore Roy (15), where all the cases are exhaustively reviewed, take the same view.

Even so, I am of opinion that the finding of the District Judge that the custom is inapplicable to this estate cannot be accepted. He does not find that there has been in law a discontinuance of the custom, but uses the fact that Swatantrams are not proved to have been paid for a long time as evidence against the existence of the liability. He gives no effect to the record in the settlement register of 1878 that the lands in B schedule were liable to pay Swatantrams. This is a strong instance of the assertion of the right on the estate and entitled to great weight, while on the other hand the refusal of the Settlement Officers to register the Swatantram as payable in support of the lands in A schedule is not conclusive as they had no authority to determine the question. As regards Exhibits E, H, and K, the District Judge finds that they indicate a right to Thunduwaram even in suit lands against which no Swatantram is entered in the register, but observes that they relate only to a small extent of land. Lastly we come to the documents Exhibit B in which the defendant agrees to pay Swatantrams and Exhibit D series to the same effect which were taken from the other tenants. These are strong admissions against interest, and the District Judge was not justified in dismissing them as of no importance because they are recent. The liability to pay Swatantrams is a well known incident of Mirasi tenure in Chingleput; but as it is not universally applicable, it has been held by the Full Bench in Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Goundan (2), that it is for the Mirasidar to show that he is entitled to enforce it "by the custom of the estate or the neighbourhood." The above findings of fact by the District Judge are in my opinion sufficient to raise a presumption in the plaintiff's favour which is not rebutted by any other findings, and I would reverse the decrees and decree the suit with costs throughout.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I confess that I have felt great hesitation in arriving at a conclusion on the question whether in second appeal, the High Court has got a right to itself examine the evidence with reference to which the finding of the District Judge on the issue of custom was given. On the one side, there are the decisions of this Court in Hanumantamma v. Rami Reddi (7), Vishnu v. Krishnan (9) and Mirabivi v. Vellayannu (8), where several learned Judges of this Court (including Sir Charles Turner, C. J., and Muthusami Aiyar, J.) have assumed as indisputable that this Court has got such a right. I agree with Sir S. Subramania Aiyar (Officiating Chief Justice) in Kakarla Abbayya v. Raja Venkata Papayya Rao (6) that "it is impossible to believe that the learned Judges who decided" those cases "overlooked so obvious an objection." In Kakarla Abbayya v. Raja Venkata Papayya Rao (6) Sir S. Subramania Aiyar (Officiating Chief Justice) and Boddam, J., directly decided that whatever may be the English law, where a question of "usage having the force of law," is concerned, the High Court in second appeal ought to have and has the power to consider even the oral evidence as regards facts, incidents and instances on which the parties relied in the lower Courts to prove or to disprove the alleged usage. The tendency of recent decisions in this Court has been to follow the Calcutta decisions. In Kailas Chandra Dutta v. Padma Kishore Roy (15) that very learned Judge Sir Asutosh Mookerjee who was one of the Bench which decided the case, very exhaustively deals with the question and I shall extract from that judgment the material conclusions arrived at therein:—

(1) "The question of the existence of an alleged custom is a question of fact."

(2) The finding of the lower Appellate Court " is liable to attack on the ground that irrelevant evidence has been received" "or that relevant evidence has been excluded".

(3) " also on the ground that there is no evidence of the alleged custom" or "that the finding is based on legally insufficient evidence" or that "the facts found do not constitute evidence of the alleged custom."

(4) also, "on the ground that legal principles or tests have been erroneously applied or that the Court has not correctly appreciated the essential attributes of a custom," "or has overlooked the distinction between a custom and a usage".

(5) "consequently, the question whether the facts found pro e the existence of the essential attributes of a custom, is a question of law which may be discussed in second appeal."

I am naturally very loth to differ from the opinion of Sir S. Subramania Aiyar, J., especially as he gives very cogent reasons for his conclusion in Kakarla Abbayya v. Raja Venkata Papayya Rao (6), but I think that there are certain dicta of their Lordships of the Privy Council which are more binding upon me. In Ramgopal v. Shamskhaton (21) their Lordships quote their own decision in Ramratan Sukal v. Nandu (20) and lay down as regards the construction of sections 584 and 585 of old Civil Procedure Code (re-enacted practically in the same terms in the new Code) that "it has now been conclusively settled that the third Court cannot entertain an appeal upon any question as to the soundness of findings of fact by the second Court; and if there is evidence to be considered, the decision of the second Court, however unsatisfactory it might be if examined, must stand final." Now, the findings as to instances of usage, as to the genuineness of documents put forward as regards usage and the credibility of witnesses are clearly findings of fact. But as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council themselves in Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Deivasikamony Pandara Sannadhi (14) the Judge's findings as to "what were the things actually done in alleged pursuance of custom" may be findings of fact but whether the facts so found satisfy the requirement of the law, is a question of law. The decision in Kakarla Abbayya v. Raja Venkata Papayya Rao (6) is not expressly referred to in Pankajammal v. Secretary of State for India (12). Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar who appeared in the latter case assures us that Kakarla Abbayya v. Raja Venkata Papayya Rao (6) was in the minds of the learned Judges who decided the latter case and that it was quoted to them. Of course, I accept his statement. The position laid down in Kakarla Abbayya v. Raja Venkata Papayya Rao (6), namely, that the evidence can be gone into in detail in the High Court in second appeal, is characterised in the judgment in Pankajammal v. Secretary of State for India (12) as an "extreme contention." The learned Judges proceed to say that "the value to be attached to the evidence let in, its reliability and in a measure, its relevancy are all matters for the Court below." They again indicate their inclination to the view that the usage having the force of law mentioned in section 100 (a) of the Civil Procedure Code should be confined to the usages referred to by Petheram, C. J., in Nivath Singh v. Bhikki Singh (13). While the reliability of evidence let in is for the lower Appellate Court, I think (with the greatest respect) that the value to be attached to the evidence (provided it is not mere "opinion" evidence) supposing it is accepted as true and the relevancy of evidence are questions to be considered by the High Court also. If notwithstanding uncontradicted instances ranging over a long period and recognised judicially in several cases, the lower Appellate Court finds against the existence of a proper custom on the ground that in its opinion the instances are insufficient in number, the High Court is clearly entitled to hold that on the facts found by the lower Appellate Court, the custom is legally established. As regards the observations of Petheram, C.J., in Nivath Singh v. Bhikki Singh (13), they have been expressly overruled by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ramgopal v. Shamskhaton (21). However, as I said already, I feel (though after some hesitation) that I should follow the principles laid down in Kailas Chandra Dutta v. Padma Kishore Roy (15) in preference to the conclusions in Kakarla Abbayya v. Raja Venkata Papayya Rao (6), as the former decision seems to be more in consonance with the dicta of the Privy Council in Ramgopal v. Shamskhaton (21) and in Muhammad Kamil v. Imtiaz Fatima (18) and in Anant Singh v. Durga Singh (19).

In the present case, accepting the facts as found, I agree with my Lord that they do satisfy the requirements of the law as to the existence and validity of the custom. I am inclined also to hold that we are entitled under section 103 of the Civil Procedure Code to go into the genuineness of the documents in Exhibit C series (except C1), the District Judge, in my opinion, having not given a finding about the genuineness of these documents (except C1) and I would find that they are genuine. They strongly corroborate the other evidence as to custom.

Further, the document Exhibit B executed by the defendant is a clear admission of the existence of the custom in 1905 and of the defendants' liability to pay Thunduwaram according to that custom. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Chundra Kunwar v. Chaudhri Narpa Singh

(23) quoting from English cases state: "What a party himself admits to be true may be reasonably presumed to be so." "The express admissions of a party to the suit are evidence, and strong evidence against him." No explanation was given by the defendant from the box as to his admission in Exhibit B and "unless and until he explains such admission" "the fact admitted must be taken to be established" (page 195). The lower Courts merely argue in a circle when they find that Exhibit B has no consideration because the liability by custom to pay Thunduwaram is not established. Further the lower Courts have ignored the consideration that as regards the right to Thunduwaram, the Mirasdar has a far less heavy burden to discharge than when he lays claim to Natham Poramboke lands, etc. [See judgments in the Full Bench case in Seshachala Chetty v. Para Chinnasami (1)].

I, therefore, agree in reversing the lower Court's decrees and allowing the appeal as proposed by my Lord.

KUMARASWAMI SASTRI, J.—I agree with the conclusions arrived at by my learned brother Sadasiva Aiyar, J., and have nothing useful to add.

Appeal allowed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 417 OF 1916.

SITAL—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 20, 122—Transfer of occupancy holding, whether permissible—Tenancy acquired by one member of joint family—Profits thrown into common stock, effect of—Hindu Law, whether overridden by Statute Law—Inheritance, rules of, under Hindu Law and Statute Law, conflict between.

A special Statute like the Agra Tenancy Act can and does modify the operation of the ordinary Hindu Law in certain matters. The scheme of inheritance, therefore, laid down by section 22 of the Act, being other than that prescribed by the ordinary rules of Hindu Law does, within the scope of its operation, override and prevail against the ordinary Hindu Law of inheritance. [p. 718, col. 2.]

Where a tenancy is created in favour of one member of a joint Hindu family, his throwing of the profits derived from the tenancy into the common stock of the joint family does not change the tenancy from a tenancy in favour of that member to a tenancy in favour of the entire joint family inasmuch as if that were so, it would mean a transfer of the holding from that member to a body of persons, namely, the members of the joint family in contravention of the provisions of section 20 of the Agra Tenancy Act. [p. 718, col. 2.]

The interest of a non-occupancy tenant or of an occupancy tenant under the Agra Tenancy Act is not transferable except under the restrictions laid down by section 20 of the Act. [p. 718, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—In this case the plaintiff Kallu and the defendant Sital are related in this way, that their paternal grandfathers were own borthers. Sital is the recorded tenant of a certain occupancy holding. Kallu is actually cultivating certain plots of land, making up one-half of the area of the holding, and is paying for the use and occupation of these plots approximately one-half of the rent recorded as payable by Sital to the Zamindar. Sital took proceedings in a Revenue Court to eject Kallu on the allegation that the latter was holding as his sub-tenant. Kallu replied that he was a joint tenant with Sital of the entire holding; that they had apportioned the fields between them merely for convenience of enjoyment and that the half share of the rent payable by him was paid to the Zamindar and not to Sital. On this, the Revenue Court directed Kallu to establish his title as co-tenant of the holding by a suit in the Civil Court. This order purports to have been passed under section 199 of the Tenancy Act (No. II of 1901). The propriety of the order is not in question before us, and I merely mention this in order that I may not be regarded as committed to the view that this section was really applicable to the facts above set forth. Kallu's suit for a declaration of his title as joint tenant of the holding to the extent of an undivided half-share was decreed by the Court of first instance and dismissed by the District Judge in first appeal. On a second appeal filed in this Court by Kallu certain issues of fact were remitted for trial to the lower Appellate Court and findings have been received. The third issue as drafted would seem only to arise in the event of the findings on the first and second issues being other than they were, and, therefore, need not be considered. On the first two issues remitted the findings are that this occupancy holding was acquired by Matola, father of Sital; that Matola was at that time a member of a joint undivided Hindu family along with the descendant or descendants of his paternal uncle Dariyao. The letting was to Matola alone and not to Matola as representing the joint family. On the fourth issue a finding was returned that the tenancy enjoyed by Kallu was the result of a contract between himself and Sital, to which the Zamindar was no party, and that it amounted in law to a sub-letting by Sital in favour of Kallu of the particular plots occupied by the latter. In a petition of objections presented to this Court under Order XLI, rule 26, the plaintiff-appellant has challenged the finding on the second issue, but curiously enough has not challenged the finding upon the fourth issue. In argument before us it has been contended that the reasoning upon which the learned District Judge has arrived at his finding on the second issue remitted to him is defective, that it proceeds upon an error of law and that it has been arrived at by mislaying the burden of proof. With regard to the abstract question of law sought to be raised on this appeal, I can only say that I could wish it had arisen in a case in which its consideration was not complicated by other circumstances. However, the position, as I understand it, taken up by the learned District Judge, seems to me substantially correct. It was proved that the letting of the land in question by the Zamindar to Matola had taken place many years ago. There was a lease granted as long ago as the year 1864, which is one of the exhibits in the case. Matola, according to the District Judge, was at that time living as a member of a joint Hindu family along with his uncle Dariyao, or his first cousin, Ganga, or both. He took this land on lease from the Zamindar and he threw the profits derived from the land into the common stock of the joint family of which he was a member. The District Judge says that no such action on the part of Matola could have the effect in law of changing the tenancy from a tenancy in favour of Matola to a tenancy in favour of the entire joint family of which Matola was a member. The interest of a non-occupancy tenant or of an occupancy tenant is not transferable except under the restrictions laid down by section 20 of the Tenancy Act (No. II of 1901). If it were held that the conduct ascribed by the District Judge to Matola in the present case amounted to throwing his rights as occupancy tenant into the common stock of the joint family, and thereby under the Hindu Law making those rights part of the joint assets of that family, it seems to me that the Court would in effect be sanctioning a transfer of the holding by Matola to a body of persons, namely, the members of the joint family to which Matola at that time belonged. A special Statute like the Local Tenancy Act can and does modify the operation of the ordinary Hindu Law in certain matters. The scheme of inheritance laid down by section 22 of that Act is other than that prescribed by the ordinary rules of Hindu Law and no one denies that, within the scope of its operation, section 22 aforesaid overrides and prevails against the ordinary Hindu Law of inheritance. It seems to me that by a parity of reasoning it follows that, when the Zamindar concerned accepted Matola as his tenant, he could not be compelled by reason of any action taken by Matola to accept the entire joint family as his tenant. Our attention has been drawn in argument to one or two reported decisions of this Court. One of these clearly recognises the fact that a Hindu joint family as such may in its corporate capacity be the tenant of a holding. This proposition I have no desire to dispute. A tenancy of this sort might easily come into existence in favour of the sons of the tenant who originally acquired occupancy rights. And

I see nothing in the Tenancy Act to conflict with the view that, if those sons lived together as members of a joint Hindu family, the family as such could be regarded as in possession of the tenancy. In the present case, apart from the abstract question of law involved, we have to meet this difficulty. The findings returned by the learned District Judge are clear and explicit and the objections taken to them are objections against the train of reasoning by which the District Judge has arrived at those findings. That is what I mean by saying that the question of law involved, arises in this case in a complicated form. For the purpose of deciding this case it seems to me sufficient to say that the finding of the learned District Judge on the second of the two issues remitted to him, is not inconsistent with his finding on any of the other issues, and is not shown to be vitiated by any error of law. There remains also the finding of the District Judge on the fourth issue. I understand the finding to be in substance this. The joint family has now admittedly been broken up and apparently this separation took place between Kallu and Sital. At that time Sital recognised that Kallu had a claim upon him in respect of the profits enjoyed by him from this holding, by reason of the fact that Matola had always thrown those profits into the common stock of the joint family. He, therefore, entered into an arrangement by which he give Kallu the right to cultivate certain specific plots, making up one-half of the area of the holding, and undertook not to demand from Kallu more rent than he would himself have to pay to the Zamindar on account of this one-half of the entire holding. The rent to the Zamindar continued to be paid by Sital and receipts were made out in his name. In the absence of any plea in the appellant's petition before us, presented under Order XLI, rule 26, against the finding on the fourth issue, I am not sure that the appellant is entitled to ask us to hold that that finding proceeds upon an error of law. Assuming that point, however, in his favour, it seems to me that the reasoning of the District Judge is correct. For the sake of argument, take the case of an ordinary creditor of an occupancy tenant. That creditor is pressing for payment and is willing to take in satisfaction of his claim such profits as he may be able to make out of one-half of the occupancy holding. The tenant is forbidden by law to transfer his interests as such tenant; but he can sub-let, or he can make an assignment of the profits from year to year. Suppose that he gives his creditor the right to occupy and cultivate for his own benefit certain specific plots, forming part of his holding, and agrees only to take in the way of rent the same sum which he will himself have to pay to the landlord on account of those plots. The transaction amounts virtually to a sub-letting in favour of the creditor. The creditor thereby acquires no rights as against the Zamindar, and his rights as against the occupancy tenant are limited by the terms of the contract between them. I think, therefore, that the finding of the District Judge on the fourth issue remitted to him is correct in law and is decisive of the appeal now before us. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

WALSH, J.—I agree.

BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2418 OF 1915.

Present:—Mr. Justice Greaves and Justice Sir Syed Shamsul Huda, KT.

PARSURAM MAHAJAN—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

BHAL CHANDRA SHAHA AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 62, 97, applicability of—Suit by vendee to recover purchase money on deprivation of possession—Limitation, commencement of.

Limitation for a suit by a vendee, who has been deprived by his vendor of the land purchased by him, to recover the purchase money paid by him begins to run from the date of the failure of consideration, that is, the date on which the vendee is dispossessed from the land, and the suit is governed by Article 97 and not by Article 62 of the Limitation Act.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Assam Valley Districts, dated the 21st May 1915, affirming that of the Munsif, Barpeta, dated the 30th March 1914.

Babu Prokash Chunder Mazumdar, for the Appellant.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chuckerberty and Gopal Chunder Chuckerberty, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Assam Valley Districts, affirming a decision of the Munsif of Barpeta. The plaintiff sued to recover a sum of Rs. 832 which he had paid to the defendant for the purchase of some land of which he was put in possession by the defendant. The plaintiff, however, obtained no registered conveyance for the land. Afterwards a suit was brought by the defendant and the plaintiff lost possession of land. Under these circumstances, the plaintiff brought the present suit to recover the amount of the purchase money which he had paid to the defendant, namely, the sum of Rs. 832. Two questions arise in this appeal. First, it is said that both the lower Courts are wrong in holding that Article 62 of the Limitation Act is not applicable to the case. The lower Appellate Court has found that the Article applicable is Article 97 and the Munsif found that the article applicable was Article 95. It is not necessary for us to consider whether, in fact Article 95 is applicable here because we are of opinion that the decision of the lower Appellate Court that Article 97 and not Article 62 is applicable, is correct. The money was paid by the plaintiff to the defendant on the 10th July 1906. On the 26th August 1912 possession was decreed in the defendant's favour in the suit to which we have clearly referred and on the 27th August 1912 the present suit was commenced. In our opinion it is clear that the time when the limitation commenced to run was the date of the failure of the consideration, that is to say, the time when the plaintiff was deprived of what he had bargained for, namely, possession of the land, or, in other words, limitation began to run from the 26th August 1912. This suit was accordingly brought within time and the proper Article was applied by the lower Appellate Court. So far as the second point is concerned, namely, that there should have been an account taken of the profits made by the plaintiff while in possession of the land, we think the lower Appellate Court has dealt quite rightly with this matter. The defendant was in possession of the purchase-money until the same was returned. The plaintiff paid the Government revenue for the land during the time he was in possession, and we think, therefore, that the lower Appellate Court rightly dismissed the defendant's appeal with regard to this. The result is that the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 177, 198—Ejectment, suit for—Tenant denying plaintiff's proprietary title—Appeal, forum of.

In a suit for ejectment in the Court of a 1st Class Assistant Collector, on the allegation that the defendants were the plaintiff's tenants without rights of occupancy, the defendants denied the title of the plaintiff, alleging that they were lessees from other persons and that the plaintiff had no right to sue them. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit:

Held, that the defendants' plea raised a question of proprietary title and as it was in issue in the Court of first instance and was also a matter in issue in appeal, the appeal lay to the District Judge under the provisions of section 177 of the Agra Tenancy Act. [p. 721, col. 1.]

Civil Miscellaneous Reference from the Commissioner, Rohilkhand Division.

Mr. Surendra Nath Sen, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Raza Ali, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference under section 195 of the Agra Tenancy Act. The point for consideration is whether an appeal in the case lay to the District Judge or to the Commissioner. The suit was one for ejectment on the allegation that the defendants were the plaintiff's tenants without rights of occupancy. The defendants denied the title of the plaintiff and asserted that the relation of landlord and tenant did not subsist between the plaintiff and themselves. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain it in view of certain orders passed by the Revenue Court. An appeal was preferred to the District Judge, but he was of opinion that the appeal lay to the Commissioner. The petition of appeal was returned and was presented in the Court of the Commissioner. The learned Commissioner has referred the case to this Court for determination of the question whether the appeal lay to the Judge or to the Commissioner. We are clearly of opinion that the appeal lay to the District Judge. Section 177 of the Tenancy Act provides that an appeal shall lie to the District Judge from the decree of an Assistant Collector of the first class in all suits in which a question of proprietary title has been in issue in the Court of first instance, and is a matter in issue in the appeal. There can be no doubt that in this case a question of proprietary title was in issue in the Court of first instance and was also a matter in issue in the appeal. The act itself indicates what is meant by a question of proprietary title. Section 198 occurs under the heading of questions of proprietary title in Revenue Courts, and deals with a case in which the defendant pleads that the relation of landholder and tenant does not exist between the plaintiff and himself on the ground that he actually and in good faith pays the rent of his holding to some third person. In the present case the plea of the defendants was that the relation of landlord and tenant did not exist between the plaintiff and them. They alleged that they were lessees from other persons and that the plaintiff had no right to sue them. This was clearly a question of proprietary title and as it was in issue in the Court of first instance and was also a matter in issue in the appeal, the appeal lay to the District Judge under the provisions of section 177. We express, no opinion on the merits of the case but we think that the appeal ought to have been entertained by the District Judge and the memorandum of appeal ought not to have been returned. We accordingly direct that the District Judge do receive the memorandum of appeal which was originally presented to him by the appellant and dispose of the appeal according to law. The costs of this reference will abide the result.

Landlord and tenant Occupancy holding, mortgage of—Death of tenant, without heirs, effect of.

Where a non-transferable occupancy holding is usufructuarily mortgaged by the tenant without the consent of the landlord, the latter is entitled to eject the mortgagee from the holding on the death of the tenant without heirs. [p. 722, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Pabna, dated the 18th September 1914, reversing that of the Munsif at Serajgunj, dated the 9th June 1913.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Bansari Lall Sircar for Babu Kisori Lal Sircar, for the Appellants.—A transfer by way of mortgage is only a partial transfer, and the landlord is not entitled to eject an usufructuary mortgagee of a non transferable occupancy holding unless he can establish that there has been abandonment, repudiation or relinquishment by the tenant as laid down in the Full Bench case of Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (1). In this case there is neither any evidence on the record nor any finding that there has been abandonment or repudiation by the tenant. The mere fact of transfer does not entitle the landlord to re-enter even if the transfer be of the whole holding. See Bhupendra Nath Bose v. Bansi Tanti (2).

(1) 27 Ind. Cas. 61; 18 C. W. N. 971; 20 C. L. J. 52; 42 C. 172.

The next point is that in his plaint the plaintiff has not, as required by Order VII, rule 4 of the Civil Procedure Code, pointed out the land from which he wants to eject the defendant.

Moulvi A. S. M. Akram, for the Respondents:—The whole question is whether there was abandonment by the tenant or not, and the test of abandonment is whether the original tenant or any of his heirs hold the land. In this case it appears from the written statement that the heirs of the original tenant are dead, so that the holding not being in the possession of the original tenant or his heirs there has been complete abandonment entitling the landlord to re-enter. The occupancy right is no longer in existence but has been extinguished by the death of the occupancy raiyat and his heirs. If an occupancy raiyat after having mortgaged his holding dies without leaving any heir the mortgagee's case becomes hopeless, and he is liable to ejectment by the landlord.

Babu Bansari Lall Sircar in reply.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—The holding to which this appeal relates originally belonged to two brothers Baikunto and Gopal. Gopal died, we are informed, about 20 years ago leaving a widow named Annapurna. Baikunto also died some years later leaving a widow. Before his death Baikunto had mortgaged the entire holding to the predecessor-in-interest of the principal defendants who are the appellants before us. The mortgage was a usufructuary mortgage and the mortgagee obtained possession. Annapurna, however, brought a suit against the mortgagee and succeeded in re-gaining possession of a moiety of the holding as Gopal's widow. The mortgagee or his representative seems to have remained in possession of the remaining moiety of the holding. Then it appears that by an arrangement with the landlord Annapurna's half share of the holding was made a separate tenancy so that she became the sole tenant for that half. The tenant of the remaining half of the original holding would be the heir of Baikunto after the death of his widow. But it is alleged in the plaint, and not denied in the written statement, that Baikunto left no heirs. That being the state of things, the present suit was brought by the plaintiffs (the landlords of the holding) to eject the appellants, on the ground that as mortgagees they had no right to be in possession of a non-transferable occupancy holding, the landlord's consent to the transfer by way of mortgage not having been obtained. The Court of Appeal below has made a decree in favour of the plaintiffs and the principal defendants have appealed.

On their behalf it is contended by the learned Pleader that a transfer by way of mortgage is only a partial transfer and that there is no finding in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that the tenant has abandoned or surrendered his rights. The question does not seem to have been raised in the Courts below, and the reason is evident. Baikunto having left no heirs, there is now no tenant whom the principal defendants can put forward as a shield to support their possession. That fact explains why it was not thought worth while to raise the point in the Court below on behalf of the appellants. Even if the principal defendants were allowed to raise this question now, it would, on the facts as they appear on the record, be of no avail to them. In the circumstances the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

BEACHCROFT, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIII, rr. 1, 5 (b)—Application for permission to sue as pauper by married woman—Husband's means, whether can be taken into consideration.

Where a married woman applies for permission to sue as a pauper, the real point in issue is whether she herself is a pauper within the meaning of rule 1 of Order XXXIII of the Civil Procedure Code, and the fact that her husband has property is not sufficient proof that the applicant herself has property from which Court-fees in the case can be paid.

Civil Revision against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Muzaffarpur, dated the 24th February 1917.

Mr. Hasan Jan, for the Appellant.

Syed Mohammad Tahir, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

ROE, J.—In this case the petitioner is aggrieved by an order of the Subordinate Judge of Muzaffarpur refusing her application to sue in forma pauperis, on the ground that her husband is a man of means. There has been no finding and indeed no enquiry as to what the means of the applicant herself are. We are of opinion that the fact that the husband has property is not sufficient proof that the lady herself has property from which Court-fees in the case can be paid. We, therefore, remand the case for retrial and direct that the learned Subordinate Judge direct his mind to the real point in issue, whether or not the lady herself is a pauper within the meaning of the Act, and upon the result of that enquiry dispose of the application in accordance with law.

IMAM, J.—I agree.

Appeal—Judgment containing unfavourable observation against person in whose favour decree passed—Appeal, whether lies—Berar Land Revenue Code, ss. 78, 79—Notice under s. 78, not acted upon for one year, effect of—Fresh notice, whether necessary—Termination of tenancy.

No appeal lies from a decree merely on the ground that certain observations made in the judgment of the Court below are unfavourable to the person in whose favour the decree is passed. An opinion of the Appellate Court in the course of a judgment in such an appeal cannot operate as res judicata when, in point of law, no appeal lay and the Court had no power to adjudicate on the rights of the parties on an appeal from such a decree. [p 724, col 1 & 2.]

If a notice has been duly served under section 78 of the Berar Land Revenue Code, then in the absence of waiver the person so served is not entitled to a fresh notice under section 79 merely because more than one year has elapsed since the time when in accordance with the notice the tenant should have vacated the land. [p. 724, col. 2.]

Section 78, sub-sections (4) and (8) are not restricted to the tenancies mentioned in sub-section (2) of that section, but the enhancement contemplated therein can be decreed only if in the judgment of the Court it be just and reasonable. [p. 725, col. 1.]

A notice to quit under section 79 of the Berar Land Revenue Code unconditionally determines the tenancy, but a notice under section 78 (8), if not complied with, is not intended to have that effect inasmuch as the tenant has a right to appeal to the Court for a decision as to whether in its opinion the enhancement is just and reasonable. [p. 725, col. 2.]

A tenant is to be evicted for not paying the enhanced rent only after it has been determined to be just and reasonable by the Court. [p. 725, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, confirming that of the Sub Judge, Amraoti, dated the 31st August 1915.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. S. B. Tambe, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit by the inam certificate holder of a Jagir for ejectment of certain tenants, on the ground that notwithstanding a notice issued under section 78, Berar Land Revenue Code, they have refused to agree to pay the enhanced rent or to vacate the fields. One Tanba was the original tenant of these fields. In this second appeal we are, however, concerned with one of the fields, field No. 18. It appears from the plaint that Tanba held this field from the year 1839. The rent for this field according to the plaintiff was Rs. 39 and it was sought to have it enhanced to Rs. 50. The defendant No. 4, who is the appellant before me, purchased from the original tenant this field on the 10th January 1910, the notice under section 78 of the Land Revenue Code having been served on the original tenant on the 25th September 1909. Various pleas were raised in the case and so far as they are material, they will be apparent from my judgment when I deal with each of the grounds of this second appeal. It is urged that Tanba was an ante-Jagir tenant of field No. 18 and some reference is made to a previous judgment in which an opinion to that effect was expressed by Mr. Obbard, the Civil Judge and Sessions Judge, H. A. D, an opinion which seems to have been confirmed by the then Judicial Commissioner. The plaintiff had fixed a definite time, namely, 1869, as the commencement of Tanba's tenancy. The defendants never pleaded that they were ante-Jagir tenants. All that they said was that the field had been in their possession for 40 or 50 years. The utmost that can be said on that plea is that their possession commenced from 1862, but we find that the Inam investigating officers were making enquiries about the same period and found that the Jagir was in the Jagirdar's family for three generations at least. Under the circumstances, it will be useless allowing the appellant leave to advance a fresh plea of a character inconsistent with the pleas raised in the first Court. I ought to notice that although Mr. Obbard expressed an opinion that this particular field was ante-Jagir yet the decree was entirely in favour of the Jagirdar, for he apparently allowed the entire rent claimed. The Jagirdar had filed a second appeal, though in point of law, no such appeal lay from the decree merely on the ground that certain observations made in the judgment of the Court below were unfavourable to the person in whose favour the decree was passed. The appeal was, however, entertained and the opinion of the lower Court upheld, but I cannot regard the opinion in such a case as operating by way of res judicata when in point of law no appeal lay and the Court had no power to adjudicate on the rights of the parties on an appeal from such a decree.

I have already mentioned that the appellant purchased the field a few months after the notice was given to his predecessor under section 78. It is contended before me that the appellant, although bound by the notice under section 78, was entitled to a further notice under section 79 of the same Code. It is urged that the Jagirdar having waited for more than one year must be deemed to have allowed the tenants to hold on. I see, however, no force in this argument. There was no waiver of the notice inasmuch as no rent was accepted, nor was the possession of the transferee in any manner recognized by the Jagirdar. If notice has been duly served under section 78, the person so served or his transferee is not entitled to a fresh notice under section 79 merely because more than a year had elapsed since the time when, in accordance with the notice, the tenants should have vacated the land.

It is next contended that the plaintiff Jagirdar alone cannot sue inasmuch as there are some members of the family who are opposed to the ejectment and the enhancement of rent. All the defendants who are hostile to the Jagirdar are, however, bound by a deed executed by themselves or by their predecessor in title in the year 1887, under which the plaintiff was to have the sole management of the Jagir and the other co sharers are only to receive their share of the profits from the plaintiff. Having entered into a solemn agreement as regards the management of the village, it is not open to any co-sharers arbitrarily to dispute the plaintiff's authority until they can again come to a fresh arrangement for the management of the village. I hold, therefore, that the plaintiff is entitled to maintain the suit.

There remains for me to consider whether the appellant is entitled to be relieved against forfeiture for non-payment of rent.

The way in which the appellant has put his case before me is unsound. Section 114 of the Transfer of Property Act, which now applies to Berar, refers to forfeiture for non payment of rent, that is to say, it refers to a forfeiture already incurred under the terms of a lease. In the present case, there is no such lease providing for forfeiture for non-payment of rent. Moreover, the rent for non-payment of which the forfeiture takes place is a rent already fixed and agreed upon between the parties. Although section 114 of the Transfer of Property Act, therefore, does not apply to the present case, yet I have to consider whether the Courts below are justified in passing an unconditional decree for ejectment against the defendant. The plaintiff issued a notice under sub-section 8 of section 78 of the Berar Land Revenue Code. In Maruti v. Jagannath (1) and Ramya v. Krishna (2) the view taken was that section 78, sub-clauses 8 and 4, are not restricted to tenancies mentioned in sub-clause 2 of the said section. This view commends itself to me. Sub-clause 4 says: "Nothing contained in this section shall affect the right of the landlord to enhance the rent, etc."

If it were intended to limit sub-section 4 to cases contemplated by sub section 2, the wording would have been "nothing contained in sub-section 2 shall affect the right of the landlord to enhance the rent." It is, therefore, unnecessary to say whether the appellant's predecessor was a tenant of antiquity within the meaning of sub-section (2). Now the plaintiff's own case is that he was entitled to enhancement of the rent apparently by virtue of usage, and for that purpose, he was entitled to issue a notice through a Revenue Officer under sub section 8. The enhancement, however, can only be decreed if in the judgment of the Court it be just and reasonable [see sub section (4)]. The Berar Land Revenue Code, sub section (1), seems to recognize a customary right to just and reasonable enhancement of rent and lays down a procedure for its enforcement.

(2) S. A. No. 229-B of 1916.

The first Court has found that it is just and reasonable that the former rent of Rs. 39 should be enhanced to Rs. 50. Then comes the question what should have been the nature of the plaintiff's suit and the form of the decree? It cannot be said that the rent was duly enhanced the moment the notice was served through the Tahsildar. It was determined to be just and reasonable only by the decision of the Court. To my mind, the decree contemplated by sub-section 4 is a decree directing the defendant to pay the rent and in default of payment to give up possession.

A notice to quit under section 79 unconditionally determined the tenancy. But the Code does not say that a notice under section 78 (8), if not complied with, has any such effect. Appendix XVII to the rules framed by the Local Government gives a form of notice under section 78 (8). It, no doubt, asks the tenant to vacate the land in the event of his not consenting to pay the enhanced rent. But the tenant has a right to appeal to the Court as to whether in its judgment the enhancement claimed is just and reasonable. Could it have been the intention of the Legislature to determine the tenancy on non-compliance with the notice subject to a future adjudication as to whether the enhancement is just and reasonable? Such a conditional determination of the tenancy is unknown to the ordinary law. In the absence of express words to that effect, I would hesitate to adopt such a construction which leads to manifest injustice, for the tenant is punished for an error of judgment as to what is just and reasonable enhancement. The tenant's silence is consistent with an agreement to pay the enhanced rent, if determined to be just and reasonable by the Court. The conclusion to which I come is that the tenant is to be evicted for not paying the enhanced rent after it has been determined to be just and reasonable by the Court.

I now pass the decree which the lower Court should have passed. The decrees of the Courts below are set aside so far as the defendant-appellant is concerned and in lieu thereof the defendant is directed to pay Rs. 50 as the rent for the year in suit within three months or in default to deliver possession of field S. No. 18 to the plaintiff. The ejectment of the defendant will not prevent the plaintiff from recovering Rs. 50 from the defendant. The defendant will also pay the plaintiff's costs in all Courts.

Decree set aside.

Appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Shahabad, dated the 18th February 1916.

Messrs. Naresh Chandra Sinha and Sisir Kumar Mitter, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Kulwant Sahay and Achalendra Nath Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 24th of April 1907 Ambika Charan Mitra and Amrita Krishna Mitra, his son, mortgaged certain properties to Kumar Promatha Nath Malia, who obtained a decree on the 9th of August 1909 and transferred it on the 14th January 1911 to Rai Benode Behari Bose Bahadur. Rai Benode Behari Bose being of opinion that the property was worth more than the amount secured under the decree which he had purchased from the former mortgagee decree-holder, advanced further sums upon a second mortgage to the Mitras on the 16th of January 1911 and the 8th of May 1911. In 1913 Rai Benode Behari put the second mortgage into suit; and subsequently obtained a decree and purchased the property himself. The sum realized in execution of this decree exceeded the amount due under the decree by a considerable sum.

Pending the suit upon the second mortgage Rai Benode Behari put up for sale the mortgaged property upon the decree obtained on the 1st mortgage and the proceedings in execution reached the stage of a date being fixed for the sale after due issue of the sale proclamation. Upon the date fixed for the sale the judgment debtor came into Court with a petition asking for time to raise money from Hira Singh to pay off the mortgage decree. Rai Benode Behari himself signed this petition and upon this joint petition of Rai Benode Behari and the judgment-debtor time was granted to borrow money from Hira Singh and to pay off Rai Benode Behari's debt. In due course the debt of Rai Benode Behari upon the first mortgage was extinguished by payment made admittedly from the purse of Hira Singh.

Hira Singh on the 9th of May 1913 took a mortgage for Rs. 7, 000 from the Mitras, wherein it was distinctly stated that the mortgage lien held by Rai Benode Behari was to be kept alive for the benefit of Hira Singh who was paying the money.

Upon the purchase of the property by Rai Benode Behari and possession being taken thereof, Hira Singh has brought the present suit for an account upon the first mortgage and for a declaration that the amount now due upon the mortgage, which can be traced to the payment of the debt of Rai Benode Behari, should rank as a charge upon the property prior to the charge obtained by Rai Benode Behari by virtue of his purchase under the decree upon the second mortgage. Hira Singh also claims that Rs. 1,000, the amount of rent which was paid from a loan taken from him by the Mitras, should be a charge upon the properties mortgaged.

The learned Subordinate Judge has refused to give the plaintiff a charge in regard to the sum advanced for payment of rent; but has made a decree directing that an account be taken and that all sums now due on account of the payment made in satisfaction of the first mortgage decree of Rai Benode Behari do rank prior to the second mortgage decree of Rai Benode Behari; and that all other sums due under Hira Singh's mortgage shall be postponed to the second mortgage.

Rai Benode Behari appeals against that portion of the decree which gives priority to Hira Singh's charge upon the property; and Hira Singh appeals against the order refusing the charge in connection with the payment made for rent.

The appeal of Hira Singh, First Appeal No. 75 of 1916, is not seriously pressed. We need say with regard to it only that there was no payment of rent made by Hira Singh. There was merely a further loan granted to the mortgagor. Though the money borrowed was actually deposited to set aside the sale of the mortgaged lands, the transaction created no charge. The appeal of Hira Singh is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

The appeal of Rai Benode Behari will also be dismissed. The petition filed for time to be given for borrowing the money from Hira Singh makes it unnecessary for us to discuss the nice question whether in all cases a transaction resulting in subrogation can be held to be covered by section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act. The essence of section 52 is that a transaction entered into during the pendency of a suit cannot prejudice the interests of a party to the suit who is not a party to the transaction. Rai Benode Behari himself consented to the postponement of the sale upon the first mortgage in order that money might be borrowed from Hira Singh. He, therefore, knew that Hira Singh was about to lend money to liquidate the mortgage debt. The passage to be found at page 1046 in Volume X, Indian Law Reports, Calcutta Series [in the case of Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Puranmal Premsukh D s (1)], which report begins at page 1035, must be taken as conclusive that irrespective of the clause in Hira Singh's document definitely keeping alive the mortgage of Rai Benode Behari, the payment of the mortgage debt by Hira Singh was in itself sufficient to warrant the presumption that the prior mortgage would be kept alive. We must presume that Rai Benode Behari was, when the petition for time was filed, within reach of legal advice. He must have been aware that the entry of a third party would create a lien prior to his second charge. He nevertheless acquiesced in the granting of time for the entry of that third party with the deliberate intention of realizing his money as rapidly as possible. We must presume that the transaction as a whole was for his benefit as he thought at the time, and was not a transaction calculated to prejudice his interests as contemplated in section 52. We hold that this part of the case was rightly decided by the learned Subordinate Judge and that Hira Singh, the plaintiff, is entitled to ask for an account upon his prior charge and to recover the sum advanced for the payment of the first mortgage debt of Rai Benode Bhari.

The learned Subordinate Judge has, however, given no indication in his judgment as to the rate at which interest should run. The interest due under the mortgage document was Rs. 1-8 per cent. per mensem. At the time that Rai Benode Behari's debt was paid a decree had been made and the property was up for sale. The terms of the decree were that interest should run after the 10th of February 1910 at 6 per cent. per annum. We are informed that one of the conditions of the granting of time to pay the decretal amount was that the rate of interest should be increased to 12 per cent per annum. This appears to have received the sanction of the Court on the 18th of January 1911. The increase of the rate of interest from 6 per cent. to 12 per cent. seems to us suspiciously like a penalty; and indeed the debt having been extinguished, so far as Rai Benode Behari was concerned, on the date of the payment made by Hira Singh, interest should not be calculated at more than 6 per cent. per annum in making up Hira Singh's account. We modify the learned Subordinate Judge's decree to this extent; that in taking that account interest be calculated at six per cent.

(1) 10 C. 1035; 11 I. A. 126; 8 Ind. Jur. 396; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 543; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 692 (P. C.).

The appeal of Rai Binode Behari will be decreed in part with costs to the extent of success and failure on both sides.

Decree modified.

Restitution of conjugal rights, suit for—Cruelty—Defence.

In a suit for restitution of conjugal rights it appeared that the parties had been on bad terms for a considerable period, that the husband suspected the wife's fidelity and that he had been bringing civil and criminal cases against her:

Held, that the wife had reasonable grounds for believing that her health and safety would be endangered if she returned to her husband's custody and that the plaintiff was not, therefore, entitled to a decree. [p. 731, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Saharanpur.

ORDER.—This was a suit for restitution of conjugal rights by a Muhammadan husband. It was decreed by the Court of first instance; but has been dismissed by the learned District Judge of Saharanpur in appeal, on the ground that the plaintiff "had treated his wife in such a way that he has lost all right to claim restitution of conjugal rights."

We are of opinion that the findings of fact recorded by the lower Appellate Court are not specific enough to dispose of the suit. The principles of law applicable to a defence of "legal cruelty" raised in a case of this sort were laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Moonshee Buzloor Ruheem v. Shumsoonissa Begum (1). We may refer also to two decisions of this Court, viz. Husaini Begam v. Muhammad Rustam Ali Khan (2) and Khurshedi Begam v. Khurshed Ali (3). We remit the following issues for determination by the Court below, on the evidence already on the record:—

(i) Is it proved that the defendant has in the past been subjected to ill-treatment, physical or mental, by the plaintiff?

The finding on this issue should be as specific as possible as regards time, circumstances and the nature of the ill-treatment found.

(ii) On the case as a whole, is the Court of opinion that the defendant has reasonable grounds for believing that her health and safety would be endangered if she returned to her husband's custody?

Ten days will be allowed for objections after the return of findings.

The lower Appellate Court submitted the following

FINDINGS.—The issues remitted here are:

(1) Is it proved that the defendant has in the past been subjected to ill treatment, physical or mental, by the plaintiff?

(2) On the case as a whole, is the Court of opinion that the defendant has reasonable grounds for believing that her health and safety would be endangered if she returned to her husband's custody?

The story which the defendant put forward in an application sent by her to the Collector of Muzaffarnagar and Saharanpur was that the plaintiff was really only her agent, but that by some cunning he had made himself out to be her husband; that he wanted her money and with the assistance of a Vakil named Liaqat Husain tried to induce her to transfer her property to the plaintiff's name; and that when she refused to comply took her to Kasba Kairana and kept her a prisoner for 1½ years in the Vakil's house, after pretending that he was taking her to Meerut to have false teeth made; that in order to extort property from her he prevented her relations from coming to her; that she was beaten by Liaqat Husain, and treated in a manner in which prisoners in jail are probably not treated. The result, she said, was that she suffered from facial paralysis and palpitation of the heart. She went on to say that plaintiff and Liaqat Husain compelled her by deception to transfer property in their favour, and had got her thumb impression on some paper. That the plaintiff told her that the house at Kairana was that of a robber and knifer. "That Jawad Husain (son of the other defendant Zahid Husain) her sister's daughter's son came and called out her name. She ran to see him, but Liaqat Husain scolded his servants for letting him in. That Jawad Husain told her that the house (in which she was imprisoned) was Liaqat Husain's and not that of a robber, that Liaqat Husain did not allow her to say anything more. That plaintiff then took her from Kairana to Sarsena, and then from Sarsena to Kalear, where she was made to execute a sale-deed in favour of the wife of one Ashiq Husain and register it before the Sub-Registrar. That this document was for Rs. 20,000 or 21,000 of which Rs. 7,000 were paid before the Sub-Registrar. Of this plaintiff deposited Rs. 6,000 with the banker Jagmandar Das and kept Rs. 500 himself. Rs. 500 had been taken by him previously as earnest money. That plaintiff then put her in the train with his servant to take her back to Kairana. He did not, however, tell her where she was to go. When the train arrived at Saharanpur, she saw Jawad Husain on the platform, jumped out and embraced him, and asked him what station it was. On his telling her she went home with him.

She said also that she had fever when she executed the sale-deed and that in addition to the Rs. 7,000 above mentioned, plaintiff took from her, her boxes containing ornaments to the value of Rs. 2,000. That plaintiff was a pauper, he used violence to her and robbed her of her money.

Jawad Husain corroborates this story as far as his going to Kairana is concerned, and says that he received a letter from the defendant complaining of ill-treatment; he, however, met her at Saharanpur by chance. Sabir Husain, who went with him to Kairana, also corroborated.

Examined in Court, defendant added that when she was at Saharanpur with him (before she was taken to Kairana) plaintiff beat her very much, that sometimes she aches even now from the wounds. After marriage, he sometimes used to dine out, and was always quarrelling with her, and abusing her and her parents, saying that she was of loose behaviour, demanded money of her, sometimes Rs. 2,000 and sometimes Rs. 3,000.

She adds that she has transferred her property to Jawad Husain, her child, who is now owner of the property.

When defendant took up her residence in Zahid Husain's house, plaintiff made an application to the Magistrate under section 552 of the Code of Criminal Procedure asking that the Police should order the release of his wife. Then he brought a complaint under section 498 of the Indian Penal Code against Zahid Husain saying that he had enticed her away, and was keeping her as his wife. The Joint Magistrate dismissed this on the 18th March 1915, and it was absurd enough complaint, defendant is about 50 years of age, and is said to have lost all her teeth. Plaintiff then filed the present suit.

The plaintiff's evidence shows him to be probably without property, although he says that property entered in Liaqat Husain's name belongs to him, he has had no residential house for ten years; Liaqat Husain is helping him in this suit by "money and advice", he now lives in Liaqat Husain's house. He admits having kept the defendant "aloof" so that no relations might carry her off.

The plaintiff has called witnesses to prove that though they live close to where he lives, they never heard any sounds as if plaintiff was ill-treating the defendant. So far as direct evidence is concerned, the case is really one of taking the wife's word against the husband or vice versa.

The defendant's married life has been peculiar. In 1902, or 1903, she appears to have run away with one Diwan Shah, HAMID HUSAIN v. KUBRA BEGAM.

The plaintiff lodged a complaint under section 522, and lost it. In 1904 he instituted a suit for restitution of conjugal rights and appears to have been supported in that suit by Zahid Husain, the present second defendant. In her defence in the suit she totally denied having been married to the plaintiff, and further charged Zahid Husain with the intention of taking away her property in favour of his son. The suit was decreed, and as defendant declined to submit to the decree, she was put into jail for some months. She had sued the plaintiff unsuccessfully for dower, and had executed a deed of gift of all her property in favour of Diwan Shah. When she got out of jail and joined the plaintiff the latter caused her to bring a suit against Diwan Shah to cancel the deed of gift in his favour and for possession of her property. In this suit she was successful, and in 1906 she conferred upon the plaintiff the rights to manage her property though not to alienate it or raise money upon it. After that she seems to have lived with the plaintiff to outward appearance peacefully until the year 1914, when the execution of the sale-deed of the 18th May was immediately followed by her leaving her husband.

According to the written statement in this case she has now transferred the whole of her property to Jawad Husain, but in her evidence she alleges that it is still hers. It is in Jawad Husain's name but she maintains that her son has no interest in it during her lifetime. Jawad Husain, of course, contends that according to the deed of gift he is owner of the house.

As I have intimated, both plaintiff and defendant are well stricken in years, and it seems clear that the defendant is in the unfortunate position of a woman with property which is desired by a needy husband on the one hand and needy relations on the other. The learned Subordinate Judge thinks that plaintiff at one time beat her, but he says that any husband would do that to a wife whose fidelity he suspected. On the whole the evidence that plaintiff has ill-treated the defendant physically, except if it be an exception to this extent, is not satisfactory. When giving her evidence she alleged merely that he abused her, and the allegations in her written petitions appear hardly to be made out. That she has been ill-treated by him in other ways, that is to say, mentally is, however, reasonably likely; he admits having prevented her relations from having access to her, he did not hesitate to keep her for months in jail and she selected to stay in jail rather than return to him; and it is not likely that she voluntarily suffered him to deal with her property. Similarly there appears to be reasonable ground for supposing that her health and safety would be endangered if she were compelled to return to him. He and she are on the worst possible terms, and there can be no natural love or affection between them, and in his house she would be completely in his power. There is too much reason for supposing that the plaintiff's desire in pressing the suit is to get hold of defendant's property rather than to have her to live with him, and as she has executed a deed disposing of this property it is more than likely that he would subject her to distress to induce her to cancel the deed in his favour. It is contended on plaintiff's behalf that defendant is really an unwilling tool in the hands of her relations, and is being opposed by them. That is, of course, a possibility, but there is no evidence to enable me to say that it is in fact the case.

There is every reason to suppose that she left the plaintiff voluntarily and that so far at any rate she was in no way coerced by her relations. If she is ill-treated by them in future, she will have only herself to thank. It seems to me that it could not be safe, having regard to all that has happened, to order her to be delivered over to the plaintiff.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru and Mr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit by a Muhammadan husband for restitution of conjugal rights in which, by our order of the 8th of August last, we thought it necessary to remit certain issues for more specific findings by the lower Appellate Court. Those findings have now been returned and we are satisfied that they cannot be successfully assailed on the grounds taken in the petition of objections filed by the plaintiff-appellant. We desire to refer to the case of Armour v. Armour (4) as laying down sound principles of law, which we accept and propose to apply to the facts found in this case by the learned District Judge. We think the findings of the learned District Judge proceed upon evidence and are not vitiated by any erroneous view of the law. We must accept his finding that the defendant has reasonable grounds for believing that her health and safety would be endangered if she returned to her husband's custody and in our opinion this finding disposes of the appeal. We dismiss the appeal accordingly with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 109, 110, 111, 112, O. XLIV, r. 1—Appeal to His Majesty in Council—Leave to appeal in forma pauperis—Jurisdiction—High Court, power of, to grant leave.

The High Court has no jurisdiction to grant an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council in forma pauperis. [p. 731, col. 2.]

Order XLIV of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to appeals to His Majesty in Council. Rule 1 of the Order contemplates an Appellate Court perusing the judgment of a subordinate Court, and not the Court whose judgment is appealed from perusing its own judgment; the very fact that Order XLIV requires an investigation into the merits of the appeal before allowing the application introduces an element inconsistent with the principle underlying sections 109 and 110 of the Code. [p. 732, col. 1.]

Application for appeal from the decision of Mr. Justice Chapman and Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad, dated the 4th April 1917, in First Appeal No. 272 of 1915.

Mr. Lal Mohan Ganguli, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C J.—This is an application in the form of a petition praying for leave to file and prosecute an appeal to His Majesty in Council in forma pauperis. The original suit was instituted by the present applicants as plaintiffs in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur. The suit was dismissed and an appeal to this Court proved equally unsuccessful. In the original suit and in the appeal leave to proceed as paupers was granted. The applicants being aggrieved with the decree of this Court desire to appeal to His Majesty in Council and have lodged a petition asking for a certificate under section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure. They now pray the Court to allow them to file and prosecute that appeal as paupers, and the question arises whether this Court has jurisdiction to grant such an application. We have not been referred to nor am I aware of any provision in the Code of the Civil Procedure or the rules made thereunder, or in the rules of this Court, which in terms gives jurisdiction to this Court to grant the relief asked for, and in my opinion the Court has no such jurisdiction. As the question has been raised in an appeal to His Majesty in Council, we think it desirable to state our reasons for the decision arrived at. The Code of Civil Procedure deals with appeals to the King in Council in sections 109 to 112. Sections 109 and 110 give a right of appeal to His Majesty in Council from any decree or final order passed on appeal by the High Court or any other Court in British India of final appellate jurisdiction where the subject matter in dispute, or the property in respect to which the claim is made, is of a certain value, provided that where the decree or final order affirms the decision of the Court immediately below the appeal must involve some substantial question of law. They also give a right of appeal from any decree or order where the case is certified to be a fit one. The machinery for obtaining such certificate is found in Order XLV and must be applied for by petition to the Court whose decree is complained of. Section 111 bars appeals from the High Court in certain cases and section 112 saves the royal prerogative to receive or reject appeals at His Majesty's pleasure. The effect of granting a certificate under Order XLV that the case fulfils the requirements of the sections of the Code mentioned is, inter alia, to oblige the applicant to furnish security for costs and to deposit a sum to meet the expenses of preparing and forwarding the record of the suit. The effect of allowing the suit to be filed and prosecuted in forma pauperis would be to excuse the appellant in that suit from finding security or depositing the usual fees, and where no express power is given to the Court to make an order involving the consequences referred to, I see no reason why we should infer such power to exist by implication.

It is contended, however, that Order XLIV, rule 1, applies to appeals to His Majesty in Council. I am unable to accept this view. There are two Orders in the rules which deal with proceedings by paupers. The first is Order XXXIII which relates to original suits and has clearly no application to appeals, and the other is Order XLIV which relates to appeals and is relied upon. Rule 1 of the latter Order provides that the Court shall reject the application to be allowed to appeal as a pauper unless upon perusal thereof, and of the judgment and decree, it sees reason to think that the decree is contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law or is otherwise erroneous or unjust. The rule, in my opinion, clearly contemplates an Appellate Court perusing the judgment of a subordinate Court and not, as would be the case if the applicant's contention is accepted, the Court whose judgment is appealed from perusing its own judgment. It would be very difficult and well nigh impossible for anyone to obtain the order contemplated in the rule, if one of the conditions were that he should first persuade the Court which made the decree that its own decree was contrary to law or erroneous or unjust. Further the very fact that Order XLIV requires an investigation into the merits of the appeal before allowing the application, introduces an element inconsistent with the principle underlying sections 109 and 110 of the Code of which they form a part. In the sections mentioned no such restrictions on the right of appeal are found. Moreover, it would appear that the Judicial Committee itself in considering the propriety of allowing special leave to appeal in forma pauperis is by no means so exacting [see rule 8 of the Judicial Committee's Rules, 1908]. There are other reasons appearing from the wording of Order XLIV itself which seem to me clearly to indicate that it was not intended to apply to appeals to His Majesty in Council.

The Calcutta High Court in 1912 in the case of Jugadananda Asram v. Rajendra Roy (1) had to decide a similar question, the only difference between that case and the present being that there leave to appeal had already been granted before the application was made to prosecute the appeal in forma pauperis. The Chief Justice and Sir Richard Harington decided that the Court had no jurisdiction and dismissed the application, and with that judgment and the reasons given therein I entirely concur. This application will be dismissed. This, however, will not prevent the applicants from petitioning His Majesty in Council for special leave, if they should be so advised.

CHAPMAN, J.—I agree.

Application rejected.

Mr. Ganpat Rai, for the Petitioner.

Pir Taj-ud-Din, for the Respondents.

ALICE THORP v. SHAMAT LAL.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order of the District Judge of Ambala refusing to grant a certificate for second appeal under section 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act. The question for decision in the case was whether the applicant, a lohar by caste, followed Hindu Law or custom. Both the Courts below held that he followed Hindu Law and that the disputed gift by a widow to her daughter's son was valid. The District Judge refused the certificate on the ground that no question of custom really arose. Pir Taj-ud-Din, on behalf of the respondents, raises a preliminary objection that no revision lies from the order refusing to grant a certificate, and he cites Sher v. Allah Dad (1) as an authority in support of his contention. In that case it was certainly held that the Chief Court could not on the revision side consider whether the action of the lower Appellate Court in refusing a certificate was reasonable or not. It appears, however, that in that case the lower Appellate Court in consideration of the merits refused to grant a certificate. The present case is in my opinion distinguishable. The District Judge refused a certificate because he considered that no question of custom arose; in other words, he held that this was a case to which sub-section (3) of section 41 of the Punjab Courts Act did not apply.

The case reported as Sahab Din v. Daswandhi Beg (2) is an authority for the proposition that revision is competent where the lower Appellate Court has wrongly held that it had no power to grant a certificate. In the present case it is clear that a question of custom was in issue, namely, whether the parties followed a custom by which a gift by a widow to her daughter's son was invalid. I, therefore, hold that the lower Appellate Court has failed to exercise the jurisdiction vested in it, and the order is open to revision under section 44 of the Punjab Courts Act.

I, therefore, allow the revision and, setting aside the order of the District Judge, remand the case to him that he may decide on the merits whether to grant a certificate or not. Costs will follow the event.

Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), s. 4—Suit by heir of deceased against debtor, whether maintainable without certificate

Civil revisions against an order of the Small Cause Court Judge, Motihari, dated the 19th December 1916.

Mr. Soroshi Charan Mitter, for the Appellant.

Mr. Khurshed Hasnain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

IMAM, J.—Civil Revisions Nos. 60, 61, and 65—71 of 1917 arise from a decision of the Small Cause Court Judge of Motihari. The facts of these cases shortly are that the appellant, Mrs. Alice Thorp, instituted a certain number of rent suits against Shamat Lal and others who are defendants in these cases. The Court below, exercising powers under the Small Causes Courts Act, dealt with these cases together, and has dismissed them on the ground that the status of the plaintiff to prosecute her suits is not established. The Court below at the end of the judgment deals with this aspect of the plaintiff's suits in these words:—(1) "The suits are not maintainable under section 4 of the Succession Certificate Act." The reason why he has so worded his judgment is given a few sentences above the passage quoted. In that he refers to the fact that although the plaintiff Mrs. Thorp was said to have succeeded to the estate of her husband and Probate had been taken, yet neither a certificate of succession nor the original Probate or copies thereof had been filed. Reading this part of the judgment of the learned Small Cause Court Judge we cannot but hold that he is under the impression that the suits under notice could not be maintained by the plaintiff unless and until she produced either the certificate or the Probate papers. We think the learned Judge has fallen into an error, which is an error of law. The learned Judge has relied for his view of the case on section 4 of the Succession Certificate Act. A reference to that section shows that there is no bar to the maintenance of a suit under the circumstances referred to above, but what is barred is the passing of a decree in such circumstances. It appears to us, therefore, that the Small Cause Court Judge misdirected himself on the question of the maintenance of these suits. The suits are perfectly maintainable and section 4 of the Succession Certificate Act was by no means a bar to their maintenance. The question of the decree on the other hand is a question which is altogether separate from the question of the maintenance of suits, and it appears to us that if this view of the law had been presented to the mind of the learned Judge he might well have, in a case like this, allowed time to the plaintiff to produce these papers before he gave her a decree. Evidently he did not consider the question as to whether time should or should not have been given to the plaintiff to produce these papers. In the circumstances we set aside the order passed by the learned Judge and now that we are satisfied that the plaintiff Mrs. Thorp had as a matter of fact obtained Probate of the Will of her husband and that as such had the status to proceed with those cases and ask for decrees being passed in her favour, we think in this case we should not only reverse the order passed by the learned Judge but decree the suits in question. We pass no orders as regards costs.

ROE, J.—I concur. I entirely agree that a marked distinction should be made between an error of law and an exercise of discretion. In the case before us it seems to me that there was not merely a refusal to grant a postponement of the case to admit of the production of the Probate but rather a refusal to allow it to be produced after the case had been commenced.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 58, 100—Mortgage and charge, distinction between—Sale in execution of decree without attachment, validity of—Consent decree, whether can affect properties not subject-matter of suit.

In a suit on a mortgage a compromise was effected, by which the mortgagor consented to a decree being passed against him on condition that if the decretal amount were not paid according to the instalments specified in the decree, the mortgagee would be entitled to recover it by sale of the mortgaged properties and in case of a deficiency in the sale-proceeds by sale of certain other properties (lot No. 2 specified in the schedule to the compromise petition). Payments not having been made in accordance with the decree, the mortgaged properties as also the other properties (in lot No. 2) were put up to auction-sale and were purchased by the mortgagee himself, who was put in possession by the Court. The mortgagor applied for setting aside the sale, and again a compromise was made under which the sale was to be set aside on the mortgagor paying the full amount of the decree within two months. The mortgagor failed to carry out this compromise and the sale to the mortgagee was confirmed. In the meantime the mortgagor had mortgaged lot No. 2 to the plaintiff for the express purpose of paying off the decretal amount due to the mortgagee:

Held, (1) that, inasmuch as before the mortgage to the plaintiff lot No. 2 had been auction-purchased by the mortgagee, the mortgagor had no subsisting title, right or interest in those properties which he could pass to the plaintiff by the mortgage; [p. 736, col. 2.]

(2 that, as the auction-sale in execution of the mortgage decree was with the consent and at the request of the mortgagor, it was immaterial whether there was a formal attachment of lot No. 2 or not. [p. 736, col 2.]

Semble.—Though the consent decree could not affect the properties comprised in lot No. 2 which were not the subject-matter of the suit, yet a valid charge was created thereon outside the suit by the compromise petition of the mortgagor. [p. 736, cols. 1 & 2.]

The distinction between a mortgage and a charge under section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act is that in the case of the former there is a transfer of the property to the creditor which requires registration, while in the case of the latter there is no such transfer the debtor only agreeing that the property shall be security for the re-payment of the debt. [p. 736, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Hooghly, dated the 24th of March 1915, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Court, Serampore, dated the 30th January 1914.

JUDGMENT.

CHITTY, J.—The plaintiff brought this suit to establish his right under a Kat Kobala, dated 22nd February 1906, executed by Abdul Hakim, predecessor-in-interest of defendants Nos. 1 to 4. Defendants Nos. 5 and 6 were added as claiming the mortgaged property under a prior title. The suit was decreed by the Munsif, but on appeal the decree was set aside and the suit dismissed. The plaintiff has appealed to this Court. The facts found are as follows:—On 15th October 1895 Abdul Hakim and Abdul Sobhan mortgaged certain properties to Baroda Prosad De and Sasil Kumar De, defendants Nos. 5 and 6. The mortgagees brought a suit (No. 161 of 1902) to enforce their mortgage. On 27th January 1903 a petition of compromise was filed and the suit decreed in accordance therewith (Exhibits A and C). By that the decretal amount was fixed at Rs. 447 and arrangement made for payment by instalment with the usual default clause. It was further provided that if the whole amount should not be recovered by sale of the mortgaged properties, the plaintiffs would be entitled to recover it by sale of certain other properties specified in the schedule to that petition. The mortgagors declared that they had created no other charge on those properties, and the petition went on to say: "The aforesaid decretal amount Rs. 447 or any portion thereof shall be a charge on the mortgaged properties mentioned in the plaint and the properties described in the schedule to this petition, and the aforesaid Rs. 447 shall be recovered according to the instalments mentioned before and in default of payment it shall be recovered at once from the mortgaged property and the properties mentioned in the schedule to this petition. The money shall be recovered according to the terms mentioned above and so long as the whole amount is not realised it shall remain a charge thereon." The instalments were not paid and the decree-holders, defendants Nos. 5 and 6, brought Execution Case No. 361 of 1903 to enforce payment. The properties comprised in the mortgage and also those which purported to be charged under the compromise were brought to sale on 12th January 1904 and purchased by the decree-holders themselves. The sale certificate was made out on 22nd February 1904 and possession was given to them by the Court on 26th July 1905. On 19th September 1905 Abdul Hakim applied to set aside the sale (Miscellaneous Case No. 177 of 1905). In that case a Solenama was filed on 17th March 1906 (Exhibit B). By that it was agreed that if Abdul Hakim paid to the decree-holders the full amount of the decree within two months, the sale of the mortgaged properties and of the other properties under the terms of the previous compromise should be set aside. If he failed to pay then the sale of the mortgaged properties (lot No. 1) should be confirmed, and for the balance due in excess of the sale-proceeds the properties included in the compromise (i.e., lot No. 2) should be put to sale again. It would appear from the order sheet of Execution Case No. 361 of 1903 that the Court allowed an adjournment of two months, presumably for the compromise to be carried out by payment by the judgment-debtors. It is stated in the written statement of defendants Nos. 5 and 6 that the judgmentdebtor having failed to pay, the sale of the mortgaged properties remained confirmed and that of the remaining properties was cancelled. We adjourned the hearing of this appeal for the production of the order-sheet in Miscellaneous Case No. 177 of 1905 that we might see exactly what orders the Court passed in that matter. It was apparent that the sale of the properties charged having been effected by the Court could only be set aside by an order of Court. The appellant, however, failed to produce the document required. It appears, however, also from the written statement of defendants Nos. 5 and 6 that they again took out execution of the decree (Execution Case No. 191 of 1906) and brought the properties charged and other properties to sale and purchased them themselves on 16th January 1907. That sale was confirmed by the Court on 4th March 1907 and possession given to the decree-holders by the Court on 1st May 1907. The present suit was filed 5 years later on 27th May 1912. It is to be noted that the mortgage, which the plaintiff is now seeking to enforce, was executed on 22nd February 1906, about a month before the compromise petition in Miscellaneous Case No. 177 of 1905. It is expressed to be made, and the money borrowed for the purpose of paying off defendants Nos. 5 and 6 the decree-holders in Suit No. 161 of 1902. The plaintiff must, therefore, be taken to have had notice of the then existing state of facts. What then was the legal position of the parties at that time? It has been argued before us for the plaintiff appellant that no valid charge was created upon the properties, lot No. 2 by the Solenama (Exhibit A) and the decree (Exhibit C). It was urged that to create a valid charge registration of the document creating it was necessary. That is clearly not so. The distinction between a mortgage and a charge under section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act is that in the case of the former there is transfer of the property to the creditor, which requires registration, in the case of the latter there is no such transfer. The debtor only agrees that the property shall be security for the repayment of the debt. It may be conceded that the consent decree of 27th January 1903 could not affect the properties now in question, which were not the subject-matter of that suit, No. 161 of 1902. But there was nothing to prevent the judgment-debtors by agreement from creating a valid charge upon properties outside the suit, and that they undoubtedly purported to do by the petition Exhibit A. It is not, however, necessary to decide as to the validity of the charge. These properties (lot No. 2) were undoubtedly brought to sale by the Court in execution of that decree and sold to the decree-holders. Whether there was a formal attachment or not does not matter, as the sale was with the consent and at the request of the judgment-debtors. This being so, it is clear that all right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors to and in those properties were extinguished on 12th January 1904. When, therefore, Abdul Hakim purported to mortgage these properties to the present plaintiff on 22nd February 1906, it is clear that he had no subsisting interest in them which he could transfer to the plaintiff. If the sale of these properties was subsequently set aside, and Abdul Hakim thus again acquired some interest in those properties, the plaintiff might have claimed that his mortgage should operate on that interest (see section 43, Transfer of Property Act). It is not, however, suggested that he even exercised any such option, and without his having done so the properties were again sold in execution of the decree in Suit No. 161 of 1902 as above stated. Further, defendants Nos. 5 and 6 were undoubtedly transferees in good faith for consideration without notice of the existence of the said option, for it is not suggested that they were at all aware of the plaintiff or of his mortgage. Their rights could not, therefore, in any way have been impaired. I am of opinion that in any view of the case the plaintiff cannot possibly succeed against defendants Nos. 5 and 6. I would accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs, one gold mohur extra being allowed for the second hearing caused by the adjournment.

SMITHER, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 32—'Injunction', meaning of—Order to furnish accounts, whether injunction—Failure to obey order, consequences of.

An injunction is in its essence the grant of a mode of relief consequential upon an infringement of a legal right. It forms part of a decree made at a hearing upon the merits, whereby the defendant is perpetually inhibited from the assertion of a right, or perpetually restrained from the commission of an act contrary to equity and good conscience. [p. 738, cols. 1 & 2.]

A preliminary decree in a suit for accounts directing the defendant to furnish and render accounts is not an "injunction" within the meaning of rule 32 of Order XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure and the failure of the defendant to furnish accounts does not entitle the Court to take proceedings under that section. [p 738, col. 2]

Criminal revision against an order of the Sessions Judge, Cuttack, dated the 12th April 1917, confirming that of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kendrapara, dated the 14th March 1917.

Mr. Brojoraj Choudhury, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Durga Prasanna Das, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

ATKINSON, J.—The petitioners before us were charged with offences under sections 186 and 225B of the Indian Penal Code and they have each been convicted of offences under these sections and sentenced, petitioner No. 3 to two months' and petitioners Nos. 1 and 2 to one month's rigorous imprisonment each.

The facts of the case are very short and may be briefly stated as follows:—

A Zamindar, by name Srimati Pramada Devi, was the plaintiff in a suit in which the petitioner No. 3 was the defendant. The petitioner No. 3 was the Tahsildar of the plaintiff in that suit, which was numbered Suit No. 1 of 1916 The suit was for account as between a principal and an agent and a preliminary decree was granted in that suit on the 10th of June 1916, and by that preliminary decree petitioner No. 3, who was the defendant in the suit, was required within one month from the date of the preliminary decree to furnish and render accounts. The defendant failed within the time specified in the decree to furnish the accounts and consequently it is contended that he was guilty of disobeying the "injunction" granted by the Court and that, therefore, the Court was entitled under Order XXI, rule 32, to take proceedings against the defendant as if the defendant, petitioner No. 3, had been guilty of committing a breach of an "injunction." Everything in the case touching the guilt of the accused depends upon the validity of the order directing the attachment of the petitioner No. 3. If the Court had no power to direct the attachment of the petitioner No. 3, then no offence would have been committed under sections 186 and 225B.

Order XXI, rule 32, re enacts in a revised form section 260 of the old Code of Civil Procedure. The old Code provided that where a party to a decree for specific performance or restitution of conjugal rights or for an order requiring the performance of, or abstention from, any other particular act disobeys or refuses to comply with the order, having had a reasonable opportunity of obeying the decree, then such person would be liable to detention of his person or attachment of his property. Under the old Code it has been held in two cases [Degamber Mozumdar v. Kallynath Roy (1) and Rajhunath v. Ganpati (2)] that under the words "performance of, or abstention from, any other particular act," a party who has been ordered to file accounts and did not do so might be proceeded against under section 260 of the old Civil Procedure Code. But the words "performance of, or abstention from, any other particular act" have been completely eliminated from Order XXI, rule 32, and in lieu thereof the word "injunction" has been substituted. Now it is admitted that the word 'injunction' is not to be used in the narrow sense defined in the Specific Relief Act, but that under the Order and rule cited it has a more extended meaning. The learned

(2) 27 A. 374; A. W. N. (1905) 3.

Vakil who appears on behalf of the prosecution contends that the word is to be used in its ordinary, general and popular sense as if meaning to "order" or "enjoin." I do not think that the learned authors who revised the Code of 1908 used the word "injunction" without a very positive and express intention, or that they did not know that the word injunction had a specific legal meaning, and I think that they intentionally used the word in order to remove the ambiguity which existed by the use of the general term "performance of, or abstention from, any other particular act." No doubt these words were held, in the decisions cited above, to have a very wide general meaning and if the words used in the old section 260 of the Civil Procedure Code had been left unrepealed they might, having regard to the authorities cited, be considered to apply to this case; but I think that it was the intention of the authors of the Code of 1908 to restrict the meaning of the words as used in the old section to the legal term "injunction" as generally known and legally understood. In effect I think it was the intention of the framers of the Code of 1908 to amend the old section 260 so as to overrule the effect of the decisions in Degambar Mozumdar v. Kallynath Roy (1) and Rajhunath v. Ganpati (2), which seemed out of harmony with the general scope and intendment of that section.

It has been contended on behalf of the prosecution before us that every order of a Court requiring a person to do a certain act is an injunction. I cannot for one moment yield to that argument. An injunction has been recognized throughout legal history to have a defined meaning. It is, in its essence, the grant of a mode of relief consequential upon an infringement of a legal right. Where a party has had a right invaded then the Court would interfere; and consequential to a declaration that the party injured has had his right infringed, the Court grants relief by way of injunction restraining the invader from causing further injury. No better definition of the word injunction could be found than that given in Wharton's Law Lexicon, where it is stated that an injunction "forms part of a decree made at a hearing upon the merits, whereby the defendant is perpetually inhibited from the assertion of a right, or perpetually restrained from commission of an act contrary to equity and good conscience." Now we are unable to hold that the order embodied in the decree of the 10th of June 1916 was an order by way of consequential relief following from any declaration of a right that the plaintiff was entitled to in the suit. It was a mere order passed by the Court itself requiring the defendant to do an act to enable the Court to carry out its preliminary decree and do justice between the parties. In no sense was that an order consequential upon the right of the plaintiff to have an account rendered as between himself and the defendant, petitioner No. 3. We cannot give to the word "injunction" the very loose and general meaning which has been contended for by the learned Vakil for the prosecution and which has been sanctioned by the lower Courts. Consequently it appears to us that there was no refusal by the petitioner to obey an injunction issued by the Court within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 32, and no order could, therefore, legally have been passed by reason of the decree of the 10th of June to justify the arrest of the petitioner No. 3. Consequently his arrest was unlawful and illegal and he was not liable to be prosecuted jointly with the other accused, petitioners Nos. 1 and 2, for offences under sections 186 and 225 B of the Indian Penal Code. I, therefore, consider we are bound to set aside the conviction and sentence passed upon the petitioners; and the petitioners, being on bail, are discharged from their bail.

MULLICK, J.—I agree. In my opinion an injunction is a just and convenient remedy for the purpose of protecting or enforcing the legal rights of the parties either as enacted by law or allowed by equity. In the present case the preliminary decree for account was not an injunction in this view of the meaning of the word; and, therefore, the conviction and sentence in my opinion are unsustainable.

Rule made absolute.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Sanction, when can be said to be "given"—Duration of sanction Period of six months, commencement of.

A sanction granted under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code is "given" by the Court which first grants it, and not by the Court which subsequently refuses to revoke it. Hence the period of six months mentioned in section 195, clause (6), for which the sanction is to remain in force, must be computed from the day on which it is "given" by the Court which first grants it, and not from the date of the refusal of a superior Court to revoke it. [p. 739, col. 2; p. 740, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Meerut, dated the 3rd November 1917.

Mr. A. H. O. Hamilton, for the Applicant.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case it appears that sanction was granted to a litigant in the Revenue Court to prosecute the opposite party for alleged offences under section 471 and other sections of the Indian Penal Code. The sanction was granted on the 1st of November 1915 by an Assistant Collector. On the 11th of May 1916 this sanction was set aside, on the technical ground that the Assistant Collector who had granted sanction had no jurisdiction to do so. The High Court held that the Additional District Judge was wrong and sent the case back, with the result that the Additional District Judge held that a prima facie case had been made out why the opposite party should be prosecuted and he accordingly refused the application to revoke the sanction given by the Assistant Collector. A considerable time had elapsed in the meantime, and in July 1917 a criminal complaint was lodged. This was met with the objection that the sanction was out of date and that, therefore, the Court could not take cognizance of the offence. This objection found favour with the Court before which the complaint was filed, but the Sessions Judge held that the sanction was still in force—whereupon the opposite party applied in revision to this Court. A learned Judge considering the matter of some importance has referred the question to a Bench of two Judges.

Section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure provides that no Court shall take cognizance of certain offences committed under certain circumstances without the previous sanction therein referred to. Clause (6) is as follows:—"Any sanction given or refused under this section may be revoked or granted by any authority to which the authority giving or refusing it is subordinate and no sanction shall remain in force for more than six months from the date on which it was given, provided that the High Court may, for good cause shown, extend the time." In the present case the High Court has never been asked, nor has it granted, any extension of time. The question which we have to decide is whether under the circumstances of the present case it can be said that the sanction was still in force. If we hold that the sanction was "given" on the 1st of November 1915, it is clearly long since out of date. On the other hand if we hold that the sanction was "given" after the case had gone back to the Additional District Judge and he had refused the application to revoke the sanction granted by the Assistant Collector, then the prosecution was begun within time. We think it is impossible to hold on the clear meaning of the words of clause (6) of section 195 that the sanction can possibly be said to have been "given" by the Additional District Judge. The application before him simply was an application to revoke sanction which had been previously granted, and his order was to refuse to revoke that sanction. It may be said that the opposite party by taking proceedings can always use up the whole six months in applications to the Court and thus make the sanction of no avail. There are two answers to this. In the first place, if a party to whom sanction has been given chooses to take advantage of that sanction and lodges his complaint, then he will be able to continue the prosecution notwithstanding any applications that the other side may make. It is possible that the Court might stay the prosecution pending the decision of an application to revoke the sanction, but the prosecution would nevertheless have been begun within time. In the second place, there is an express power given to the High Court to extend the time for good cause shown. Our attention has been called to two cases of the Madras High Court. In In re Muthukudam Pillai (1) a Bench of two Judges expressly held that the sanction in a case like the present is "given" by the Court who first granted it, and not by the Court who subsequently refused to revoke the sanction. A different view was taken by a Bench of the same High Court in Muthuswami Mudali v. Veeni Chetti (2) and in a more recent case, Public Prosecutor v. Eaver Unithiri (3). We prefer to follow the earlier ruling of two Judges. The result is that we allow the application, set aside the order of the Sessions Judge and restore that of the Court of first instance.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 403—Acquittal on charge under s. 465 of the Penal Code, whether prevents subsequent trial for offence under s 467—Penal Code Act XLV of 1860, ss 465, 467.

A person tried and acquitted on a charge under section 465, Indian Penal Code, may on the same facts be committed to the Court of Session for trial for an offence under section 467 on the allegation of the prosecution that the document said to have been forged is a valuable security Such a case clearly falls within the purview of section 403, clause 4, Criminal Procedure Code [p. 740, col. 2.]

Rule against an order of the District Magistrate.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Mr. Orr, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.—Section 403 (4), Criminal Procedure Code, shows that a person acquitted of any particular offence may, in circumstances like this, be charged with and tried for any other offence. The petitioner can, therefore, be tried for an offence under section 467, Indian Penal Code, although he was previously tried by the Magistrate under section 465, Indian Penal Code, and acquitted.

Moulvi A. K. Fazlal Huq (with him Babus Atindra Nath Mukerjee and Gagan Chand Boral), for the Petitioner.—The trial of the accused upon exactly the same facts upon which he was acquitted in a previous trial is bad in law, and so the commitment by the Magistrate to the Court of Session cannot be made on the same facts on which the accused was tried on a previous occasion and acquitted. The words "any other offence" in section 403, Criminal Procedure Code, mean any other distinct offence, and not merely an aggravated form of the same offence. The case, therefore, does not fall within the purview of section 403 (4), Criminal Procedure Code. Referred to King-Emperor v. Ayyan (1), Ganapathi Bhatta v. Emperor (2), Queen-Empress v. Gundya (3).

JUDGMENT.—This Rule was granted to the petitioner calling on the District Magistrate to show cause why the commitment of the petitioner should not be set aside, on the ground that the trial of the accused upon exactly the same facts upon which he was acquitted in a previous trial was bad in law. We asked the Deputy Legal Remembrancer to assist us in this matter and he has shown cause. After hearing the parties we think that the case clearly falls within the purview of section 403 (4), Criminal Procedure Code. The petitioner was tried by the Magistrate under section 465, Indian Penal Code, and acquitted. He was there charged on exactly the same facts, namely, with the same forgery of the same document which is now alleged by the prosecution to be a valuable security and the offence with regard to which will fall under section 467, Indian Penal Code. The illustrations to section 403 show that a person acquitted or convicted in such circumstances may be charged with and tried for the other offence. The case of King-Emperor v. Ayyan (1) does not really assist the petitioner in any way; on the contrary, it is against him. It is unnecessary for us to decide whether the first trial was wholly void or not, or whether the document is in fact, a valuable security falling within section 467 Indian Penal Code. As to this it is sufficient to say that the prosecution allege it to be so, and that is the offence for which the petitioner will now be tried. We accordingly discharge the Rule.

Rule discharged.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss 145, 435 (3), 503—Proceedings under s. 145—Revision—High Court, power of interference of—Previous trial, whether bar to proceedings.

An order passed under the provisions of section 145 and proceedings under Chapter XII of the Code of Criminal Procedure is not subject to revision in view of the terms of section 435 (3) of the Code. But that section does not deprive the High Court of jurisdiction unless the proceedings are in fact, and not merely in name, proceedings under Chapter XII of the Code. [p. 741, col. 2.]

Proceedings under section 145 do not constitute a trial and are not in the nature of a trial. They are in the nature of Police proceedings in order to prevent the commission of offences, and the fact that there have been criminal charges brought by one or other of the parties against each other so far from being a bar to action under Chapter XII constitutes evidence which may possibly prove the danger of disputes which it is desired to prevent. [p. 741, col. 2, p. 742, col. 1.]

Where it was found that one of the parties to a proceeding under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure had already been prosecuted and acquitted under section 447 of the Penal Code:

Held, that this was no bar to the proceedings. [p. 741, col. 2.]

Mr. Vasudevan, for the Applicant.

Mr. Mitter, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Madaya, passed, or purporting to be passed, under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

It is objected that an order passed under the provisions of that section and proceedings under Chapter XII of the Code of Criminal Procedure are not subject to revision in view of the terms of section 435, clause 3, of the Code. This is no doubt the case, but that section does not deprive the High Court of jurisdiction, unless the proceedings are in fact, and not merely in name, proceedings under Chapter XII of the Code of Criminal Procedure. There is a very general consensus of opinion of the High Courts in India on this point, see, for instance, Jhingai Singh v. Ram Pratap (1) and In re Pandurang Govind Pujari (2). Here there was an application by a person alleging possession of certain land, that his possession was being interfered with by certain persons and that there was likely to be a breach of the peace. The Magistrate upon this in the diary recorded an order: "I think I should take action under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. Issue notices to respondents to put in written statements." A written statement was put in and the Magistrate, then without further enquiry, held that one of the respondents and one other person having been prosecuted and acquitted under section 447 of the Indian Penal Code, under section 403 of the Code of Criminal Procedure he and the other respondents were not liable to be tried again in respect of the same subject-matter, and he dismissed the application.

The order was clearly wrong. Proceedings under section 145 do not constitute a trial and are not in the nature of a trial. They are in the nature of Police proceedings in order to prevent the commission of offences, and the fact that there have been criminal charges brought by one or other of the parties against each other, so far from being a bar to action under Chapter XII, constitutes evidence which may possibly prove the danger of disputes which it is desired to prevent.

The order of the Magistrate is set aside and he is directed to proceed according to law, that is to say, to follow the procedure laid down in section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and pass orders.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss 99, 147—Right of private defence, against public servant—Rioting—Warrant, defective execution of—Assault on Police—Offence.

Two persons were accused under section 498 of the Penal Code of the abduction of one K. The Magistrate, intending to act under section 90 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, ordered the issue of a warrant for the arrest of K. By mistake, however, the warrant stated that K. herself was charged with an offence under section 498. The officer, to whom the warrant was made over for execution, went with some constables to the village of K. and on her failure to furnish bail arrested her and had taken her a short distance from the village, when the accused rescued K. and inflicted injuries on the Police:

Held, that the accused were guilty of an offence under section 147 of the Penal Code, the common object being to rescue K., the causing of hurt to the Police being a necessary incident of the rescue and, therefore, a part of the common object. [p. 742, col. 2; p. 743, col. 1.]

Petition for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, Amritsar, dated the 26th April 1917.

Messrs. Beechey and Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Dalip Singh, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The facts out of which this revision has arisen are briefly as follows:—

One Attar Singh lodged a complaint against Chatar Singh and another under section 498, alleging that Musammat Karmon, his daughter-in-law, had been abducted from his custody by the two persons named. The Magistrate before whom the case was pending ordered the issue of a warrant for the arrest of Musammat Karmon, apparently intending to act under section 90 of the Criminal Procedure Code. By an error in the office the warrant was drawn up in the wrong form and stated that Musammat Karmon herself was charged with an offence under section 498, Indian Penal Code. This warrant was made over to Dil Muhammad, Head Constable, who went with other constables to Mauza Koharka to execute it. The story as told by Dil Muhammad is that he showed the warrant to Musammat Karmon and told her that it was a bailable one. Bail was not furnished and certain of the petitioners, who were present, advised the woman to run away. Whereupon Dil Muhammad arrested her and with his posse of Police had taken her to a distance of about 200 kadams from the village when a large concourse of people assembled, amongst whom were the present petitioners, who took away the woman from their custody inflicting certain injuries on the Police. The petitioners were sent up for trial under sections 147, 332 and 225, Indian Penal Code, and were convicted and sentenced under those sections. On appeal the learned Sessions Judge held that sections 332 and 225, Indian Penal Code, were inapplicable inasmuch as the warrant was defective, but held that section 147, Indian Penal Code, applied, the common object of the appellants being to rescue Musammat Karmon and the causing of hurt to the constables being a necessary incident of the forcible taking away of the woman from the custody of the Police. Relying on Emperor v. Gaman (1) he, therefore, maintained the convictions and sentences under section 147, Indian Penal Code. The petitioners have now moved this Court on the revision side through Mr. Beechey who has addressed me on their behalf, and I have heard Mr. Dalip Singh on behalf of the Crown.

For the petitioners Mr. Beechey urged that inasmuch as the warrant was not only defective but was beyond the jurisdiction of the Magistrate altogether, the petitioners were not guilty of any offence whatever and were perfectly within their rights in rescuing Musammat Karmon from the custody of the Police. In support of his contention he has referred me to various rulings, the most important of which is the one reported as Binu Haldar v. Probhat Chunder (2). In this case a person had applied under section 100, Criminal Procedure Code, for a search warrant and the Magistrate issued a warrant under section 96, Criminal Procedure Code. The Police acting under that warrant were resisted by the petitioners in that case, who used force and violence. It was held that the issue of the warrant under section 96 of the Code was wholly illegal and, therefore, the warrant was invalid, and further that the words "not strictly justifiable by law" under section 99, Indian Penal Code, referred to cases where there is an excess of jurisdiction as distinct from a complete absence of jurisdiction and that, therefore, the resistance offered did not come within the terms of the first paragraph of section 99, Indian Penal Code.

On the other hand Mr. Dalip Singh has laid stress on the ruling of this Court relied on by the learned Sessions Judge, Emperor v. Gaman (1), in which the facts were as follows:—One Fateh Ali, alleging that his wife had been concealed and wrongfully confined in the house of one Gama, applied to a Magistrate for the issue of a search warrant under section 100, Criminal Procedure Code. The application was granted and a warrant was issued, but was defective in that the name and designation of the Police Officer who was to execute the warrant was inadvertently omitted. When the warrant reached the Police Station, the Sub-Inspector to whom it had been endorsed was absent and the Head Constable who was for the time being in charge proceeded to Gama's house to execute the warrant accompanied by a constable and others. In exection of the warrant the woman was found and apprehended with a view to her being produced in Court. Gama raised a cry for help, whereupon fourteen persons went to his assistance and took the woman away by force. The Police Officer received injuries. It was held that although no conviction could be had under section 225 (b) and section 332, Indian Penal Code, if the prosecution could establish that hurt was caused and that the causing of hurt was the common object of the rescuers, the rescuers would be liable to punishment under section 147 if there were more than five persons, and under section 323 if there were less than that number. Mr. Beechey has on the strength of the Calcutta ruling referred to above sought to differentiate this ruling from the facts of the present case, by urging that in Emperor v. Gaman (1) the Magistrate had been acting within his jurisdiction in issuing the warrant and that that was merely defective, whereas in the present case the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to issue the warrant at all. It seems to me, however, that the Calcutta ruling is not quite on all fours with the present case, for in that case the execution of the warrant had been resisted whereas in the present case the warrant had, as a matter of fact, been executed and Musammat Karmon was being taken away by the Police in order to her production before the Magistrate and the question, therefore, arises whether the present petitioners were justified in using criminal force to remove her from the custody of the Police. In my opinion the protection afforded by section 99, Indian Penal Code, to a public servant refers to the public servant actually doing a specific act and that so long as he is acting in good faith under colour of his office, he is protected from assault though the act may not be strictly justifiable by law. In the present case the Police were possessed of a warrant under which they were acting and, therefore, although resistance to the execution of that warrant was not unjustifiable, I do not think that the petitioners can be held to be entitled to assault and injure the Police in the manner they have done in this case. In rescuing Musammat Karmon every one of these concerned must have been perfectly well aware that violence would have to be used and that hurt would in all probability be caused before they could attain their object. I, therefore, think that the learned Sessions Judge is right in holding that the causing of hurt was a necessary incident of the rescue and, therefore, formed a part of the common object. I, therefore, maintain the convictions but in the circumstances reduce the sentences passed on the petitioners to that already undergone. Petitioners will be discharged from their bail bond.

Sentences reduced.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 101-B OF 1916.

November 29, 1916.

RADHAKISAN—APPLICANT

versus

THE SECRETARY, MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, AMRAOTI—NON APPLICANT.

Berar Municipal Law of 1886, ss. 85, 86, 116, 130, 133, 138, 151—Application for permission to build, no order passed on, effect of—Steps and balcony projecting over street—Encroachment—Notice to remove obstruction, necessity of—Notice to show cause, whether notice to remove—Daily fine, when can be imposed—Rules 10 and 30 framed under s. 116, whether ultra vires

Accused applied to the Municipal Committee, Amraoti, for sanction to build a house, but no order was passed on the application within one month by the Committee. The applicant built steps over a road-side drain and a balcony eleven feet high projecting over it without the written permission of the Committee. The latter issued a notice to the former to show cause why the balcony and steps should not be removed and why he should not be prosecuted. The applicant was then prosecuted on a complaint made by the Secretary duly authorised by a resolution of the Committee and was convicted of two offences, one in respect of the steps and the other in respect of the balcony, under rule 10 read with rule 30 of the rules framed under section 16 of the Berar Municipal Law and fined Rs. 25 on each count The steps and the balcony were ordered to be removed within eight days, on failure of which he was ordered to pay a continuing daily fine of Re. 1:

Held, that the notice to show cause was not a notice to remove the obstruction as required by section 86 (2) of the Berar Municipal Law. [p. 746, col 1.]

Section 86, sub-section (2) contemplates a notice issued personally to an individual. [p. 746, col. 1.]

Section 85 of the Berar Municipal Law merely requires a person intending to erect or re-erect any building to give written notice of his intention to the Committee, but the mere fact that such a permission was applied for and no order prohibiting the errection was passed within one month does not place the applicant in the same position as if written permission was accorded to him by the Committee as required by section 86. So far as the encroachments dealt with by section 86 are concerned, they are not in themselves punishable though declared unlawful by that section, but it is the disobedience to the order of the Committee for their removal under section 130 which has been made punishable. [p. 745, cols. 1 & 2; p. 746, col. 1.]

A balcony eleven feet above the level of a street is not an encroachment within the meaning of section 132 of the Berar Municipal Law. [p. 746, col. 1.]

Section 133 of the Berar Municipal Law makes an encroachment punishable without a notice of removal being issued to the offender. That section does not, however, justify a daily fine but only allows a fine which may extend to Rs. 50. [p 746, col. 1.]

The policy of the Berar Municipal Law is not to authorise a daily fine except in cases of contumacy, that is, disobedience of a lawful order. [p. 747, col. 1.]

All that section 151 of the Berar Municipal Law lays down is that a Court shall not take cognizance of an offence under the Berar Municipal Law, except on the complaint of the Committee or of some person authorised by the Committee in their behalf. The complaint need not specify the section or rule of the Berar Municipal Law which has been broken It need only state the facts and it is for the Court to decide under what section or rule an offence has been committed. [p. 746, cols. 1 & 2.]

When a Statute expressly deals with any matter and lays down certain procedure, it is not competent to a Corporation to repeal any of the provisions of the Act under which power to make rules has been given. [p. 748. col. 1]

The rules framed under section 116 of the Berar Municipal Law must be consistent with the Act. The effect of rule 10 framed under section 116 of the Berar Municipal Law is to do away with the notice required by section 138, and the rule is, therefore, ultra vires. [p. 748, col. 1.]

Revision against the order of the First Class Magistrate, Amraoti, dated the 12th September 1916, in Criminal Appeal No. 51 of 1916, dated the 12th September 1916.

The Hon'ble Mr. M. V. Joshi, for the Applicant.

Mr. G V. Deshmukh, for the Non Applicant.

ORDER.—The applicant has been convicted of two offences under rule 10 read with rule 30 of the rules framed under section 116 of the Berar Municipal Law, 1886. On the 7th July 1915 he applied for sanction for building and submitted the usual plans with specifications. No orders were passed within one month by the Municipal Committee, Amraoti. It is admitted that the applicant has built steps over a roadside drain and a balcony projecting over it without the written permission of the Committe. On the 25th of September 1915 a notice was issued to the applicant to show cause why the balcony and the steps shall not be removed and why he shall not be prosecuted. What happened on the date fixed for the appearance of the applicant before the Committee is not clear from the record. No further notice was sent to the applicant. and the prosecution has been started upon a complaint made by the Secretary who was duly authorised by a resolution of the Committee, dated the 31st of October 1915, Exhibit P 3. This resolution sets out the facts of the case and recites that the applicant cannot be successfully prosecuted so far as section 85 was concerned, as no orders were passed by the Committee within one month. But as regards the steps and balcony projecting over the drain, his prosecution under rule 10 read with rule 30 of the building rules was sanctioned. A Bench of Honorary Magistrates convicted him of two offences, one in respect of the steps and fined him Rs. 25, and one in respect of the balcony for which there was a fine of Rs. 25. The steps and the balcony have been ordered to be removed within eight days, and if he fails to do so he is to pay a continuing daily fine of Re. 1. He appealed to the First Class Magistrate of Amraoti invested with appellate powers. His appeal has been dismissed, and this application for revision has been filed by him.

It is argued that, as the applicant gave a notice as required by section 85 of the Berar Municipal Law, 1886, and as no objection was raised by the Committee within one month, he is not guilty of any offence at all under section 86. Section 85 merely requires a person intending to erect or re-erect any building to give written notice of his intention to the Committee. Every owner of land has a right to build over his own land, but in a Municipal town he must comply with the regulations for building. Section 85 merely requires a communication of an intention to build. The mere fact that the applicant asked for permission to build with steps over the drain and a projecting balcony and no order prohibiting the erection was passed within one month, does not place him in the same position as if he had obtained the written permission of the Committee. Section 86 says: "(1) It shall not be lawful, unless with the written permission of the Committee, for the owner or occupier of any building in a street to add to, or place against or in front of, the building any projection or structure overhanging, projecting into, or encroaching on the street, or into, or on any drain, sewer or aqueduct therein. (2) The Committee may, by notice, require the owner or occupier of any building to remove or alter any projection, encroachment or obstruction built or placed against, or in front thereof, if the same overhangs or projects into, or encroaches on any street, or projects into, or encroaches on any drain, aqueduct or sewer in the street." It is urged that section 86 refers to existing buildings and not to proposed buildings. But I can see no ground for making any such distinction. The acts of the applicant in erecting the steps over the drain and erecting a balcony, were, therefore, not lawful.

The sub-section (2) of section 86 says that the Committee may, by notice, require the owner or occupier of any building to remove the encroachment. I am using the word to include the various kinds of tort prohibited by section 86 (1). It is urged on behalf of the Committee that this merely authorises it to issue notice for the removal of the encroachment, but the Committee is not bound to do so. This is perfectly correct. But although section 86 declares the act to be not lawful, yet a person cannot be punished unless his case comes under section 188, which lays down that whoever disobeys any lawful directions given by the Committee by public notice lawfully issued by it under the powers conferred upon it by Chapter VI, or any written notice lawfully issued by it under the powers so conferred, or fails to comply with the conditions subject to which any permission was given by the Committee to him under those powers shall, if the disobedience or omission is not an offence punishable under any other section, be punished with fine, which may extend to fifty rupees and, in the case of a continuing breach, with a further fine which may extend to five rupees for every day after the first during which the breach continues. It is clear that, so far as the encroachments dealt with by section 86 are concerned, they are not in themselves punishable; but it is the disobedience to orders of the Committee for their removal which has been made punishable.

I have now to consider whether any notice such as is contemplated by section 138 was issued. The only notice on the record is that contained in Exhibit P-1, dated the 25th of September 1915. It does not ask for the removal of the encroachment, but only calls upon the applicant to show cause why the encroachment shall not be removed. The disobedience to the notice to show cause is not punishable. I hold that there was no such notice as is contemplated by section 86 (2). The first part of section 138 refers to lawful directions given by the Committee by public notice under the powers conferred upon it by Chapter VI, and it is suggested on behalf of the Municipality that the rules framed by the Committee amount to a public notice. I cannot agree with this contention. It is clear that this part of section 138 refers to such matters as are dealt with in sections 87, 91, 92 and so forth. It has nothing to do with a notice such as is contemplated by section 86, sub-section (2), that is, a notice issued personally to an individual.

So far as the steps over the drain are concerned, the applicant is, in my opinion, guilty of an offence under section 133. I hold that such an erection amounts to an encroachment upon a street or drain. But a balcony eleven feet above the level of the street is not an encroachment on it within the meaning of section 133. Section 133 makes an encroachment punishable without a notice of removal being issued to the offender. This section does not, however, justify a daily fine of Re. 1, but only allows a fine which may extend to Rs. 50.

It is urged that the prosecution was not sanctioned under section 133 and that, therefore, the applicant cannot be convicted under that section. Reliance is placed upon section 151 of the Berar Municipal Law. All that that section lays down is that a Court shall not take cognisance of an offence under the Berar Municipal Law, except on the complaint of the Committee or of some person authorised by the Committee in this behalf. The complaint need not specify the section or rule of the Berar Municipal Law which has been broken. It need only state the facts, and it is for the Court to decide under what section or rule an offence has been committed. It is true that the Committee has in the present case, in addition to stating the acts complained of, specified certain rules under which, in its opinion, an offence has been committed. The law does not require the Committee to give its opinion on this point. Any such opinion on a question of law may be ignored.

There remains for me to consider whether an offence has been committed under rule 10 read with rule 30 of the rules framed under section 116, published in the Central Provinces Gazette Notification No. 1253, dated the 3rd December 1910. It is urged that rule 10 is ultra vires. Rule 10 lays down that no steps or projections shall be built over the roadside drains without the special permission in writing of the Committee. It is merely a paraphrase in popular language of what has been laid down by section 86 of the Berar Municipal Law. This rule cannot obviously restrict the operation of section 86. Rule 10 read with rule 30 makes this class of encroachments punishable on conviction before a Magistrate with a fine not exceeding Rs. 50, and when the breach is a continuing breach with a further fine, which may extend to Rs. 5 for every day upto the last during which the breach continues. The effect of rule 10 is to do away with the notice required by section 138 for the punishment of an act declared to be not lawful by section 86, sub-clause (1).

In this connection I may refer to the case of Nokes v. Islington Borough Council (1). A bye-law made by the London County Council was held unreasonable and bad, because it contained no provision for giving any notice to the person complained against before the commencement of proceedings. In Nokes v. Islington Borough Council (1), Lord Alverstone is reported to have said: "I think that a bye-law which does not provide that a notice shall be given to a person before such a penalty can be enforced against him is bad." A perusal, however, of the judgment, as reported in the authorised law report, will shew that the Lord Chief Justice was not laying down a rule of universal application, but was only thinking of the particular bye-law before him. In Ramantar Sahu v. Arrah Municipal Board (2) the point might have been raised, but was not.

Since the decision of the Privy Council in Slattery v. Naylor (3) the Courts in England have been somewhat reluctant to interfere with bye-laws passed by local authorities. In Kruse v. Johnson (4), which was the decision of a Special Court composed of seven Judges (Methew, J., dissenting), Lord Russell of Killowen says: "Surely it is not too much to say that, in matters which directly and mainly concern the people of the County, who have the right to choose those whom they think best fitted to represent them in their local Government bodies, such representatives may be trusted to understand their own requirements better than Judges" (page 786 of the L. J. Report). I may, therefore, concede that it is not necessarily unreasonable to punish without notice a person who commits trespass over public property. There is a safeguard in the rule that a Magistrate's jurisdiction is ousted where there is a bona fide claim of right and there is a further safeguard in the provisions of section 151, which lays down that no prosecution for such an offence shall be instituted except on the complaint of the Committee.

An examination of Chapter VII shows that certain offences are made punishable without notice. Section 133 is an example. The maximum punishment in no case exceeds Rs. 50. A continuing daily fine is only allowed by section 125 when a notice has been issued, and by section 126 when there is a disregard of any orders which the Committee may have given. The policy of the Act is not to authorise a daily fine except in cases of contumacy, that is, disobedience of a lawful order. To quote again from Lord Russell of Killowen: "I do not mean to say that there may not be cases in which it would be the duty of the Court to condemn bye-laws made under such authority as these were made as invalid, because unreasonable. But unreasonable in what sense? If, for instance, they were found to be partial and unequal in their operation as between different classes, if they were manifestly unjust, if they disclosed bad faith, if they involved such oppressive or gratuitous interference with the rights of those subject to them as could find no justification in the minds of reasonable men, the Court might well say Parliament never intended to give authority to make such rules; they are unreasonable and ultra vires. But it is in this sense and in this sense only, as I conceive, that the question of unreasonableness can properly be regarded."

The lower Courts are wrong in interpreting rule 30 and section 138 of the Berar Act. The words are the same as in section 122 of Act XVIII of 1889 as pointed out by Stivens, J. C., in Empress v. Gangaram (5) and Municipal Committee v. Dadu Halwai (6), the continuing breach contemplated is a past breach and not a possible future breach, which cannot be the subject matter of a charge and conviction [In re Limbaji Tulsiram (7)]. As there is no period of limitation fixed for the prosecution of such offences, an offender's fine would depend upon the date on which he first committed the trespass and the power of the Magistrate in the matter of fines.

In the present Central Provinces Municipal Act, it is not the continuance of the breach but the persistence in it, which has been made punishable by a continuing daily fine [vide sections 105 (2), 139 of Act XVI of 1903]. Such examination of the Municipal Acts in other parts of India as I have been able to make confirms my view that the Legislature meant to reserve the punishment of a daily fine for cases of what may be called contumacy. A bye-law imposing a continuing daily fine in the absence of a notice or warning appears to me to be so oppressive and so opposed to the policy of the Act that rule 33, in this respect, can scarcely be regarded as intra vires.

As regards rule 10, I have come to the conclusion that it is ultra vires. When a Statute expressly deals with any matter and lays down certain procedure, it is not competent to a Corporation to repeal any of the provisions of the Act under which power to make rules has been given. The rules framed under section 116 must be consistent with the Act. The power to repeal any of the provisions of the Act cannot be said to have been authorised by the Act. I have already pointed out that rule 10 dispenses with the giving of a notice prior to proceedings being taken against the offender and is, therefore, inconsistent with the express provisions of the Act.

As pointed out by Channell, J., in Gentel v. Rapps (8): "If, for example, a Statute provided that it should be an offence to travel without a railway ticket with intent to defraud, a bye-law which reiterated that provision with a similar penalty but omitted the words 'with intent to defraud' would no doubt be repugnant to the Statute." Here the Municipal Act says that disobedience to the orders of the Committee for the removal of an encroachment should be punished, but the bye-law makes the trespass itself punishable, and that too with a daily fine for the period during which it has continued.

The result is, the conviction of the applicant for the offence in respect of the balcony is set aside. The conviction in respect of the steps over the drain is altered to one under section 133, and the fine of Rs. 25 maintained. The orders for the removal of the encroachment and the future daily fine of one rupee are set aside.

Conviction altered.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 34 OF 1918.

February 8, 1918.

Present:—Justice Sir Ali Imam, KT.

CHADHARI AHIR AND ANOTHER—SECOND PARTY—PETITIONERS

RAJA RAM SINGH—FIRST PARTY—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898) ss. 145 (3), 148 (3)—Proceedings under s. 145 started in presence of parties—Notice, whether necessary—Costs, order as to Delay in making order, effect of.

During the course of proceedings under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Magistrate intimated to the parties his intention to draw up proceedings under section 145 of the Code. On the following day he drew up proceedings under the latter section in the presence of the parties, who thereafter filed their written statements and adduced evidence in support of their respective cases:

Held, that the Magistrate was not guilty of any irregularity in proceeding with the case as he did and that the proceedings were not vitiated by want of formal notice to the parties. [p. 750, col. 1.]

An order for costs under section 148 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code, made ten days after an order under section 145 (6) of the Code, is not illegal by reason of the delay in passing it. [p. 750, col. 2.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Magistrate, First Class, Arrah (Shahabad), dated the 18th December 1917.

FACTS.—On the 3rd of August 1917 the first party filed an application in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Officer at Arrah, alleging that his master had purchased the land in dispute in execution of a rent decree and that the second party had got their names registered in the survey proceeding in 1911 with regard to the land and that they were ready to commit a breach of the peace. The Sub-Divisional Officer ordered the Police to enquire and report. On receipt of the Police report the Magistrate issued notice to the parties under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code. On the 14th of September 1917 the Magistrate ordered in the presence of both parties that a proceeding under section 145 should be drawn up and attached the subject-matter of dispute pending the decision of the matter. The proceeding under section 145 was drawn up, but was not actually served on the parties. The parties, however, appeared, filed written statements, and adduced witnesses on the date of hearing. On the 8th of December 1917 the learned Magistrate delivered judgment, declaring the first party to be in possession of the land in dispute. On 14th December 1917 the first party applied for costs. After giving due notice to the opposite party the Magistrate awarded costs to the first party on the 18th of December 1917. The second party moved the High Court in revision.

Mr. Akbari (with him Mr. S. N. Palit), for the Petitioners, contended that the entire proceeding was void as the provisions of sub-clause 3 of section 145 had not been complied with. The Magistrate should have served the proceeding drawn up on the applicants. No service having been effected the proceeding was vitiated for want of proper notice. He further contended that the order of the Magistrate awarding costs to the first party was without jurisdiction. He should have passed the order on the date of passing the order as to possession in this case. The order as to costs having been passed on a subsequent date was illegal and without jurisdiction.

Mr. Parmeshwor Dyal (with him Mr. Shiveswar Dayal), for the Opposite Party, contended that the proceeding under section 145 having been drawn up in the presence of the parties, no notice of the proceeding was required to be formally served. The parties were not only cognisant of the proceeding drawn up, but on subsequent dates they actually appeared, filed written statements and produced witnesses in support of the case on the date of hearing. The object of giving notice of the proceeding under clause 3 of the section was to enable the parties to appear in the Court and place their case before it. The parties in the present case having appeared and conducted their case, the object of the section was fulfilled. The want of formal service of notice was a mere irregularity which did not vitiate the proceeding as ultra vires. He relied on Sukh Lal Sheikh v. Tara Chand Ta (1), Khosh Mahomed Sirkar v. Nazir Mahomed (2), Chinnappudayan, In the matter of (3).

(1) 33 C. 68; 2 C. L. J. 241; 9 C. W. N. 1046; 2 Cr. L. J. 618 (F. B).

(3) 30 M. 548; 3 M. L. T. 18; 7 Cr. L. J. 28.

It was not necessary for the Magistrate to pass an order as to costs on the date of passing the order as to possession. The Magistrate was competent to pass the order as to costs on some subsequent date. The order as to possession was passed on the 8th of December and that of costs on the 18th. The delay of 10 days was not unreasonable. He relied on Binoda Sundari Chowdhurani v. Kali Kristo Pal Chowdhury (4), Dowlat Koer v. Siva Pershad (5), Bansi Singh v. Mahammad Akbar Ali (6), Vythianada Tambiran v. Mayandi Chetty (7).

Mr. Akbari replied.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners, who are the second party in this case, assail the jurisdiction exercised by the Magistrate who dealt with this case on three grounds.

The first ground is that the proceedings were void because the provisions of sub-clause 3 of section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure were not complied with.

The second ground is that it was not open to the Trying Magistrate to rely upon the delivery of possession given to the first party two years before he passed his order.

The third ground refers only to costs, the objection taken with reference to this being that the order as to costs was not passed at the time that the decision regarding possession was given in this case, but that on a subsequent date the order for costs having been passed was an illegal one.

In regard to the first point it appears that the proceedings were originally initiated in this case under section 144 of the Code and that after the matter under this section had proceeded for a time, the learned Magistrate on the 19th of September 1917 intimated to the parties his intention to draw up proceedings under section 145 of the Code. On the 20th, that is the day following, the Magistrate drew up proceedings in the presence of the parties.

It is contended by the learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the petitioners that this was not sufficient; that the Magistrate should have served the proceedings upon his clients in the manner provided for in Chapter VI of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Sections 68 and 69 of that Code are germane to this point raised by the learned Counsel. There is nothing in these two sections to show that the action taken by the learned Magistrate in drawing up proceedings under section 145 in the presence of the parties was ultra vires of the provisions contained in them. I am, therefore, of opinion that no legal ground exists for the contention that the service of the proceedings on the parties was not effected in a legal manner. Moreover, the parties had due and sufficient cognizance of the contents of the proceedings, not only because they were present before the Magistrate, but also because on the next day when the case was taken up they were present and because on the date subsequent to that, they actually filed their written statements in the case. In fact they were present right through and had hotly contested the case before the Magistrate. On the authority, therefore, of Sukh Lal Sheikh v. Tara Chand Tu (1), as well as other rulings that have been referred to before me, the irregularity, even if it was so, would be regarded not as an illegality committed by the Magistrate; but I hold in this case that in fact the Magistrate was not guilty of any irregularity in proceeding with the case as he did.

The next question regarding the value of the delivery of possession requires an examination of some dates. It appears that one Sureba Kuer was the registered tenant of the holding which is the subject of this case. Her landlord proceeded against her and obtained a rent-decree. The first party are the auction-purchasers in the execution of the decree that was passed on the 21st February 1908. The delivery of possession took place in 1915. It appears that after the passing of the decree Musammat Sureba Kuer, the registered tenant, apprehended the sale of the holding and the consequent dispossession. In 1912 the Record of Rights was published and it appears that the name of her grandson was entered as a tenant. Mr. Akbari appearing on behalf of the second party contends that the presumption arising out of the Record of Rights should have been sufficient for the Magistrate to hold that the possession of the grandson continued. I find from the order of the learned Magistrate that the question had engaged his attention. He rightly holds in his judgment that with a view to avoid the rent-decree Sureba Kuer got the name of her grandson entered in the survey papers. The presumption on which the learned Counsel relies is a presumption which must be considerably negatived by the delivery of possession, which took place subsequent to the publication of the Record of Rights; but it is contended that this delivery of possession was only a symbolical delivery of possession. Regard being had to the fact that the sale was in execution of a rent-decree, regard being had to the fact that nothing has been shown before me as to how I am to hold that that delivery of possession was a mere symbolical possession and not actual and regard being had to the fact that there is a distinct finding by the Magistrate that it was through the Civil Court that the first party got possession of the land in dispute, I am unable to hold that the presumption arising from the Record of Rights has not been completely disestablished. The Magistrate has come to the distinct finding that the delivery of possession was not a paper transaction as has been contended by the second party. I am, therefore, unable to accept the proposition that it has been proved that this delivery of possession was a symbolical one.

On the question of costs the point seems to be concluded by authority. In the present instance the order for costs was passed only 10 days after the order recording possession was given. This delay is not by any means a delay which is not permitted by the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure. This view has received acceptance in various cases. Among them are Doulut Koer v. Siva Pershad (5) and Vythinada Tambiran v. Mayandi Chetty (7).

In the circumstances of the case nothing has been placed before me to show that the exercise of jurisdiction by the Magistrate in this case was not a proper one. The petition is rejected.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 437—Further enquiry - Notice to accused, whether necessary—Procedure.

A District Magistrate is not bound in law to issue any notice on the accused before ordering a further enquiry under section 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but the exercise of discretion in favour of issuing a notice is considered to be the right and proper action to take.

Criminal reference from a decision of the District Magistrate, Champaran.

JUDGMENT.—Two points arise in this reference. The first is whether the District Magistrate of Champaran, while ordering a further enquiry under section 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in a case in which the accused is discharged under section 253 of that Code, should have passed this order of enquiry without notice to the accused. The point is concluded by the authority to which reference has been made in the letter of Mr. Lewis, the Sub-Divisional Officer of Bettiah, attached to the letter of reference under consideration. It is true that the District Magistrate was not bound in law to issue any notice on the accused, but it was held in the Full Bench case of Hari Das Sanyal v. Saritulla (1) that the exercise of discretion in favour of issuing a notice like this would be considered the right and proper action to take. I, therefore, direct that the District Magistrate of Chapra should issue a notice to the accused before passing an order under section 437 of the Code.

The second point on which this reference is made must be left to the discretion of the Magistrate to be exercised on an appreciation of the facts and circumstances of the case. He would, therefore, be free to order a further enquiry or take such action as he may deem fit.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Sanction to prosecute—Trying Magistrate, whether can question legality of sanction—Procedure—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 188.

A Magistrate trying an accused person for an offence for which sanction is required under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, has no right to go behind the order of sanction and to question its propriety or legality. If he thinks that the sanction is bad for any reason he cannot refuse to recognise it; all that he can do is to stay proceedings in order to allow the accused to get the sanction revoked by some Court to which the Court granting the sanction is subordinate. [p. 752, col. 2.]

Case reported by the District Magistrate, Ludhiana, with his No. 1387 of 24th May 1917.

FACTS of this case are as follows:—

On 8th June 1916 Nand Singh and others applied to the Assistant Collector, 1st grade, Ludhiana, under section 150, Land Revenue Act, that certain persons had made encroachments on common land and that they be ejected. On 19th August 1916 the Assistant Collector passed an order that notice be issued against those persons to remove the encroachments within a month.

On 26th February 1917 Nand Singh and others applied to the Assistant Collector, stating that his orders had not been complied with, i.e., encroachments had not been removed, and prayed that sanction to prosecute the men under section 188, Indian Penal Code, be granted (section 195, Criminal Procedure Code).

The sanction was granted on 17th March 1917 and a complaint was filed on 28th March 1917.

The proceedings are forwarded for revision on the following

GROUNDS.—The Revenue Assistant had passed an order under section 150 of the Land Revenue Act against some eleven men. They did not comply with that order and, on application of the petitioners, in the section 150, Land Revenue Act case the Revenue Assistant sanctioned the prosecution of the eleven men under section 188, Indian Penal Code, on 17th March 1917.

In the complaint under section 188, ten out of the eleven men are mentioned, and a few more have been added.

The lower Court has dismissed the complaint on the ground that the Court and the place where the offence was committed were not specified in the order granting the sanction.

I do not think it was necessary to do so. The order of sanction read with the order under section 150, Land Revenue Act, left no doubt on that score. Moreover, I do not think the Court was competent to object to the sanction: Empress v. Bhola (1).

If others joined in the encroachment after the order under section 150 and the order of sanction had been passed, they could also be prosecuted for the same offence. The order of the Magistrate was "Istighasa kharij kiya jata hai, hazirin rukhsat" ("the complaint is dismissed, those present may go"). Both the complainants and the accused were present. The order was passed on the technical ground of the insufficiency of the sanction. The offence was a summons case.

There could be no order of discharge and the stage for action under section 203, Criminal Procedure Code, had passed, as the accused had been summoned and were present.

The only other order that could be passed was one of acquittal. But the Magistrate did not pass it.

(1) 2 P. R. 1888 Cr.

I refer the case to the Chief Court under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, with the recommendation that the lower Court's order, which amounts to no legal order at all, be set aside and a re-trial ordered.

Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Complainant.

Mr. Tarlochan Das, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—There can be no manner of doubt that the Magistrate trying the case had no right to go behind the order of sanction and to question its propriety or legality. His view, that the sanction is bad on the ground that it does not specify the Court and the place where the offence was committed, may or may not be correct, but it is quite clear that it is not for him to raise this objection. It has been repeatedly held that the Magistrate cannot refuse to recognise the sanction, and that all that he can do is to stay proceedings in order to allow the accused to get the sanction revoked by some Court to which the Court granting the sanction is subordinate, vide, inter alia, Empress v. Bhola (1).

The learned Counsel for the accused contends that the order of the Magistrate amounts to an acquittal, and that as no appeal has been preferred by the Local Government against that order, this Court should decline to exercise its revisional jurisdiction. Now, I recognise that the Court of revision is reluctant to interfere with an order of acquittal, but that rule is generally applicable to cases when the order of acquittal proceeds upon a consideration of the evidence adduced by the parties. Indeed, it has been repeatedly laid down that an application for revision against an order of acquittal may appropriately be allowed, when legal points alone are involved; vide Empress v. Lalji (2) and Saunderson v. Wilson (3). And in the present case it is perfectly clear that the order of the Magistrate is based upon an entire misapprehension of the law.

For the aforesaid reasons I set aside the order of the Magistrate and direct a re-trial, but only of those persons for whose prosecution sanction has been granted. This order shall not affect those accused against whom no sanction has been obtained.

Order set aside.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 12, 25—Suit by father for custody of child, maintainability of.

A suit by a father for the custody of his child is maintainable where no remedy under the Guardians and Wards Act exists that he can apply for.

Mr. Dhar, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Bose, for the Defendant.

ORDER.—This is a suit by the plaintiff asking for the custody of his illegitimate child. The mother of the child was the illegitimate daughter of the defendant. In August 1913 the mother left plaintiff's protection taking the child with her. The mother was the natural guardian of the illegitimate child. She died in December 1915, and the plaintiff then became the natural guardian. Plaintiff has been maintaining the child since the mother left him. The first question is whether the suit lies. The Guardians and Wards Act makes certain provisions for obtaining custody, under section 12 when an application for the appointment of a guardian is pending, and under section 25 when the ward leaves or is removed from the custody of the guardian. Neither of these provisions applies here as the plaintiff never has had custody of the child.

It is urged that their Lordships of the Privy Council held in Mrs. Annie Besant v. Narayaniah (1) that a suit will not lie, but that action must be taken under the Act. This was the view taken in Arunachallam Pillay v. Iyama (2). In both these cases the suit had been launched in the District Court though the former was transferred to the High Court, and it was held that its powers were limited to those that the District Court possessed. The contrary view of the Privy Council decision has been taken in Achratlal Jekisendas v. Chimanlal Parbhudas (3). The Bombay High Court in Sharifa v. Mune Khan (4) and this Court in Ma Shwe Ge v. Maung Shwe Pan (5) have held that such a suit would lie, and in Achratlal's case (3) the Bombay High Court said: "We are not prepared to hold that the dictum of the Privy Council in Mrs. Annie Besant v. Narayaniah (1), to the effect that a suit inter partes is not the proper proceeding, was intended to be of such general application as virtually to overrule the decision of this Court in Sharifa v. Mune Khan (4)." In my opinion this view is correct and the decision of this Court in Ma Shwe Ge's case (5) cannot be taken to be overruled. No remedy under the Guardians and Wards Act exists that the plaintiff can apply for.

I must, therefore, follow the decision of the Full Bench in Ma Shwe Ge's case (5) and hold that the suit lies.

for sale, purchased the lands and houses and soon afterwards obtained possession. His decree was satisfied except for a small sum of Rs. 95. S. then redeemed the mortgage to the Fund. In 1906 plaintiff's husband, who was not a party to S.'s suit, claimed to redeem S. but did not prosecute his suit. After his death plaintiff sued on her mortgage, offering to redeem S. or his assignees, but she claimed to do so only on what would be found due on the prior mortgage up to the date of delivery of possession to S. In the meantime S. had sold the properties to 6th defendant:

Held, (1) that S. and his assignees were entitled to the principal and interest due on foot of the two mortgages dated March and September 1899, but were bound to account for the rents and profits of the properties from the respective dates on which S. obtained possession through Court, the account being carried up to the date fixed for payment; [p. 756, cols. 1 & 2.]

(2) that 6th defendant was not entitled to the value of the improvements effected by him after his purchase. [p. 761, col. 2.]

If the owner of an equity of redemption is a party to a suit to enforce a mortgage, but a puisne encumbrancer is not, the purchaser becomes the assignee of the mortgage sued on, as well as the transferee of the equity of redemption, subject to the mesne mortgage, and if the purchaser obtains possession on sale from the owner, he must account for the profits at least in cases where the price he pays is not more than sufficient to pay the mortgage sued on; for in such a case the purchaser pays nothing for the equity of redemption and the profits of the land are to be considered as the money of the mortgagor placed in the hands of the purchaser to discharge the mortgage pro tanto. The appeal and the memoranda of cross-objections filed by respondents Nos. 4 and and 6 coming on for hearing on the 19th and 22nd February 1917, and having stood over for consideration till the 29th March 1917, the Court (Abdur Rahim and Srinivasa Aiyangar, JJ.) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff from the decree of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Ramnad, dated 21st September 1914, in a suit to enforce a mortgage. The question is what amount is due to the 4th defendant on two prior mortgages which, it is agreed, should be deemed to be still outstanding against the plaintiff. On March 29, 1899, defendants Nos. 1 to 3, the owners of certain houses in the town of Madura, mortgaged them to the Hindu Permanent Fund of that town to secure the repayment of the sum of Rs. 1,500 and interest. On the 26th September of the same year they again mortgaged the same houses and certain lands of theirs to Sevugan Chetty, the 4th defendant to secure the repayment of Rs. 1,000 and interest. On February 9, 1901, they again mortgaged the houses alone to the plaintiff's husband (deceased) to secure the repayment of Rs. 500 and interest. Sevugan Chetty sued on his mortgage in the Madura Munsif's Court, obtained a decree for Rs. 1,265-10-0 and further interest till payment, and for sale of the mortgaged properties, brought them to sale and purchased the houses on the 15th April 1904 for Rs. 1,100 and the lands on the 21st August 1905 for Rs. 500, and soon after obtained possession. His decree was satisfied except for a small sum of about Rs. 95. As the Fund had a first mortgage on the houses, Sevugan Chetty after his purchase paid to the Fund Rs. 2,537-6-11 on June 15, 1906, that being the sum then due for principal and interest, and redeemed the mortgage. Plaintiff's husband was not a party to Sevugan Chetty's suit, and was not bound by the proceedings therein. He, in September 1906, claimed to redeem Sevugan Chetty, unless he was himself redeemed; Sevugan Chetty was quite willing to be redeemed on payment of the sum due on foot of both his mortgages, but nothing was done as plaintiff's husband probably found that the properties were not worth more than the value of the prior mortgages. Sevugan Chetty has subsequently sold the properties and the purchasers of the houses are parties to this suit. Plaintiff's husband died in August 1912 without taking any steps to enforce his mortgage. In the meantime house property in Madura had risen considerably in value and the plaintiff instituted this suit in December 1912, claiming over Rs. 5,000 on her mortgage offering to redeem Sevugan Chetty or his assignees, but claims to do so on payment of what would be found due on the prior mortgages up to the date of delivery of possession to Sevugan Chetty. Savugan Chetty and his assignees on the other hand claim the whole amount that would be found due according to the terms of the deeds of mortgage up to the date of payment, without taking into account the profits or the income which they have received from the lands and houses. The learned Judge in the Court below has substantially accepted the contention of Sevugan Chetty, and allowed the amount due up to the date of the written statement in this suit—why that particular date was fixed is not clear—though in calculating the sum due he made a mistake. The question then is, on what basis is to be calculated the amount due on the prior mortgages which must be deemed to be still outstanding as against the plaintiff.

A number of cases were referred to in which the question has come up for decision, but before we deal with them let us first consider how the matter stands on principle. A mortgagee who sues for foreclosure of the equity of redemption or for the sale of the secured properties, if he succeeds, gets the title of the mortgagor as it stood on the date of his mortgage or transfers that title to the purchaser, free from all interests or liens subsequently created by the mortgagor, provided he makes the owners of such interests or liens parties to the suit; but if he omits to make any of them parties, their rights or liabilities are not affected, but the purchaser (we are concerned in this case only with sales, though the same principle would apply to foreclosure also) would acquire the rights in the mortgaged properties of all the persons who were parties, just as if he had obtained an assignment from all of them, without, however, a merger of the interests or extinction of the liens so acquired. It is immaterial whether the purchaser is the mortgagee who sued, or another person except that the latter would be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee only to the extent to which the debt was paid out of the price. It must, however, be remembered that the several interests or liens so acquired are kept distinct or kept alive only against the excluded party; for example, the purchaser at a first mortgagee's sale in a suit against the mortgagor to which the puisne incumbrancer is not a party, cannot by subrogation claim to keep alive the first mortgage debt against the mortgagor. This is a matter of substantive rights and no mere conveyancing device can give a larger right; and the same result would follow if instead of a purchase in a Court sale, the purchaser had obtained by private treaty a transfer of the first mortgage and the equity of redemption subject to that mortgage. In such a case as between himself and the mortgagor, the purchaser assumes the payment of the mortgage and whether on payment he extinguishes the debt or takes a transfer, cannot in any way affect the mortgagor. Further, if a purchaser agrees with the mortgagor to pay all the encumbrances, he cannot by paying an earlier mortgage keep it alive as against a puisne encumbrance, for he has got all he bargained for, and by merely performing his own obligation cannot get a larger right. The matter may also be viewed in another aspect which brings it closer to the present question. The mortgagor having given money's worth to the purchaser to pay all the encumbrances, when the purchaser pays them or any of them, he does so really with the money of the mortgagor and the mortgage is extinguished in just the same way as if it had been paid by the mortgagor himself, provided that the purchaser is not deprived of the property given to him. If, before he is deprived of the property given to him by the mortgagor, he has derived any benefit from it, to that extent it is the mortgagor's money in his hands for which he must account in a suit to redeem him. It follows, therefore, that if the mortgagor or the owner of the final equity of redemption is not made a party to the suit, the purchaser at the sale at the best acquires only the interest of the mortgagee and he can be redeemed on payment of whatever is due on the mortgage at the time of payment, on taking accounts, as if such purchaser was a legal assignee of the mortgage. Sivathi Odayan v. Ramasubbayyar (1), Dadoba Arjunji v. Damodar Raghu.

(1) 21 M. 64; 8 M. L. J. 21; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 402.

nath (2). If the mortgage was a simple mortgage the purchaser would be entitled to the whole of the principal and interest then due. If, however, such a purchaser takes possession claiming to do so as purchaser of the equity of redemption, though he did not obtain the title, he would be accountable for the profits derived from the property, for such profits would be money of the mortgagor in his hands. If after such purchase he does not get possession as purchaser of the equity of redemption, but by subrogation by paying a mortgagee with possession, he can only be called on to account on foot of the mortgage with possession when that mortgage is sought to be redeemed. If the owner of the equity of redemption is a party to the suit, but a puisne encumbrancer is not, the purchaser becomes the assignee of the mortgage sued on, as well as the transferee of the equity of redemption subject to the mesne mortgage, and if the purchaser obtains possession on sale from the owner, he must account for the profits at least in cases where the price he pays is not more than sufficient to pay the mortgage sued on; for in such a case the purchaser pays nothing for the equity of redemption and the profits of the land are to be considered as the money of the mortgagor placed in the hands of the purchaser to discharge the mortgage pro tanto. If beyond the value of the mortgages a price is paid for the equity of redemption and the purchaser gets possession from the owner of the equity of redemption who is and who is entitled to be in possession, it may be the purchaser would not be bound to account for the profits (Jones on Mortgages, Volume II, section 1118a); but we think justice requires that there should be an apportionment of the profits between the value of the mortgage and of the equity of redemption.

In this case all the three mortgages are simple mortgages and the mortgagees as mortgagees were not entitled to possession either before or after default. The price paid at the Court sale was not sufficient even to pay the mortgage sued on. The 4th defendant and his assignees would, therefore, be entitled to the principal and interest due on foot of the two mortgages dated March and September 1899 and be bound to account for the rents and profits of the properties from the respective dates on which the 4th defendant obtained possession through Court, the account being carried up to the date fixed for payment.

This view is consistent with and, we think, supported by the authority of the cases binding on us. In Umes Chunder Sircar v. Zahur Fatima (3) Zahur Fatima sued on a mortgage dated the 29th July 1873 executed to her predecessor-in-title, obtained a decree in 1875, brought the mortgaged property to sale, purchased it herself in 1879 and soon after obtained possession. She did not join, as parties to her suit, the owners of the encumbrances created before the institution of her suit. The plaintiff became the assignee of these mortgages and sued to enforce them. Zahur's mortgage carried 24 per cent. interest, which was reduced to 6 per cent. per annum after it had passed into a decree. The Trial Judge held that her mortgage was not extinguished by the decree and she was entitled to the amount due under it irrespective of the price paid at the sale, but was entitled to interest only at 6 per cent. per annum, the rate fixed in the decree after its date, and that no interest was to be calculated after the date of the purchase, as the profits of the land were to be considered a fair equivalent for further interest. Their Lordships in the Privy Council altered the rate of interest to that provided in the bond, and the reason given by their Lordships for their alteration is this: "The Court's power to regulate interest is given by section 10 of Act XXIII of 1861, which answers to the 209th section of the present Civil Procedure Code. That power is given when a plaintiff sues for money due to him, and it is a discretionary power to give such rate as the Court may think proper by decree. The decree can only operate between the parties to the suit and those who claim under them. The plaintiff getting the security of a decree has his interest reduced in the generality of cases. But the plaintiff in this case comes to take away from Zahur the benefit of the decree. It would be unjust if he could use the decree to cut down her interest, while he deprives her of the whole advantage of the decree. His case is, that as to him Zahur is still but a mortgagee, and if so, she would be allowed such benefit as her mortgage gives her. If Zahur had not got a decree, and the plaintiff had come to redeem her mortgage, he must have paid whatever interest her contract entitled her to, and the Court would have had no jurisdiction to cut it down; and that is the position in which the parties are placed by the decree in this suit." That to our minds is conclusive to show that the mortgage which is revived against the puisne mortgagee, though extinguished against the mortgagor, is kept alive to the fullest extent as if no action had ever been brought on it. The price of redemption must be the same, whether it is the puisne incumbrancer or the mortgagor who redeems. It is on this principle that the purchaser in the prior mortgagee's execution sale is required to account for the profits. On the same principle if the purchase was for a sum less than the amount due on the mortgage sued on and if the mortgagor paid the balance, the puisne mortgagee would be entitled to redeem on payment of the price, i.e., the amount due on the mortgage less the amount paid by the mortgagor. [See Bradley v. Snyder (4).] As to the other rule, viz., that the profits should be taken as equivalent to the interest, their Lordships observe that the rule appears just and convenient and is not objected to by either party, will relieve Zahur from giving an account of her receipts and will deprive her of interest from the time she took possession. We understand that observation to mean that in that particular case, the profits and the interest were taken to be fairly equal as a matter of fact—that obviously must be the reason for the parties not objecting to it—and we do not think their Lordships meant to lay down, as a matter of law, that even if either party insisted, there should be no account of profits or allowance of interest. This was the view taken in two cases in this Court after discussion [Thenappa Chettiar v. Marimuthu Nadan (5), Ponnambala Chetti v. Muthuswami Pillai (6)] and it is materially strengthened by what happened in Ganga Pershad Sahu v. Land Mortgage Bank (7), a decision of the Privy Council after Umes Chunder Sircar v. Zahur Fatima (3). There also the rights of the parties as finally settled by the decision were exactly the same as those in the previous case. The decree of the High Court directed accounts of profits to be taken and allowed interest up to the date of redemption at the rate fixed in a previous decree against the mortgagor. (See the decree set out at page 370 of the report in 21 Calcutta.) The Privy Council altered the rate of interest to that in the bond and confirmed the rest of the decree, namely, that portion which directed the taking of accounts. The judgment in both the cases was delivered by Lord Hobhouse. It is to be observed that the amount of profits is to go in reduction of the amount due for principal and interest and not to be set off against the interest alone. The same principle appears to have been adopted in Calcutta, Girish Chunder Nandi v. Kedar Nath Kundu (8), Sat Narain v. Sheobaran Singh (9).

Counsel for the appellant, however, relied on a later case in this Court, in which the learned Judges apparently adopted the rule of disallowing interest after the date of purchase [Ibrahim Sahib v. Armugathayee (10)]. There the plaintiff's father had a first and second mortgage of which the first was a usufructuary mortgage, the profits being taken in lieu of interest. He purchased the property from the mortgagor, the price settled being Rs. 900, of which Rs. 830 was the amount due till then for the principal of the two mortgages and interest on the simple mortgage, Rs. 55, due to the mortgagee for certain taxes and other small sums lent to the mortgagor; the balance Rs. 15 was paid in cash. Before the sale the mortgagor had mortgaged the same property to the defendant, who sued the plaintiff who had succeeded to her father, brought the properties to sale and purchased them himself subject to the previous encumbrances of the plaintiff.

The plaintiff in her turn sued to recover the amount due on her mortgages and claimed interest till payment on the simple mortgage at the rate fixed in the bond. The learned Judges held that during the period the plaintiff or her father was in possession as vendee, interest should cease. The reasons given for this conclusion are (1) that as the mortgagee and mortgagor agreed that after the sale the property should be enjoyed for the price settled, the mortgagee is not entitled to any compensation in the shape of interest for his money so long as he had the enjoyment; (2) that the prior mortgage is kept alive only to a limited extent, and in each case the Court is to determine how far it is kept alive for doing justice. We very respectfully differ from both these propositions. It is to be observed that it is because the agreement is not binding on the mesne incumbrancer, that he is entitled to ignore it, and it is difficult to see why he should have any benefit out of it. It often happens that a person is willing to pay much more to obtain an absolute title than what he would be willing to lend on the same property as usufructuary mortgagee. The mortgagee may pay a large price for the equity of redemption which he may wholly lose by the action of the puisne encumbrancer. On principle we do not think that it is possible to sustain the doctrine of partial revivor against the puisne mortgagee and the illustration given by the learned Judges, viz., a stipulation for lower rate of interest, does not support it. Such a stipulation operates to extinguish or release a portion of the debt and there is no question of merger against the mortgagor and no merger against the mesne encumbrancers. The puisne mortgagee pays the same price for redemption as the mortgagor and that, as we have said already, is the test, namely, what amount the mortgagor could have to pay if there had been no sale. If for instance in the case under reference the mortgagee had the transfer of the equity of redemption made to a trustee for him, there can be no merger in law and there would apparently be nothing to prevent the mortgagee from recovering the whole amount due on the mortgages if a subsequent mortgagee brings the equity of redemption to sale. So long then as the prior mortgage is kept alive, the senior mortgagee is entitled to the rights and is subject to the liabilities under his mortgage against the puisne encumbrancer. We, therefore, think that in that case the plaintiff was entitled to the interest on the simple mortgage, as she was entitled to take the profits in lieu of interest on the usufructuary mortgage, and there was no money of the mortgagors in her hands for which she was bound to account. The attention of the learned Judges does not appear to have been drawn to Thenappa Chettiar v. Marimuthu Nadan (5) and Ponnambala Chetti v. Muthuswami Pillai (6), the latter decision had not then been reported. They however refer to certain decisions which we shall consider now. The first is the decision of the Privy Council in Umes Chunder Sircar v. Zahur Fatima (3) to which we have already drawn attention. In Gangadhara v. Sivarama (11) the mortgagor borrowed Rs. 3,500 in May 1878 on the security of certain lands and paid Rs. 1,900 out of it to discharge a mortgage decree on a mortgage of 1866 on some of the lands. Plaintiff in the suit was an intermediate mortgagee. It was held that the later mortgagee had priority over the plaintiff to the extent of Rs. 1,900, the sum paid to discharge the previous mortgage. Apparently no subsequent interest was allowed. It does not appear from the report whether the subsequent mortgagee or the mortgagor had possession. If the former had possession the interest on his mortgage was being discharged from the usufruct and as he was not entitled to interest against the mortgagor, he was not entitled to it against the puisne mortgagee. If the mortgagor was in possession, then even according to the decision in Ibrahim Sahib v. Armugathayee (10), interest should have been allowed, for the decision in Syamalarayudu v. Subbarayudu (12), where interest was allowed, is distinguished on that very ground. In Seetharama v. Venkatakrishna (13) the suit was, as finally decided, by a prior simple mortgagee against the mortgagor and the puisne encumbrancer who had sued on his mortgage and purchased the property without making the first mortgagee a party. There was a remand for a finding as to the amount due and the finding was that the plaintiff was entitled to Rs. 300 for principal and interest thereon at 9 per cent, and this finding was accepted. In the report no mention is made of the interest. Curiously enough the decree as drafted here omits mention of interest, though apparently the judgment allowed it. In Vanamikalinga Mudali v. Chidambara Chetty (14) the mortgagee who claimed priority by subrogation had a usufructuary mortgage. Under the bond there was no interest payable and the usufruct was to be taken in lieu of it. It is to be observed that in this last case as well as in Chetwynd v. Allen (15) and in other cases where a mortgage was executed in renewal of or to pay off a previous mortgage, the mortgage was in force against the mortgagor himself and the agreement charging a lower rate of interest or no interest accrued to the benefit of the mortgagor, as well as the puisne mortgagee. The mesne incumbrancer in such cases does not repudiate the subsequent transaction between the mortgagor and the mortgagee but seeks to avail himself of it as a discharge or extinguishment of the debt, while such is not its effect as between the parties to the transaction.

A number of decisions of the Allahabad High Court were cited, in which it appears to have been held that the profits should be taken in lieu of interest after purchase. In the first of these cases, Dip Narain Singh v. Hira Singh (16), Banerji and Aikman, JJ., held that the puisne mortgagee can only redeem on payment of the full amount due on the prior mortgage, just the same amount as the mortgagor himself would have to pay if a suit had not been brought against him, and refer as authority to the judgment of the Calcutta High Court in Ganga Pershad Sahu v. Land Mortgage Bank (7) and of the Bombay High Court in Dadoba Arjunji v. Damodar Raghunath (2); in the former interest was allowed at the bond rate and accounts were directed of the profits, and in the latter interest was allowed at the bond rate till decree without accounts as the mortgagee had no possession. In answer to the contention that the profits should be accounted for, the learned Judges say that considering the amount of profits arising from the property it would be fair not to take the profits into consideration at the same time not to allow interest on the mortgage money, i.e, not, as we understand it, as a rule of law, but as being fair in that case. In a later case of Sri Ram v. Kesri Mal (17) it was ruled that the prior mortgagee cannot claim interest after the purchase, giving credit for the profits realised; the reason given being the same as that given in Ibrahim Sahib v. Armugathayee (10) viz., that every person who purchases property for a certain value must be presumed to pay such value as would yield to him a sufficient return for the money invested by him in the property. In this case there were three mortgages. An intermediate mortgagee purchased the property by private sale for a price enough to pay all the three mortgages, the price being reserved with the vendee for that purpose. The vendee paid the first mortgagee and paid himself the amount due on his. He did not pay the third mortgagee who sued to enforce his security. We do not understand how the vendee was allowed to set up the prior mortgages which were extinguished by payment of the money belonging to the mortgagor, the party primarily liable to pay, and how by merely performing his duty the vendee obtained an advantage. The third mortgage under the circumstances became the first. It is not a case of a person who did not get what he bargained for and the vendee was not entitled to even the principal of the mortgages which he paid, much less to interest. This case, however, was followed in Jugal Kishore v. Bahal Rai (18) in the same Court and the learned Judges held, setting aside the accounts taken by the lower Court, that the profits and interest must be deemed equal. But in the latest case in that Court, Phul Chand v. Roshan Lal (19), under circumstances precisely similar to those in Ibrahim Sahib v. Armugathayee (10), the learned Judges, one of whom was Banerji, J., came to just the opposite conclusion, and held that a purchaser at a senior mortgagee's execution sale, who obtains possession from a prior usufructuary mortgagee whom he redeemed after his purchase, was entitled to the whole of the principal and interest at the contract rate till the date of the suit. The purchaser in this case, who knew of the previous usufructuary mortgage subject to which he bought, must on the reasoning in Sri Ram v. Kesri Mal(17) be presumed to have paid such value for the property, i. e., the equity of redemption and the first mortgage, as would yield a sufficient return for his money, in which case he should not get any interest after the date of the purchase. We do not propose to deal with the other cases as they follow one or other of the cases mentioned above.

The conclusion then we come to, which is supported by preponderance of authority, is that if either party insists, accounts of the profits must be taken, allowing interest on the mortgage as provided in the bond. It is, however, unnecessary to express dissent from Ibrahim Sahib v. Armugathayee (10), as the learned Judges do not lay down an inflexible rule, but say that each case should be dealt with on the merits. The circumstances here strongly support the suggestion of the learned Judge in the Court below that owing to the considerable increase in the value of house property in Madura, the plaintiff in this suit is now attempting to revive a claim which was practically abandoned by her husband. The 4th defendant and his assignees have made considerable improvements in the property and it would not be fair to them not to allow interest on the prior mortgages, as it is fairly certain that the income from the properties even in the improved condition would be wholly insufficient to meet the interest. We are, therefore, unable to accept the contention of the appellant. We are equally unable to accept the contention of the 4th defendant, who claims the whole of the principal and interest due on the mortgages without accounting for the profits. The learned Judge in the Court below misunderstood the decision in Ponnambala Chetti v. Muthuswami Pillai (6) which he purported to follow, but the learned Pleader for the 4th defendant argues that as his client was entitled to and obtained possession of the mortgaged properties only as purchaser of the equity of redemption (for which, however, he paid nothing), he was entitled to the enjoyment of the properties as the transferee of the mortgagor; and inasmuch as the mortgagor if he had remained in possession would not be accountable for the profits, similarly he too should not be obliged to account for them. He relied on a passage in section 1118 (a) of Jones on Mortgages, Volume II, and a similar passage in Dr. Ghose's book which appears to be really based on Jone's book. He was not able to refer us to any report. It is to be remembered that in some States, the English theory of mortgages as a conditional transfer of the fee with an equitable right to redeem is adopted, in others, probably the largest number, a mortgage is considered to be merely a security though for certain purposes, as between the parties, it is considered to be a conveyance of the property and in yet others a mortgage is only a lien, the mortgagee not being entitled to foreclosure under any circumstances. [See Brobost v. Brock (20), McMillan v. Richards (21), Goodenow v. Ewer (22) and Frische v. Kramer's Lessee (23).] It would, therefore, be necessary to examine with care any particular decision which may be relied on as supporting an incident of the mortgage relation in India, as our Statute recognises different kinds of mortgages. In Moulton v. Cornish (24) from New York, where sale is the ordinary remedy, in a case similar to the present, it was held that the purchaser was bound to account, though he obtained possession from the owner of the equity of redemption after sale. To the same effect is the decision in Anson v. Anson (25) from another

State. In Harrison v. Wyse (26) the mortgagee had first entered on the property and then purchased the equity of redemption It was held he was bound to account as mortgagee in possession, though the mortgagor would not be if he was in possession. It would, therefore, appear that there is no authority in support of such a broad contention as that raised here by the respondent. However that may be, the decision of the Privy Council and the decisions of this Court to which we have already referred are conclusive on this point and there is no need to speculate on the theoretical basis of this doctrine, though we have ventured to point out that on principle the purchaser may justly be held liable to account for the profits in cases like the present.

Two further points were raised, one by the appellant and the other by the 6th respondent. As we have already stated, the purchase by the 4th defendant included the lands on which the plaintiff has no lien. In these lands the 4th defendant acquired absolute rights and he has sold them to persons who are not parties now. The plaintiff claims that the mortgage money due to the fourth defendant on his mortgage should be apportioned among the several properties according to their value and the plaintiff allowed to redeem on payment of that portion of the mortgage-debt that is chargeable on the houses on such apportionment. He has not laid any basis in his plaint or evidence to claim marshalling, and he has not made the owners of the lands parties to the suit so as to claim contribution. We have tried to see if the plaintiff cannot be allowed to redeem a portion of the mortgage, on the ground that the mortgage has been split by the mortgagee purchasing the equity of redemption in a part of the secured property (see last clause of section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act) but on consideration we think the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree for partial redemption. As she sues to redeem ignoring the purchase, she cannot be allowed to treat it as good in part against the prior mortgagee-purchaser.

The 6th respondent, the transferee of the houses from the 4th respondent, claims the value of improvements. According to the decision in Ibrahim Sahib v. Armugathayee (10) she is not entitled to them. [See also RangayyaChettiar v. ParthasarathiNaickar (27).] It is argued that she is entitled to them as a bona fide purchaser for value under section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act. Assuming that that section applies to this case, the 6th respondent cannot be considered to be a bona fide purchaser, as the sale certificate to the 4th defendant, of which the 6th defendant had notice before her sale, distinctly mentions the encumbrance to the plaintiff's husband as a subsisting lien. In determining the amount due to the 4th defendant on the mortgage to the Fund, the learned Judge in the Court below allowed compound interest at 2 per cent. per annum. The bond provides only for simple interest after the period fixed for repayment and the amount due to the 4th defendant should be calculated on that basis. Before passing a final decree it would be necessary to have a finding on the amount due to the 4th defendant on taking accounts on the basis above set out. New evidence may be allowed as to the amount of profits. Time for the submission of the findings will be till the re-opening of this Court after summer recess and 7 days will be allowed for objections.

The memorandum of cross-objections filed by the 6th respondent will be dismissed with costs.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Ramnad submitted the following

FINDING.— * * * * * * * * * *

The amount paid by the 4th defendant on the mortgage to the Fund is Rs. 2,537-6-11 on 18th June 1906, from that date interest up to the 31st August 1917 at two pies per rupee is Rs. 3,553-4-9. So the total is Rs. 6,090-11-8. The total of the amounts due under both heads is Rs. 12,389-10-11. I find the amount due to the 4th defendant to be Rs. 12,400 —in round figures.

This appeal and the memorandum of cross-objections filed by the 4th respondent coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the points referred to it for trial, the Court delivered the following

(26) (1853) 63 Am. Dec. 151 at p. 152; 24 Connecticut 1.

JUDGMENT.—The first objection to the finding is as to the calculation of compound interest on the bond of Rs. 1,000. It is argued that that is a penal provision and ought to be relieved against. But no such question was raised before one of us and Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., when the appeal was first heard and it cannot be gone into now.

The second objection relates to the question whether interest ought to be allowed on that portion of the amount paid by the 4th defendant to the chit fund which consisted of interest on the original bond. There is nothing in our judgment to show that the 4th defendant who paid the amount due was to be deprived of interest on any portion of the money paid by him. That objection also fails.

Then Mr. Devadoss argued that some of the properties had been sold, and so the amount of the sale-proceeds must be debited against the respondents. But that is quite a mistake. The plaintiff is seeking to redeem the properties on the ground that the sales are invalid. He cannot get the properties as well as the sale-proceeds.

We confirm the finding of the Subordinate Judge and there will be a decree in accordance with that finding. Time for redemption will be extended to three months from this date and the accounts will be continued on the basis of the finding of the Subordinate Judge up to the date of redemption. As regards costs, the ordinary rule will be followed for we do not see why the appellant should be made personally liable for the costs of the 4th respondent.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 4—Mortgage suit—Appeal by one of several defendants—Appellate decree, effect of.

In a case in which one only of several defendants appeals, the result of the appeal will enure to the benefit of the other defendants only if the interests of the other defendants are inseparable from the interests of the defendant-appellant. [p. 763, col. 1.]

A decree in a mortgage suit made several properties liable for the satisfaction of the mortgage debt. One of the defendants appealed and was released from liability under the mortgage, on the ground that by a revenue sale the property claimed by him had passed to him free of all incumbrances:

Held, that the result of the appeal was to free only the property in which the defendant-appellant had an interest, leaving untouched the decree of the original Court in so far as the interests of the other defendants were concerned. [p. 763, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

ROE, J.—The appellant in this case is aggrieved by an order of the District Judge of Saran, setting aside an order of the 3rd Munsif of Chapra directing the sale of mortgaged properties in the following circumstances: Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to the suit out of which these proceedings arise were the mortgagors of three properties. The defendants Nos. 3 and 4 were subsequent mortgagees of the same properties and defendant No. 5 was the auction-purchaser at the revenue sale of 16-annas share in the 2nd property mortgaged. The decree in the first instance made all the three properties liable for the satisfaction of the mortgage debt. The defendants Nos. 1 to 4 accepted this decision. Defendant No. 5 only appealed, and on his appeal he was released from liability under the mortgage on the ground that by the revenue sale the property No. 2 passed to him free of all incumbrances. The date of the original decree was the 4th May 1911, and of the Appellate Court decree was the 5th September 1911. In the year 1912 the decree-holder applied for and obtained an order absolute on the original decree. On putting the order absolute into execution the decree-holder was met by a petition on the part of defendant No. 1 to the effect that the preliminary decree having been set aside upon the appeal of defendant No. 5, the whole decree was void and inasmuch as there was in the decree of the Appellate Court no mention of any mortgage lien subsistent upon the property it must be taken that the mortgage lien had been destroyed by the Appellate Court's decree, and that, therefore, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were liable only for a money decree and defendants Nos. 3 and 4 should escape scott-free. The learned Munsif accepted this suggestion. It was at once exploded in the District Court. The order of the District Court is that the properties Nos. 1 and 3 be sold as mortgaged properties. The grounds taken in the District Court are again urged before us. It is suggested that the only decree which can be executed is the Appellate Court decree and that there is in the Appellate Court decree no security upon the mortgaged properties. With this contention we cannot agree. It is well settled that in any case in which one only of several defendants appeals, the result of the appeal will enure to the benefit of the other defendants only if the interests of the other defendants are inseparable from the interests of the defendant-appellant. In the case before us the interest of the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 was clearly distinguishable from the interest of the defendant No. 5. The result of the appeal by defendant No. 5 was to free only the property in which defendant No. 5 had interest, leaving untouched the decree of the original Court in so far as the interests of defendants Nos. 1 to 4 were concerned. On this ground the appeal must clearly fail.

A further ground taken is that inasmuch as the decree-holder has not filed the decree absolute we must assume that the decree absolute has no existence and that the proceedings in execution are, therefore, void. This ground was not taken in the lower Appellate Court. We have before us a certified copy of the order making the decree absolute and we must presume that the preliminary decree was made absolute and was, therefore, capable of execution as a mortgage decree. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Hearing fee in accordance with the prescribed scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115 (c)—Revision—Power of superintendence of High Court, when to be exercised—High Courts Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. C. 104), s. 15—Letters Patent (Cal.), Art. 15—'Judgment,' meaning of—Decision of single Judge setting aside order of District Judge and remanding case, whether judgment.

A decision of a single Judge of the High Court, by which an order of a District Judge reversing in appeal an order of a Munsif cancelling a sale is set aside and the case is remanded to the District Judge for re-hearing, is a 'judgment' within the meaning of Article 15 of the Letters Patent. [p. 767, col. 2; p. 769, col. 1.]

Per Sanderson, C.J., and Walmsley, J.—The High Court cannot, by exercising its powers of superintendence under section 15 of the High Courts Act, 1861, interfere with the decision of a subordinate Court from which no appeal or revision under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, lies to the High Court. [p. 767, col. 2; p. 769, col. 2.]

Where a District Judge reversed in appeal an order of a Munsif setting aside a sale under Order XXI, rule 92, Civil Procedure Code, on erroneously holding that the property sold was a ⅓rd share in a patni whereas it was the undisputed ⅓rd share that was sold, and that the auction-purchaser was a 'new comer' whereas in fact he was a co-sharer in the property, and without coming to any definite conclusion as to the publication of the sale proclamation:

Held, per Curiam (Teunon, J. dissenting).—that the decision of the District Judge was not subject to revision under section 115, clause (c), Civil Procedure Code, as the mistakes upon which he based his judgment, though grave mistakes of fact, were in regard to questions which he had jurisdiction to decide. [p. 767, col. 1; p. 769, col. 2.]

Per Teunon, J. (contra).—As the property sold was clearly specified in the sale proclamation as the judgment-debtor's ⅗rd share in the patni and as there was no dispute between the parties as to that share, the decision of the District Judge, based as it was on the imaginary finding that the property sold was a ½rd share, was open to revision by the High Court under section 115 (c), Civil Procedure Code, as it was the duty of the District Judge to decide secundum allegata et probata; although if the parties had been in dispute as to the judgment-debtor's interest in the patni, and if, however erroneously, the District Judge had decided that his interest was not ⅗rds but ½rd, that would have been merely an erroneous decision on a question of fact with which the High Court acting under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, could not interfere. [p. 768, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of Mr. Justice N. R. Chatterjea and Mr. Justice Mullick, the said Judges differing in opinion on the 9th of April 1915, in Civil Rule No. 1145 of 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Mohini Mohan Chakravarty, for the Respondents, raised a preliminary objection that no appeal lay under section 15 of the Indian High Courts Act against the decision of Mr. Justice Chatterjea passed in revision under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, by which his Lordship ordered a re-hearing of the case by the District Judge. Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. Oriental Gas Company (1).

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Romesh Chandra Sen), for the Appellant.—The decision of Mr. Justice Chatterjea has affected the merits of the case between the parties and is, therefore, a judgment within the meaning of section 15 of the Indian High Courts Act. The case of Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. Oriental Gas Company (1) supports my contention. See also the case of Chandi Charan Saha v. Jnanendranath Bhattacharjee (2).

The judgment-debtor made an application under Order XXI, rule 90, of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside the sale on the ground of fraud and material irregularity and the sale was set aside by the Munsif. On appeal, the District Judge reversing the decision of the primary Court confirmed the sale. Against the order of the District Judge there was an application to this Court under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code and section 15 of the Indian High Courts Act, and the case was heard by Mr. Justice Chatterjea and Mr. Justice Mullick. Mr. Justice Chatterjea, holding that the decision of the District Judge is open to revision under section 115 (c) of the Civil Procedure Code or under section 15 of the Indian High Courts Act, set aside the order of the District Judge and remanded the case, on the ground that his decision was based on misconception as regards some fundamental points and that he had omitted to consider certain matters which he should have considered in an application under Order XXI, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code. Mr. Justice Mullick on the other hand declined to interfere on the ground that clause (c) of section 115, Civil Procedure Code, did not apply to the case. The present appeal is against the order of remand made by Mr. Justice Chatterjea.

Section 115 (c) contemplates a case where the Court acts in a way which affects its jurisdiction. Here no case has been made out which justifies the interference of the High Court under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It has been pointed out that the learned District Judge did not come to any clear finding and definite conclusion as regards the misstatement of value given in the proclamation, and the publication of the sale proclamation. But in deciding the question whether the sale should be set aside the Judge had to consider whether there was a material irregularity and whether there was substantial injury or loss to the judgment-debtor, and after applying his judicial mind to the facts and circumstances of the case the learned Judge came to the conclusion that the sale should not be set aside, inasmuch as he considered that there was no material irregularity and that the price obtained at the sale was adequate. No doubt, he made a mistake as to the auction-purchaser's relation to the property and also as regards the question of the property sold. The Judge had jurisdiction to decide the questions involved in the case, and if in deciding those questions he made a mistake as to law or fact which might affect the correctness of his decision, this Court cannot interfere by way of revision under section 115 (c), Civil Procedure Code. Having regard to the cases decided under section 115, clause (c), it cannot be said that the lower Court in this case acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity merely because its decision is erroneous on a point of law or fact. Refers to Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Bakhsh Singh (3), Krishna Mohini Dossee v. Kedarnath Chuckerbutty (4), Shew Prosad Bungshidhur v. Ram Chunder Haribux (5), Malkarjun v. Narhari (6). In a case like this, where the judgment of the lower Court is impeached on the ground that it is vitiated by an error of fact, the proper remedy is to apply for a review of judgment under Order XLVII, rule 1 of the Code, because the mistake or error complained of is apparent on the face of the record. Where no such application for review is made, the petitioner cannot ask the High Court to exercise its general power of superintendence under section 15 of the High Courts Act.

Babu Mohini Mohan Chakravarty, for the Respondents.—The learned Judge decided a case which is entirely different from the real case between the parties which he had to decide, and did not apply his judicial mind to the facts and circumstances of the present case. It is not merely a case in which the lower Court has committed an error of fact or law in the exercise of its jurisdiction, but it is a case in which there has been no proper trial of the real case between the parties, inasmuch as there were some imaginary facts before the learned Judge's mind's eye.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—What is the defect of procedure involved in the case?]

The learned Judge has disposed of the case illegally in relying upon imaginary facts. There had been no proper investigation of the judgment-debtor's case. The questions for decision before the learned Judge were, (1) what was the value of the 2/3rds share of the property belonging to the judgment-debtor? (2) Was the property properly valued in the proclamation? (3) Was the sale proclamation duly published? The learned Judge did not come to any clear finding as to the last two questions, and as regards the first question the learned Judge decided the value of the ⅓rd share of the property, which was the case of neither party. If the learned Judge decides a case which is quite different from the case of the parties and if he omits to deal with and decide the material questions raised in and decided by the first Court, the High Court has got jurisdiction to interfere in revision under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, or, at least, it can in the exercise of its general power of superintendence, under section 15 of the High Courts Act, revise an order which has been passed without a proper trial of the case. It is for that reason that the High Court revises orders under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Refers to Gorakh Babaji v. Vithal Narayan Joshi (7), Venkubai v. Lakshman Venkoba Khot (8).

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal under section 15 of the Letters Patent arising from a difference of opinion between Chaterjea, J., and Mullick, J.

The facts are as follows:—

The landlord of the jugment-debtor obtained a decree for rent against him, and in execution thereof, the judgment-debtor's interest in a Patni tenure was sold. His interest was a 2/3rds share. At the sale the debtor's interest was bought for Rs. 2,755 by Kumar Chandra Kishore Roy Chowdhury, who was the owner of the remaining 1/3rd share. The judgment-debtor applied under Order XXI, rule 90, to have the sale set aside: the Munsif in the Court of first instance set aside the sale on the ground that he was not satisfied that the sale proclamation was duly published, and on the further ground that the price was deliberately understated in the proclamation and that the disputed property was a valuable one and might be worth Rs. 6,000, as alleged by the judgment-debtor.

The auction-purchaser appealed from the order of the Court of first instance and the District Judge allowed the appeal. On the motion of the judgment-debtor, a Rule was issued by the High Court which came on for hearing before Chatterjea, J., and Mullick, J. Chatterjea, J., held that the Court had power to interfere under clause (c) of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code or under section 15 of the Indian High Courts Act, 1861. On the other hand, Mullick, J., came to the conclusion that having regard to the limited operation of section 115, the Court had no jurisdiction to interfere: he expressed no opinion as to section 15 of the Indian High Courts Act.

The opinion of the Senior Judge prevailing, an order remanding the case was made and a re-hearing was directed: hence this appeal by the auction-purchaser.

The grounds upon which Chatterjea, J., based his judgment were :—

(1) That the learned District Judge did not come to any finding, (a) as to whether there was a deliberate misstatement as to value in the sale proclamation; or (b) as to the publication of the proclamation.

(2) That the learned District Judge started with a misconception on a fundamental point, in that he based his judgment upon the assumption that what was sold was one-third share of the Panti Taluk, whereas in fact it was a two-thirds share.

(3) That the learned District Judge assumed that the purchaser was a 'new comer', whereas he was himself a co-sharer in the Patni tenure to the extent of one-third.

The question is, whether under the above circumstances the case comes within clause (c) of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The clause provides as follows:—115. "The High Court may call for the record of any case which has been decided by any Court subordinate to such High Court and in which no appeal lies thereto, and if such subordinate Court appears..... (c) to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, the High Court may make such order in the case as it thinks fit."

This clause has been the subject of judicial decision in this Court, e. g., in Shew Prosad Bungshidhur v. Ram Chunder Haribux (5), Jenkins, C. J., said: "It appears to me that section 115 can only be called in aid when the failure of justice (if any) has been due to one or other of the faults of procedure indicated in that section."

In Krishna Mohini Dossee v. Kedarnath Chuckerbutty (4) Petheram, C. J., speaking of section 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882, which was in terms similar to the section now under discussion, said :—

"But then comes a very different and more difficult question, and that is the question whether this order can be revised by the Court under section 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This is a section which has been a good deal enquired into."

In our opinion it is a section of very limited operation. What the section says is that the High Court may revise a decision of the Court by which the case was decided if the Court appears to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, or to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity.

Now, it seems to us, that the meaning of this section is that, whenever a Court has jurisdiction to decide a question, whether it is a question of law or a question of fact, its decision on that question is not revisable by this Court.

Both of these decisions were based upon the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Amir Hossan Khan v. Sheo Bakhsh Singh (3).

The question therefore is, can it be said that the District Judge acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, and having regard to the construction put on clause (c) of section 115, was the failure of justice due to such a fault of procedure as is indicated in this clause.

As regards the misstatement of value in the proclamation, as I read the District Judge's judgment, he assumed that there was such a misstatement but he thought it was not a material irregularity.

As regards the alleged want of finding with reference to the publication of the proclamation, I think that the learned District Judge should have arrived at a definite conclusion on this point, but in view of his finding that the price obtained for the property was adequate, this matter was apparently considered by him as of no material importance to his judgment. As regards his misconception as to what was sold, and as to the position of the auction-purchaser, the learned Judge made a grave mistake of fact.

The learned Judge, however, had jurisdiction to decide all these questions, and if he made a mistake as to law or fact, this Court cannot interfere by way of revision. He had to decide whether the price obtained for the property was adequate. To arrive at a conclusion thereon he would naturally first have to decide what was the plaintiff's interest in the Patni Taluk and whether the purchaser was a person who would pay a fair price. He stated that the property sold was a $\frac{1}{3}$rd share, and therein he made a grave mistake, as the plaintiff's interest was a $\frac{2}{3}$rds share he also considered the purchaser to be a "new comer" whereas he was himself a co-sharer.

These are questions which in my judgment the learned Judge had jurisdiction to decide, and although he made grave mistakes of fact, upon which he based his judgment with respect to these matters, in view of the construction placed upon the section in the above-mentioned cases, with which I agree, his decision is not revisable by this Court. It may be noted that the judgment-debtor was not without a remedy; he could have applied to the learned District Judge for a review and if the attention of the learned Judge had been drawn to the serious mistake of fact which he had made, it is almost impossible to believe that the application for review would have been refused.

As regards the contention that this Court has power to interfere under section 15 of the Indian High Courts Act, 1861. Having regard to the circumstances of this case, in my judgment this Court has no such power.

There was no right of appeal from the order of the District Judge, and in my opinion, as already stated, under the circumstances of the case, this Court has no jurisdiction under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code to revise the judgment of the District Judge; if this Court were to interfere, basing its interference upon the powers conferred by section 15 of the Indian High Courts Act, it would in my judgment be straining the meaning of the word "superintendence" unduly. It would mean that although there was no right of appeal and no power to revise under section 115 of the Code, this Court could by exercising its power of "superintendence" in effect hear an appeal, or act in revision. I am not prepared so to hold, and indeed it is not necessary to put upon the section in question any such strained meaning, because, as already stated, there was an obvious remedy available to the judgment-debtor, viz., by way of review, by means of which the unfortunate mistake could have been put right.

A preliminary point was taken that there was no right of appeal. In my judgment an appeal lies on the ground that Chatterjea, J.'s judgment was one which deprived the auction-purchaser of the benefit of the District Judge's judgment, which confirmed the sale, and consequently it was a judgment which materially affected the merits of the question between the parties.

For these reasons, in my judgment, the appeal should be allowed with costs both in this Court and before Chatterjee and Mullick, JJ., the Rule should be discharged and the order directing a re-hearing should be set aside.

We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs for each hearing in this Court.

TEUNON, J.—This is an appeal under Article 15 of the Letters Patent against the decision of Mr. Justice Nalini Ranjan Chatterjea.

By his decision he sets aside an order of the District Judge of Dinajpur and remands the case in which the order was made for re-hearing.

A preliminary objection was taken that against the decision of Mr. Justice Chatterjea no further appeal lay under Article 15 of the Letters Patent. On this point I agree with the decision of this Court in Chandi Charan Saha v. Jnanendranath Bhattacharjee (2) (though that was an appeal against a judgment in second appeal) and, therefore, this objection in my opinion, cannot be sustained.

The appeal arises out of an application made by the judgment-debtor under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, Order XXI, rule 90, for the setting aside of a sale in execution.

KUMAR CHANDRA KISHORE ROY v. BASAT ALI.

The property sold was the judgment-debtor's $\frac{2}{3}$rd share in a certain Patni Taluk. The trial Court held that in the sale proclamation the value of the property had been deliberately underestimated, that the sale proclamation had not been duly published and that by reason of these irregularities or frauds an adequate price had not been realised.

Against the order setting aside the sale on the grounds just stated the auction-purchaser appealed. The District Judge at the hearing of the appeal came to no clear finding as to the publication of the sale proclamation, held that the statement of value (Rs. 600) though a gross mis-statement was not calculated to deter possible bidders and that the price fetched at the sale (Rs. 2,755) was not seriously inadequate. He, therefore, decreed the appeal.

Against this decision there was an application in revision to this Court. At the hearing of the Rule then obtained it was contended that the District Judge had failed to value the property sold, namely, judgment-debtor's $\frac{2}{3}$rd share in a certain Patni Taluk.

His judgment in fact makes it apparent that he conceived that he was required to value a $\frac{1}{3}$rd share. Moreover, his judgment indicates that he has fallen into a further error regarding the area, that is, he appears to think that the judgment-debtor's statement of area, 600 bighas, applies not to his own share ($\frac{2}{3}$rds) but to the whole Patni of which the Judge, therefore, proceeds to value $\frac{1}{3}$rd, i. e., 200 bighas. The learned Judges who heard the Rule differed, Mr. Justice Mullick, who has himself apparently misapprehended the District Judge's statement regarding area, holding that the error committed by the District Judge did not bring the case within the scope of section 115 of the Code, while the Senior Judge, Mr. Justice Chatterjea, was of opinion that under section 115 of the Code, and also under section 15 of the Charter Act, the Court could and should interfere.

Against the latter's decision the present appeal has been preferred by the auction-purchaser.

At the hearing before us, it has been contended on behalf of the appellant that the error into which the District Judge has fallen is merely one of those erroneous decisions or "sad mistakes" to which the case of Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (3), decided by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, and the case of Shew Prosad Bungshidhur v. Ram Chunder Haribux (5) should be held to apply.

To this contention I am unable to assent. It may be that if the parties had been in dispute as to the judgment-debtor's interest in the Patni and if, however erroneously, the District Judge had decided that his interest was not $\frac{2}{3}$rds, but $\frac{1}{3}$rd (and the area not 600 bighas but 200 bighas), this would have been merely an erroneous decision on a question of fact with which, acting under section 115 of the Code, we could not and should not interfere.

But the case here appears to me to be different. The property sold was clearly specified in the sale proclamation as the judgment-debtor's $\frac{2}{3}$rd share. As to the extent of the judgment-debtors' interest there was no dispute between the parties. Specified shares are distinct entities. It is the duty of a Judge to decide secundum allegata et probata. Instead of doing so, the learned Judge here has set himself to value not the property sold but an entirely different property, and on his finding as to the value of this different or imaginary property he has declined to set aside the sale of the judgment-debtor's property valued by the judgment-debtor at more than double the price realised.

By way of analogy merely, I should refer, in support of the view I take to two cases decided by the Bombay High Court and reported as Gorakh Babaji v. Vithal Narayan Joshi (7) and in Venkubai v. Lakshman Venkoba Khot (8).

For these reasons and differing with all respect from my learned colleagues I am of opinion that the present appeal should be dismissed with costs.

WALMSLEY, J.—This appeal is against an order passed by Mr. Justice Chatterjea on an application made by the present respondent.

The circumstances are as follows:—The respondent's landlord obtained a decree for rent against him, and in execution of that decree he caused respondent's share in a Patni Taluk to be put up for sale. The share was two-thirds of the Taluk. In the sale, the share was bought by the owner of the remaining one-third share. Subsequently the respondent applied to have the sale set aside, and this application was granted by the Munsif. Then the auction-purchaser preferred an appeal, and the order setting aside the sale was reversed and the sale was confirmed. Thereupon the judgment-debtor preferred a motion in this Court, a Rule was issued, and in due course the Rule came on for hearing before Mr. Justice Chatterjea and Mr. Justice Mullick. The former held that the case was one in which it was right to interfere and directed that the appeal should be heard again by the District Judge. The latter, however, was of opinion that the circumstances were not such as to bring the case within the scope of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. The auction-purchaser has lodged this appeal against Mr. Justice Chatterjea's order directing that the appeal should be re-heard.

A preliminary objection was taken at the hearing by the learned Pleader for the respondent, to the effect that no appeal lay, and he referred to the case of the Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. Oriental Gas Company (1). I do not think that that case supports his argument. The learned Chief Justice said there: "We think that 'judgment' in clause 15 means a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability." Applying that definition to Mr. Justice Chatterjea's judgment, it is clear that it affects the merits of the question in a very material degree. The effect of the decision by the lower Appellate Court was to confirm the sale, but by Mr. Justice Chatterjea's order the Munsif's order setting aside the sale is restored, until the auction-purchaser has convinced the District Judge at a second hearing of the appeal that it ought to be reversed. I hold, therefore, that the preliminary objection cannot be sustained and that the appeal does lie.

For the appellant it is urged that the reasons given by Mr. Justice Chatterjea cannot be brought within any of the clauses of section 115, Civil Procedure Code. It is clear that clauses (a) and (b) have no application. Can it be said that the learned District Judge "acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity?" The learned Pleader for the respondent says that because the lower Appellate Court treated the property as being one-third of the Taluk instead of two-thirds, there was no proper trial of the case. He stated this argument in several ways; that the learned Judge did not apply his mind to the case really before him; that he decided a case about the one-third share and not about the two-thirds share; that he did not try the judgment-debtor's case at all. Stated in any form, the argument is, if I may use the epithet without offence, nothing but a specious way of saying that the learned Judge made a very serious mistake, regarding the extent of the interest which had been sold. A mistake of fact, however, and a wrong decision based on it, do not constitute illegality or irregularity. I think this view is in accordance with a recent decision of this Court [Shew Prosad Bungshidhur v. Ram Chunder Haribux (5)] and with a decision by their Lordships of the Privy Council [Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Bakhsh Singh (3)]. In my opinion, therefore, the present case does not come within the scope of section 115, Civil Procedure Code.

For the respondent it is urged that if he cannot obtain relief under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, at any rate the provisions of section 15 of the High Courts Act are wide enough to cover his case. Attempts are often made to put an elastic interpretation upon the word 'superintendence.' Personally I think the word should be construed very narrowly. It is not necessary, however, to consider what meaning should be given to it, for there is one fact in the present case which prevents the respondent from asking us to go beyond the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. That fact is his failure to apply to the lower Appellate Court for a review of judgment. It is clear that the respondent was "aggrieved by a mistake apparent on the face of the record", and if he had made a proper application under Order XLVII he would, doubtless, have obtained relief.

Although I share Mr. Justice Chatterjea's sympathy for the judgment-debtor, I think we cannot uphold his order. In my opinion the appeal should be allowed, the order directing the appeal to be re-heard by the District Judge should be set aside, and the Rule obtained by the judgment-debtor should be discharged. I, therefore, concur in the orders of the learned Chief Justice.

Appeal allowed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.
FULL BENCH.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL No. 91 OF 1916.

August 14, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Justice Fletcher, Mr. Justice N. R. Chatterjea, Mr. Justice Teunon, Mr. Justice Richardson and Justice Sir Asutosh Chaudhuri, KT.

MANI LALL SING—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

THE TRUSTEES FOR THE IMPROVEMENT OF CALCUTTA—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Calcutta Improvement Act (V B. C. of 1911), ss. 41 (a), 42 (a), 78, 81—Board, whether has power to acquire land for recoupment—"Affected" in s. 42 (a), meaning of—'Recoupment,' 'Betterment,' meaning of—Interpretation of Statutes—Preamble, whether governs express provisions.

By the Full Bench (N. R. Chatterjea, J., dissenting).—Section 42 (a) of the Calcutta Improvement Act authorises the Board of Trustees to acquire land compulsorily for purposes of "recoupment," i.e., by selling or otherwise dealing with the land under section 81 or by abandoning the land in consideration of the payment of a sum under section 78 of the Act. [p. 781, col. 2.]

Per Fletcher, J.—The word "affected" in section 42 (a) of the Calcutta Improvement Act means affected in any way; and the expression "by the execution of the scheme" means through or owing to the execution of the scheme. [p. 780, col. 2.]

Betterment means that persons whose property has clearly been increased in market value by an improvement effected by local authorities should specially contribute to the cost of the improvement. [p. 779, col. 1.]

Recoupment means the acquisition of land by a public body beyond what is necessary for the actual execution of an improvement, so that some part at least of the improved value may be secured by the improving public body in ease of the burden on the rate-payers. [p. 779, col. 1.]

The preamble cannot restrict the enacting part of an Act though it may be referred to for the purpose of solving an ambiguity. [p. 779, col. 2.]

Per Richardson, J.—The phrase 'land affected by the execution of the improvement scheme" in section 42 (a) of the Calcutta Improvement Act suggests land affected for the better, and though the words may be wide enough to include land prejudicially affected should the Board choose to acquire such land, they specially include and signify land beneficially affected. [p. 799, col. 1.]

The words "by the execution of the scheme", which qualify the word "affected" refer not only to the period of construction but also to the period immediately following, when the improvement scheme is completed and in operation and "a going concern." [p. 799, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Chatterjea, J.—The words "land required for the scheme" in section 41 (a) of the Calcutta Improvement Act mean the land which is actually required for what may be called the engineering or construction works, for instance, in a street scheme the land necessary for laying out the street. [p. 784, col. 1.]

The word "affected" in section 42 (a) of the Calcutta Improvement Act has no reference to value. In that section it is used in the sense of acted upon physically or materially. [p. 785, cols. 1 & 2.]

The Calcutta Improvement Act does not authorise the Board of Trustees to acquire land compulsorily for the purpose of recoupment. [p. 793, col. 1.]

Where there are two possible constructions of certain words in a section of the Calcutta Improvement Act defining the power of the Board of Trustees, if on the one construction the Board would have almost unlimited power of interference with private rights, and in the other they are not clothed with such power, but with a power more convenient and limited, the latter construction should be preferred. [p. 789, col. 2.]

Reference against the judgment of Mr. Justice Greaves, dated the 5th June 1917.

FACTS appear from the following Order of Reference.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This case comes before us sitting as a Court for the hearing of appeals from the Original Side of the High Court and it is an appeal from the judgment of Greaves, J., which was delivered on the 17th July 1916.

The plaintiff was the owner of certain premises, No. 10, Halliday Street, and the defendants were the Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta and Mr. Peterson, the Land Acquisition Collector. The suit was filed for the purpose of obtaining an injunction to restrain the defendants from acquiring the said premises or doing any acts in furtherance thereof.

The land in question, No. 10, Halliday Street, lies to the west side of Halliday Street, the widening of which formed the basis of the Scheme No. VIIA. There was some discussion during the argument in this Court, as to how much of No. 10, Halliday Street, had been taken for the actual street widening.

It was, however, finally agreed by the learned Counsel engaged in the appeal that the strips of land to the north and south of No. 10, which had been taken for the purpose of widening Tara Chand Dutt Street and Zakaria Street (which is not named on the plan, but which is the street to the south of No. 10), had been taken under another scheme or other schemes, and that only the portions of No. 10 required for rounding off the corners formed by the junction of these two streets with Halliday Street had been taken in Scheme VII A, so far as the actual widening of Halliday Street was concerned.

The remainder of No. 10, Halliday Street, the Trustees contend, they are entitled to acquire compulsorily under their improvement scheme as land "which will, in their opinion, be affected by the execution of the scheme" within the meaning of section 42.

The issue upon which the case was decided was the 5th, which runs as follows:—

(5). Are the lands in suit, or any portion thereof, required for the purposes of the Act? Is recoupment one of such purposes?

Greaves, J., decided this issue in favour of the Trustees. The question depends upon the interpretation of the provisions of the Bengal Act No. V of 1911, an Act to provide for the improvement and expansion of Calcutta.

Last year Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ., sitting as a Division Bench on the Appellate Side of the Court, heard an appeal in the case of the Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta v. Chandra Kanta Ghosh (1). It was an appeal by the Trustees from a judgment of the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Pergannas, and judgment was delivered by the Division Bench on August 22nd, 1916. In that case the question whether the Trustees were entitled to acquire land compulsorily for the purpose of "recoupment" was involved, and the learned Judges came to a conclusion as to the construction of the Act contrary to that arrived at by Greaves, J., in the case now under appeal.

As at present advised, I agree with the conclusion arrived at by Greaves, J. As already stated the issue included the question: "Is recoupment one of such purposes?" It might have been more accurate to say "Is 'recoupment' one of the means authorised by the Act for carrying out the objects of the Act," but it is plain from the judgment that no misunderstanding occurred from the form of the issue.

I agree with Greaves, J.'s interpretation of the words "affected" in section 42 and I think the Trustees have power to acquire compulsorily land which, in their opinion, will be affected by the execution of the scheme with a view to selling or otherwise dealing with the same under section 81 or to the payment of a sum of money under section 78. Consequently, as at present advised, I am unable to agree with the decision in the case of the Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta v. Chandra Kanta Ghosh (1), in so far as it decides the contrary, and as my learned brothers, Woodroffe and Chitty, JJ., have come to the same conclusion the question of law must be referred to a Full Bench in pursuance of the rules of this Court.

In view, therefore, of the fact that this appeal must be re-argued before a Full Bench, I do not think it necessary to deal in detail with the sections of the Acts or the arguments presented to us. It is sufficient for me to say that I have read the judgments about to be delivered by my learned brothers Woodroffe and Chitty, JJ., and that, as at present advised, I agree with the conclusions arrived at by them.

The question to be referred to the Full Bench is whether the case of the Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta v. Chandra Kanta Ghosh (1), in so far as it holds that the Act V of 1911 (B. C.) does not authorise the Board of Trustees to acquire land compulsorily for purposes of "recoupment," i.e., by selling or otherwise dealing with the land under section 81 or by abandoning the land in consideration of the payment of a sum under section 78, was rightly decided. It was agreed by the learned Counsel engaged in Appeal No. 92 of 1916 that it would be covered by the decision in 91 of 1916.

WOODROFFE, J.—Something has been said as to the supposed novelty and arbitrary character of the principle of recoupment. In England the principle is well known:

"Municipal and other public bodies are sometimes given powers to take land beyond that which is necessary for the actual execution of the proposed works, in order that some part at least of the improved value of the adjoining lands may be secured in ease of the burden upon the rate-payers. These lands are said to be authorised to be taken for the purpose of 'recoupment', as the public body is empowered to sell or lease them at what may be an enhanced value" (Laws of England—Halsbury, VI, 25).

The principle of recoupment is well known here also and has been apparently provided for in the Bombay City Improvement Act of 1898 and the Calcutta Municipal Act of 1899, section 357 (2), both of which have been in operation for many years.

The latter Act gives the corporation wider powers than are claimed here for the Trustees.

The question is whether the power of taking land for recoupment has been given in the Calcutta Improvement Act (V of 1911 B. C.). Does it appear to be the intention of the Act that the public body of Trustees are to be allowed to re-imburse themselves the cost of improvement? It is possible, though it may not be likely, that what has been given under the Bombay Act and the Calcutta Municipal Act has been withheld here. I do not refer to the Bombay Improvement Act on the question of the construction of the Calcutta Improvement Act, but for the purpose of negativing the charge made against the Act of its being of an unusual arbitrary and oppressive character if it be construed to include the principle of recoupment. That principle is common enough and fair enough. Whether it exists in the provisions of the Act under discussion is another question. We have been told that a frontage tax was negatived. This is not against a power of recoupment having been given. For the former is a wider power applicable to every property fronting the improved area, whereas recoupment gives an option to the Trustees to acquire it or not according to the circumstances. It is obvious that the city cannot be improved except at a cost. It is argued before us that taxes and contributions provided for by the Act are insufficient to provide the funds necessary for improvement unless the principle of recoupment be allowed. Whilst this is prima facie possible, we must still look to see whether the power has in fact been given. This is a question of construction. Before dealing with the sections I may dispose of another apparent objection. It is equitable that those whose premises have been benefited by the improvement should contribute to it; and the application of this principle is subject to scrutiny and sanctions which guard against any misuse of powers.

In my opinion, the solution of the question before us depends in the main on the construction of sections 42 and 69. Subsidiarily sections 68, 78, 81, 122 are of importance. The preamble states the object of the Act to be to make provision for the improvement and expansion of Calcutta. This is the object of the Act generally stated. It there mentions particular ways in which this general object is given effect to, such as opening of congested areas, altering streets, acquiring lands, and "otherwise as hereinafter appearing." We must distinguish between the direct objects of the Act and the means by which they are to be given effect to. The object is to improve Calcutta. But to improve it money is needed, and the raising of money for that purpose is a means. The preamble then proceeds to say that it is expedient that a Board of Trustees should be constituted and invested with special powers for carrying out the objects of the Act. One of such powers is the power to acquire land for the execution of the proposed scheme (section 41). Every improvement scheme must provide for this. Another power (section 42) is an optional one. Such scheme may provide for the acquisition by the Board of Trustees of "any land in the area comprised in the scheme which will in their opinion be affected by the execution of the scheme." The question turns firstly on the meaning of the word "affected." It is obvious that the land so affected is different from land required for the execution of the scheme. Thus land may be taken outside the improvement scheme. The improvement brought about by the execution of the latter is the cause of the effect produced on the "affected" land.

It was held in Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta v. Chandra Kanta Ghosh (1) that the word "affected" does not mean "beneficially affected or improved in value;" nor does it mean "prejudicially affected or impaired in value," but signifies "acted upon physically or materially." It is difficult, however, to conceive of a case in which land is neither beneficially nor prejudicially affected in value. Perhaps what was meant to be said is that it is not sufficient to show that the land is affected in value, but that it is affected physically or materially must also be shown. But I am unable to see any ground which justifies us in reading into the section words which are not there. The Act says nothing about physical or material. It says "affected." This word must be given its plain and natural meaning, and that is "affected", howsoever it may be. In my opinion "affected" means affected and not merely physically affected, affected in value prejudicially or beneficially or so forth. If it is affected in any way, it is "affected." If it is beneficially affected, it is affected, and the question arises for what purposes and how the Trustees may acquire it. The next question is whether lands mentioned in section 42 can be acquired both by agreement under section 68 and compulsorily under section 69 or whether as Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ., have held, we are again to interpret a term used in its general sense in a particular sense. It has been held in the judgment cited that there can be no compulsory acquisition in respect of land dealt with in section 42 (a). This conclusion is based on the ground that section 69 authorises the Board to compulsorily acquire land "for carrying out any of the purposes of this Act." It is then said that as acquisition for the purpose of recoupment is not mentioned in the preamble, it is not a purpose, or a carrying out of a purpose, of the Act. As I have said, we must distinguish between an improvement and the means by which the improvement is effected. Recoupment is a means. The preamble is not concerned with the means. It merely states some of the general objects which are to be carried out by the means dealt with in the sections. It mentions acquiring land for certain objects of improvement. It does not mention the acquisition of land that it may be sold at a profit. It mentions the first because that is one of the objects of the Act: it does not specifically mention the second because it is a means, merely stating in a general way that the Trustees are invested with special powers (to be found in the sections) for carrying out the objects of the Act. I asked during the course of the argument whether there is any Act in this country or elsewhere in which recoupment is allowed and in which recoupment is directly mentioned in the preamble, and none was produced. On the contrary the word recoupment does not appear in any Act. We have further to see what are the express provisions in the body of the Act. It is and must be admitted that whatever be the meaning of the term "affected" in section 42, acquisition of land there mentioned is declared to be part of the improvement scheme. How then can it be said that the acquisition of land, which is part of the improvement scheme, is not for the carrying out of a purpose of the Act? As a matter of fact the contention that there cannot be compulsory acquisition under section 69 of land mentioned in section 42 (a) has been abandoned in the hearing before us, it being said that land may be acquired compulsorily or by agreement in respect of the matters mentioned in that section.

The words in section 69 are not only "for the purposes of this Act" but "for carrying out any of the purposes of the Act," that is, land may be compulsorily acquired both for the ultimate objects of the Act, namely, the improvement and expansion of Calcutta, and also as the sanctioned means whereby such improvement can (and as alleged can only) be effected.

What then is the object of acquiring land under section 69 combined with section 42? Even if recoupment can be included in the words "for the carrying out of the purposes of the Act," it must be shown that it is in fact so included, and that under section 42 acquisition may be made for such purpose.

As I have already said, "affected" includes both beneficially and prejudicially affected in value by the execution of the scheme of improvement. If the land sought to be acquired is likely to be injuriously affected by the execution of the proposed scheme, the land may be acquired at the market price, in which case the prospective loss will, if it occurs, fall on the Trustees. The latter are not bound to take up this or any other affected land. Ordinarily, however, adjoining land will be beneficially affected by the adjoining improvement. In that case, if the Trustees elect to acquire it, they acquire it at the market price and take the chance of prospective profit. They get this profit in one of two ways, either by allowing the owner to apply under section 78 for exemption of acquisition on payment of a sum to be fixed by the Board, or they may sell the land under section 81 subject (with certain qualifications) to a right of pre-emption in the owner. Section 78 is of great importance. It is sought to be explained away by saying that it applies to surplus lands, i. e., land which was originally acquired for the execution of the scheme but which was subsequently found not to be so required. The section does not say this, but "which is not required." But let us assume for the moment this construction and see what follows. The section contemplates an application by the owner to the Board requesting that the acquisition should be abandoned in consideration of the payment by him of a sum to be fixed by the Board. Why on the construction put forward by the appellant should the owner pay anything at all? His land is (say) taken by mistake and is found not wanted, and yet he is to be made to pay for the privilege of getting back his own land which, on a more correct estimate of what was required, should never have been taken from him. Learned Counsel for the appellant was unable to say anything more about this than that Government had put this "hardship" on his client and that he had to bear it. It is more reasonable to suppose that instead of imposing unnecessary hardships, the Legislature had in view a useful purpose, namely, recoupment. Moreover, the words of section 78 show that it does not apply to surplus lands under the improvement, because the scheme has not been commenced, and therefore, no one is in a position to say what are surplus lands: and because the payment by the owner negatives the idea that the lands here referred to are surplus lands. If they were, there is no reason why the owner should pay for getting back lands which on the hypothesis belong to him.

I agree with Greaves, J., that we must read "affected" as meaning affected, and not as qualified by terms which do not appear in the Act. I agree with him in holding that "affected" means affected in any way either prejudicially to the owner of the lands, or beneficially affected in the opinion of the Board, that is, enhanced in value by the improvement scheme and that recoupment by compulsory acquisition has been provided for by the Act. There is no question but that the land in suit was affected so as to justify its acquisition by the Board, whether we limit the term as the appellant suggests, or give it its full meaning as I think should be done. As, however, I am in disagreement with the decision in Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta v. Chandra Kanta Ghosh (1), in that it holds that Act V of 1911 (B. C.) does not allow the compulsory acquisition of land for recoupment, I agree that the question, whether it is good law or not, should be referred to a Full Bench in terms of the Chief Justice's judgment.

CHITTY, J.—This is an appeal from the decree of Greaves, J., in a suit brought by Mani Lall Sing against the Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta and the Land Acquisition Collector to restrain them from acquiring the plaintiff's premises, No. 10, Halliday Street, under the Calcutta Improvement Act V of 1911 (B. C.). The learned Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit finding on issue No. (5) that the lands in suit are required for the purposes of the Act and that recoupment is one of such purposes. In the view that he took it was unnecessary to decide the other issues.

I agree with the learned Chief Justice and Woodroffe, J., that the decision appealed from is correct, and that this appeal ought to be dismissed. But as this involves disagreement with the decision of a Division Bench of this Court in Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta v. Chandra Kanta Ghose (1), and consequently a reference to a Full Bench, I will state briefly the reasons for my decision.

The question for determination is whether the principle of recoupment is contemplated by the Calcutta Improvement Act. I should have preferred not to use the word "purposes" in issue No. (5), as a distinction might be drawn between "purposes" meaning the "objects" of the Act and "purposes" denoting the means by which those objects are to be attained. The word "purposes" is no doubt wide enough to cover both meanings. Thus the raising of loans by the Board which is specifically provided for by the Act may be said to be a purpose of the Act, though it is strictly one of the means by which the objects of the Act are to be carried out. It may be conceded that the word "recoupment" or indeed any synonymous expression finds no place either in the preamble or in the body of this Act. Our attention has not been drawn to any Statute or Act in which it does occur, though many such Statutes and Acts contemplate "recoupment," which is a well-recognised principle in town improvement. So far as the preamble is concerned, it is expressed in very general terms and the only object or purpose of the Act there specified is "to make provision for the improvement and expansion of Calcutta"; those words are followed by an enumeration of various methods, by which the improvement and expansion are to be effected, and the sentence ends "and otherwise" (i.e., in other ways) "as hereinafter appearing." These last words in my opinion clearly refer back to the various participles preceded and governed by the preposition "by." The second clause provides for the constitution of a Board of Trustees and for investing them with special powers for carrying out the objects of the Act. In my opinion, there is no force in the contention that the principle of recoupment finds no place in the preamble as a purpose or object of the Act. It is not to be expected that it should. We have to see whether it is one of the special powers with which the Board is invested. To see that we look into the Act itself. I agree that it must not be a matter of vague implication. It must be found there in provisions as to the meaning of which there can be no doubt.

The most important section is section 42, which deals with matters which may be provided for in improvement schemes, section 41 having dealt with matters which must be provided for. Section 42 runs:—"Any improvement scheme may provide for (a) the acquisition by the Board of any land, in the area comprised in the scheme, which will, in their opinion, be affected by the execution of the scheme." I agree with Greaves, J., that the decision of this case rests upon the meaning to be given to the word "affected." The arguments of Counsel on both sides were exhaustive and proceeded along somewhat devious paths, but all led us back to the simple question, what is the meaning to be placed on the word "affected." The learned Judges who decided Chandra Kanta Ghosh's case (1) expressed their opinion that in section 42 (a) it means neither "beneficially affected or improved in value" nor "prejudicially affected or impaired in value", but signifies "acted upon physically or materially." I am not sure that I understand their meaning. It may be that they meant that it does not necessarily signify affected in value. If they meant that it can have no reference to value, I am unable to agree. For the appellant it was argued that it certainly had no reference to value, but to injurious affection by reason of some interference with the owner's rights. No good reason was given for reading the word in so restricted a sense. It is noteworthy that when the Legislature intend, so to use it, they add the adverb, see section 23 (1) (4) of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, where the words are "injuriously affecting." I cannot see why the word "affected" should not be given its ordinary and natural meaning, and signify "affected" in any way, beneficially or injuriously, physically or materially, or otherwise howsoever. It seems to me that if land be "affected" at all by the execution of a scheme, it must be affected for better or worse. There can be no middle course, for then it would not be affected at all.

If the word be so construed, section 42 (a) clearly authorises the Board to include in a scheme the acquisition of any land within the given area which will in their opinion be affected by the execution of the scheme. Whether it will be so affected or not, the Board are the sole judges, though their scheme is of course dependent on the sanction of the Local Government. I must confess that I was unable to appreciate the force of the argument that section 42 (a) does not authorise compulsory acquisition; that that can only be effected under section 69; that section 69 only empowers the Board, with the previous sanction of the Local Government, to acquire land under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, for carrying out any of the purposes of this Act; and that the acquisition of land provided for under section 42 (a) is not a purpose of the Act. This appears to be the effect of the judgment in Chandra Kanta Ghosh's case (1), though I understood the learned Advocate-General to admit that for some purposes at any rate compulsory powers might be exercised under section 42 (a). It is difficult to see why a distinction should be drawn between section 42 (a) and section 42 (b), (c) and (d), which may certainly be included in purposes of the Act. In my opinion acquisition of land provided for under section 42 (a) is just as much a purpose of the Act, though a different one, as the acquisition of land provided for under section 41 as being in the opinion of the Board required for the execution of a scheme. I understood it to be conceded by the learned Counsel for the appellant that the Board could under section 68 acquire land by purchase or lease for purposes of recoupment. The learned Judges who decided Chandra Kanta Ghosh's case (1) seem to have been of the same opinion, for they say:—"The section (i.e., section 42) is at best an enabling provision; it gives no power of compulsory acquisition, though it may possibly authorise the Board to acquire land by private agreement." But section 42 is quite general in its terms and makes no distinction between the two forms of acquisition, by agreement and compulsory, which are recognised by the Act. An attempt was made to draw a distinction between acquisition by agreement under section 68 and compulsory acquisition under section 69. Beyond the obvious distinction between agreement and compulsion therein appearing, I do not think that there is any other distinction. The phraseology of the two sections is slightly different, but their meaning is the same. Under section 68 the Board may make any agreement for the purchase or lease "of any land which they are authorised to acquire." That must mean "authorised to acquire" under this Act. They can, therefore, under section 68 only purchase or lease land for carrying out any of the purposes of this Act, which are the words used in section 69. I am of opinion that the acquisition of land provided for by section 42 (a) is for carrying out the purposes of the Act, and that such acquisition, when the scheme has been approved by the Local Government, can be put through under the provisions of either section 68 or section 69 as the case may be.

That the Board can acquire land for purpose of recoupment is, in my opinion, made clear by the provisions of sections 78 to 81. Section 78 is specially important as in my opinion it can refer to nothing else. It was argued that it may refer to surplus lands, i. e., to lands which have been included in a scheme but have been found to be unnecessary for its execution. The words of the section, however, are "land .....which is not required for the execution of the scheme," not "which has been found to be unnecessary" for such execution. No satisfactory answer was given by the appellant's Counsel to the question put more than once, why, if a man's land has been taken and is to be given back as not required, should the unfortunate owner be made to pay to get it back. If the section referred to the abandonment of acquisition of surplus lands, it would, in my opinion, be in irreconcilable conflict with section 48 of the Land Acquisition Act, which must be read as incorporated in this Act. Further, the time, before which an application under section 78 must be made, i.e., before the time fixed by the Collector under section 9 of the Land Acquisition Act, shows that it cannot possibly refer to surplus lands. In Chandra Kanta Ghosh's case (1) it is suggested that section 78 may come into play where land which was originally intended to be acquired as necessary for the execution of the scheme may turn out to be not actually required by reason of an alteration in the scheme made under section 50 or by reason of some mistake in the original scheme itself. It is difficult to see how any such mistake could arise having regard to the various stages through which a scheme must pass before it is finally sanctioned. Nor is it reasonable to suppose that an elaborate section such as section 78 would be framed to meet a contingency which was not and could not be contemplated by the Act. But I cannot see how section 78 can apply in either of these two contingencies. If a scheme is altered or a mistake discovered, it must be before the land has been acquired. In that case the owners's land is still his own. Section 78 is only to be employed on the owner's application, and the question above referred to is again pertinent, why should he have to pay for retaining his own land which the Board do not require. It was argued that if section 78 refers to land acquired for purposes of recoupment, then under section 80 the Board would be able to repeat the process ad infinitum. This is clearly not so. That section merely provides that land, for which an exemption fee has been paid under section 78, is not thereby excluded from a fresh declaration under section 6 of the Land Acquisition Act.

Lastly the provision in section 8. (2) (b) giving the owner of land a right of pre-emption clearly denotes that the land has been taken for purposes of recoupment, and not as required for the execution of a scheme. It provides for the return of land to the owner at a price to be fixed by the Board, when that land has been acquired, while section 78 provides for such return at an earlier stage of the acquisition proceedings. I do not think that the sections in Chapter VI, Finance Accounts, have much bearing on the question before the Court, but section 122 provides for the crediting to capital account of all sums that can be received by the Board in respect of the sale of land, from whatever source it is derived [see section 122 (a), (c) and (d)]. I entirely agree with what Woodroffe, J., has said with regard to the alleged arbitrary nature of the Act. It appears to be far less arbitrary than the Land Acquisition Act which has been in force, with modifications, for nearly fifty years, or the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1899, with which the people of Calcutta are equally familiar. In this particular case although Greaves, J., actually decided issue (5) only and on that decision dismissed the suit, his judgment shows that he considered the land here in question to be "affected" by the execution of the scheme [Issue No. (6)]. There is no doubt on the facts, which are not in dispute, that this is so, as two small portions have been cut off for rounding off the corners of Halliday Street and the streets running into it. To this extent the case is distinguishable from Chandra Kanta Ghosh's case (1). The question of law, however, in both cases is the same, and, as we are in disagreement with the decision in that case, I agree that the question should be referred to a Full Bench.

A question was raised whether the Land Acquisition Collector was a necessary or proper party to this suit. In my opinion he was not. In any event, as he is sued in his official capacity, and the allegation in the plaint as amended is made against him in that capacity, the party, if any, to be added was the Secretary of State for India in Council.

The Hon. Mr. B. C. Mitter (Officiating Advocate-General) (with him Mr. S. C. Roy), for the Appellant.

Mr. S. R. Das (Officiating Standing Counsel) (with him Messrs. Langford James and A. Sinha), for the Respondent (Calcutta Improvement Trust).

JUDGMENTS OF THE FULL BENCH.

FLETCHER, J.—The question referred to the Full Bench for determination is as follows :—

"Whether the case of the Trustees for Improvement of Calcutta v. Chandra Kanta Ghosh (1), in so far as it holds that Act V of 1911 (B. C.) does not authorize the Board of Trustees to acquire land compulsorily for purposes of 'recoupment' i. e., by selling or otherwise dealing with the land under section 81 or by abandoning the land in consideration of the payment of a sum under section 78, was rightly decided."

The suit out of which the present reference arises was instituted on the Original Side of this Court by the plaintiff as the owner of the premises known as No. 10, Halliday Street, against the Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta and the Land Acquisition Collector for the purpose of obtaining an injunction to restrain the defendants from acquiring the said premises or doing any acts in furtherance thereof. From the statement given in the opinion of the learned Chief Justice in the order of reference it appears that No. 10, Halliday Street, lies on the west side of Halliday Street, the widening of which formed the basis of a street improvement scheme framed by the Trustees and known as Scheme No. VII A. There was some discussion during the argument before the referring Judges as to how much of No. 10, Halliday Street, had been taken for the actual street widening. It was, however, finally agreed between the Counsel engaged in the appeal that the strips of land to the north and south of No. 10 which had been taken for the purpose of widening Tara Chand Dutt Street and Zakaria Street had been taken under another scheme or schemes, and that only the portions of No. 10 required for rounding off the corners formed by the junction of these two streets with Halliday Street had been taken in Scheme No. VII-A so far as the actual widening of Halliday Street was concerned. The remainder of No. 10, Halliday Street, the Trustees contend, they are entitled to acquire compulsorily under their improvement scheme as land—"which will in their opinion be affected by the execution of the scheme." The Trustees admit that the remainder of No. 10, Halliday Street, is being acquired by them for the purpose of what is called "recoupment." Greaves, J., dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the 17th of July 1916. Against that judgment the appeal out of which the present reference arises was preferred. On the 22nd of August 1916 Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ., sitting as a Division Bench delivered judgment in the case of the Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta v. Chandra Kanta Ghosh (1) in an appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Pergannahs. This is the judgment referred to in the order of reference, and in that judgment the learned Judges held that the Trustees had no power under Act V of 1911 (B. C.) to acquire land compulsorily for the purpose of "recoupment." The appeal against the judgment of Greaves, J., came on for hearing before a Bench consisting of Sanderson, C. J., and Woodroffe and Chitty, JJ., and they not being in accord with the decision of Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ., made the present reference.

A point has been raised in limine that we ought not to decide the question referred to us, as the point does not "arise" for determination within the meaning of the rules of this Court in relation to references to a Full Bench. The foundation for this argument is certain observations made by the learned referring Judges. There is no substance in this argument. The learned referring Judges state that the question as to the correctness of the decision of Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ., does "arise" in the appeal in which this reference is made, and it is obvious it does arise with regard to the whole of No. 10, Halliday Street, except the small portions taken for rounding off the corners of the road. Further this reference arises out of a regular appeal No case has been cited to us of a reference to a Full Bench in a regular appeal, where the Full Bench has refused to answer the question referred. The case reported in the Bengal Law Reports Full Bench Rulings [Prosunno Coomar Paul Chowdhry v. Koylash Chunder Paul Chowdhry (2)], which was relied on by the Advocate-General, when looked at is not an authority for this proposition. For it appears that in that case it was only the minority of the Bench that was of opinion that the question ought not to be answered—the majority holding on the other hand that the question referred must be answered. It is also to be observed that on the rules relating to references to a Full Bench this case might in certain circumstances be heard by a Division Bench other than that which made the present reference, and in that event if we were to decline to answer the question, that other Bench might send the case back on a fresh order of reference. I am clearly of opinion that we must determine the question referred to us.

(2) (1867) B. L. R. Sup. Vol. 759 (F. B.); 8 W. R, 428; 2 Ind. Jur. (N. S.) 327,

Now the question referred must be determined on the construction of the provisions of Act V of 1911 (B. C.). But before considering the sections of the Act I should like to make clear what is understood by the terms "recoupment" and "betterment."

This is best shown by the Report in 1894 of a Select Committee of the House of Lords on Town Improvement (Betterment). That committee had before them "witnesses who have had experience in the actual working of betterment charges in various forms and they have also taken the evidence of other experienced witnesses and of gentlemen who have written on the subject." They reported [paragraph 3(1) of the report]:—"The principle of betterment, in other words, the principle that persons whose property has clearly been increased in market value by an improvement, effected by local authorities should specially contribute to the cost of the improvement is not in itself unjust and such person can equitably be required to do so. But the effect of a public work in raising the value of neighbouring lands is shown by experience to be uncertain. Whether in any particular case it is possible for a valuer to pronounce that such an effect has been produced by the completion of any public work is a point upon which the evidence of eminent valuers differs greatly."

[Paragraph 3 (10)].—"The Committee have received evidence upon what has been called 'recoupment', that is to say, powers given to a municipal or other public body to take land beyond what is necessary for the actual execution of the work, so that some part at least of the improved value may be secured by the improving public body in ease of the burden on the rate-payers. Some evidence was given by persons who had actual experience of the operations of such a system, the general effect of which was that it had not proved successful, but the Committee are not satisfied that it has ever been tried under circumstances calculated to make it successful, inasmuch as no sufficient power has ever yet been given to local authorities to become possessed of the improved properties without buying out all the trade interests, a course which is inevitably attended with wasteful and extravagant expenditure."

I have set out these portions of the report of the Select Committee as I feel, with all respect that the learned Judges who decided the case of Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta v. Chandra Kanta Ghosh (1) have not kept clearly in view the object of "recoupment" and "betterment." The vesting of a local authority with power to acquire land for the purpose of "recoupment" cannot, I think, be described at the present day as "vesting the Board with arbitrary and unlimited powers of interference with private rights."

The question, therefore, as to whether or not a particular Statute authorises "recoupment" or "betterment" must be determined solely on a consideration of the terms of the Statute, and if it does so authorize, it must also be determined whether compulsory powers of acquisition have been conferred for carrying into effect such purposes.

Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ., in their judgment proceed in the first instance to consider the preamble of Act V of 1911 and observe that "recoupment" is not mentioned as one of the purposes of the Act. But one would not expect to find it there. The preamble usually only mentions the general object and intention of the Legislature in passing the enactment. Further, it is well established that the preamble cannot restrict the enacting part of an Act, though it may be referred to for the purpose of solving an ambiguity.

Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ., in their judgment place considerable stress on the first paragraph in the preamble. Their reading of that paragraph is not, however, the literal and grammatical reading of it. The construction those learned Judges put on the paragraph was that the objects of the Act are :

A.—The improvement and expansion of Calcutta.

B.—The re-housing of the working classes displaced by schemes.

The learned Judges, however, remark that "the words 'and otherwise hereinafter appearing' at the end of the paragraph are by no means easy to construe, with what precedes." The plain reading of the paragraph is that the object is the improvement and expansion of Calcutta by the means specified "and otherwise as hereinafter appearing." The preamble, I think, affords us little assistance in the present case, only its terms cannot be used as in any way negativing the power of recoupment claimed.

Turning then to the sections of the Act which I think are material—

" Improvement scheme " is defined by section 2 as meaning a general improvement scheme or a street scheme or both.

" The duty " of carrying out the provisions of the Act, subject to the conditions and limitations contained therein, is by section 3 vested in a Board to be called "The Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta."

Chapter III of the Act is headed improvement schemes and re-housing schemes. Sections 36, 37 and 38 deal with general improvement schemes.

Then comes an important section 39 in the following terms :—

" Whenever the Board are of opinion that for the purposes of—

(a) providing building sites, or

(c) creating new or improving existing means of communication and facilities for traffic, or

(d) affording better facilities for conservancy it is expedient to lay out new streets (including bridges, causeways and culverts), the Board may pass a resolution to that effect and shall proceed to frame a street scheme for such area as they think fit."

Section 41 provides that " every improvement scheme shall provide for (a) the acquisition by the Board of any land in the area comprised in the scheme which will in their opinion be required for the execution of the scheme. "

Section 42 enacts that " any improvement scheme may provide for (a) the acquisition by the Board of any land in the area comprised in the scheme which will in their opinion be affected by the execution of the scheme. "

Now it is quite clear that section 42 (a) authorizes the acquisition of land lying within the improvement area but which is not required for the execution of the scheme. The question is, to what extent, and that must largely depend on what is the meaning of the word "affected."

Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ., held that " affected " means in the section " acted upon physically or materially, " and that the power of acquisition given by section 42 (a) applied only where " (in respect of those lands) there will be a physical interference with a right, public or private, which the owner is entitled to exercise in connection therewith. "

This definition is clearly taken from the judgments delivered in the House of Lords in the case of the Metropolitan Board of Works v. McCarthy (3). That decision, however, was on the meaning of the word "injuriously affected " as used in section 68 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, which is a very special section. A different meaning has been placed on the same words "injuriously affected " occurring in section 63 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845. It has also been held on more than one occasion that the decisions on section 68 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, are of little or no assistance in construing the words "injuriously affected" in sections of Acts of Parliament not in pari materia with section 68 of the Lands Clauses Act.

The decision of Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ., comes to this, that in section 42 (a) of Act V of 1911 (B. C.) " affected " means " injuriously affected. " With this result I am unable to agree. I agree with the opinion of Woodroffe, J., in his opinion in making this reference that " affected " in section 42 (a) means affected in any way.

Next it was argued that as section 42 (a) only authorizes the Board to acquire land which is affected " by the execution of the scheme ", that the Board has only power to acquire land affected during the execution and not by the completion of the scheme. The argument is based on the decision in the case of Hammersmith and City Railway v. Brand (4), which turned on the meaning of the words "execution of the works" used in section 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. That case, however, is of no assistance in construing section 42 (a) of Act V of 1911 (B. C.). The words " by the execution of the scheme " used in section 42 (a) simply mean through or owing to the execution of the scheme.

Then if that be so, for what purpose can the Board acquire land which is not required for the execution of the scheme under the provisions of section 42 (a). The purpose is given in section 81, which authorises the Board to retain or to let on hire, lease, sell or exchange any land vested in or acquired by them under the Act. That the Board have power to acquire land under section 42 (a) for the purpose of "recoupment" is strongly supported by the terms of section 78 of the Act. The view that Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ., took of that section, that it applied to land which was originally required for the execution of the scheme but was subsequently found to be unnecessary, cannot be supported. In such a case why should the owner pay money to the Board to get back his land?

The meaning of the section is perfectly clear. Under the scheme of the Act primarily the method provided for the Board securing for the public a portion of the "unearned increment" is by the means of recoupment. The Legislature did not, however, absolutely shut out the principle of "betterment", but provided by section 78 that where land is about to be taken for "recoupment" then on the application of the owner he and the Board may, if they agree as to the amount, deal with such owner's land on the principle of "betterment" instead. Section 78, I think, says that in as clear terms as is possible.

Lastly Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ., were of opinion that even if the Board had power to acquire land for the purposes of "recoupment", they had no power to acquire such lands compulsorily. The fact that the Board have power to acquire land for the purpose of "recoupment" does not necessarily mean that they have power to acquire it otherwise than by agreement. The powers of compulsory acquisition are set out in section 59 of the Act, which provides that the Board may with the previous sanction of the Local Government acquire land under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, for carrying out any of the purposes of the Act.

Under the provisions of section 49 (1) of the Act the Board are bound forthwith to execute a scheme sanctioned and notified by the Local Government. Surely one of the main purposes of the Act is the expansion and improvement of Calcutta by the execution of improvement schemes framed by the Board and sanctioned by the Local Government. With regard to land comprised in such schemes, the acquisition of which by the Board the scheme provides for, the Board with the sanction of the Local Government can exercise their compulsory powers of acquisition under section 69 of the Act. In my opinion we ought to answer the question referred to us in the manner following, namely:—That the case of the Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta v. Chandra Kanta Ghosh (1), in so far as it holds that Act V of 1911 (B. C.) does not authorize the Board of Trustees to acquire land compulsorily for purposes of "recoupment", i.e., by selling or otherwise dealing with the land under section 81 or by abandoning the land in consideration of the payment of a sum under section 78, was not rightly decided.

N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—The question referred to the Full Bench is "whether the case of the Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta v. Chandra Kanta Ghosh (1), in so far as it holds that Act V of 1911 (B. C.) does not authorize the Board of Trustees to acquire land compulsorily for purposes of recoupment by selling or otherwise dealing with the land under section 81, or by abandoning the land in consideration of the payment of a sum under section 78, was rightly decided."

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that upon the statement of the case in the referring order, this reference does not arise.

The contention of the Trustees (as it appears from the statement of the case) is that they are entitled to acquire the land compulsorily under their improvement scheme as land "which will, in their opinion, be affected by the execution of the scheme" within the meaning of section 42, and the learned Judges who made this reference are also of opinion that it is so "affected."

Woodroffe, J., observes: "There is no question but that the land in suit was affected so as to justify its acquisition by the Board, whether we limit the term as the appellant suggests, or give it its full meaning as I think should be done.

As, however, I am in disagreement with the decision in Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta v. Chandra Kanta Ghosh (1), in that it holds that Act V of 1911 (B. C.) does not allow the compulsory acquisition of land for recoupment, I agree that the question whether it is good law or not should be referred to a Full Bench in terms of the Chief Justice's judgment."

Chitty, J., observes that: "There is no doubt on the facts, which are not in dispute," that the land in question is "affected" by the execution of the scheme, "as two small portions have been cut off for rounding off the corners of Halliday Street and streets running into it. To this extent the case is distinguishable from Chandra Kanta Ghosh's case (1). The question of law, however, in both cases is the same, and as we are in disagreement with the decision in that case I agree that the question should be referred to a Full Bench."

In Chandra Kanta Ghosh's case (1) the learned Judges were of opinion that the word "affected" in section 42 means "physically or materially affected," and the land proposed to be acquired in that case not having been physically affected was held not to have been "affected" within the meaning of section 42 (a). They had, therefore, to consider whether the Board has power to acquire land for the purposes of recoupment by including it in a scheme under section 42 (a), or under the other provisions of the Act. In the present case the learned Judges are of opinion that the land is "affected" within the meaning of section 42 (a) of the Act even according to the interpretation placed upon the section in Chandra Kanta Ghosh's case (1). It is true the Board in the present case also stated that the land was included in the scheme for the purpose of recoupment, but they also stated that in their opinion the land was affected by the execution of the scheme. If the land is properly included in a scheme under section 42 (a) as land "affected" by the execution of the scheme, it can be compulsorily acquired under section 69 of the Act, and it is immaterial what object the Board have in acquiring the land. No doubt in Chandra Kanta Ghosh's case (1) the learned Judges were of opinion that section 42 (a) does not authorize compulsory acquisition of land but in their view the land, in that caselwas not "affected." The question whether land can be compulsorily acquired in a case where the land is properly included in a scheme under section 42 (a) did not, therefore, arise in that case. In the present case the learned Judges being of opinion that the land is "affected" even according to the view taken of the word in that case, I think the question whether the Act authorizes the Board to acquire land compulsorily for purposes of recoupment does not arise in the present case.

There is no doubt that in many cases Full Benches have declined to answer the questions referred to them on the ground that the reference does not arise. A number of earlier cases on the point are referred to in the case of Prosunno Coomar Paul Chowdhry v. Koylash Chunder Paul Chowdhry (2), which was referred to the Full Bench by Peacock, C. J., and Loch, J. Three of the learned Judges (Peacock, C. J., Glover and Jackson, JJ.) were of opinion that the questions did arise. The other two Judges (Macpherson and Kemp, JJ.), "following the practice acted upon frequently by Full Bench Courts" held that no answer should be given to the first question referred on the ground that it did not arise. Jackson, J., (although he was of opinion that the question did arise) entirely agreed with Macpherson, J., that the Full Bench, if looking into the case as far as is necessary for the purpose it should find that the point does not arise, ought to desist from answering it and pointed out the serious inconvenience arising from following the opposite course. Peacock, C. J., and Glover, J., were of a different opinion; and the former even went so far as to hold that "if uniformity of decision in the High Courts is desirable as it undoubtedly is, one Division Bench ought not to decide contrary to a dictum of another Division Bench without referring the question to a Full Bench." The opinion of Peacock, C. J., however, has not been followed by Full Benches, and Full Benches have in many cases declined to answer the question referred where in their opinion it did not arise. For instance, see Julmati Bewa v. Sheik Nayan (5), Bala

(5) 4 C. W. N. 803; 28 C. 127 note.

Ram v. Mangta Das (6) and Profulla Krishna Deb v. Nosibannessa Bibi (7). It is said that the rule does not apply to regular appeals, as the case may go to a Division Bench other than the Bench which referred it, and specially where as in the present case the Division Bench have not come to a decision on questions of fact, but may apply to second appeals where the whole case is referred to the Full Bench for decision. But the reference in Prosunno Coomar Paul's case (2) arose out of a regular appeal, and in the present case, upon the statement of the case in the referring order itself, Chandra Kanta Ghosh's case (1) is distinguishable. I am accordingly of opinion that the question of the correctness of that case does not arise. As, however, the majority of the Full Bench are of a different opinion, I proceed to state my views upon the question referred to us.

The first paragraph of the preamble to the Act (Act V of 1911) states the objects of the Act. It says—Whereas it is expedient to make provision for

(1) the improvement and expansion of Calcutta by opening up congested areas, laying out or altering streets, providing open spaces for purposes of ventilation or recreation, demolishing or constructing buildings, acquiring land for the said purposes and (2) for re-housing of persons of the poorer and working classes displaced by the execution of the improvement schemes.

It is contended on behalf of the Trustees that in order to read it in this way there should be a comma after the word "purposes." But as pointed out by the Judicial Committee in the case of Maharani of Burdwan v. Krishna Kamini Dasi (8), "it is an error to rely on punctuation in construing Acts of the Legislature." The omission of a comma, I think, does not affect the reading of the preamble in the way stated above. Then follow the words "and otherwise as hereinafter appearing." It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the words should be read with the words 'to make provision,' on the other hand it is said that these words mean "by other means and methods as hereinafter appearing." It is difficult to construe the words with reference to the earlier portion of the preamble, but whatever they may mean they have no reference to the acquisition of land, because acquisition of land has already been provided for in the earlier part and is restricted to the "said purposes", i. e., the purposes expressly mentioned therein. It is to be observed that the acquisition of land for the purposes of recoupment is not one of the purposes of the Act enumerated in the preamble. The second paragraph states that it is expedient that a Board of Trustees should be constituted and vested with special powers for carrying out the objects of the Act. The fourth paragraph recites that the sanction of the Governor-General has been obtained to the enactment of the provisions of Chapter V relating to taxation.

Before dealing with the important sections which have any bearing upon the question referred I will briefly refer to the provisions of the Act.

Section 2 gives the definitions of words used in the Act, and it is only necessary to notice clause (f) which says that "improvement scheme" means a general improvement scheme or a street scheme or both. Chapter II relates to the constitution of the Board, conduct of business, and the appointment of their officers and servants and such other matters. Chapter III deals with improvement schemes and re-housing schemes, and comprises sections 36 to 67. Section 36 provides for the framing of a general improvement scheme and section 39 provides for the framing of a street scheme. Section 40 mentions the matters to be considered when framing improvement schemes in respect of any area, and which include "the nature and the conditions of neighbouring areas and of Calcutta as a whole." Sections 41 and 42 lay down matters which must and may be provided for respectively in improvement schemes. Section 43 provides for the preparation by the Board of a notice of the scheme and of the boundaries of the area comprised therein and for the publication of such notice, and section 45 provides for the service of notices on persons whose land is proposed to be acquired in execution of the scheme. Section 47 provides for the application by the Board to the Local Government for the sanction of the scheme, and for the particulars to accompany the application. Section 48 provides for the sanction of the scheme by the Government; and section 49 (1) provides for the notification by the Local Government of the sanction, and sub-section (2) lays down that the publication of a notification shall be conclusive evidence that the scheme has been duly framed and sanctioned. Section 50 provides for alteration of the scheme after it has been sanctioned.

Chapter IV, which consists of sections 68 to 81, deals with acquisition and disposal of land. Section 68 provides for the acquisition by the Board of land by agreement and section 69 provides for acquisition of land by the Board for carrying out any of the purposes of the Act. Section 70 and the following section provide for the constitution of a tribunal for the purpose of acquiring land. Section 78 provides for the abandonment of land the acquisition of which has been sanctioned but which is not required for the execution of the scheme.

Chapter V relates to taxation which comprises duty on transfer of property, terminal tax on passengers and customs duty on jute.

Chapter VI deals with finance. Section 88 provides for Municipal contributions, and section 89 gives power to the Board to borrow money. Sections 122 and 123 respectively deal with the crediting of moneys to capital account and with the application of moneys credited to the capital account.

The most important sections to be considered in connection with the question referred to us are sections 41, 42, 68, 69, 78, 80 and 81.

Section 41 (a) says that every improvement scheme shall provide for the acquisition by the Board of any land which will in their opinion be required for the scheme, whereas section 42 (a) lays down that any improvement scheme may provide for the acquisition by the Board of any land in the area comprised in the scheme which will in their opinion be "affected by the execution of the scheme."

There is no question that the land "required for the scheme" means the land which is actually required for what may be called the engineering or construction works, for instance, in a street scheme the land necessary for laying out the street. The main controversy has centred round the expression "affected" in section 42 (a). In Chandra Kanta Ghose's case (1) it was held that the word 'affected' in section 42 means "neither beneficially affected or improved in value, nor prejudicially affected or impaired in value, but signifies acted upon physically or materially." On the other hand in the opinion of the referring Judges it means affected in any way and not merely "physically affected," "affected in value prejudicially or beneficially or so forth." The dictionary meaning of the word is "acted upon" and it is capable of a very large meaning. It may be conceded that it may mean affected beneficially as well as prejudicially, although it is generally used in the latter sense. But the meaning to be attached to the word would vary according to the context, and the question is in what sense the word has been used in section 42 (a), and whether it has any reference to value of the land. According to the contention of the respondents the object of inclusion of land under section 42 (a) is recoupment. But the acquisition of land prejudicially affected cannot be any means of recoupment. The word, therefore, could not have been used in the sense of "depreciated in value." It is true that the Board is not bound to include any land in the scheme under section 42 (a), it is merely optional with them to do so, and, therefore, they would not include any land depreciated in value within the scheme. But what I mean to say is that the object being recoupment, the word "affected" could not have been used in the sense of 'prejudicially affected in value.' Then does the word refer to land beneficially affected or improved in value? When an improvement scheme is framed with respect to any area, the whole of it would be beneficially affected in value by the scheme. For instance in a street scheme, the properties fronting a street would be more beneficially affected in value, the other portions of the area may be less beneficially affected in value by it, but every portion of it will be more or less beneficially affected in value. If, therefore, the word 'affected' in section 42 (a) has reference to value, the whole of the area may be acquired by the Board under section 42 (a). But if that was the intention of the Legislature, I do not see the necessity of the words "which will in their opinion be affected by the execution of the scheme," because every portion of the area is affected more or less. In that case after providing in section 41 (a) that the improvement scheme shall provide for the acquisition by the Board of any land in the area comprised in the scheme which will in their opinion "be required for the scheme," it would have been sufficient to say in section 42 (a) that any improvement scheme "may provide for the acquisition by the Board of any land in the area comprised in the scheme," and the words "which will in their opinion be affected by the scheme" would be wholly unnecessary. Then again, if the word "affected" has any reference to value and if recoupment is the object of inclusion of land not actually required for the scheme, (the inclusion of lands prejudicially affected in value being out of the question) it is difficult to see why the ambiguous word 'affected' was used instead of "increased in value," which would have expressed the intention which, according to the respondent, the Legislature had in framing the section. It is not as if such an expression is never used in similar Statutes. Section 58, sub-section 3, of the House and Town Planning, etc. Act 1909 (9 Edw. 7, Chap. 44) provides: "Where by the making of any town planning scheme, any property is increased in value, the responsible authority...shall be entitled to recover from any person whose property is so increased in value one-half of the amount of that increase."

In this connection it may be pointed out that under section 24 of the Land Acquisition Act the Court, in determining the amount of compensation to be awarded for land acquired under that Act, shall not take into its consideration "any increase to the value of the other land of the person interested likely to accrue from the use to which the land acquired will be put." That gives the benefit of any rise in the value of other lands of the person whose land is taken up, to him, and section 24 has not been repealed by the Calcuttta Improvement Act.

I am accordingly of opinion that the word 'affected' has no reference to value in section 42 (a). The only sense, therefore, in which the word could have been used is in the sense of "acted upon physically or materially." That is one of the recognized meanings as given in the Oxford Dictionary, and in the case of Metropolitan Board of Works v. McCarthy (3), the House of Lords in construing the words "injuriously affected" held that "where by the construction of works there is a physical interference with any right, public or private, which the owners or occupiers of property are by law entitled to make use of, in connection with such property apart from the uses to which any particular owner or occupier might put it, there is a title to compensation, if by reason of such interference, the property as a property is lessened in value." It is true that the question in that case was as to the meaning of the words "injuriously affected" in section 68 of the Land Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, under which the plaintiff claimed compensation, and not merely "affected" as in the present case. But if the word "affected" does not signify physical interference, the mere addition of the word "injuriously" would not do so, because when land is depreciated in value, it may also be said to be "injuriously affected." The words, no doubt, had to be construed with reference to the provisions of that particular Statute, and it was held that in order to found a claim to compensation under that section for an interest in land "injuriously affected," there must be an injury affecting the house or land itself in which the person claiming compensation has an interest, and that a mere personal inconvenience, obstruction and damage to a man's trade or the good-will of his business will not be sufficient. It was further held that the property must be lessened in value by the physical interference, but that was because they had to deal with the question of compensation claimable under the section in respect of land injuriously affected.

The passage quoted above, however, shows that the word "affected" may appropriately be used with reference to physical interference with rights. In fact, it is not disputed on behalf of the respondent that it may mean "physically affected," their contention being that it means "affected" in any way, whether "physically affected" or 'affected in value.' I think, however, that although the value may also be affected by physical interference, the word as stated above has no reference to value in section 42 (a). That being so, the word must in section 42 (a) mean "physically or materially affected." It is true that those words are not in the section, but the word 'affected' must be construed having regard to the context.

Land may be physically "affected" by the execution of a scheme in a variety of ways, for instance, a building near the improvement may suffer from the construction of works, by subsidence, or by having easements affected or by reason of "severance", in which case the Board may have to pay heavy compensation, and it may be more advantageous to the Board to acquire the building or land affected, and then to dispose of it, rather than pay compensation for the injurious affection, although such building or land is not required for the execution of the scheme under section 41 (a). Section 49 of the Land Acquisition Act provides that a part only of any house or building cannot be acquired, if the owner desires that the whole of it should be acquired. Now if only a part of a house or building is necessary for the execution of a scheme, the remaining portion of it may be affected by the execution of the scheme. The latter portion cannot come under section 41 (a) and must, therefore, come under section 42 (a); and if there were no provisions such as are contained in section 42 (a), the whole elaborate procedure prescribed in Chapter III of the Act would have to be repeated for acquisition of such land, because although no fresh declaration is necessary, a fresh sanction of the Government would be required. The word "affected" may properly apply to all such cases as are stated above, and I do not see how it can be said that "physically or materially affected" is not a natural meaning of the word.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that even if 'affected' means "beneficially affected in value," the expression used in section 42 (a) being not merely "affected" but "affected by the execution of the scheme," the affection must be due to the actual execution of the scheme itself, and not due to any use to which the land is put after the execution of the scheme. In section 41 (a) the words land "required for the scheme" admittedly mean land required for the work actually to be done on it, i. e., the land required for engineering or construction works. The land affected by the execution of the schemes in section 42 (a) must, therefore, mean land affected by the engineering or construction work itself, and I think it must be shown that in any particular case the rise in value is due to the execution of the scheme itself, and apart from the use to which it might be put.

I think it unnecessary, however, to consider the point further, or to discuss the cases decided under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act and the Railway Clauses Consolidation Acts which were cited before us, because I am of opinion that the word "affected" has no reference to value in section 42 (a).

Section 42 (a) does not by itself give the Board power to acquire land. The power of acquisition is given by sections 68 and 69. Section 68 provides that the Board may enter into an agreement with any person for the purchase or leasing by the Board from such person of any land which the Board are authorized to acquire or any interest in such land; and section 69 provides that "the Board may, with the previous sanction of the Local Government, acquire land under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, for carrying out any of the purposes of this Act." No practical difficulty arises in a case of purchase by agreement under section 68, because although in such a case also, the acquisition must be one which the Board are authorized to make, the transaction being by consent of parties, there is no one to raise the question. But where the land is to be compulsorily acquired, it must be shown that it is to be acquired for "any of the purposes of the Act." It is true that the scheme submitted to Government for sanction would include both lands under sections 41 (a) and 42 (a), but the mere fact that the land is included in the scheme framed under section 42 (a) will not justify its acquisition unless it be for the purposes of the Act, otherwise it would have been sufficient to say in section 69 that the Board may acquire any land sanctioned by the Government without the addition of the words 'for carrying out any of the purposes of the Act." So that section 42 (a) alone does not help us in deciding the question whether land can be acquired for recoupment. The purposes of the Act are mentioned in the preamble. Recoupment is not stated to be one of the purposes of the Act. It is said that recoupment, being only one of the means by which the purposes are to be accomplished, does not find a place in the preamble. That may be so, but when the preamble states "acquiring land for the said purposes" and the purposes such as "opening up congested areas," etc, are expressly mentioned in the preamble, the power given to the Board under section 69 to acquire land for "any of the purposes of the Act" must be taken to have reference to the "purposes" enumerated in the preamble and those only.

It is also contended on behalf of the respondent that "purposes" include the means by which the object is to be attained and recoupment being one of the means, is one of the purposes of the Act. But I am unable to hold that 'means' which are the instruments for accomplishing the purposes of the Act are 'purposes' of the Act. If, however, the body of the Act gives power to acquire land for the purposes of recoupment, expressly or by necessary implication, then the mere fact that the preamble does not state it would not matter. There is no express provision in the Act that any land can be acquired for the purposes of recoupment. Then is the power given by necessary implication? It is said that the words "for carrying out" any of the purposes of the Act in section 69 imply such power, but I think that "carrying out" merely means "giving effect to." The Board has the power to acquire lands for giving effect to the purposes of the Act mentioned in the preamble such as "opening congested areas" and the other purposes enumerated therein, as no other purpose is mentioned in any other part of the Act. Section 80 shows that if any land, in respect of which an agreement has been executed or payment has been accepted under section 78, is subsequently required for any of the purposes of the Act, it may be acquired under a fresh declaration. Now if recoupment is one of the purposes of the Act, the same land, which has already paid what may be called the exemption fee, may again be included in a scheme for the purposes of recoupment and the process may be repeated any number of times—a result which I think could never have been contemplated.

In Chandra Kanta Ghosh's case (1) the learned Judges held that section 42 does not authorize compulsory acquisition of land, "though it may possibly authorize the Board to acquire land by private agreement." As stated above, section 42 (a) by itself does not confer the power of acquisition of any land either compulsorily or by agreement. The question whether any land included in the scheme under section 42 (a) can be compulsorily acquired under section 69, depends upon whether the acquisition of the land is for "carrying out any of the purposes of the Act." Section 42 (a) may be satisfied merely by voluntary acquisition. But if any land is "physically" or "materially affected" by the execution of a scheme, the acquisition of such land would be necessary for carrying out the "purposes of the Act." In such a case the Board have the power to compulsorily acquire such land under section 69, as well to acquire it by agreement under section 68, and I do not see any reason why in such a case, land mentioned in section 42 (a) cannot be compulsorily acquired.

Section 49 provides that whenever the Local Government sanctions an improvement scheme it shall announce the fact by notification, and the Board shall forthwith proceed to execute the same, and that the publication of the notification shall be conclusive evidence that the scheme has been duly framed and sanctioned. It is contended on behalf of the respondents that a scheme submitted for sanction under section 47 includes lands proposed to be acquired under section 42 (a), and when it is sanctioned under section 48, it becomes a statutory duty of the Board to execute it. But that assumes that the scheme has been sanctioned for the purposes of the Act and that the Act contemplates acquisition of land for the purposes of recoupment. If acquisition of land for the purpose of selling it and making profit therefrom is a purpose of the Act, the carrying out of a scheme sanctioned by the Government would no doubt be carrying out a purpose of the Act, but that is begging the very question to be decided. The second clause of section 49 says that the publication of the notification shall be conclusive evidence that the scheme has been framed and sanctioned. But the mere fact that it is sanctioned does not show that the land is required for carrying out any of the purposes of the Act.

The next important section is section 78. That section relates to the abandonment of land, the acquisition of which has been sanctioned but which is not required for the execution of the scheme, and great reliance is placed upon it as showing that the Board have the power of recoupment. That section provides that "in any case in which the Local Government has sanctioned the acquisition of land in any area comprised in an improvement scheme which is not required for the execution of the scheme, the owner of the land, or any person having an interest therein, may make an application to the Board, requesting that the acquisition of the land should be abandoned in consideration of the payment by him of a sum to be fixed by the Board in that behalf."

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that it contemplates land which was originally considered necessary for the execution of the scheme, but which is subsequently found not to be so required. On the other hand, the respondents contend that it refers to land which was not and was never required for the scheme, but which was included in the scheme for the purposes of recoupment. The words used in the section, however, are "which is not required for the execution of the scheme," and that implies that the lands were originally considered necessary for the execution of the scheme, but were subsequently found not to be so required. The words, I think, do not refer to the time when the sanction of Government is applied for, but to the time when the abandonment is applied for by the owner under section 78. A comparison of the words used in sections 41 (a) and 42 (a) with those used in section 78 indicates this. When framing a scheme under section 41 (a) or 42 (a) it is a mere opinion of the Board that the land "will be required" or "will be affected." It is only in the further stages of the proceedings that it may turn out that the land is not required, and it is then that the application under section 78 is made. The section may apply to a case where a scheme having been sanctioned was subsequently altered under section 50. It may also apply to a case where a certain quantity of land was entered in the scheme as being necessary for the execution of the scheme but it was subsequently found that a lesser quantity would suffice for the purpose. It is contended that it cannot apply to surplus lands, because surplus lands can be ascertained only after acquisition. But a scheme may be altered after sanction and before acquisition, and there may be cases where surplus lands are ascertained after sanction and before acquisition. The strongest argument against the applicant's contention is that if it is well founded, the owner has to pay for retaining his own land "which on a more correct estimate of what was required should never have been taken from him." It is to be borne in mind, however, that the Board cannot of their own motion abandon the acquisition of any land. It is only upon the application of the owner that the Board can do so. If no application is made for abandonment under section 78, the Board must acquire the land (except as provided in section 48 of the Land Acquisition Act), and section 81 provides that the Board may retain or may let on hire, lease, sell, exchange or otherwise dispose of any land vested in or acquired by them under this Act.

The Board are to admit the application under section 78, if it reaches them before the time fixed by the Collector under section 9 of the Land Acquisition Act for making claims in reference to the land. It would appear from sub-section (3) of section 78 that the section has application after the Collector has started proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act. It says that if the Board decide to admit any such application they shall forthwith inform the Collector, and the Collector shall thereupon stay for a period of 3 months all further proceedings for the acquisition of the land. It appears, therefore, that the proceedings under section 78 take place after the declaration and before the notice under section 9 of the Land Acquisition Act. But as soon as the declaration is made under section 6 of that Act, the power to acquire the land is absolute whether the land is required or not. The Government can withdraw from the acquisition, but it cannot do so except on payment of compensation under section 48 of the Land Acquisition Act, and section 48 (a) of the Improvement Act provides for payment of compensation for delay if the Collector does not make an award within 2 years of the declaration under section 6 of the Land Acquisition Act. The Board, therefore, incur a liability, as soon as a declaration is made under section 6 of the Land Acquisition Act.

On the other hand as soon as a declaration is made, the owner has no longer any right to get back the land and cannot compel the Government to give it up. The land having been made the subject of declaration, the value of it may go up, in some cases may go up enormously. It is not reasonable that the Board should incur a liability to the owner for damages, and at the same time be deprived of the benefit of the rise in value of the land, and in these circumstances it is not inequitable that the owner should pay for the retention of the land. He is under no compulsion to apply to the Board for abandoning the acquisition, but if he chooses to do so, he must pay the sum fixed by the Board for the abandonment of the land which, if he had not applied for its retention, the Board might have acquired and sold to others at a profit. This, however, does not show that lands may be deliberately included in the scheme for the express purposes of recoupment as contended on behalf of the respondent. The lands are not to be included in the scheme originally for the purpose of thereafter making profit, but if they are included because considered necessary for the scheme, and it is subsequently found not to be required either by reason of an alteration of the scheme, or by reason of less lands being actually required, the Board have the power to dispose of such lands. The provisions of section 81 apply to such lands. That section gives to the Board the power to dispose of lands vested in or acquired by them under the Act, and that of course means properly acquired by them. It is contended that cases of alteration of scheme or mistake in estimate must be rare, and that it is not likely that the elaborate provisions of section 78 should have been framed for such stray cases, and that under the circumstances the construction contended for on behalf of the respondent should be preferred. But the Act contemplates alteration of schemes and section 50 makes express provisions for it, and there may be some cases of wrong estimates. Once it is held that such cases may come under the section, it cannot be said that the section gives the power of acquisition of lands for the purposes of recoupment by necessary implication. It appears that Greaves, J., by whom this case was originally tried, did not attach much importance to the argument founded upon section 78, and he was of opinion that the words of the section would be satisfied by applying them to 'surplus lands', and that he should be loath to spell out of these words so large a power as is claimed by the defendant. I agree with what Greaves, J., says on this point. The question is, not whether the power of acquisition of land for the purposes of recoupment can possibly be spelt out of the section, but whether the power is given by necessary implication. If the construction put forward on behalf of the appellant can reasonably be placed on the section, in other words, if the words of the section can be satisfied by reference to lands subsequently found unnecessary, it cannot be said that the power of recoupment is given by necessary implication. As pointed out by Bell, J., in Dickson v. Pape (9): "A necessary implication is not guess, not probability, but an inference which by no reasonable intendment can be otherwise, it is a state of things excluding any reasonable conclusion but the one." The powers claimed by the Trustees are very large; according to their contention they may acquire any land within the area for which an improvement scheme is framed, for the purpose of recoupment. Now, when there are two possible constructions of the words defining their powers, if on the one construction the Board would have almost unlimited power of interference with private rights, and in the other they are not clothed with such power, but with a power more convenient and limited, the latter construction should be preferred.

It is not and cannot be disputed that the power of recoupment may be given to Municipal and other public bodies. As stated in Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume VI, page 25: "Municipal and other public bodies are sometimes given powers to take land beyond that which is necessary for the actual execution of the proposed works, in order that some part at least of the improved value of the adjoining lands may be secured in ease of the burden upon the rate-payers. These lands are said to be authorised to be taken for the purpose of 'recoupment' as the public body is empowered to sell or lease them out at what may be an enhanced value." Galloway v. London Corporation (10), Quinton v. Bristol Corporation (11). If the Act clearly authorises the land to be taken for the actual works only, a local authority or other public body will be restrained from taking more than is actually necessary for such works: Donaldson v. South Shields Corporation (12), but if it appears that it is the intention of the Act that the public body are to be allowed to reimburse themselves, they will then be at liberty to take all the lands delineated on the plans: Galloway v. London Corporation (10), Quinton v. Bristol Corporation (11). On the other hand, when local authorities are authorized to take lands from time to time for specific works such as street widening and the land is not specified in the Act, they cannot, in order by resale to reduce the expenses to the rate-payers, take more than is bona fide necessary for the purpose: Denman & Co. v. Westminster Corporation (13), Fearnley v. Limehouse District Board of Works (14).. It will serve no useful purpose to discuss these cases which turn upon the provisions of the particular Statutes with which they deal. I will only notice two cases upon which the parties respectively placed some reliance. On behalf of the respondent reliance was placed on the case of Galloway v. London Corporation (10), where it was pointed out that there is a distinction between powers given to a body of adventurers for a certain purpose (as for example the formation of a railway) and powers given to an existing public body such as the Corporation of a city of making public improvements in its city, and that the powers thus entrusted to it for such a purpose will not be subject, as in the other case, to a strict and restrictive construction. But even such public bodies authorized to make large improvements cannot exercise their powers except for the purposes of the Act. It is to be borne in mind that in England Statutes authorizing public bodies to acquire land compulsorily generally contain a schedule or a plan or a book of reference defining the land to be acquired. In the case of Gard v. Sewers Commissioners (15) Kay, J., in construing the Statute 57, Geo. III, C. XXIX, which empowered a public body to alter and widen the streets, and for that purpose to compulsorily acquire lands and houses which might be adjudged by them to prevent or obstruct such widening or alteration, after stating that the Commissioners (in that case) were a body, like the Corporation of London in the case of Galloway v. London Corporation (10), "armed with powers for the purpose of making improvements in this great city; and that it is part of the scheme of the Act that they may take, in carrying it out at some time, more land than is actually wanted for the physical purpose of widening the streets, and, therefore, the Court will deal very liberally with them—will give a most wide interpretation to, and will not interfere with, their powers—although it may appear that they are taking more lands than will be wanted for the actual widening, and intending, all along, to sell the portion which they will not use for that purpose, and by the sale to raise money to enable them to carry out the purposes of the Act", observed as follows:— "I was referred to the 96th section of the Act, to show that they have the power, subject to the right of pre-emption, of selling any land which they may have taken and which they really do not want for the purpose of widening the streets, and that the moneys which they obtain from such a sale may be used for the purposes of the Act, and it was urged that this is within the case of Galloway v.

London Corporation (10). Now there is a very wide distinction between this and the case of Galloway v. London Corporation (10). In that case the lands which were to be taken were all put in a schedule to the Act; they were actually defined by boundaries and quantities, and the words of the Act were that they might take all those lands, which not only shewed the extent to which they were to go, but placed a limit within the four corners of the Act, upon the quantity of land which they were to take. There is nothing of that kind in this Statute. It contains no schedule. There is no limit whatever upon the lands which are to be taken, save such as is comprised in the words which I have read, and that makes an enormous difference between the two cases. Suppose, for example, that the Commissioners were to desire to widen one of the main thoroughfares of London—the whole of Fleet Street or one of the great arteries of London, or so much as came within their jurisdiction—and to say 'We will take lands on both sides of the street,' if the argument be right, they could adjudge that every house and every piece of vacant land on both sides of the street obstructed it, however wide these might be, and they might take the whole of every such house and piece of land. Suppose the street passed the Bank of England, they might, if they thought fit, take the whole of the Bank, although they might only want two feet of it for the purposes of widening the street. Suppose there was a large frontage of land, a quarter of an acre, in the city of London vacant, with no building upon it, then although they might only want a yard of such frontage, they might if they chose take the whole, according to the argument. That would be giving a very much greater power to the Commissioners having the control of pavements than was given in Galloway v. London Corporation (10); and that is a distinction between the two cases which would make me hesitate very much indeed before I could hold that under the Acts such bodies as the Commissioners are entitled to such power as that." In the Court of Appeal (which affirmed the decision of Kay, J.) Baggallay, L. J., referring to Galloway's case (10) observed: "The circumstances in that case, as has been pointed out in Thomas v. Daw (16), were very different. In that case the Corporation were not merely authorised to take what they might adjudge to be necessary for the purpose of improvement they were about to effect, but lands were specified in the schedule to the Act of Parliament and power to deal with them was given by the Act to the Corporation." I have quoted the observations of Kay, J., at length, for the purpose of showing that there is a wide distinction between a Statute in which the Legislature has expressly defined the lands to be acquired, and a case like the present where the lands are not defined in the Act and a public body have been given power to acquire land only for the purposes of the Act. The scheme when framed under section 42 (a) of the Calcutta Improvement Act would define the area out of which the acquisition is to be made, but the area is not defined by the Statute itself. The Board may frame a scheme of improvement either under section 36 or section 39 for such area as they may think fit, and if the respondent's contention is correct, they can include any land within the scheme they think proper, with the deliberate object of recoupment and then acquire any such land for the purposes of recoupment. That is a power wholly different from the power to acquire land for the purpose of recoupment within an area defined by the Statute itself.

It is said that the principle of recoupment is well known in this country, and reference is made to the Calcutta Municipal Act, and the Bombay City Improvement Act, though the word 'recoupment' is not expressly used in any Act. But whether any Statute gives the power or not depends upon the construction of the particular Statute, and the intention must be gathered from the language used in the particular Statute. With regard to the Acts referred to above, however, it may be observed, that in the first place it does not appear that the question whether the public body concerned has the power of acquiring land for the purpose of recoupment has ever been raised or decided. In the next place the words used in those Acts are different from those used in the Calcutta Improvement Act.

Section 357 (1) of the Calcutta Municipal Act III of 1899, after providing for the acquisition of any land "required for the purpose of widening, extending or otherwise improving any public street and the buildings, if any, standing upon such land," provides in sub-section (2) for the acquisition of any lands in addition to those mentioned in sub-section (1) outside the proposed street alignment with the building thereupon, which the Corporation may in the exercise of any of the powers conferred by sub-section (1) consider it expedient to acquire. It is to be noted that whereas under section 42 (a) of the Calcutta Improvement Act, in order to enable the Board to acquire any land in the area comprised in the scheme, it is necessary that the land must in their opinion be "affected by the execution of the scheme," section 357 (2) of the Calcutta Municipal Act empowers the Corporation to acquire any land ouside the street alignment which it may consider expedient to do so in exercise of the powers conferred by sub-section (1) of that section. Section 25 of the Bombay City Improvement Act (Bombay Act V of 1898) provides that an improvement scheme which may exclude any part of the area in respect of which an official representation is made or include any neighbouring land if the Board are of opinion that such exclusion or inclusion is expedient, shall, within the limits of the area comprised in the scheme, provide for the acquisition of any land which will in the opinion of the Board be necessary for or affected by the execution of the scheme. Section 29 provides that on receipt of the sanction of the Government a declaration is to be notified under the signature of a Secretary to Government stating the fact of such sanction, and that the land proposed to be acquired by the Board for the purposes of the scheme is required for a public purpose, and that the declaration shall be conclusive evidence that the land is needed for a public purpose and the Board shall thereupon proceed to execute the scheme. The publication of a notification under section 49 of the Calcutta Improvement Act, however, is conclusive evidence only of the fact that the scheme has been duly framed and sanctioned. However that may be, as I have said already, one Act cannot be construed with reference to the provisions of another Act. The question whether the Calcutta Improvement Act gives power to the Board of compulsory acquisition of land for the purposes of recoupment, must be determined with reference to the provisions of that Act.

The Calcutta Municipal Act gives wider powers to the Corporation than those given to the Board by the Calcutta Improvement Act. But it may be pointed out that when land is acquired under the Calcutta Municipal Act, the market value of the land or building under section 557 (d) of that Act shall, until the contrary is shown, be presumed, for the purposes of clause first of sub-section (1) of section 23, to be twenty-five times the annual value of the property as entered in the assessment book prescribed by the Act, and when land is acquired under the Land Acquisition Act the owner is entitled to the 15 per cent. statutory compensation in addition to the market value of the land. Under the Calcutta Improvement Act there is no such presumption, nor is the owner entitled to any statutory compensation.

Chapters V and VI of the Act relate to taxation and finance. In addition to the duty on transfer of property, terminal tax on passengers and customs duty on jute there is provision for Municipal contributions and section 89 gives the Board the power to borrow any sum necessary for the purpose of meeting expenditure debitable to the capital account under section 123. Section 123 lays down that the money credited to the capital account shall be held by the Board in trust and shall be applied to (among others) meeting all costs of framing and executing improvement schemes and re-housing schemes, and meeting the costs of acquiring land for carrying out any of the purposes of the Act. If the acquisition of land for the purpose of recoupment was intended to be one of the means for carrying out the objects of the Act (and the intention must be determined as expressed in the provisions of the Act), the Legislature would have expressed it in clear language so as to put it beyond reasonable doubt, as it has done in the case of other means for carrying out the objects of the Act, and would not have left it to be spelt out of section 42 (a) or 78 of the Act.

The order of reference to the Full Bench refers also to section 81 of the Act. But that section comes into operation only when land has been acquired by or vested in the Board. Where land has been acquired by or vested in the Board properly, or in cases properly coming under section 78, the Board have the power of disposal of such lands or of requiring the owner to pay for abandonment, as the case may be, and disposal of every land vested in the Board may not result in profit. But as already explained, that is very different from including land in a scheme (which is neither required for nor affected by the scheme) with the deliberate object of acquiring it for the purpose of recoupment.

I have the misfortune to differ from the majority of the Full Bench, but after an anxious consideration of the provisions of the Act, I am unable to hold that the case of Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta v. Chandra Kanta Ghosh (1), in so far as it holds that Act V of 1911 B. C. does not authorise the Board of Trustees to acquire lands compulsorily for the purpose of recoupment, was wrongly decided, and I would accordingly answer the question referred in the affirmative.

TEUNON, J.—This reference arises out of the proposed acquisition by the Board of Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta of a plot of vacant land, being premises known as No. 10, Halliday Street.

It appears that the Board of Trustees have decided to make or open out in the northern part of Calcutta a main thoroughfare spoken of as Central Avenue, and that the making of this avenue involves the widening of the street known as Halliday Street. With this chief object in view, and in pursuance of a resolution in terms of section 39, clause (c), of the Calcutta Improvement Act, 1911, the Trustees have framed their Scheme No. VIIA in the manner contemplated in sections 39 to 42 of the Act. The scheme has been duly published as required by sections 43 to 45 and, on submission, in accordance with the provisions of section 47, has been sanctioned by Government under section 48.

The scheme thus sanctioned comprises a considerable area and provides, inter alia, for the acquisition of a part of such area including premises No. 10. The said premises are said to measure 2 Bighas 15 Cottahs, and though a small portion is required for the widening of the street, i.e., for rounding off the corners at the junction of Halliday Street with 2 side streets, the major portion avowedly has been included within the area of acquisition under the provisions of section 42 (a), as land which, in the opinion of the Board, will be affected by the execution of the scheme. In other words, in the opinion of the Board, by the widening of Halliday Street, this land will be enhanced in value, and in so far as it is not within the street alignment and so required, it is to be taken for purposes of recoupment.

The owner, one Mani Lal Singh, accordingly brought his suit substantially to restrain the Trustees from acquiring the said major portion falling outside the street alignment, on the ground that acquisition for purposes of recoupment is not within their statutory powers. On the 17th day of July 1916, the question thus arising was decided against the plaintiff by Greaves, J., sitting in the exercise of the Original Civil Jurisdiction of this Court.

Meanwhile in the case of Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta v. Chandra Kanta Ghosh (1) the same question had arisen in respect of premises No. 40/10, Chaulpati Road, which lie within the District of the 24-Pargunnahs and outside the limits of the Original Civil Jurisdiction. In that case the question was decided in favour of the plaintiff and against the Trustees by the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, and, on appeal by the Trustees, on the 22nd of August 1916, his decision was affirmed by a Divisional Bench.

Against the decision of Greaves, J., the plaintiff Mani Lal Singh next appealed, and the learned Judges constituting the Bench before which this appeal came, finding themselves in disagreement with the decision of the 22nd August 1916, have consequently referred to the Full Bench the question which may be stated in effect as follows, namely, "whether the case of the Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta v. Chandra Kanta Ghosh (1), in so far as it holds that Bengal Act V of 1911 does not authorise the Board of Trustees to acquire land com-pulsorily for purposes of recoupment, was rightly decided."

In the case of Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta v. Chandra Kanta Ghosh (1) the premises 40/10, Chaulpati Road, lay wholly outside and some 55 feet away from the street alignment there proposed. In the case of Mani Lal Singh, as I have already pointed out, a small portion of the area or premises proposed to be acquired falls within, and the major portion without, the proposed street alignment. At the hearing of this reference it was consequently suggested, though, as it appeared to me, in a half-hearted manner, that on the facts the two cases should be distinguished and that the reference to the Full Bench was, therefore, unnecessary and incompetent. To this contention I am unable to accede. As regards the major portion of the premises in question, the portion falling outside the proposed street alignment, the Divisional Bench making the reference found themselves, as I understand, unable to distinguish between the case before them and the case of Chandra Kanta Ghosh (1). In my opinion, in so far as that area is concerned, the two cases cannot be distinguished, and the question referred should, therefore, be answered.

The decision of that question depends, in my opinion, on the construction to be placed on section 42, clause (a), of the Act, which reads thus—"Any improvement scheme may provide for (a) the acquisition by the Board of any land, in the area comprised in the scheme, which will, in their opinion, be affected by the execution of the scheme."

The argument before us has been somewhat discursive, but the considerations advanced, in support of the plaintiff's contention that section 42, clause (a), should not be construed as authorising acquisition for purposes of recoupment, may be summarised as follows:—In the preamble, and again in Chapter V dealing with taxation, there is no reference or no specific reference to recoupment. In other Acts, in which acquisition by local authorities for purposes of recoupment is authorised, for instance in the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1899, section 357, and in the recent Town Planning Act of the Imperial Parliament, we find express reference to "expediency" or to "increase in value." Inasmuch as the Act is one which gives large powers of interference with private rights, its provisions should be strictly construed: In construing the words [section 42 (a)] "affected by the execution of the scheme" we should be guided by the decisions of the Courts in England under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act in the case of lands "injuriously affected by the execution", of the authorised "works" or "undertaking" and we should further have regard to the analogy afforded by the sixth clause of section 24 of the Land Acquisition Act, I of 1894. Lastly, it is contended that section 78 of the Improvement Act, regarded by the referring Judges as embodying a distinct reference to, and therefore as of special importance in construing section 42 (a), should itself be construed as referring merely to lands which, for some cause or other, for example by reason of some mistake or some alteration in the original scheme, have become "superfluous" or surplus lands:

For these reasons, it is contended, we should construe the word "affected" as having no reference to value but as implying some physical interference resulting in either a decrease or an increase in the rights which the owner of the land in question is entitled to exercise in connection therewith. In this view we should, therefore, hold that recoupment is not a purpose for which, under section 69 of the Act, the Board may, with the sanction of the Local Government, acquire land under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act.

To the argument based on the omissions from the Chapter on Taxation and from the preamble, on the use of other language in other enactments, and, on the sixth clause of section 24 of the Land Acquisition Act, I am unable to attach importance. A provision for recoupment is not a form of taxation. In the preamble the main object of the Act, namely, "the making of provision for the improvement and expansion of Calcutta" is set out. There is no exhaustive enumeration of the ways or methods in which, far less of the means whereby, the end in view is to be attained, and it cannot be said by reference to the preamble alone that power to secure to the Trustees the improved value, or part of the improved value, resulting from their expenditure of public funds, is not one of "the special powers" with which they may be invested. In any case the operative provisions of the Act are not to be controlled or restricted by the preamble.

No doubt when in an enactment authorising public bodies to execute improvements and to acquire the lands necessary for the same we find that they are further authorised to take such additional lands as "they may think it expedient to take," or such lands as in their opinion will be "increased in value" by the improvements made, it becomes clear that in such enactment the Legislature has recognised and embodied the principle of recoupment. But no stereotyped form for the conferment of this power of acquisition for purposes of re-imbursement has yet been evolved, and the question is whether by the language used in the enactment under consideration that power has been given.

Similarly the analogy afforded by the sixth clause of section 24 of the Land Acquisition Act does not appear to me to assist the appellant. In the Improvement Act the plans, schedules and books of reference required by English Statutes, are replaced by a description of the area "comprised in the scheme." Such scheme is framed in the first instance by the Board, after consideration of objections and representations, is submitted with plans and full particulars to Government for approval, and is finally sanctioned, if approved, by Government. The area fixed and sanctioned as "the area comprised in the scheme" may be said to correspond with the "lands delineated on the plans" in England. The Board must provide [section 41 (a)] for the acquisition of all lands falling within that area and "required for the actual execution of the scheme," that is, I take it, for the construction of the proposed improvements. As in England the promoters may, if so empowered by the Act, take all "the lands delineated on the plans," so here the Board [section 42 (a)] may take the whole or any part of the remaining area comprised in the scheme if, in their opinion, such whole or part "will be affected by the execution of the scheme," that is, by the proposed improvements when executed or completed. No doubt the sixth clause of section 24 of the Land Acquisition Act has not been modified by the provisions of this Act, but the clause embodies merely a principle of valuation, and the "other land" referred to therein must, in cases such as the present, be lands outside the area comprised in the scheme, or land which, though within that area, the Board does not propose to acquire.

It is then said that in Acts authorising the taking of private property doubtful provisions should be construed in favour of the landowner. But the cases of Galloway v. London Corporation (10), Quinton v. Bristol Corporation (11) and Rolls v. London School Board (17) would seem to be authority for holding that to public bodies acting for the public benefit the principle above enunciated is not to be applied so strictly as in the case of companies seeking their private profit. However that may be, the question, to use the language of Chief Justice Erle, is what meaning and intention "is conveyed to the rational mind" by the words used in the present Act.

The argument based on the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, and on the meaning placed by the Courts in England on the words "injuriously affected by the execution of the work" in the said Act is possibly the one on which, on behalf of the appellants, has been laid most stress.

The argument is two-fold. In the first place it is said that the words "by the execution of the scheme" restrict the Board of Trustees and the Court to the effect produced by the acquisition of the lands required for the actual execution of the work, that is, in this case, for the construction of the widened thoroughfare. We may not, it is said, take into consideration the use to which the land so required is to be put. This branch of the argument appears to be based partly on the analogy afforded by the 5th and 6th clauses of section 24 of the Land Acquisition Act and partly on the English decisions which, in the case of persons from whom no land is taken, limit compensation to damage caused by the construction of the undertaking, and exclude damage arising from the subsequent authorised user. This branch of the argument is, in my opinion, fallacious. We are here dealing with an improvement scheme as a whole, and the prospective user, or the possibility of such user, is of the essence of the matter.

The argument in its second branch is that we should give to the word "affected" in section 42, clause (a), the meaning given in the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act and in the decisions thereunder to the words "injuriously affected."

I am not of opinion that the said Act and the cases cited are of any assistance to us. The Act and the cases, in so far as we are now concerned with them, deal only with damage sustained by reason of "injurious affection," and the title to, and assessment of compensation in respect thereof. A distinction is drawn between cases in which other lands of the claimant have been taken and cases in which no other lands of the same owner have been acquired. The rules or principles laid down as applicable in the two cases are not in all respects the same. No such distinction appears to be drawn in section 42 of the present Act. Moreover, the word used is "affected," not "injuriously affected." The omission of the word "injuriously" cannot be supposed to be otherwise than of intention. Indeed, the words "injuriously affected" were before the framers of this Act in the Land Acquisition Act, under which proceedings for compulsory acquisition have to be taken. I am, therefore, unable to assign to the word "affected" now under consideration the meaning or meanings that have been placed upon the words "injuriously affected" in the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act.

Indeed, as has been affirmed by the learned Judges who decided the case of Chandra Kanta Ghosh (1), the word "affected," as used in section 42, sub-clause (a), of the Improvement Act, is not a 'word of art' to which a technical meaning must be given. It must be construed in its ordinary acceptations, and with reference to the context. When that is recognised, its interpretation in the present case does not to my mind present much difficulty. Land upon which an effect of some sort or kind has been produced, whether for the better or for the worse, would seem to have been "affected." If by the widening of Halliday Street, and the consequent improvement in means of access and in other amenities, these lands will, in the opinion of the Board, be appreciated in value, the Board is in my judgment entitled to say that these lands "will in their opinion be affected by the execution of the scheme."

In this conclusion I am fortified by the provisions contained in section 78 of the Act, and with all respect I am unable to agree with Greaves, J., in attaching no importance to that section. The section provides in substance that on application by the owner and on payment by him of a sum 'to be fixed by the Board,' that is, a sum arrived at apparently by a process of negotiation or 'haggling,' the Board shall abandon the proceedings for the compulsory acquisition of any land, not being land required for the execution of the scheme. The appellant contends that this section should be construed as dealing only with land which, for any reason, has become 'superfluous.' Any such construction appears to me to be strained and unnatural. The applications have in fact to be made at a time when in ordinary course it could not be predicated that any land originally 'required' had become superfluous. The words "required for the execution of the scheme" appear clearly to refer to section 41, clause (a), and the lands that may be dealt with under this section are the additional lands which the Board had proposed to acquire as being lands "affected" within the meaning of section 42, clause (a). In other words, if in respect of such lands the Board and the owner can arrive at an agreement as to the measure of the "affection" or appreciation, the Board, instead of completing the acquisition and dealing with the lands thereafter under the provisions of section 81, may realise forthwith the improved value, or a reasonable share in the improved value, resulting or likely to result from their expenditure. It is contended that the provisions of section 80, which render the land, in respect of which such payment has been made, liable to inclusion in subsequent improvement schemes, militate against the construction which I place on section 78. I am unable to agree. In any such subsequent scheme, the value determined by the first scheme becomes the starting point, and there is nothing inequitable in including the land in the second, whether by reason of its being required for, or by reason of its being still further appreciated in value by, such second scheme.

In conclusion, I should say that the equity of the principle which requires contribution from private owners in respect of an increase in the value of their properties resulting from improvements effected out of public funds, has now long been recognised. Such contribution may be obtained by the imposition of a "betterment" or "improvement" charge; or of a "frontage rate," or by the method of recoupment. It would indeed have been matter of surprise if in an Act passed in the year 1911, in order to the carrying out of large measures of town improvement, the Legislature had omitted to secure any portion of the improved value "in ease of the burden upon the rate-payers." In this Act we find no indication of frontage rates or improvement charges. We might, therefore, reasonably expect to find recognition of the system of recoupment. That system may in practice result in heart-burning as between A whose land has been included in the acquisition area and his neighbour B whose land has been left out. Doubtless it is this result which has led to the charges levelled against the system, and against this Act if construed as sanctioning the system, namely, that it is arbitrary, unjust, authorises confiscation and the levy of blackmail and leads or may lead to oppression. There may be particular instances of hardship but as between the private owner and the general body of rate-payers or tax-payers the method, in my opinion, is essentially just. Further, in the Act, against the abuse or misuse of the powers conferred, ample safeguards have been provided. I am not, however, to be understood as saying that these considerations have weighed with me in construing the Act.

In my judgment, in sections 42, 78 and 81 of the Act, clear and plain provision has been made for the taking of additional or excess lands for the purpose of securing to the rate-payers, or their representatives the Board of Trustees, the increase in value or part of the increase in value resulting, or likely to result, from the improvements effected. It follows that the acquisition of such lands is in furtherance of the objects of the Act, and that under section 69 the Board may with the previous sanction of the Local Government acquire such lands under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894.

In this view the answer to the question referred to the Full Bench, in my opinion, should be in the negative.

RICHARDSON, J.—The clause on which the answer to this reference mainly depends is contained in an Act of 1911 for the improvement and expansion of Calcutta in various ways, involving the acquisition of land either by agreement or, subject to the payment of compensation to the owner, by compulsion. The machinery set up is a Board of Trustees, invested with special powers for carrying out the objects of the Act. The full name of the Board is "The Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta" (section 3). The short name, which is generally used, is "the Board" [section 2 (c)]. Chapter II relates to the constitution of the Board and cognate matters. The principal function of the Board is to prepare and execute "improvement schemes" and "re-housing schemes," which are dealt with in Chapter III. By definition (section 2) the term "improvement scheme" means a "general improvement scheme or a street scheme, or both." Chapter IV headed "acquisition and disposal of land" includes four sections with some bearing on the matter in hand. They are sections 68 and 69 and sections 78 and 81. The remaining chapters have little relevancy. Their headings are Chapter V "Taxation," Chapter VI "Finance," Chapter VII "Rules" and Chapter VIII "Supplemental Provisions." There is also a schedule which, in conjunction with section 71, modifies in some particulars the Land Acquisition Act, 1894. Land is compulsorily acquired under the provisions of the latter Act as modified.

Chapter III, which includes the disputed clause [section 42 (a)], is the most important in the Act. It forms the constructive part to which the rest of the Act is subordinate. Sections 33 and 39 indicate the conditions under which the Board are empowered to frame "general improvement schemes" and "street schemes." The next few sections apply to improvement schemes generally, Section 41 indicates what an "improvement scheme" must comprise and section 42 what it may comprise. When such a scheme has been framed, provision is made (a) for its publication in the Government Gazette and in local newspapers "with a statement of the period within which objections will be received" (section 43), (b) for notice to the Chairman of the Corporation, in case the Corporation may think fit to make any representation with regard to the scheme, and (c) for service of notice individually on the owners and occupiers of land "which the Board propose to acquire in executing the scheme." The notice to an owner or occupier shall, inter alia, "require such person, if he dissents from such acquisition, to state his reasons in writing within a period of sixty days" [section 45 (b)]. By section 47 the Board is required to consider all objections, representations and statements of dissent received under the preceding sections and to hear all persons making them who may desire to be heard. By the same section, when the prescribed procedure has been followed, the Board may either abandon the scheme or submit it to the Local Government for sanction. If sanction is applied for and granted, then by section 49, the fact is to be announced by notification and "the Board shall forthwith proceed to execute the scheme." Section 50 makes provision for the alteration of a sanctioned improvement scheme before it has been carried into execution. The rest of the chapter need not be further noticed.

As Mr. Das argued, clause (a) of section 42 must clearly be read with clause (a) of section 41. There are two categories of land, land required for the execution of the scheme for the acquisition of which provision must be made in the plans, and land affected by the execution of the schemes for the acquisition of which provision may be made. The controversy relates to the words "affected by the execution of the scheme" and the extent or nature of the discretionary power which the clause confers. The words are no doubt wide and general and, because of their generality, may seem subject to possible limitation, should the context require it.

There is no presumption, however, that general words are not used in a general sense. The presumption is the other way. The general rule for the construction of Statutes is that the Legislature means what it says. The words best declare the intention: Sussex Peerage case (18). But owing perhaps to the imperfection of language as an instrument, or to the fact that language is sometimes misused even in legislative enactments, it may not always be easy to say what the meaning is. The language may be doubtful or ambiguous. The Courts may have a choice between different possible constructions, and in such cases there may be subsidiary rules or principles more or less controlling the choice according to the nature of the subject-matter, whether the Act is penal or remedial and so forth. Beyond that there is more delicate ground where the strict literal meaning would lead to a result so absurd as to be irrational, and it may be found possible to modify the meaning so as to avoid that result.

These observations merely echo what has been so often and so forcibly laid down by Judges of the highest authority in England—never perhaps more forcibly than in the case relating to the Trade Disputes Act, 1906: Vacher & Sons v. London Society of Compositors (19). In another case in the same volume [Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Herbert (20)] Lord Haldane re-states the law, with particular application to legislation of a novel kind, in a passage which I venture to quote:—

"In approaching the controversy as to the meaning of these sections, I think it worth while to recall a principle which must always be borne in mind in construing Acts of Parliament, and particularly legislation of a novel kind. The duty of a Court of law is simply to take the Statute it has to construe as it stands, and to construe its words according to their natural significance. While reference may be made to the state of the law, and the material facts and events with which it is apparent that Parliament was dealing, it is not admissible to speculate on the probable opinions and motives of those who framed the legislation, excepting in so far as these appear from the language of the Statute. That language must indeed be read as a whole. If the clearly expressed scheme of the Act requires it, particular expressions may have to be read in a sense which would not be the natural one if they could be taken by themselves. But subject to this the words used must be given their natural meaning, unless, to do so would lead to a result which is so absurd that it cannot be supposed, in the absence of expressions which are wholly unambiguous, to have been contemplated."

Now if that be the spirit in which a question of this nature, should be approached, it seems desirable to determine the ordinary and natural meaning of the words used in the clause before us before considering whether by any legitimate process of construction those words can or should be made to yield some other meaning.

In the first place, the only limitation, imposed by the clause itself, on the locality of the land affected, is that the land must be in the area comprised in an improvement scheme which has been subjected, or laid open, to the fire of criticism which the Act allows and invites.

Then as to the word "affected," "affect" in its primary or dictionary sense is an extensive but colourless word. But it is a word which easily takes colour from the context in which it is used. According to the context, it may mean affect in one way or the other, for the worse, or for the better. It may be that it often has the secondary sense of affecting adversely. An illustration will be found in the third paragraph of the preamble. An Act which affects a previous Act is an Act which alters or is inconsistent with the previous Act.

In the present context, the scheme is an improvement scheme. The full phrase is "land affected by the execution of the improvement scheme." To my mind at any rate that suggests land affected for the better; and in my opinion, though the words may be wide enough to include land prejudicially affected, should the Board choose to acquire such land, they specially include and signify land beneficially affected.

As to the words "by the execution of the scheme," which qualify the word affected, I cannot doubt that they naturally and obviously refer not only to the period of construction but also to the period immediately following when the improvement scheme is completed and in operation "and a going concern." Harding v. Board of Land and Works (21). Mr. Mitter suggested that "the execution of the scheme" must mean the same in section 42 (a) as in section 41 (a). But the two expressions "required for the execution of the scheme" and "affected by the execution of the scheme" must each be construed as a whole.

It follows then that, in my opinion, the whole clause is wide enough to embrace a discretionary power, on the part of the Board, in framing an improvement scheme, to make provision for the acquisition of land in the area specified, which will, in their opinion, be beneficially affected by the execution of the scheme as an accomplished fact.

If that be so, provision may clearly be made for the acquisition of land for purposes of recoupment. It is said, that introduces a novel power to which the Act makes no express reference. But if the power comes within the ambit of the phraseology, the criticism is at best inconclusive. No one denies the generality of the words and it is the function of general words to include things not specially named. The source of the words appears to be the similar but not in all respects identical Act in force in Bombay (Bombay Act IV of 1898), though Counsel was stopped by the Court from arguing that what may have been done in Bombay under that Act was of any assistance in interpreting the Calcutta Act. The clause in the Calcutta Act fills a prominent place and means something. As it stands, there is no restriction on the purposes which the Board may have in view in exercising their discretion. The purpose of recoupment is not excluded. Undoubtedly the power to acquire land for that purpose is a large power, but that fact by itself is not a sufficient reason for limiting and cutting down general words, still less for putting in words which are not there.

The construction of the disputed clause thus arrived at, while it conflicts with nothing in the preamble or any other part of the Act, seems to me supported and confirmed by the provisions of section 78 and section 81.

The preamble even if it controls the enacting provisions, which it does not, creates no difficulty. Recoupment may not be directly a method of improvement on the same plane with the method specified in the first paragraph, but indirectly it may be a method of great, and possibly indispensable, service. The power to acquire land for that purpose may easily, without straining the language at all, be included among the special powers with which the second paragraph contemplated that the Board should be armed "for carrying out the objects of this Act."

Whatever may be the true construction of the disputed clause, sections 68 and 69 can present no difficulty. They give a merely subsidiary power to acquire land just as sections 24 and 25 give the subsidiary powers of making contracts and spending money, and these subsidiary powers are conferred in order that improvement schemes (whatever they may comprise) and re-housing schemes may be carried out.

Under section 69 the power to acquire land compulsorily is given in the wide terms used in sections 24 and 25, "for carrying out any of the purposes of the Act." If that is a limitation, it is a limitation so wide in its extent, that if not expressed it would have to be understood. Anything which the Act permits or directs to be done will come within the phrase. Improvement schemes "which the Board shall forthwith proceed to execute" are within it, and as regards acquisition there is no difference between land included under section 41 (a) and "affected" land (whatever the expression means) included under section 42 (a). Land of both kinds is acquired for carrying out one or other of the purposes of the Act and may for that reason be acquired either by agreement or compulsorily. It is said section 68 does not mention the purposes of the Act but empowers acquisition by agreement of "any land which the Board are authorised to acquire." Possibly those words were employed so as to include not only all the lands which may be acquired compulsorily under section 69, but also land which under clause (b) of section 50 may be acquired by agreement but not without the formalities attendant on framing a scheme—by compulsion. However that may be, section 68 cannot authorize the acquisition, even by agreement, of any land for carrying out some purpose which is not a purpose of the Act. The suggestion that "affected" land included in a framed and sanctioned scheme may be acquired by agreement under section 68 but not by compulsion under section 69 seems to be unfounded.

Section 78, with which must be read section 13 of the schedule, provides for the abandonment (in consideration of a special payment) of the acquisition of land, the acquisition of which has been sanctioned in connection with some improvement scheme, but "which is not required for the execution of the scheme." These words read with sections 41 (a) and 42 (a) seem to point to land entered for acquisition in a sanctioned improvement scheme, not as land "required for the execution of the scheme" under section 41 (a) but as land not required but "affected" under section 42 (a). Section 78 seems to pre-suppose that persons interested will know from the outset, or as soon as a scheme is published, what lands are "required" and what lands are "not required." This they will do if land "not required" signifies or includes "affected" land.

It is suggested that the section refers to land which is not required for carrying out a scheme because of some alteration made under section 50. But apart from the result of this interpretation to which I shall presently advert, the special provisions of section 78 seem too elaborate to be adequately accounted for in that way, inasmuch as it cannot be predicted that alterations will be numerous or important. Moreover, if it is the interest of the Board to withdraw from the acquisition of any land, the withdrawal will presumably take place at their own initiative under section 48 of the Land Acquisition Act. No owner is compelled to make an application under section 78 of the principal Act, and if he knew that the Board meant to withdraw he would probably refrain from doing so in order to escape from the special payment and in order to obtain any damages to which he might be entitled under section 48 of the Land Acquisition Act.

After land has been acquired or the title has vested, the Board may proceed under section 81, and this applies to all land—including affected land—which comes into the hands of the Board and is not required for the actual execution of a scheme.

Now if "affected" land includes land beneficially affected acquired for purposes of recoupment, it will appear that such land might well be the special object of the powers conferred by these two sections.

If the relevant provisions be fairly construed, apart from any preconceptions as to what the Legislature ought or ought not to have done, they show, I think, with reasonable certainty, that the Board were intended to have power to take land for purposes of recoupment and that section 78 and section 81, particularly the pre-emption clause, were enacted principally—though perhaps not wholly—for the benefit of the owners of such land. This construction leads to no inconsistency or repugnancy and gives the Act as a whole a reasonable and intelligible meaning.

The reference to this Bench has been occasioned by a difference of opinion in the Court on a pure question of construction, and that being so and this Bench not being altogether unanimous, I state my own opinion with diffidence. I am not, however, led to alter that opinion by any merits apparent in the alternative construction of the disputed clause which is offered. As Greaves, J., has said, it all turns on the word "affected." If the significant word "injuriously" be in effect prefixed and the expression "affected by the execution of the scheme" be read as if it occurred in a section relating to the payment of damages, and not in a section relating to the framing of an improvement scheme, the meaning so obtained is not the meaning of the words as they stand. This violent treatment of the clause seems to rest entirely on the series of English cases by which the true meaning of the words "injuriously affected by the execution of the works" in section 68 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, was settled (Cripps on Compensation, 5th Edition, page 136).

According to this view the only purpose of section 42 (a) was to enable the Board to acquire land, in respect of which they might otherwise have to pay damages for injurious affection in cases in which such damages are claimable. But this is already partly provided for by clause (2) of section 49 of the Land Acquisition Act. This view, again, involves the interpretation of sections 78 and 81 in the manner already touched upon, according to which they were designed to enable the Board to make a profit out of the abandoned parts of their various undertakings, or to finance themselves out of land entered in their plans through errors of calculation or judgment.

The construction of section 42 (a) on which this result depends does not appear to be admissible and the result itself compares unfavourably in point of probability with the result, so much canvassed, of giving to the words their natural scope and effect.

If an Act of this kind is to achieve its objects, the powers which must be taken are necessarily large and, inter alia, means must be furnished for raising the money required. At the present day there can be no initial improbability in finding in such an Act provision made for what is known as betterment, or for what is known as recoupment. Some such provision, if it exists, need create no surprise. The principle underlying betterment and recoupment has received legislative recognition in various Acts and in many ways. In practice it may be difficult to combine contribution with equality of treatment. In a case already referred to [Harding v. Board of Land and Works (21)], some violence was done to the strict grammatical meaning of the enactment there in question in order to prevent an inequality which might have extended to some land being taken without any compensation at all. It is one thing, however, to determine the true antecedent of a relative word like "such," and quite another thing to alter the language of the Act in the manner which is suggested as proper in the present case. Our duty is to construe the Calcutta Act as it stands, without entering into questions of policy and expediency further than the language necessitates. In that Act no attempt is made to frame an elaborate and possibly costly scheme of contribution. The method adopted is an extension of the power to take land compulsorily, and there is at least this to be said, that a man whose land is taken for purposes of recoupment is in no worse case than the man whose land is taken for the actual execution of a scheme. The former has the benefit of sections 78 and 81 and though it is a benefit at which he may look with somewhat jaundiced eyes and may be pardoned for so doing, there it is.

Hardship in some degree may be inevitable in connection with any scheme or set of schemes involving the taking of land on a considerable scale in a great city. But the Act deprives no man of his property without compensation. The presumption that the Legislature will not interfere with private rights without compensation is not in question.

I do not know what the position is, but it is at least conceivable that without the aid of recoupment the operations of the Board, entailing an expense commensurate with the size and importance of Calcutta, would come to a standstill, so that there would be no improvement and expansion of the city in the interest of the present and future generations of citizens and the Act would be a dead letter. If the construction of the Act is to depend on results, this consideration cannot be entirely neglected.

In conclusion I may be permitted to emphasize that if the power in question is discretionary, the duty and responsibility of carrying out the provisions of the Act and giving effect to the statutory purpose and directions are laid upon a Board of Trustees, specially constituted, and that, among other safeguards, the Act has been careful to ensure full publicity and full opportunity for the ventilation of objections to any improvement scheme which may be proposed.

I should also add that as regards the preliminary objection to the hearing of this reference, I agree with what has been said by my brother Fletcher. So long as the judgment in Chandra Kanta Ghosh's case (1) stands the Board cannot, as I understand that judgment, acquire any land compulsorily for purposes of recoupment.

In the circumstances, looking at the language and the objects of the Act, I am respectfully of opinion that this power to acquire land for purposes of recoupment was within the contemplation of the Legislature. I agree with Fletcher, J., and concur in the answer which he proposes to give to the question referred.

CHAUDHURI, J.—I think this reference to a Full Bench of this Court is competent, although one of the referring Judges considers the case of Chandra Kanta Ghosh (1) distinguishable to the extent that small portions of the land have been cut off in this case, whereas in that case no portion of the land was similarly treated, and another learned Judge may be said to have implied as much. The main question is whether the decision in Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta v. Chandra Kanta Ghosh (1), that the Calcutta Improvement Act V of 1911 (B. C.) does not allow the compulsory acquisition of land for recoupment, is good law or not, and the reference is properly before us.

The question has been elaborately argued and practically the whole of the Act beginning from the preamble has been analysed and examined, but it seems to me that it is really a question as to the meaning of the word "affected" in section 42 of the Calcutta Improvement Act. Section 41 deals with matters which must be provided for in improvement schemes under the Act and section 42 with what may be provided for. "Improvement scheme" is defined in section 2, clause (f), as meaning a general improvement scheme, or a street scheme, or both. Section 36 lays down when a general improvement scheme and section 39 when a street scheme may be framed. In this case we are concerned with a street scheme, but sections 41 and 42 deal with improvement schemes generally and no separate provision has been made in the Act for acquisition of land in respect of street schemes, whereas in the Bombay Act IV of 1898, acquisition of land necessary for or "affected" by the execution of a street scheme has been dealt with together in section 51, clause (a). These are dealt with separately in sections 41 and 42 of the Calcutta Act. The expression "affected" has apparently come from the Bombay Act and although there is no express provision in the Bombay Act authorising recoupment, the same question has apparently not arisen under that Act.

It is quite clear that section 42 provides for acquisition of land which is not covered by section 41, namely, of land other than that required for the execution of the scheme. It provides for the acquisition by the Board of any land in the area comprised in the scheme which will in their opinion be affected by the execution of the scheme. The learned Judges in Chandra

Kanta Ghosh's case (1) have said that "affected" is not a word of art, but of ordinary English, capable of very large meaning, adopting the language of Wills, J., in Buckinghamshire County Council & Hertfordshire County Council, In re (22). They think that having regard to the context it means "neither beneficially affected or improved in value, nor prejudicially affected or impaired in value," but signifies "acted upon physically or materially." They say that in this section affected land means land in respect of which there has been "physical interference with any right, public or private, which the owner is entitled to exercise in connection therewith." The words "physically or materially acted upon" quoted from the Oxford Dictionary have little to do with the physical interference in the passage above quoted, which has been taken from the argument of Mr. Thesiger on behalf of the defendant in error in Metropolitan Board of Works v. McCarthy (3), who used those words in connection with his definition of the right to compensation in respect of property injuriously affected, when he sought to reconcile and explain the various cases on the subject. The test submitted by the learned Counsel was accepted by Lord Cairns (page 243) and by Lord Chelmsford with qualification (page 256) for purposes of the case before them. The words were used to define the expression "injuriously affected" in connection with property. The word "physical" was used to distinguish the case from cases of that class, where the interference complained of was not of a physical but rather of a "mental nature or of an inferential kind." The words "a right, public or private, which the owner of the property is entitled to make use of" were used to distinguish the case from such cases as the Hammersmith & City Railway v. Brand (4). Although the learned Judges have said that "affected" in section 42 does not mean "prejudicially affected or impaired in value," they have really adopted the definition of "injuriously affected" given in Metropolitan Board of Works v. McCarthy (3). Section 42 does not deal with compensation, nor does it in any manner indicate that it relates to compensation. It supplements section 41 and provides for what may be included in an improvement scheme, in addition to what must. The sections relating to compensation come much later in a different chapter, viz., Chapter IV and schedule. Section 69 deals with compulsory acquisition under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, modified as indicated in the schedule referred to in section 71 (b). If it was intended to place the Board in a position "to escape from the payment of damages" by allowing them to acquire severed or injuriously affected land in their improvement schemes, Chapter IV or the schedule would have been the proper place for providing for it. Section 42 merely permits the inclusion of land in the scheme which in the opinion of the Board may be affected by the execution of the scheme. It does not say land affected by the execution of the scheme must be acquired. Whether the land will be affected or not is left to be considered by the Board. They have liberty to include what in their opinion may be affected, which may include more than what may be actually affected. They have, it is said, been so empowered "to escape from the payment of damages", namely, damages for such physical interference with the land or its incidents which may lessen its value. The definition adopted includes interference with rights, public or private, which give an additional market value to the property apart from the uses to which the owner or occupier might put it; public rights such as the right of access to premises by a public highway, and private rights such as the obstruction of easements such as rights of way, of light, of support are included. The breach of restrictive covenants for the benefit of other land and the prevention of the carrying out of covenants relating to land also come in. It seems to me that the definition adopted is vague and indefinite, and may include a great deal more than what the Land Acquisition Act as modified by this Act provides for in respect of damages or compensation. It strikes me that if it were intended to safeguard the Board in respect of injuriously affected property, the Act would have clearly defined the matter and not left it so vague. There can be no damages unless the property is impaired in value. The learned Judges have, therefore, really held that affected means "prejudicially affected or impaired in value," although they say at the outset of their judgment that the word does not mean it. They say the opposite view may include "any land or all land in the area, for the whole area may be considered benefited by the scheme." They look upon this as a forced and unnatural contention. I did not understand the learned Advocate-General who appeared for the appellant to go so far. He conceded that the section may be read as providing for the acquisition of land, either beneficially or prejudicially affected, but his argument was that it related only to such land as the Board considered affected by the execution of the scheme, which he said were the governing words of the section. Section 41 deals with the land required for the scheme and section 42 with land affected by the execution of the scheme. If it is unnatural to hold that the Legislature intended the Board to benefit by the acquisition of property beneficially affected or improved in value, it is also unnatural to hold that in discharging a public duty for the benefit of the public, the Board was provided with power to take up property prejudicially affected or impaired in value.

Sections 41 and 42 merely provide for the framing of schemes, which have to be notified under section 43. Notice as to the proposed acquisition has to be served under section 45 on persons interested, inviting their objections. The objections have to be considered by the Board under section 47, and then the sanction of the Government has to be obtained after setting out the objections. Sanction may then be given by the Government with or without modification under section 48. The sanction has to be notified by the Government (section 49) and then the Board is authorised to execute the scheme. Publicity of the scheme is provided for, objections have to be considered, and submitted to the Government and sanction can then be obtained. These are undoubtedly safeguards against undue interference.

The Board cannot proceed to acquire any land until the sanction has been notified as above.

Chapter IV deals with the acquisition and disposal of land. Section 68 deals with acquisition by agreement, and section 69 with compulsory acquisition, that is to say, the Act provides for acquisition in two ways, namely, by private treaty and compulsorily under the Land Acquisition Act. They both cover the same ground. They do not deal with different classes of land, namely, land necessary under section 41 or land considered affected under section 42. It seems quite clear that lands under both these heads may be acquired in either way. The learned Judges in Chandra Kanta Ghosh's case (1) have emphasised the words for carrying out any of the purposes of the Act occurring in section 69, as distinguishing it from section 68 where those words do not occur. They have in this overlooked the provision in section 24 which has to be read with section 68, which empowers the Board to enter into contracts necessary or expedient for carrying out any of the purposes of the Act, which really means necessary under section 41 or expedient under section 42. In discussing the purposes of the Act the preamble has been considered by them. I am unable to agree that "the re-housing of persons of the poorer and working classes displaced by the execution of improvement schemes" is a separate head of the objects of the Act. It comes under the head: "The Improvement and Expansion of Calcutta." The punctuation shows that it is part of the sentence beginning with the words "acquiring land for the said purposes, etc." The sentence following it is "and otherwise as hereinafter appearing" which does not run with it, if it is treated as a separate head, but it grammatically follows the portion governed by the preposition "by" after the words "expansion of Calcutta." Acquisition of land for purposes of recoupment is not specified as one of the objects of the Act. It is a means for effecting an object. It is not mentioned as an object in the preamble of the Acts which have been brought to our notice which explicitly provide for recoupment. It is scarcely to be looked for in the preamble. So far as the Calcutta Improvement Act is concerned, section 42 clearly provides for acquisition of land other than that required for the execution of improvement schemes. "Affected land" may be sanctioned by the Government to be acquired, but what it is to be done with such land? The acquisition may be "to escape payment of damages," but what is the Board to do with such property? Power of disposal by them is provided for by section 81, by which also the right of pre-emption is given to the owner of the land. Section 78 provides for abandonment of acquisition of land which is not required for execution of the scheme even after sanction, in consideration of payment by the owner of a sum to be fixed by the Board, which clearly comes under section 42. This section may be compared with section 48 of the Land Acquisition Act, which provides for payment of compensation when the acquisition is not completed. Section 78 provides for exaction of payment for abandonment, if the owner applies for it after the sanction for acquisition has been given and before the time fixed by the Land Acquisition Act for making claims in reference to the land. It clearly provides for recoupment. I think sections 78 and 81 taken together show that power to acquire land for recoupment has been given by the Calcutta Improvement Act, and in section 42, the word "affected" was deliberately used as a word having a very large meaning, "to give large powers of acquisition of land outside immediate requirements." Sections 89 and 91 deal with the power of the Board to borrow, including the power to grant mortgages of property vested in the Board, and sections 122 and 123 deal with credits to capital account and the application of the capital account. The Act gives power to acquire superfluous land, to demise and sell it, to return it on payment by the owner. For the above reasons I agree with the view taken by the learned Judges who have referred this case.

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—Wherever an attempt is made to construe a special period fixed by an enactment with reference to the general provisions of the Limitation Act contained in sections 5 to 18, the effect of such a process would be to affect the period of limitation fixed by the local Act. Appeal against the order of the District Court, Cuddapah, dated the 11th October 1915, in Insolvency Petition No. 9 of 1915,

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 19th April 1917, upon perusing the grounds of appeal, the order of the lower Court and the material papers in the case and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. C. A. Seshagiri Sastri, for the Appellants, and of Dr. S. Swaminadhan, for the 5th Respondent, of Mr. P. Somasundaram for Mr. V. Subramanyam Pantulu, for the 4th and 9th Respondents, and of Mr. V. S. Narasimhachariar, for the 1st, 7th and 8th Respondents, and the other respondents not appearing in person or by Pleader, and the case having stood over for consideration till the 24th April 1917, the Court (Spencer and Srinivasa Aiyangar, JJ.) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

This is an appeal against an order of the District Judge of Cuddapah passed under section 15 of the Provincial Insolvency Act dismissing an application made by creditors to declare the respondents insolvent. The learned Judge dismissed the application on the ground that the act of insolvency complained of occurred more than 3 months before the presentation of the petition, the last date for presentation having fallen in the period during which the Court was closed for vacation. He held that the petition could not be presented on the re-opening day as section 4 of the Indian Limitation Act was not applicable, and that section 10 of the General Clauses Act could not save the petitioners, as a question of limitation was involved.

The appeal against the District Judge's order, for which section 46 of the Act provides, has not been presented within 90 days of the order. Unless the time occupied in obtaining a copy of the order appealed against be excluded under section 12 or section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act, this appeal must be rejected.

The question for our decision, therefore, is whether sections 4, 5 or 12 of the Indian Limitation Act are applicable to proceedings under the Provincial Insolvency Act.

The latest decision of this Court on the point is Munjuluri Sivaramayya v. Singumahanti Bujanga Rao (1), wherein Oldfield, J., expressed his opinion that section 12 (2) of the Indian Limitation Act could not be applied to proceedings under the Provincial Insolvency Act. The learned Judge was inclined to think that section 5, being one of the general provisions of the Act and not altering or affecting any period of limitation within the meaning of section 29 (1) (b), might be applicable, but he felt himself bound to follow the decisions in Veeramma v. Abbiah (2) and Appa Rau Sanayi Aswa Rau v. Krishnamurthi (3). Sadasiva Aiyar, J., who sat with him, considered that section 5 was applicable. He distinguished Veeramma v. Abbiah (2), dissented from Appa Rau Sanayi Aswa Rau v. Krishnamurthi (3) and followed Nijabutoolla v. Wazir Ali (4), Reference under section 39 of Forest Act V of 1882 (5) and Seshama v. Sankara (6). Both learned Judges agreed to cut the Gordian knot under the exceptional circumstances of that case by treating the time-barred appeal as a revision petition and dealing with it under section 15 of the Charter Act, a course which can be taken only when the High Court in the exercise of its power of superintendence considers that a Subordinate Court has failed to do its duty. [Vide, Abdullah v. Salaru (7)].

The present appeal purports to have been brought under section 15 of the Charter Act, as well as under section 46, clause (2) of Act III of 1907, but the circumstances are not such as to warrant our proceeding under the Charter.

Duraisami Aiyangar v. Meenakshi Sundara Aiyar (8), to which Oldfield, J., was again a party, is a direct decision that section 12 of the Indian Limitation Act is not applicable to applications under the Provincial Insolvency Act, and was followed by the same learned Judge in Trasi Deva Rao v. Parameshraya (9) in respect to another section, namely, section 14 of the Indian Limitation Act, with the remark that the whole of that Act is inapplicable to proceedings under the Provincial Insolvency Act.

In none of the above cases was the decision in Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Secretary of State for India (10) considered. That was a case wherein Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ., after a very full consideration of the law on the subject, applied section 15 of the Indian Limitation Act to a suit instituted under section 59 of the Revenue Recovery Act (II of 1864). They held (we think rightly) that the special period for bringing suits under that Act was governed by the provision in section 59, which allows six months' time, rather than by any Article in the schedules to the Indian Limitation Act, but that the general provisions in the body of the Act were intended to be applicable, in the absence of anything to the contrary, to proceedings under special or local laws. In so doing, they followed the authority of a Bench of this Court in Seshama v. Sankara (6 and of a Full Bench in Venkata v. Chengadu (11).

The Full Bench decision in Abu Baker Sahib v. Secretary of State for India (12), which formed the basis for the decision in Duraisami Aiyangar v. Meenakshi Sundara Aiyar (8), was to the effect that appeals under section 10 of the Madras Forest Act (V of 1882) are independent of the general provisions of the Indian Limitation Act.

The rights conferred by sections 10 and 14 of the Madras Forest Act to appeal, against decisions of Forest Settlement Officers upon claims to have certain rights recognised at the time of afforestation, to a District Court and to a Forest Court respectively are evidently rights of a very special nature. As pointed out by the Chief Justice, the vesting of a power to extend time for appealing in the hands of the Governor-in-Council is in itself an indication that the Courts were not intended to exercise a similar power under the Indian Limitation Act in regard to these so-called appeals.

The cases in Veeramma v. Abbiah (2) and Appa Rau Sanayi Aswa Rau v. Krishnamurthi (3) related to the applicability of the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act to acts done in relation to the Indian Registration Act. Sivarama Pattar Kariakar v. Krishna Iyer (13), which followed these two decisions, held that independently of the Indian Limitation Act, section 10 of the General Clauses Act would operate to make a presentation on the first day after the Court re-opened, though after the time allowed in the Registration Act, a good presentation. So, too, in Official Assignee of Madras v. Sabapathy Mudaliar (14), an appeal presented under the Indian Insolvency Act on the re-opening day, when the last day for filing it fell on a holiday, was admitted.

In Veeramma v. Abbiah (2) and Appa Rau Sanayi Aswa Rau v. Krishnamurthi (3), as in other decisions, it has always been held that what must be looked to in deciding whether the Indian Limitation Act can be applied to a special or local law is the question whether the particular Act is or is not self-contained and complete in itself.

It has been settled by a course of decisions that the Madras Forest Act and the Indian Registration Act are special Acts complete in themselves, and we do not here propose to question the reasoning by which that result has been arrived at.

But sections 6 and 47 of the Provincial Insolvency Act show that that enactment is at least not independent of the rules of civil procedure followed in the trial of regular suits and appeals under the Civil Procedure Code.

We also think that the analogy of the Madras Forest Act did not justify the assumption in Duraiswami Aiyangar v. Meenakshi Sundara Aiyar (8) that the general provisions of the Indian Limitation Act were not applicable to the Provincial Insolvency Act on the strength of Abu Baker Sahib v. Secretary of State for India (12).

(13) 23 Ind. Cas. 23; 26 M. L. J. 307; 15 M. L. T. 233.

(14) 14 Ind. Cas. 579; 23 M. L. J. 221; 12 M. L. T. 169.

In our opinion the correct view is that taken by the Allahabad High Court in Dropadi v. Hira Lal (15), where the matter has been fully discussed by a Full Bench.

We consider that the cases in Duraisami Aiyangar v. Meenakshi Sundara Aiyar (8) and Trasi Deva Rao v. Parameshraya (9) were wrongly decided, and that the dictum of Oldfield, J., in Munjuluri Sivaramayya v. Singumahanti Bujanga Rao (1) as to the applicability of sections 5 and 12 of the Limitation Act to proceedings under the Provincial Insolvency Act was also incorrect. But as there is so much divergence of opinion on the point, we refer to a Full Bench the question whether recourse can be had to the general provisions of Act IX of 1908 in dealing with the admission of petitions and appeals presented after the time prescribed under the provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907).

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 18th and 19th of September 1917 in pursuance of the above Order of Reference, upon perusing the said Order of Reference and the records in the case and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar and Mr. C. R. Seshagiri Sastri, for the Appellants, and of Dr. S. Swaminadhan, for the 5th Respondent, Mr. P. Somasundaram for Mr. V. Subramanyam Pantulu, for the 4th and 9th Respondents, and of Mr. V. S. Narasimhachariar, for Respondents Nos. 1, 7 and 8, and the other respondents not appearing in person or by Pleader and the question having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court expressed the following

AYLING, J.—The question propounded for our decision is:

Whether recourse can be had to the general provisions of Act IX of 1908 in dealing with the admission of petitions and appeals presented after the time prescribed under the provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act III of 1907?

The obstacle to the application of these general provisions is section 29 of the same Act, which says:—

"Nothing in this Act shall..... affect or alter any period of limitation specially prescribed for any suit, appeal or application by any special or local law now or hereafter in force in British India."

The meaning of this section has been considered by a Full Bench of this Court in Abu Baker Sahib v. Secretary of State for India (12), and in my opinion that judgment effectively answers the question before us. In place of section 29 of Act IX of 1908 and the Provincial Insolvency Act, the learned Judges were dealing with section 6 of Act XV of 1877 (the previous Limitation Act)

* * * * * *

The learned Vakil for appellants has in fact been forced to argue that the decision in Abu Baker Sahib v. Secretary of State for India (12) was wrong and requires re-consideration. How far we are entitled to question the correctness of a considered ruling of a Full Bench of equal numerical strength is a matter into which I do not propose to enter: for I entirely and respectfully concur in the ruling now called in question. It is a pure question of interpretation of a Statute. The juxtaposition of the words "affect" and "alter" compel us to give an independent meaning to the word "affect"; and I cannot understand how the application of the general provisions extending in certain circumstances the period fixed by law can be held not to "affect" that period.

The cases mainly relied on by appellants' Vakil are Venkata v. Chengadu (11) and Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Secretary of State (10). In the latter case the two learned Judges were inclined to question the correctness, or rather the general applicability of the decision in Abu Baker Sahib v. Secretary of Satate for India (12), largely because the Full Bench ruling in Venkata v. Chengadu (11) had not been considered; but they deemed it unnecessary to decide whether section 29, Indian Limitation Act, rendered the general sections of the Limitation Act inapplicable to special and local Acts generally. They disposed of the case before them with an eye solely to the peculiar features of the (15) 16 Ind. Cas. 149; 34 A. 496; 10 A. L. J. 3 (F. B.).

Act with which they were dealing—Act II of 1864: and I need hardly point out, even if the two were mutually destructive, the authority of this ruling cannot be held to counterpoise the Full Bench decision.

The decision in Venkata v. Chengadu (11) was that of a Bench of four Judges, the main judgment being that of Muthusami Ayiar, J., the question referred for their decision did not relate to the applicability of the general sections of the Limitation Act, or the interpretation of section 6 of the same (corresponding to section 29 of the present Act); but to whether the provisions of the Limitation Act (Article 95, Schedule II) or section 59 of Act II of 1864 should be followed in computing the period of limitation. No doubt Muthusami Aiyar, J., expressed the opinion, with the concurrence of Kernan, J., that section 6 of the Limitation Act did not bar the application of the general sections. Kullayappa v. Lakshmipathi (16) is another pronouncement of the same two learned Judges to the same effect. But the other two Judges, who were parties to Venkata v. Chengadu (11) (Parker and Wilkinson, JJ.), expressed no opinion on the point; and this is remarked by Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ., in their judgment in Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Secretary of State (10). The decision in Kullayappa v. Lakshmipathi (16) is certainly not entitled to be treated as a Full Bench decision on the question now before us.

Veeramma v. Abbiah (2) is another Full Bench case in which Muthusami Aiyar and Shephard, JJ., expressed contrary views as to the effect of section 6 of Act XV of 1877. Collins, C. J., does not refer to the section; but, by implication, he would seem to have favoured Shephard, J.'s view.

I can find nothing in these cases, which would induce me to differ from the view of the learned Judges in Abu Baker Sahib v. Secretary of State for India (12).

It has been suggested that in the case of an appeal to a District Court (with which we are not concerned here) the period allowed by section 47 (4), Provincial Insolvency Act (30 days), is so short that it might be impossible to procure copy of the order in time for presentation with the appeal, as required by Order XLI, rule 1 (mutatis mutandis), and that in such a case a Court could not be asked to enforce the limitation clause, section 46 (4). That is not the case here: and we are not called on to say what a Court should do, if such facts were established. The possibility of such a difficult case may be a ground for legislation, or possibly the provision of a remedy in the Rules and Orders under the Civil Procedure Code. But we have merely to interpret the law as it stands: and I feel no hesitation in answering the reference in the negative.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Both sides are agreed that the only question to be considered in this reference is whether the time taken up for obtaining copies of the order appealed against should be deducted in computing the period of limitation fixed by section 46, clause 4, of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The decision of the question turns largely upon the interpretation to be placed upon section 29 of the Indian Limitation Act. A very learned argument was addressed to us by Mr. A. Krishnasami Aiyar upon the meaning to be attached to the word 'affect' in clause 1 (b) of that section. Apart from authority, if I were deciding this question for the first time, I would have respectfully concurred in the view taken by three learned Judges of this Court including the present Chief Justice in Abu Baker Sahib v. Secretary of State for India (12). The word alter would apply directly to similar provisions in the Limitation Act, if any, giving an extended period to suits or appeals of the nature provided for in the special Act. The word "affect" is more comprehensive. Whenever by a process of computation or exclusion or deduction the special period fixed by the enactment is indirectly extended or cut down, it must be taken that that period has been affected. The illustration which Mr. Krishnasami Aiyar suggested would also be connoted by the term 'affect'; for example, there may be a special period compelling a party to take steps to set aside the order of a Special Officer under the Boundaries Act. When a party instead of adopting that course wants to avail himself of the general period of limitation prescribed for a declaration of title in Article 120 of the Limitation Act, the relief granted to him would indirectly affect the period of limitation prescribed in the special law. The decision of the Full Bench in Secretary of State v. Illikkal Assan (17) is an illustration of this mode of affecting the period of limitation fixed in a special Act. But I am not prepared to agree with the learned Vakil that this category of cases exhausts the significance of the word 'affect.' Nor am I prepared to accede to the contention that a computation of period of limitation which in effect extends the time fixed does not affect the period of limitation. In my opinion, wherever an attempt is made to construe a special period fixed by an enactment with reference to the general provisions of the Limitation Act contained in sections 5 to 18, the effect of such a process would be to affect the period of limitation prescribed by the local Act. Therefore my reading of the section apart from authority is in accordance with the pronouncement in Abu Baker Sahib v. Secretary of State for India (12). But the matter has been complicated a great deal by other decisions to which I shall presently very briefly refer.

Before dealing with the cases quoted at the Bar, I may dispose of one aspect of the case which was very strongly pressed upon us by Mr. Krishnasami Aiyar. He did not dispute the proposition that where a special Act is self-contained the general provisions of the Limitation Act should not be imported into the consideration of questions arising under the former Act. Upon this point we have the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Mohummud Buhaddor Khan v. Collector of Barielly (18) that to Acts of a special kind which are self-contained, the general provisions of the Limitation Act should not be annexed. Sir Arthur Collins, C. J., and Muthusami Aiyar, J., followed this decision in Veeramma v. Abbiah (2). There are other decisions to the same effect; and, therefore, it may be taken as settled that where the Code is complete in itself the general provisions of the Limitation Act commencing from sections 5 to 18 should not be read as forming part of that Code. In the present case it was contended that the Provincial Insolvency Act is not a Code complete in itself. I think this contention is well founded.

We have only to refer to sections 6 and 47 to show that the Civil Procedure Code was intended to be largely utilized in regard to proceedings under the Act. Therefore, the Act has to be supplemented by the importation of the general rules of procedure as to suits.

One special matter affecting limitation may also be pointed out, and that is, by section 47 of the Provincial Insolvency Act the procedure to be followed in presenting appeals under that Act is to be the same as in the case of appeals under the Civil Procedure Code. As the learned Vakil pointed out, under the Civil Procedure Code an appeal can be filed only if the memorandum is accompanied by copies of the decree and of the judgment. It is well recognised that an appeal filed without these annexures must be regarded as no presentation in the eye of law. See Chamela Kuar v. Amir Khan (19) and Abdul Hakim v. Hem Chandra Das (20). It, therefore, follows that under the Provincial Insolvency Act, it is incumbent upon the party preferring an appeal that he should file copies of the order or judgment appealed against. It is not disputed that in a considerable number of cases such a copy may not be obtainable within the 30 days allowed for presenting an appeal to the first Appellate Court. It was not, therefore, unreasonably suggested that the Legislature could not have intended that the period of 30 days fixed by section 46, clause 4, should be inclusive of the period taken for obtaining copies of the order appealed against. The result of such a construction would be to deny the right of appeal in many cases. If it were shown in the present case that an application was made immediately after the order was passed and that more than 90 days had elapsed before the copies were obtained, I would have hesitated a great deal before coming to the conclusion that the party is not entitled to prefer the appeal after obtaining the copies, because to hold otherwise would be to deny the right of appeal given by the section. However, it has not been shown that in this particular case the copies were not granted expeditiously.

Apart from this particular aspect of the case, the general question now remains whether by virtue of the fact that the Provincial Insolvency Act is not self-contained we are at liberty to introduce into the construction of section 46, clause 4, the general provisions of the Limitation Act. In Venkata v. Chengadu (11) a Bench of four Judges had to consider this question with reference to section 18 of the Limitation Act. That was a case under the Revenue Recovery Act. Two Judges, Kernan, J., and Muthusami Ayyar, J., held that section 18 was applicable to the Revenue Recovery Act. Justices Parker and Wilkinson expressed no definite opinion on the question. In Seshama v. Sankara (6) Chief Justice Collins and Muthusami Ayyar, J., in dealing with a case under the Madras Boundaries Act XXVII of 1860, held that section 14 of the Limitation Act was applicable to the special period fixed in that Act. In Kullayappa v. Lakshmipathi (16) Kernan and Muthusami Aiyar, JJ., applied section 14 of the Limitation Act to a case arising under the Rent Recovery Act. In Iswara Patter v. Karuppan (21) Chief Justice Collins and Justice Davies applied section 18 of the Limitation Act to a case arising under the Revenue Recovery Act. In Veeramma v. Abbiah (2), which was a case under the Registration Act, all the three learned Judges who took part in it, viz., Collins, C. J., Muthusami Aiyar, J., and Shephard, J., held that the Act was complete in itself and that consequently there was no occasion for invoking the aid of the general provisions of the Limitation Act. The Chief Justice and Justice Muthusami Aiyar once again reiterated the proposition that if the Act was not complete in itself, the general provisions of the Limitation Act may be looked into for construing a special Act. On the other hand Shephard, J, gave an interpretation of the term 'affect' which subsequently found favour with the Judges who decided Abu Baker Sahib v. Secretary of State for India (12). All these decisions were passed under section 6 of the Limitation Act of 1877. There was thus a considerable divergence of opinion regarding the interpretation to be placed upon the word 'affect' at least in Madras, and yet when the new Limitation Act of 1908 was passed, the Legislature did not choose to give an authoritative interpretation of the term. My mind has been exercised considerably as to whether the Legislature intended to adopt the interpretations placed upon the term by Collins, C. J., Muthusami Aiyar, J., Kernan, J. and Davies, J, or whether it preferred the interpretation placed upon the word by Shephard, J. The opinion of Arnold White, C. J., Miller, J., and Wallis, J., was not given until after the new Act was passed, although they had to construe the language of section 6 of the old Act. The view taken by Shephard, J., is shared by a very large number of Judges in the other High Courts, and as that view is in consonance with the natural interpretation to be placed upon the word 'affect', I prefer to hold with the Judges who decided Abu Baker Sahib v. Secretary of State for India (12) that even in cases where the Act is not complete in itself, if by importing the general provisions of the Limitation Act the period fixed in a special Act is likely to be enlarged, either by the process of computation in obtaining copies or by excluding the period during which a fraud was practised or during which another litigation was proceeding in a different Court, still the period of limitation would be affected.

It seems to me that this is eminently a matter in which the Legislature should interfere. I fail to see why litigants preferring appeals under special Acts should not have the same privilege of extension provided by the general provisions of the Limitation Act as they have in cases directly coming under the Civil Procedure Code. There is no conceivable reason for putting one class of litigants under a disability of this kind. I may also be permitted to suggest that until the Legislature intervenes to amend the Limitation Act, our High Court should amend the rule in Order XLI by saying that the presentation of an appeal in cases under the Insolvency Appeal, second—Cross-objections rejected—Appeal, whether lies—Revision.

An appeal, purporting to be filed on behalf of the defendant, was dismissed by the lower Appellate Court on the ground that it was not filed by the defendant or his duly authorised agent. In the meantime an appeal was filed by the plaintiff and the defendant preferred cross-objections challenging the decree on practically the same grounds as were taken in his memorandum of appeal The cross-objections were rejected by the lower Appellate Court, on the ground that as the defendant had already preferred an appeal which had been dismissed he was not entitled to re-open the matter by filing cross-objections to the plaintiff's appeal :

Held, (1) that a second appeal was not competent from the order rejecting the cross-objections; [p. 812, col. 2.]

(2) that the defendant's appeal having been held not to have been filed by the defendant, he was entitled to file cross-objections and the order rejecting the cross-objections was, therefore, subject to revision. [p. 813, col. 2.]

Revision from the order of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 7th August 1916.

Mr. Girdhari Lal, for the Petitioner.

Sheikh Umar Bakhsh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are as follows:—

On 3rd November 1914 one Khaira sold certain lands to Allah Bakhsh, the consideration entered in the deed of sale being Rs. 4,000.

Master Nur Bakhsh sued to pre-empt the land on payment of Rs. 2,130. He was granted a decree for pre-emption on payment of Rs. 3,070 on 29th February 1916.

On 10th March 1916 an appeal was filed against the above decision in the Court of the District Judge purporting to be on behalf of Allah Bakhsh.

It was signed by Pir Bakhsh and Lala Mela Ram, Pleader. Pir Bakhsh had been acting as attorney for Allah Bakhsh in the primary Court, but the learned District Judge found that his power-of-attorney did not authorise him to file and prosecute an appeal. He also found that Lala Mela Ram's power-of-attorney though signed by Pir Bakhsh had not been duly signed as accepted by the Pleader. This appeal was, therefore, dismissed on the 25th April 1916 on the ground that it had not been filed by Allah Bakhsh, nor by any one duly authorised on his behalf.

In the meantime an appeal had been filed by Master Nur Baksh against the decree passed in his favour in which it was sought to get the money held payable reduced to Rs. 2,130. On behalf of Allah Bakhsh cross-objections were filed challenging the decree on practically the same grounds taken in the abortive appeal referred to above.

These cross-objections were rejected on 7th August 1916 by the District Judge on the ground that as Allah Bakhsh had already preferred an appeal against the decree, which appeal had been dismissed, he was not now entitled to re open the matter by filing cross-objections in the appeal filed by Nur Bakhsh.

Against this order of dismissal Allah Bakhsh has preferred this appeal through Mr. Girdhari Lal.

Mr. Umar Bakhsh for the respondent raised a preliminary objection to the effect that no appeal lay against the order complained of. Mr. Girdhari Lal contended that the order in question amounted to a "decree" and cited Ganapati v. Sitharama (1). This ruling, however, is clearly distinguishable. Section 100 and Order XLI, rule 22, Civil Procedure Code, also afford Mr. Girdhari Lal no assistance and I hold that no appeal lies in the case.

Mr. Girdhari Lal then asked that this should be treated as a revision. Mr. Umar Bakhsh, contended that inasmuch as Nur Bakhsh's appeal had been dismissed on 6th September 1916, substantial justice had been done and no revision should be allowed. It seems to me, however, that this is eminently a fit case for interference on the revision side.

The merits of the cross-objections have not been considered at all, and they have been dismissed on erroneous grounds.

The appeal having been held not to have been filed by Allah Bakhsh it is obvious that he was entitled to file cross-objections. Had the learned District Judge adopted the ordinary procedure and disposed of the cross-objections along with the appeal by Nur Bakhsh, instead of rejecting them a month previously, an appeal would have been permissible, Ganapati v. Sitharama (1). I accordingly treat this as a revision and accepting it with costs return the cross-objections to the lower Appellate Court for disposal in accordance with law.

Revision accepted.

Mr. I. V. Ramanuja Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Patanjali Sastri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit promissory note purports to be executed by defendant-appellant in virtue of the words on it "Nishi, mark of Chella Subbayya."

There is in fact no separate mark. The plaintiff contends that the absence of one is immaterial and that he is at liberty to prove that the words referred to were written with defendant's authority and, therefore, constituted a valid execution of the instrument.

As regards the 1st point, we cannot see and have not been shown authority for holding that any separate mark is essential, if the writing relied on is in fact written with authority.

As regards the 2nd, no case has been cited to the effect that the ordinary law of agency stated in section 226 of the Indian Contract Act is inapplicable to negotiable instruments, and section 27, Negotiable Instruments Act, is to the contrary effect, its restrictive portion being irrelevant in the present connection. Radhakrishna Mudaliar v. Subraya Mudaliar (1), relied on by appellant, was decided with reference to the execution of a Will and the special wording of section 50, Indian Succession Act. It, therefore, lays down no general rule. We accordingly agree with the lower Appellate Court that plaintiff is at liberty to prove the execution of the suit note by defendant's authority and that the case must be remanded in order that he may have an opportunity to do so. The appeal against order is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Custom—Alienation—Necessity—Expenses of defence of head of family, whether legal necessity.

Money raised on ancestral land for the purposes of the defence of the head of the family on a criminal charge must be considered as having been raised for a valid legal necessity.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 23rd October 1916.

Mr. Duni Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Brij Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted on the 12th March 1915 by Narain Singh, son of Jhanda Singh, against Khazan Singh and Sher Singh, asking for a declaration to the effect that a mortgage executed on the 14th June 1910 by Bhagwan Singh in favour of Sher Singh was null and void as against the plaintiff, Bhagwan Singh's nearest reversioner. Sher Singh pleaded that the money, namely, Rs. 400, was advanced by him to Bhagwan Singh for "legal necessity", inasmuch as Bhagwan Singh was being tried for his life on a charge under section 302, Indian Penal Code. The money was taken and expended for purposes of his defence in that case. The Courts below have held that money so expended must be considered as having been expended for legal necessity and have dismissed the plaintiff's suit. He has accordingly preferred this second appeal through Mr. Duni Chand and I have heard Mr. Brij Lal on behalf of the respondent.

The real point for determination is whether or not money raised on ancestral lands for the purposes of the defence of the head of the family on a criminal charge can be considered a legal necessity. Now legal necessity is of various kinds, and there appears to be room for considerable difference of opinion as to whether a given expenditure is legal necessity or not. The only reported case directly in point that Counsels have been able to cite or that I have been able to discover is Beni Ram v. Man Singh (1). In that case it was held that the necessity for raising the money to pay for the defence of a head of a joint Hindu family committed to the Court of Session on a serious criminal charge is a valid legal necessity, such as would support a mortgage of the family property executed for such a purpose.

This case is clearly in point, but Mr. Duni Chand wished to distinguish it on the ground that that decision was based on Hindu Law whereas the question here has to be decided in accordance with the customary law of this province.

In my opinion the case cannot be so distinguished. The point really is whether such expenditure was for legal necessity, and it seems to me that the purpose for which this money was taken and the mortgage executed was one which must be regarded as coming within the meaning of the expression "legal necessity." Mr. Duni Chand then urged that in any event the whole of this sum of money cannot be regarded as a charge on the property inasmuch as there were two other persons, namely, Rama and Shama, related to the mortgagee, Sher Singh, who were also tried with Bhagwan Singh. Mr. Brij Lal contended that as a matter of fact the expenditure incurred in the defence of the three persons under trial was considerably in excess of Rs. 400, and there seems every reason to believe that this contention is correct. Receipts have been filed from Counsel and their clerks showing the expenditure of Rs. 930. There seems every reason to believe that a further sum of Rs. 120 was also paid to Counsel, and there seems to me to be force in Mr. Brij Lal's contention that at least another Rs. 150 must have been expended in miscellaneous expenses such as obtaining copies of the record for Counsel. In these circumstances I hold that the sum of Rs. 400 was expended for legal necessity and that the mortgage must be regarded as valid. This appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Hindu Law—Religious and charitable trusts—Temple manager, power of, to pledge credit of temple—Fireworks, purchase of, for festival—Liability of temple assets—Trustee, power of to act without concurrence of co-trustees.

As a general rule of Hindu Law, property given for the maintenance of religious worship and of the charities connected with it is inalienable. [p. 815, col. 2.]

The manager of a temple has no authority to pledge the credit of the temple except for necessity, which necessity must relate to the preservation of the temple or the maintenance of the religious service. He should ordinarily only apply the income in the administration of the charity. [p. 816, col. 1.]

The purchase of fireworks for use at festivals cannot be charged on the assets of the temple, as it is not necessary for the preservation of the temple or the maintenance of religious service. [p. 816, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Bakewell, J., obiter.—Even if under the scheme of management of a temple one of several managers has authority to collect and disburse its income, it does not follow that he can exercise the abnormal power of alienating or charging the temple property or otherwise dealing with its capital without the concurrence of his co-trustees. Letters Patent appeal against the order of Mr. Justice Coutts Trotter, dated 20th July 1917, in Civil Revision Petition No. 1015 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Karkal, in S. C. Suit No. 76 of 1916.

Mr. B. Sitarama Row, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Ramnath Shenai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

BAKEWELL, J.—The question in this case is, what is the remedy of a person who has sold goods on credit to the manager of a temple to be used for the purposes of the institution? It has been found that the plaintiff, the vendor, was aware that the 2nd defendant, the purchaser, was the manager and that he made the purchase of fireworks for the temple, and that these goods were necessary for the temple.

A temple is a permanent religious charity carried on for the benefit of the present and future worshippers, and it is obvious that its property should be preserved intact in order that the existence of the charity may be continued, and that its income alone should be applied by the manager or dharmakartha in the administration of the charity [see Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Deivasikamony Pundara Sannadhi (1)]. It follows that the manager has ordinarily no authority to dispose of the capital of the institution, since such a disposition would endanger its very existence, and that his authority is ordinarily limited to the receipt of the income and its proper disbursement in the upkeep of the fabric and the performance of the customary ceremonies.

It has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that "as a general rule of Hindu Law, property given for the maintenance of religious worship and of the charities connected with it is inalienable" [Prosunno Kumari Debya v. Golab Chand Baboo (2)], but that, under certain circumstances, the manager of that property is "empowered to do whatever may be required for the service of the idol and for the benefit and preservation of its property, at least to as great a degree as the manager of an infant heir" (Ibid page 152). That decision and other cases were fully considered by their Lordships in a recent case reported as Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Deivasikamony Pandara Sannadhi (1), where it was contended that the manager had the power to grant a permanent lease of land belonging to the temple at a fixed rent and in consideration of a premium in case of necessity and for the benefit of the institution. Their Lordships observe "that the only specific point touching the present case actually decided in those three authorities was this: that a debutter estate may be mortgaged to secure the re-payment of money borrowed and applied to prevent its own extinction by sequestration" (page 718*); and, although they point out that it is not possible to define precisely the things which may constitute a benefit to the estate and justify the exercise of this power, the illustrations which they give relate to the preservation of the institution and its endowments.

They also point out that there must not only be a benefit to the estate from the exercise of the power, but there must be an unavoidable necessity for the alienation. The manager should, therefore, consider in each case whether the particular alienation of the temple property which is contemplated is the most provident disposition which can be made in the interests of the institution.

It follows, I think, from these propositions that the manager has no authority to pledge the credit of the temple, because the result would be that strangers to the trust would be able to proceed against the general property of the temple in execution of their decrees, and the consequent alienation of its property would not be made by the trustees acting upon a due consideration of the interests of the temple. Moreover, the manager would in this indirect manner obtain much larger powers of disposition than the reported decisions allow him.

The District Munsif has held that the purchase of fireworks was necessary for the temple, but that is not sufficient; the necessity must relate to the preservation of the temple or the maintenance of the religious service, and the discharge of fireworks, though customary at certain festivals, cannot possibly be included in these purposes. For these reasons I am of opinion that the purchase of these goods was not within the authority of the 2nd defendant as manager of the temple, and the temple funds cannot be made liable for the price in these proceedings.

No question has been raised as to the powers of one manager or trustee to act without the concurrence of his co-trustees, but I may point out that even if under the scheme of management one manager has authority to collect and disburse the income, it does not follow that he can exercise the abnormal power of alienating or charging the temple property or otherwise deal with its capital without the concurrence of his co-trustees.

For these reasons I would allow the appeal and set aside the decree of the District Munsif, and remit the case for re-trial upon the question of the personal liability of the 2nd defendant, and direct the respondent to pay the costs of the 1st defendant throughout.

KUMARASWAMI SASTRI, J.—I agree with my learned brother that the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree against the assets of the temple, as the purchase of fireworks cannot be said to be necessary for the performance of the trusts. I concur in the order proposed.

Appeal allowed.

Appeal, second—Suit undervalued by plaintiff—Defendant's appeal heard by inferior Court—Jurisdiction—Plaintiff, whether can object.

When an inferior Court disposes of a case which should have been heard by a superior Court, there is ground for thinking that the parties are prejudiced. [p. 817, col. 2.]

Where the plaintiff undervalued his suit for an injunction and the defendant, putting the same value on the appeal as had been put upon the suit, preferred his appeal to the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge instead of the District Judge and the former Court heard and decreed the appeal:

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled in second appeal to raise an objection to the jurisdiction of the lower Appellate Court notwithstanding his own undervaluation of the suit. [p. 817, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Rohtak, dated the 15th June 1916.

Mr. Parduman Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. Gullu Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was one for the issue of an injunction to the defendants for the demolition of a latrine erected by them, and for a perpetual injunction restraining them from reconstructing the latrine at the site on which it had been erected. The plaintiff valued the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction and Court-fee at Rs. 20. The suit was tried by the Munsif, second class, who granted the plaintiff a decree as prayed. Against this decree the defendants preferred an appeal to the Senior Subordinate Judge valuing the appeal as the suit had been valued. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge reversed the decree passed by the Munsif and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. Against this decision the plaintiff has preferred the second appeal, and the first ground taken is that the suit had been improperly valued and that, therefore, the appeal to the Senior Subordinate Judge was wrongly entertained. Mr. Parduman Das for the appellant referred me to Chief Court Rules and Orders, Volume 3, page 92, and Sukh Raj v. Kanhaya Lal (1). Mr. Gullu Ram for the respondents admits that the suit and appeal in the Courts below have both been wrongly valued and that the Senior Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal, although the Munsif had jurisdiction to try the suit. Sukh Raj v. Kanhaya Lal (1) is authority for holding that the plaintiff was competent to raise an objection with regard to his own valuation in second appeal, and I have no hesitation in following that decision. Mr. Gullu Ram then referred me to Hansa v. Ram Singh (2), Hakim v. Ralya (3), Mihan Singh v. Sri Ram (4), Ramaswamy Aiyangar v. Otai Gounden (5), Drobo Moyee Dabee v. Bipin Mundul (6) and Aklemunnessa Bibi v. Mahomed Hatem (7). It is not, however, necessary for me to discuss all these rulings, as in my opinion Sundar Das v. Dhanpat Rai (8) relied on by Mr. Parduman Das is directly in point. In that case the facts were as nearly as possible the same as the facts in the case under consideration, Hansa v. Ram Singh (2) was referred to in that ruling and distinguished. In the present case in my opinion the Full Bench decision is also distinguishable. Here an inferior Court has disposed of an appeal which it had no jurisdiction to hear. There a superior Court had disposed of an appeal which first should have been dealt with by an inferior Court and which it would have been competent to hear had certain preliminary steps, laid down by law, been taken. In Hakim v. Ralya (3) the learned Judge dealt with the case on the facts before him and specifically refrained from laying down any general rule. In my opinion, when an inferior Court disposes of a case which should have been heard by a superior Court, there is ground for thinking that the parties are prejudiced.

I accordingly accept this appeal and direct that the appeal to the learned Senior Subordinate Judge be returned to the appellant in that case for presentation to a Court of competent jurisdiction. In the circumstances, however, parties will bear their own costs in this Court.

MOHAN GAUNTIA—RESPONDENT.

C. P. Land Revenue Act (XVIII of 1881), ss. 65A (4), 132, 152—Gauntia, protected—Succession—Resignation by eldest heir—Surrender of Gauntiaship, validity of—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts—Suit to recover Gauntiaship, whether cognizable by Civil Court.

The object of section 65 A of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act is not to the benefit of the zemindar but to retain, if possible, certain selected families in the Gauntiaships of their villages, and to protect them against transfers and sub-divisions. [p. 829, col. 1.]

Section 65 A, clause (4), of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act is mandatory in its terms. The right of the eldest male heir to resign or renounce his rights as a Gauntia, with a view to giving up all claim to inherit the estate which has by statutory devolution descended upon him must be exercised at the time when the succession opens, viz., on the death of the last protected Gauntia. [p. 832, col. 2; p. 833, col. 1.]

LAL NRIPARAJ SINGH v. MOHAN GAUNTIA.

The provisions of section 132 of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act were drawn up with reference to section 65 A of the Act and were intended to enable the Deputy Commissioner merely to determine claims to protection under that section and to enforce the provisions of that section. It was never intended that the Deputy Commissioner should be empowered to deal with a suit for ejectment or for the recovery of a Gauntiaship. Such a suit is cognizable by the Civil Courts. [p. 831, col. 2.]

Per Atkinson, J.—The right of election under section 65A, clause (4) (b), must be exercised in respect of the entire estate which devolves on the eldest male heir. If two or more villages form the protected tenure of a Gauntia, even though they may have been declared protected by separate certificates at different times, the eldest male heir must exercise his choice of resignation or adoption in respect of all or none of such villages; there can be no splitting up of the estate or tenure into different parts having distinct entities. [p. 833, col. 1.]

Per Imam, J.—There is nothing in section 65A of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act to show that the protection afforded to the tenure of a Gauntia is to extend to a group of tenures. Where a person in whom two Gauntiaships are vested dies, it is open to his eldest heir to resign at the time of his succession in favour of another heir either both the Gauntiaships or one of them. [p. 834, col. 1.]

Letters Patent Appeal from the decision of Mr. Justice Roe and Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad, in First Appeal No. 393 of 1915, dated the 21st May 1917, against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sambalpur, in Title Suit No. 11 o f1913, dated the 20th May 1914.

FACTS of the case appear from the following

JUDGMENT.

ROE, J.—The plaint in this case was filed on the 2nd April 1913 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Sambalpur by Mohan Gauntia, son of Karuna Gauntia. Karuna was the Gauntia of two villages, named Bandipali and Sargipali. These villages are part of the Zemindari of Barpali. In 1891 Karuna received a certificate as a protected Thiccadar of these two villages. In Sambat 1957 corresponding to 1900 A. D, Karuna died leaving him surviving the plaintiff Mohan Gauntia and two younger sons Kuber Gauntia and Balaram Gauntia. In 1907 Kuber Gauntia executed an ekraranama in favour of the Darpali estate, surrendering Sargipali village to the Barpali Zemindar and acknowledging receipt of a sum of Rs, 2,300 in consideration of improvements made to the village during his tenure thereof. In 1908 Mohan Gauntia filed a petition in the office of the Court of Wards, who had by that time assumed charge of the Barpali estate, denying Kuber's right to surrender the village and requesting that the village of Sargipali be restored to himself. The Court of Wards refused to give up the village. The plaintiff Mohan Gauntia, therefore, sues to recover it from the Court of Wards.

The learned Subordinate Judge has decreed the suit and against that decree the present appeal is made.

A preliminary objection is made by the plaintiff-respondent that that appeal filed is out of time. In this suggestion there is no substance. The date of the Subordinate Judge's decree is the 20th of May 1914. An appeal was filed in the District Court on the 26th June 1914. The memorandum of appeal was returned to the appellant under the instructions of the District Judge on the 17th August 1915 and the present appeal was filed in the High Court on the 16th of August 1915.

The first ground taken in appeal is that the suit is bad by reason of the failure of the plaintiff to give due notice of suit in accordance with the Central Provinces Court of Wards Act. Under that Act a plaintiff is required to state definitely in his plaint the date of the notice. The plaintiff recites in his plaint that he served this notice on the 11th October 1901. The petition filed by the plaintiff before the Officer-in-charge of the Court of Wards, bearing date the 11th October 1909, contains the following phrase:

"Therefore, the applicant should not be driven to the necessity of bringing a civil suit for the recovery of the village."

The plea taken by the appellant is a purely technical plea and were I of opinion that the suit should be decreed on the merits, I would accept this direct limitation that the plaintiff was prepared to enforce his rights by a civil action as sufficient notice of his intention to sue. No particular form of notice of suit is required by the Central Provinces Court of Wards Act, and it is not suggested that the suit must be filed within any definite period after the notice is given. It is said only that the suit shall not be filed within two months of the receipt of notice. In my view the Act contemplates only an intimation to the Court of Wards that a party proposing to sue the Court of Wards has a grievance which requires investigation. In this view the notice dated the 11th October 1909 is sufficient intimation that the plaintiff has a grievance which he may be driven to redress in the Civil Courts.

In dealing with the case on the merits I propose to set down firstly the facts upon which the documents on the record and the admissions of the plaintiff must be held to be beyond dispute. Karuna, the plaintiff's father, died in July 1900, (Shraban-Bhado, 1957). Prior to that date he had signed all receipts granted to tenants with his own hand. After that date all receipts granted to tenants for lands held in the village Sargipali are signed by the hand of Kuber. No receipt to any Sargipali tenant bears the signature of Mohan Gauntia.

Mohan also admits that by an agreement dated 1901, the Bhogra lands of Sargipali were made over to Kuber and Balaram. He does not suggest that prior to the date of that agreement he cultivated them himself. His witness Madan Gabir says: "The Bhogra lands left by Karuna used to be cultivated by Kuber and Balaram." It must be held to be beyond dispute that from 1901 at least Mohan ceased to have any direct connection with the Sargipali tenants and the Sargipali Bhogra lands.

The final publication of the Record of Rights was made in the year 1907. To those who are cognisant of settlement methods it is clear that the preliminary records must have been prepared about the year 1905. Evidence is given by Markand Singh the defendant's witness that Mr. Kaluram the Assistant Settlement Officer came to Baripali in 1905 and that the papers of Sargipali were made over by him to Kuber and those of Bandipali to Mohan. The plaintiff's evidence upon this point is as follows:

"I got the rent rolls of Bandipali from Mr. Tholon the Assistant Settlement Officer. Mr. Tholon gave the rent roll of Sargipali to Kuber."

Whether the Assistant Settlement Officer was Mr. Tholon or Mr. Kaluram is immaterial. It must be held to be beyond dispute that when in 1905 the Assistant Settlement Officer (whoever he was) came to the village Mohan acquiesced in the delivery of the rent roll of Sargipali to Kuber.

After the relinquishment by Kuber of Sargipali in 1917, the Manager of the Court of Wards took steps to settle the Bhogra lands. There were a number of applicants for the settlement of these Bhogra lands. Mohan Gauntia's offer of Rs. 380 was accepted. His offer is dated the 8th June 1908, and the order granting him the lease is dated the 26th June 1908.

On the 10th July 1908 Mohan Gauntia filed a petition saying "that Bhubno, Chintamoni and Damru are cultivating the aforesaid Bhogra lands. I, therefore, pray that I may be given possession of the aforesaid Bhogra lands. In four or five days the above named cultivators be ousted from the said lands or else by delay the proper time for cultivation will be over and I will be put to serious loss."

On the 4th September 1908 a further petition was made repeating this prayer and again on the 6th January 1906 Mohan Gauntia reported that as he had not been able to get possession of the lands he would not be able to pay the rent payable, Rs. 380. It was not until the 11th October 1909 that Mohan Gauntia made any suggestion that the surrender by Kuber was invalid. It must be held to be beyond dispute that from the 4th June 1908 to the 11th October 1909 he acquiesced in the claim made by the Court of Wards to re-settle the Bhogra lands of Sargipali.

Under section 65 (a) of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act of 1881, the tenure of a Gauntia who has been declared to be protected shall not be partitioned and shall devolve on one member only of the Thiccadar's family, and where there are two or more heirs bearing the same relationship to the former Thiccadar, the eldest of such heirs shall succeed. It is incontestable that Mohan Gauntia was entitled on the death of his father to succeed to both Bandipali and Sargipali.

It is for the defendants to prove that at sometime prior to 1907 Mohan divested himself of all rights in Sargipali in favour of Kuber. It is certain that since 1901 Mohan has had no direct connection either with the tenants or the Bhogra lands of Sargipali. It is certain that in 1905 he acquiesced in Kuber's claim to be recorded as Gauntia of Sargipali. It is certain that in 1908 he acquiesced in Kuber's surrender of the village. These three facts seem to me conclusive proof of the defendant's case. No real attempt is made to explain away the last two facts. Mohan in his evidence explains Kuber's collection of the rents from the Sargipali tenants by an assertion that, having collected them, Kuber made them over in their entirety to him and from them he (Mohan) paid the dues of the Baripali estates for a time to the Baripali Zemindars themselves and thereafter to the usufructuary mortgagee who was put in possession of the property by the Baripali Zemindar.

It is pretended that this arrangement was made by a written agreement drawn up in 1901 and the Patwari took away this written agreement on the plea that the Zemindar wanted it and that it has never been given back. What the position may have been for the first year of Karuna's death is absolutely immaterial. We may accept the plaintiff's story that during this period the three brothers were quarrelling. The sole point of importance is, what was the nature of the agreement by which the quarrel was settled. Did Mohan thereby surrender his rights as Gauntia, or did he thereby appoint Kuber his agent for the collection of rents?

The learned Subordinate Judge takes it that Mohan Gauntia must have remained the Thiscadar of Sargipali, for the reason that many of the receipts for rents paid to the Zemindars were given to him personally and that many of the Challans issued by the Zemindars for the supply of wood, goats and such like were directed to him and are in his possession and have been produced by him. He also attaches importance to the fact that a Takavi loan for the improvement of Sargipali was taken in Mohan's name, and the re-payments upon this loan were made in Mohan's name, and that the Challans showing these re payments are in Mohan's possession. Now all these papers may well be in the possession of the plaintiff without his having in the first instance received them. Kuber has not been put into the witness-box on either side. It is impossible to say on which side he is now standing, but common considerations of interest would suggest that he is siding with his brother. He has certainly nothing to gain by siding with the Zemindar, and if indeed he is siding with his brother, the fact that receipts which should in the first instance have been given to Kuber are now in the possession of the plaintiff is by no means proof that the plaintiff was in the first instance entitled to receive them. That they are in the name of the plaintiff is to my mind immaterial. The arrangement by which Kuber was in possession of Bhogra lands in Sargipali and collected the rents of Sargipali was not reported either to the Zemindar or to the Deputy Commissioner. The papers produced by the plaintiff prove no more than this that for some years after Karuna's death, Mohan's name remained in the Registers as the recorded Gauntia, and that after 1901 the brothers were sufficiently good friends for payments of rent and Takavi instalments to be made sometimes by the hand of Mohan and sometimes by the hand of Kuber. They throw no light at all upon the real nature of the agreement of 1901 by which Kuber was actually in possession of Sargipali. On the other hand the granting of rent receipts to raiyats in the name of Kuber, the record in the Jamabandi of 1903-1904 (Exhibit 1) of Kuber's name as Gauntia of Sargipali, the acquiescence of Mohan in the giving in 1905 of the rent roll of Sargipali to Kuber, and the acquiescence of Mohan in 1908 of Kuber's surrender of Sargipali are cumulatively conclusive proof that by the agreement of 1901 Mohan surrendered his rights to Kuber, and that the story that the agreement of 1901 merely constituted his agent in that village is entirely untrue.

The learned Subordinate Judge is of opinion that as Karuna died in 1900 and the agreement whereby Kuber entered into possession of Sargipali was not made till 1901, the transfer even if made would be void. Granting for the sake of argument, that Mohan Gauntia did not finally divest himself of all interest in the village until the settlement proceedings of 1905, I am of opinion that the final transfer confirmed by the proceedings during settlement in 1905 would be valid as against Mohan Gauntia. So much of section 65 (a)

as is necessary to this discussion runs as follows:—

"The tenure shall be heritable, but not transferable by sale, gift, mortgage or dower: when on the death of a Thiccadar there are two or more heirs bearing the same relationship to him, the eldest of such heirs shall succeed, provided that the eldest of two or more such heirs shall be at liberty at the time of succession to resign his rights in favour of another heir bearing the same degree of relationship to the deceased Thiccadar as he himself does."

It is suggested by the learned Subordinate Judge that the transfer made after possession had been taken by succession is not legal and that such a transfer would be void as against the transferor. The only penalty provided for such a transfer is that on contravention by the transferor of the condition of his tenure contained in clause (a) the Settlement Officer or Deputy Commissioner may with the previous sanction of the Chief Commissioner declare such Thiccadar, Gauntia, or farmer to have forfeited the protection previously conferred. The position I take is much the same as that of an occupancy right in Bengal. The transfer is good as against the transferor but not good as against the landlord. There is nothing in the Act to suggest that the transferor himself can recover possession of property transferred in contravention of the provisions of sections 65 A, 4 (a). On a perusal of the analogous sections of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act, 47, 48, 70 and 71, it will be apparent that the transferor of occupancy rights cannot deny his right to make such a transfer. The only persons who can sue to set such a transfer aside are the nearest heirs of the transferor or failing them, the landlord. That I take to be the position in the case before us. Mohan, at least, is not entitled to deny the validity of the transfer of his rights to Kuber. His suit must fail.

We are not concerned here with the question whether Kuber actually received Rs. 2,300 from the Barpali Zemindar as a consideration for the relinquishing of his rights. The Court of Wards is much to blame for failing to put Kuber into the witness-box and for failing to produce the account books of the estate in which might have been displayed the entry of this payment. It is sufficient for the purposes of the case before us to find definitely that at the time when Kuber did relinquish these rights the plaintiff had no interest in the village which would justify him in protesting against such a transfer. That the plaintiff had in 1907 no subsisting right in the village is, in my opinion, conclusively proved.

I hold that the suit is not on the merits maintainable by the plaintiff to deny Kuber's proprietorship of the tenure or to recover the property from the person to whom Kuber has transferred it.

I would, therefore, allow this appeal and direct that the plaintiff's suit be dismissed with costs throughout.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—I regret I am unable to agree with my learned brother, although it would have given me very great pleasure to be able to subscribe to his view of the case. I have carefully considered the evidence in the case and the law embodied in section 65A, which has been incorporated into the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act XVIII of 1881, regarding the incidence of the tenure of a Gauntia in the Sambalpur district to which the village in dispute appertains.

I entirely agree with the Subordinate Judge of Sambalpur who tried the case both as regards the findings of fact arrived at by him and the law applicable to the case. I must at once say that the plaintiff Mohan Gauntia, being the eldest son of his father Karuna, the previous Gauntia of the village, succeeded to the Gauntia right in the village in dispute in 1900 after the death of his father and that there was no relinquishment of his right in favour of his younger brother Kuber either "at the time of succession" or at any time, and that the deeds of surrender and agreement executed by Kuber in favour of defendant No. 1, the Zemindar of the village, in the year 1907 are invalid and illegal and do not confer any right on defendant No. 1 to take possession of the tenure as against Mohan the plaintiff his sons and the other members of the family who have vested rights in the tenure in dispute, being their ancestral family property, though only one of them was recognised and declared as a Gauntia thereof for the purpose of performing the duties of a Gauntia imposed upon him by law. The plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to the declaration of his right to and recovery of possession of the village in claim including the sir and khudkast lands specified in the plaint. The suit has been properly decreed by the Court below and the appeal should, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

It is undisputed that Karuna, the father of the plaintiff, was the former Gauntia of the village Sargipali in dispute and of another village Bandapali, both appertaining to the Zemindari of Barpali of which the defendant No. 1 is the proprietor. In 1891 Karuna received a certificate as a protected Thiccadar of the two villages. He died in 1900 leaving him surviving three sons, Mohan the plaintiff, Kuber and Balaram. Mohan being the eldest son succeeded to both the villages under section 65, clause 4 (b), which enacts that "when on the death of a Thiccadar there are two or more heirs bearing the same relationship to him, the eldest of such heirs succeeds." Kuber, therefore, did not succeed being the second son of Karuna. On 5th October 1907, Kuber, however, executed a deed of relinquishment, Exhibit B, called "Wapsi Patta", surrendering the Gauntia right of village Sargipali in favour of the defendant No. 1. This was followed by a deed of agreement Exhibit F, executed by Kuber the next day, 6th October 1917, in favour of the Zemindar, defendant No. 1, which runs as follows :—

" That on 5th October 1917 I surrendered to you the entire 16-annas Gauntia interest of Mauza Sargipali in Baripali Zemindari, District Sambalpur, with all the Bhogra lands and my dwelling houses, etc., and delivered possession thereof to you. As I effected improvements of the Bhogra and the houses, etc., in the said Mauza Sargipali and constructed Kata and Band, etc., I take from you Rs. 2,300 in cash on account of these improvements. I shall have no claim in the said village. On receipt of Rs. 2,300 in cash in the presence of the witnesses, I do hereby execute the deed of agreement that it may be of use when necessary."

The Zemindar defendant No. 1 is in possession of the Gauntia right of village Sargipali on the basis of the aforesaid deeds of surrender and agreement executed by Kuber from the date of the execution thereof in 1907. The plaintiff's claim to recover possession is resisted solely on the aforesaid documents.

The question is whether Kuber had a right to surrender the village in question and whether the deed of surrender executed by him conferred any right upon the defendant No. 1 as against the plaintiff, and whether it is valid and operative in law and whether the plaintiff is bound by the surrender made by his younger brother Kuber.

As to the right of Kuber to surrender the village the defendant No. 1 in his written statement alleged as follows :—

(1) "It is admitted that Karuna, father of plaintiff, Kuber and Balram, was the protected Thiccadar of Mauza Sargipali. Karuna was also protected Thiccadar of Mauza Bandipali.

(2) After Karuna's death Mohan remained at Bandipali and acted as Thiccadar thereof whereas Kuber remained at Sargipali and acted as Thiccadar.

(3) The allegations in paragraph 3 of the plaint are not true. Kuber acted in Sargipali as Thiccadar on his own behalf, and not as agent of his brother Mohan."

N. B.—The allegations in paragraph 3 of the plaint referred to herein are that the plaintiff dwelt in Mauza Bandipali and in the year 1901 he appointed his younger brother Kuber, the defendant No. 2, as his agent to manage Mauza Sargipali on his bahalf and accordingly Kuber realised rents from the tenants on behalf of the plaintiffs.

"(4) That at the Dewar Settlement Mohan was recorded as Thiccadar of Bandipali and Kuber of Sargipali. This was on the application of Kuber and Mohan, not having accepted the Thiccadari of Mauza Sargipali and agreeing to the Record of Rights being in the name of Kuber, relinquished his right in favour of his younger brother."

From the above it is clear that in the written statement the right of Kuber as Gauntia of Sargipali is said to be based on the fact that Kuber acted as Thiccadar on his own behalf in the village and that at the time of the preparation of the Record of Rights Mohan did not accept the Thiccadari of village Sargipali and agreed to the name of Kuber being recorded in the Record of Rights, and thus relinquished his right in favour of Kuber. There is no case made out in the written statement that Mohan resigned his right in favour of his younger brother Kuber at the time when succession ensued after the death of his father Karuna in terms of the proviso of section 65 A, clause 4, which runs as follows :—

"Provided secondly that the eldest of two or more heirs shall be at liberty at the time of succession to resign his right in favour of another heir bearing the same degree of relationship to the deceased Thiccadar as he himself bears."

Indeed the evidence on behalf of the defendants is that after the death of Karuna, Mohan became the Gauntia of Sargipali. Markund Singh, witness No. 1 on behalf of the defendant, says: "In Sargipali there is no co-sharer, Karuna was the sole Thiccadar of the village..... After his death Mohan became Gauntia of Sargipali.....Karuna had got a protected certificate in 1901 in respect of Sargipali. Mohan remained Thiccadar of Sargipali for about a year after the death of Karuna." This witness admitted Exhibit 1, the receipt granted to Mohan bearing his signature, with respect to which he says in his evidence: "We took Patwari and other cesses from the plaintiff Mohan on the 2nd November 1903 for the Sambat 1958 and 1959." There is no reason why this statement of this witness should not be accepted. He is a relation of the Zemindar defendant and is in his service since 1875 as his Am Mukhtar : and has been looking after the management of this village and also holds Bhogra lands after the surrender by Kuber. There is no evidence that Mohan resigned the Gauntia tenure in favour of Kuber at the time when succession ensued after the death of Karuna. On the other hand, the positive evidence is that Mohan succeeded to the Gauntia right and was recognised by the Zemindar defendant No. 1 as the Gauntia of the village.

The defendant No. 1 admitted that Mohan was the Gauntia of Sargipali in Exhibit 8, and a usufructuary mortgage bond, dated April 14th, 1902, executed by him in favour of Bairagi Dora for Rs. 6,000, wherein village Sargipali along with other villages of the Zemindar was mortgaged. The plaintiff was directed to pay the annual rent of Rs 149-3-0 of village Sargipali to the mortgagee Bairagi Dora. About the same time Mohan executed a registered agreement, Exhibit 6, agreeing to pay Thicca Jama of Sargipali to Bairagi Dora, the mortgagee, in accordance with the aforesaid mortgage bond.

The rent receipts Exhibits 3 to 3 C of the period 1903 to 1907 show that Thicca Jama of Sargipali was paid to Bairagi Dora for the Sambat 1959 to 1961 and 1963. All these receipts are in favour of Mohan Gauntia.

Exhibit 3 A mentions that the money was received on behalf of Mohan Gauntia through Kuber.

Exhibit 4 is a letter from Bairagi Dora the mortgagee to the plaintiff demanding rent from him for the village in dispute.

Exhibit 1, dated 2nd November 1903, a receipt for Patwari and other cesses, mentions that Mohan Gauntia paid these cesses for the Sambat 1958 and 1959. All the receipts granted by the Zemindar are in the name of Mohan, described as Gauntia, sometimes the money is said to have been received from Mohan himself and sometimes through Kuber.

The letters in the shape of Parwanas, Exhibits 5 series, IB and LE, issued from 1903 to 1907 by the Zemindar mention sometimes the name of Mohan and sometimes only the Gauntia of Sargipali without any name, but never the name of Kuber as Gauntia of the village.

The Government Treasury Challans 2 to 2 J show that money was paid by Government to Mohan as Gauntia of the village for effecting improvements of Sargipali and that the money was returned to Government from 1906 to 1912 by Mohan Gauntia personally. The words in the Challans are: "Brought by Mohan Gauntia tendered by self." In two instances the words are: "Brought by Mohan Gauntia of Sargipali tendered through Kuber (Exhibit 2)." In one instance, Exhibit 2G, the words are: "Brought by Mohan Gauntia, paid by Balaram Gauntia" (the youngest brother).

These documents clearly show that Mohan was recognised as the Gauntia of the village all through and held responsible for the performance of the duties of a Gauntia of the village both by Government and by defendant No. 1, the Zemindar. Kuber's position was never recognised as being higher than that of an agent of Mohan. The rent receipts, Exhibits A to A 25, of four tenants of the village produced on behalf of the defendant as showing that Kuber collected the rents of the village, are not inconsistent with the case of the plaintiff, which is that Kuber was his agent and was collecting rents in the village on his behalf.

It is clear from the above that Mohan did never relinquish his right in favour of Kuber. There is no deed of relinquishment executed by Mohan in favour of Kuber in respect of the Gauntia tenure of the village in dispute or any other documentary evidence to show that Mohan did at any time resign his right in favour of Kuber.

Witness No. 1 Markund Singh, Am-Mukhtar of the defendant, says: "I do not know how the village was given to Kuber either by written (?) or verbally, as I was not present on that occasion."

The defendant examined 8 witnesses in this case, but none of them says a word about Mohan's having relinquished his right in favour of Kuber. The Mukaddam Gumasta of Sargipali, the only witness on the point, says that he is unable to say whether Kuber used to realise the rent of the village on his own behalf, or on behalf of Mohan, and is silent as regards any relinquishment by Mohan to Kuber. He was sued by Mohan in the Court of the Munsif in 1902 and in Paus last a criminal case was brought against him by Mohan for assaulting his son. This witness is of no value and is unreliable.

An attempt has been made to show that the name of Kuber was recorded in the settlement record, which terminated in 1907, with the consent of Mohan. It is said that Mohan even put in a petition stamped with 8-annas Court-fee before the Settlement Officer, asking that Sargipali might be recorded in the name of Kuber. The petition has not been produced, nor the register showing the entry of such an application. Witness No. 8, a Patwari Fund clerk, has been produced to show that he made a search for the document but could not find it. He admits that he is not in charge of the papers which remain in the record room, and that the record-keeper is in charge of them. The record-keeper is not produced. This witness made a search of his own accord. He says that these papers are not in his office but they might be in the record room and there is nothing to show that any such application ever existed.

The Khewat, Exhibit H, does not contain any note by the Assistant Settlement Officer that any petition was filed by Mohan or any statement was made by him that Kuber should be recorded as the protected Thiccadar of the village.

Markund Singh is too much interested to be relied upon on behalf of defendant No. 1, being his relation and his Am-Mukhtar, when he says that the plaintiff Mohan Gauntia agreed to the name of Kuber being recorded at the time of settlement.

I agree with the Subordinate Judge that the evidence on behalf of the defendant as to having relinquished his rights in favour of Kuber before the Assistant Settlement Officer is wholly unworthy of credence. Kuber, either of his own accord or in collusion with the defendant No. 1, might have got his name recorded before the Assistant Settlement Officer. Mohan had nothing to suspect that Kuber would get his own name recorded, for Kuber had never before done any act in breach of the confidence reposed in him by Mohan. Even if it be held that Mohan did actually consent either by a petition or verbally to Kuber's being recorded by the Settlement Officer as a Gauntia, it would be several years after his succession to the Gauntia right and the recognition of his right by the Zemindar and the Government as shown above. He had, in 1904, no right to relinquish the tenure in favour of his brother before the Settlement Officer, for it would then amount to a transfer of the right already accrued to, and enjoyed by, him, by way of gift in favour of Kuber. It was not a surrender to the Zemindar but a transfer to a third person as against the Zemindar. This is not permissible. Section 65, clause 4A, prohibits absolutely transfer of the Gauntia tenure in any way either by sale, gift or mortgage. The relinquishment, if any, made by Mohan in favour of Kuber in 1904, which had already been shown to have never taken place, is wholly inoperative and invalid in law. No consent of the Zemindar in my opinion would validate the transfer declared by law to be illegal. It is admitted that this was the ancestral family property. Under the special rule of succession provided by section 65A, out of the several heirs bearing the same relationship to the deceased Gauntia the eldest of such heirs succeeds and is not liable to partition. The Gauntia tenure in question was an ancestral property in the hands of the father of the plaintiff and his brothers in which all of them had acquired an interest by birth. The tenure was created long before 1898, when section 65A was enacted after amendment. Karuna's ancestor Dhunda originally held the tenure, which in succession came to be held by Karuna and Gajadhar, son of Dhunda. Karuna alone was, however, granted a certificate in accordance with Act XVI of 1889. The effect of the certificate was not to take away the rights of other members in the family, as held by the learned Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces in Fagwa v. Budhram (1). The history of the tenure in that case is exactly similar to that in the present case. Prior to 1891, two brothers Sakhru and Pathari held the tenure for which in 1891 a certificate was given to Pathari alone. It was held that the certificate did not create two new rights personal to Pathari alone and that Pathari's nephew did not cease to have an interest in the tenure. Pathari, his sons and nephew were held to be joint owners of the Thiccadari village. The law regarding the rights of the person declared as protected in status by certificate in 1891 and the other members of the joint Hindu family has been summarised in that case as follows:—

"There is absolutely nothing in the Act of 1898 to suggest that the vested right was intended by the Legislature to be taken away from him. Property which is joint property and enjoyed as such does not cease to be joint property merely because a subsequent Act does not recognise the partition.....It cannot be seriously argued that these restrictions on the right to partition have taken away from the co-sharers in Sambalpur Khalsa villages all rights of property, and conferred them on the Lambardar Gauntia." The right recognised by the Settlement Officer is not merely a personal privilege. The learned Judges further held that the fact that the certificate was issued in the name of one member does not affect the rights of the other members and that the question of privity of contract between the Zemindar and the other members of the family does not affect the right as against each other.

In Second Appeal No. 2878 of 1914, in Lal Narupraja Singh v. Bhabani Teli (2), in connection with the suit brought by the Zemindar, after the surrender by Kuber in 1907, to eject some relations of Kuber from parcels of Bhogra lands held by them, the learned Chief Justice overruled the defendant's contention of law that a protected Gauntia is unable to relinquish his right. The question whether Mohan did as a matter of fact relinquish his right in favour of Kuber and whether Kuber on the strength of his name being entered in the Record of Rights could validly surrender the tenure to the prejudice of the plaintiff, was not raised and could not be investigated in that second appeal. It was for the purpose of that case, however, assumed that Kuber was a protected Gauntia of the village. Mohan was not a party to that litigation.

I regret the above authorities were not cited to us in the course of the arguments by the learned Vakils in Cuttack representing the parties.

In the present case, however, the plaintiff has been able to show that he himself did succeed as a Gauntia under the law and was recognised as such by defendant No. 1 and that he did not relinquish it in favour of Kuber. Hence Kuber was not competent to surrender it to the Zemindar.

It follows from the principles of the ruling in Fagwa v. Budhram (1) already cited that a Gauntia, having succeeded to the protected tenure under section 65 A of the Act, cannot transfer the rights by gift in favour of one to the prejudice of the rights of the other members of the family in the property. In the present case Mohan, having succeeded to the tenure and having been recognised as such for a number of years could not transfer the right in favour of Kuber to the prejudice of the youngest brother and his own sons and the sons of the other brothers. Under the Hindu Law the transfer by one member, unless as a Karta of the family, is not binding upon his brothers and nephews, as the members of the family acquire vested rights by birth in the ancestral property. Under the special law a person succeeding to the Gauntia tenure in preference to the other members of the family has no right to transfer the tenure. In this view of the law the relinquishment by Mohan to Kuber before the Assistant Settlement Officer in 1904 was absolutely invalid and illegal and is not binding upon Mohan or the other members of the family. As a matter of fact it appears that there was no relinquishment at all.

(1) 24 Ind. Cas. 855; 10 N. L. R. 64.

The Record of Rights does not affect the right of the plaintiff, nor does it seem to have been acted upon. The documentary evidence already referred to shows that even after the alleged relinquishment by Mohan and the preparation of the Record of Rights, Mohan Gauntia continued to be recognised as the Thiccadar of the village and to pay rents and cesses to the Zemindar, and to his mortgagee, and also the Takawi dues to Government (vide the rent receipts of 1902 to 1907, Parwanas of 1903 to 1907 and the Treasury Challans of 1906 to 1914).

All these documents were produced by the defendant before the Court of Wards in 1909, and in the present suit, from his own custody. There is no reason why these documents would be with the plaintiff if he had parted with his rights in the village in favour of Kuber. I have no hesitation, therefore, in agreeing with the learned Subordinate Judge that there was no relinquishment of his rights by Mohan in favour of Kuber at any time and that his rights are not affected by the Record of Rights.

It is possible that Kuber being in charge of the village did in collusion with the defendant No. 1 get his name entered in the Records of Rights either for his own benefit or for the benefit of the Zemindar, to whom he is said to have surrendered soon after the Record of Rights was finally published. But the deed of surrender executed by Kuber in favour of defendant No. 1 on 5th October 1907, and followed by a deed of agreement on the 6th of October 1907, would not affect the rights of the plaintiff as he was no party to it.

It is not necessary for the plaintiff to show that the surrender made by Kuber in favour of defendant No. 1 is not a bona fide document or without any consideration, for the plaintiff has succeeded in proving that Kuber had no right to surrender. But it may be mentioned that the circumstances connected with the execution of the deed of surrender are suspicious enough to raise a reasonable doubt as to the bona fides of the transaction.

In order to bolster up the case, defendant No. 1 made some of his witnesses to say that Mohan was himself present at the time of the execution of the deed of surrender and the payment of Rs. 2,300 to Kuber. Markund Singh, the Am-Mukhtar of the defendant, however, gives up the show when he himself does not say that Mohan was present at the time of the execution of the deed of surrender. The deed of surrender was presented for registration by Markund Singh, the Am-Mukhtar of defendant No. 1. It does not mention any consideration for which the village is said to have been surrendered. The deed of agreement, however, mentions that Kuber received Rs. 2,300 in cash on account of the improvements made by him in the village.

As to the payment of Rs. 2,300 to Kuber, the evidence is most unreliable. It is admitted that money was not paid at the time of the execution of the deed of surrender, but it was paid afterwards. This witness No. 4 is the only witness who speaks as to the payment of Rs. 2,300 to Kuber, but he is contradicted by Markund Singh witness No. 1 as to the time of payment. Rs. 2,300 is said to have been paid in consideration of the improvements made by him in the village, but Markund Singh admits that Kuber did not make any improvements, but that the improvements were made by his father. Markund further admits that the money paid to Kuber was entered in the account book of defendant No. 1, but no such account book has been produced. Then it is not shown why Kuber would, after the improvements made in the village which are estimated at Rs. 2,300, part with the village. It has not been proved nor is it the case of any party that the surrender was made for the interest of the family and it is doubtful if such a surrender would bind the plaintiff and the other members. I am personally inclined to hold that the tenure being ancestral the surrender by Kuber, even if he was a Gauntia of the village, would not bind the plaintiff and the other members of the family, as the surrender is not shown to be for the benefit of the family. In this I am supported by the ruling in Fagwa v. Budhram (1) cited above, which distinctly lays down that in case of such a tenure no privity of contract between the Zemindar and any member of the family would affect the rights of the other members. It would also, in my opinion, defeat the object and intention of the Legislature, which is to afford protection to the Gauntia against arbitrary ejectment by the Zemindar.

It is, however, needless to investigate further into this matter except for the purpose of showing that the transaction appears to be colourable, in which the hand of Markund is visible in order to secure to the Zemindar the Gauntia right of the village by the surrender. It is then said that when the Court of Wards took over charge of the village in 1908 after the surrender, the plaintiff himself applied for taking lease of the Bhogra lands of the village which was being settled by the Court of Wards and thus acquiesced in the surrender made by Kuber. There is no force in this contention, for when the Court of Wards was settling them with others, the plaintiff would naturally be too anxious to prevent strangers from taking settlement of the same. This does not militate against the right that he claims to hold the village as Gauntia. It only shows that he was anxious to secure to himself possession of the Bhogra lands, and does not show that he acquiesced in any way in the surrender made by Kuber, or that he is estopped from claiming his right in the suit. On the other hand it is clear that soon after the relinquishment and when the Court of Wards assumed charge of the village in 1908, the plaintiff did apply to the Court of Wards to be put in possession ascertaining his right as a Gauntia of the village, and repudiating the surrender made by Kuber as being collusive and illegal, and requiring the Court of Wards to give back possession to him. The plaintiff filed before the Court of Wards all the receipts and other documents in proof of his claim, which have already been noticed before. It has been shown already that he continued to pay the rent of the village to the Zemindar and the Zemindar continued to recognise him as a Gauntia even after the execution of the deed of surrender. The Parwana, dated the 25th December 1907, signed and issued by defendant No. 1 to the Sargipali Gauntia was received by the plaintiff and he has produced it in this case. It is admitted in evidence by the defendant that the Zemindari papers would show as to who actually paid the rents, but these papers have not been produced. The defendant has failed to prove that Kuber was recognised by him as the Gauntia of the village before the alleged surrender in 1907 by him, or that the plaintiff did lose his right in the village by virtue of that surrender. The plaintiff's claim, therefore, cannot be defeated.

A formal objection was taken by the appellant that the suit is bad for want of a proper notice under section 26 of Act XXIV of 1869 of the Central Provinces Court of Wards Act. This section is in all respects similar to section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which requires that no Civil suit shall be brought until the expiration of two months after notice in writing stating the name and place of abode of the intending plaintiff, the cause of action, and the relief claimed has been delivered to and left at the office of the Court of Wards. The petition dated the 9th July 1910, Exhibit C4, satisfies the requirements of these rules. Therefore, the suit is not bad for want of notice.

In conclusion I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that the plaintiff has conclusively established that he being the eldest son was entitled to and did in fact succeed his father to the Gauntia right in the village, and that he never resigned his right in favour of Kuber, his younger brother, either at the time of the succession or thereafter in 1904 before the Assistant Settlement Officer, and that he was recognised all through as Gauntia of the village by the Zemindar and the Government, and that the position of Kuber was no better than that of an agent for Mohan in making collection of rents in the village, and that Kuber had no right to surrender the Gauntia right in favour of defendant No. 1 and that defendant No. 1 has not acquired any right to remain in possession of the village and to deprive the plaintiff of his right.

The suit has been rightly decreed by the learned Subordinate Judge. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

BY THE COURT.—As we are divided in opinion, the decree of the lower Court must be affirmed under section 98, clause (2), Civil Procedure Code; the appeal accordingly be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

CHAPMAN, J.—One Karuna Gauntia was the Gauntia of two villages named Bandipali and Sargipali. In 1891 he received a certificate under section 65A of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act of 1881 declaring him to be protected for the purposes of that section. In 1900 Karuna died, leaving him surviving three sons named Mohan, Kuber and Balaram. In the Survey and Settlement of the district of Sambalpur which was concluded about the year 1906-07, Kuber, the younger son, was recorded as the Gauntia of the village of Sargipali, Mohan being recorded as the Gauntia of Bandipali. In October 1907, Kuber executed a document purporting to surrender the Gauntiaship of Sargipali to the Zemindar on receipt of Rs. 2,300, in consideration of the improvements which he alleged he had made in the village during his Gauntiaship. The Zemindari was taken charge of by the Court of Wards sometime in the year 1908. Mohan thereupon took a lease of the home farm in the village of Sargipali from the Court of Wards. Subsequently, in October 1909, he presented a petition to the Court of Wards claiming that he was entitled by inheritance to the Gauntiaship of Sargipali; that Kuber had no right to surrender the Gauntiaship to the Zemindar and that he should be restored to the Gauntiaship. This petition appears to have been rejected and in consequence Mohan instituted the suit out of which this appeal arises, asking for the recovery of the Gauntiaship of the village of Sargipali. The suit was instituted in the year 1913 and was decreed by the learned Subordinate Judge. On first appeal to this Court the learned Judges who heard the appeal differed: Mr. Justice Roe being of the opinion that the appeal should be allowed and Mohan's suit dismissed; and Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad being of the opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge was right in decreeing Mohan's suit and that the appeal should be dismissed. In accordance with the rules of the Court, the appeal was accordingly dismissed. Against that decree an appeal has been preferred under the Letters Patent and that is the appeal which we have now to consider.

It is desirable to state in the first instance what can be gathered in regard to the status of a protected Gauntia from the provisions of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act of 1881; and for this purpose one must refer to section 65A of that Act. It appears from the provisions of that section that it was thought desirable to provide for the protection of certain selected Thiccadars, Gauntias and farmers of villages. "Gauntia" is the name ordinarily given to village headmen, but the use of the term in connection with Thiccadars and farmers indicates that the name was generally used in the Central Provinces for the person who was responsible for the collection of the rent in a village. Section 65A provides that where a Gauntia is able to prove that he has been in possession of a village or part of a village for a period of not less than 20 years, or where he is able to prove that he, or those from whom he has inherited, has or have established the village or substantially improved it, at his or their cost, he is entitled to claim the protection provided for by that section. The protection consists partly of a protection against ejectment by the Zemindar except under certain conditions, and partly of protection against sub division or transfer of the Gauntiaship. It further provides that a protected Gauntiaship shall be heritable and not transferable by sale, gift, mortgage or dower, that it shall not be saleable in execution of any decree nor shall any decree be passed for the sale thereof, that it shall not be partitioned and that it shall devolve on one member only in the family. The protection further deals with the rights of a Gauntia to renew his Gauntiaship lease upon terms which may, in case of disagreement, be settled by the Deputy Commissioner. It is quite clear from the recitals in these provisions that the object of the enactment was not for the benefit of the Zemindar; but that the object was to retain, if possible, certain selected families in the Gauntiaships of their villages and to protect them against transfers and sub-divisions. It is important to bear this general intention of the law in mind in dealing with the facts of the present case.

As I have said, Karuna was the protected Gauntia of the villages of Bandipali and Sargipali. He died in the year 1900 leaving him surviving three sons: Mohan, Kuber and Balaram. There is no evidence that there was any separation in the family and the presumption is that the family remained joint. In these circumstances the law on the subject clearly is that Mohan succeeded to the Gauntiaship of the two villages of Bandipali and Sargipali, unless at the time of his succession he elected to resign his right in favour of one or other of his two brothers. This is clear from the provisions of sub-section (4) (b) of section 65A of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act, which says that "when on the death of a Thiccadar there are two or more heirs bearing the same relationship to him, the eldest of such heirs shall succeed," provided that the eldest of two or more such heirs shall be at liberty, at the time of succession, to resign his right in favour of another heir bearing the same degree of relationship to the deceased Thiccadar as he himself bears. It is quite clear, therefore, that in the absence of evidence of resignation by Mohan at the time of his succession he was entitled to the Gauntiaship of the two villages of Bandipali and Sargipali and that his right was superior to that of his younger brother Kuber. Kuber would, therefore, not be entitled to make the surrender which he purported to make in the year 1907 in favour of the Zemindar. So far, therefore, as the provisions of this section are concerned, Kuber could only succeed upon evidence that at the time when Mohan succeeded to the Gauntiaship on the death of his father, he (Mohan) resigned his right in Kuber's favour. The question we have to determine, in the first place, is whether there was any such resignation. The appellant is met at this stage with a difficulty: The suit brought by Mohan out of which this appeal arises was not contested by Kuber himself; and Kuber was not called as a witness in the case. The suit was contested only by the Court of Wards on behalf of the Zemindar in whose favour the surrender had been made by Kuber in 1907. There is thus no statement or evidence by Kuber that there was any such resignation in his favour; and there is no other evidence of any kind bearing on this question. There is also no definite plea in the Zemindar's written statement that there was in fact any such resignation. We have been asked to infer that a resignation actually took place from the following circumstances:—

A series of rent-receipts commencing with the year 1901 proving payment by some four tenants of the village of Sargipali, most of which are signed by Kuber as "Kuber Gauntia." Reading these receipts together with the case of the plaintiff that Kuber did actually collect rents of the entire village of Sargipali, we may accept the fact that Kuber did collect rents of the village and that he did sign himself as 'Kuber Gauntia.'

There is also one instance of the year 1906 (Exhibit J) in which Kubar sued a tenant of Sargipali and obtained a decree for rent.

The appellant also relies upon the fact that Kuber was recorded as the Gauntia of Sargipali in the Khewat (Exhibit H) and that the Jamabandi prepared by the Settlement Officer was in accordance with that Khewat.

The appellant further relies upon the fact that after the Court of Wards had taken charge of the Zemindari in 1908, Mohan, without objecting to the surrender which had in the meantime been made by Kuber, applied to the Court of Wards for the settlement of the home farm. To some extent the appellant also relies upon the fact that Kuber made the surrender in 1907 describing himself as the Gauntia of the village. Some little inference may also be rightly drawn from the fact that Mohan in his evidence pretends that he was not aware of the entry in the Khewat until 1908.

A case was attempted to be made out in the first Court that the entry in the Khewat was made with the consent of Mohan and it was even suggested that Mohan put in a petition consenting to the entry of Kuber's name as the Gauntia of Sargipali. The only evidence, however, which was adduced to support this case was that of a witness who was discredited in cross-examination, and I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge and with the opinion expressed by Jwala Prasad, J., in this connection that the story is untrue. Even if this evidence were accepted as true, however, it would in my opinion be difficult to infer that it amounted to a resignation at the time of Mohan's succession.

There is a considerable body of evidence on the other side. It appears to be incontrovertable that so far as the Zemindar and the Government were concerned, Mohan succeeded to his father Karuna as Gauntia and was treated as the Gauntia from the time of the death of his father right up to the year 1912, within a short period of the institution of this suit. So far as the Zemindar is concerned, in respect of the period prior to the actual surrender by Kuber, there is a series of rent receipts showing payment by Mohan in his capacity as Gauntia; there is a mortgage bond of April 1902 executed by the Zemindar in favour of one Bairagi Dora in which the Zemindar recites that Mohan was the Gauntia of Sargipali and empowers Bairagi to realize rent from Mohan in discharge of the debt due by the Zemindar to Bairagi. Of about the same date there is an agreement executed by Mohan as Gauntia of Sargipali in favour of Bairagi Dora agreeing to pay him the annual rent of the two villages Bandipali and Sargipali. This is further supported by a series of receipts of 1903, 1904, 1905, 1906 and 1907 showing payments of rent by Mohan as Gauntia of Sargipali to Bairagi Dora. One of these receipts shows that the payment was made through Kuber. There is nothing to show that Kuber took any part in the payments of the other years. There is a letter written in 1908 by Bairagi Dora to Mohan Gauntia asking the latter to pay the rent and there are also demands made from time to time by the Zemindar. There is also a series of payments made to Government, apparently in discharge of a loan given by the Government for village improvement. These receipts run up to the year 1912 showing payments made by Mohan as Gauntia of the village.

From this evidence one thing is certain, and that is that upon the death of Karuna Mohan was treated as Karuna's sole successor as Gauntia of the two villages of Bandipali and Sargipali; Mohan accepted that position, and the Zemindari papers show that they were framed upon that understanding. It is, moreover, quite clear that there was no resignation in any sense of the term so far as the Zemindar and the Government were concerned. In these circumstances I think it is impossible to infer from the mere fact that Kuber was permitted to collect rent of the village and that he succeeded in getting his name recorded in the Survey and Settlement papers, apparently with a view to making the surrender in favour of the Zemindar, that any resignation by Mohan in favour of Kuber took place at the time of his succession. It is quite clear that after Mohan had once entered as the heir of his father, it was not open to him under the provisions of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act to transfer by sale, gift or otherwise in favour of his brother Kuber. It has been suggested that if he did so, he would be estopped from pleading that he was not entitled to do so. It is in my opinion not necessary to expressly decide whether the law of estoppel would operate as a bar in such an event, having regard to the clear provisions of the Statute. The cases relied on by Mr. Justice Roe in this connection are distinguishable, inasmuch as they relate to transfers of occupancy rights the law in respect of which is expressly for the protection of the Zemindar. As I have pointed out, the law upon the subject of transfers of Gauntiaship has no concern whatsoever with the interest of the Zemindar. Moreover, the leading case on the subject of estoppel in a case of transfer of occupancy rights, viz., Bhagirath Changa v. Sheikh Hafizuddin (3), itself expressly distinguishes a case in which a transfer had been made in a representative character. The fact is that in the present case I am unable to hold that there was any transfer by Mohan in favour of Kuber and if ever there was a case which would be excluded from the operation of the principle of estoppel, it is this one; for, in the first place, it is manifest that Mohan throughout held himself out as Gauntia of the two villages and in the next place, he was treated as Gauntia by the Zemindar right up to the date of the surrender by Kuber. It is, therefore, quite impossible for the Zemindar to plead that he was misled by Kuber in regard to the Gauntiaship of Sargipali. He appears to have been perfectly aware up to the date of Kuber's surrender that Mohan was the Gauntia; and it is certainly open to considerable doubt whether, when he knew that Mohan was entitled to succeed to his father and that there was an express provision of law forbidding Mohan from making a transfer in favour of his brother, he really believed that Kuber was the Gauntia in respect of Sargipali.

Some reference has been made to a judgment of this Court in which the late Chief Justice said that he could discover nothing in the incidence of the tenure of a Gauntia which showed that the Gauntia was not entitled to relinquish his rights [Lal Narupraja Singh v. Bhabani Teli (2)]. That observation was made only by way of obiter dictum and it appears to me that it is unnecessary for the present appeal that we should determine the point. At the same time it is desirable to mention that I am of opinion, having regard to the nature of the protection given to a protected Gauntia by section 65A, that if it were held that a Gauntia could surrender in favour of the Zemindar, it would be possible to render the provisions of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act infructuous, inasmuch as the Zemindar could obtain a surrender from a Gauntia and thereafter lease the Gauntiaship to some other person and thus transfer the Gauntiaship to another, which is the result which the Act is intended to prevent.

I am of opinion, therefore, that the defendant-appellant has entirely failed to prove that there was any resignation by Mohan in favour of Kuber either at the time of his succession or subsequently. In these circumstances I am of opinion that the suit was rightly decreed.

Certain preliminary objections were taken by the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the appellant. It was contended that the suit was not maintainable in the Civil Court by reason of the provisions of section 132 read with section 152 (a) of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act. Section 132 enables the Deputy Commissioner to enquire into the claims of Gauntias and to declare them to be protected for the purposes of section 65A. Section 152 provides that no Civil Court shall entertain any suit concerning any matter which the Revenue Officer is empowered to determine or dispose of. It is contended that this was a suit for the enforcement of the claims of a Gauntia and that, therefore, the Deputy Commissioner was empowered to dispose of it: and that the Civil Court was prohibited by the provisions of section 152 from entertaining it. In my opinion, however, it is quite clear that the provisions of section 132 were drawn up with reference to section 65A and were intended to enable the Deputy Commissioner merely to determine claims to protection under section 65A and to enforce the provisions of that section. It was never, in my opinion, intended that the Deputy Commissioner should be empowered to deal with a suit for ejectment or for the recovery of a Gauntiaship.

In regard to the objection upon the ground of want of notice of suit I agree with the judgments of Mr. Justice Roe and of Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad.

Some argument has also been addressed to us upon the provisions of section 237 of the Indian Contract Act, which entitles a person dealing with an agent to believe that the agent is acting within his powers. Nobody has ever suggested in this case that the Zemindar was induced to believe that Kuber was empowered by Mohan to surrender his Gauntiaship and, therefore, the provision of the section referred to has no application to the present case.

Reference is also made to sections 68 and 82 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which require Settlement Officers to record the fact of actual possession and provide that the entry regarding the fact of actual possession shall be presumed to be correct until the contrary is proved. Now, all that the entry in the Record of Rights shows is that possession of the Gauntiaship at the time of the publication of the Record of Rights was with Kuber. The presumption attaching to the entry in the Record of Rights is only in regard to possession, and it is sufficient to enable Mohan to succeed in this action that he should establish a better title than Kuber, whatever the fact of possession might have been in the year 1906-1907. Having regard to all the circumstances of the case and the fact that the surrender in favour of the Zemindar took place so soon after, I am of opinion that the presumption attaching to the entry has been sufficiently rebutted by the other evidence to the effect that Mohan was treated by the Zemindar and by the Government as the sole successor to the Gauntiaship upon the death of his father Karuna. Moreover the presumption as I have said, is only one in favour of possession and apart from the evidence as to possession Mohan would be entitled to succeed upon the evidence that he has a better title. In all the circumstances of the case I am of opinion that the suit was rightly decreed by the learned Subordinate Judge and I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

ATKINSON, J.—I entirely agree in the conclusions arrived at by my learned brother. I desire, however, to add my own opinion as to what I believe to be the true construction of section 65A, clause (4) (b) of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act, 1881, in so far as it concerns the question arising for our decision. Section 65A was mainly designed to afford protection to the class of persons owning a proprietary interest in land known as Gauntias, and to secure for them, in the enjoyment of their property rights, security of tenure, and subject to the incidents attaching to their tenure to save them from arbitrary eviction by capricious landlords. Thus by the Central Provinces Revenue Act of 1881, section 65A, the tenure of a Gauntia was declared to be heritable; but not transferable by sale, gift, mortgage or dower. The uncertainty which prior to the passing of this Act antecedently attached to the interest of a Gauntia tenure-holder ceased, and he acquired a perpetual estate or interest in the lands forming the subject-matter of his tenure subject to the conditions against alienation specified in section 65A. Once a Gountia received the certificate contemplated and provided for by the Act, he became what is termed a "protected Gauntia;" and thereupon he became, but not till then, vested with all the rights and benefits conferred upon a Gauntia by this Act. For obvious reasons it was thought desirable by the framers of the Central Provinces Revenue Act of 1881 to provide that the tenure should vest in one person only, even though he with others might have a joint interest therein; and accordingly the Act provided for the devolution of a protected Gauntia tenure upon the death of the first and each succeeding "protected Gauntia" by enacting that "when on the death of a Thiccadar there are two or more heirs bearing the same relationship to him, the eldest of such heirs shall succeed, provided that the eldest of two or more such heirs shall be at liberty at the time of succession to resign his rights in favour of another heir bearing the same degree of relationship to the deceased Thiccadar as he himself does."

In my opinion this section is mandatory in its terms. The eldest heir of the last protected Gauntia shall succeed to the tenure, unless at the time of succession he resigns his right to inherit as a Gauntia in favour of another heir of equal degree. The right of the eldest male heir to resign or renounce his rights as a Gauntia, with a view of giving up all claim to inherit the estate which has by statutory devolution descended upon him must be exercised at the time when the succession opens, viz., on the death of the last protected Gauntia. A right of election is conferred upon the eldest male heir; and a time is definitely specified when that election must be made by him. No chance for procrastination is allowed; but there and then when the right to succeed accrues the right of election must be exercised; and when the election is so made by the person upon whom the tenure devolves by inheritance, it is irrevocable in its operation; and automatically one heir of equal degree is substituted for another. Further in my opinion the right of election must be exercised in respect of the entire estate which devolves on the eldest male heir. If two or more villages form the protected tenure of a Gauntia, even though they may have been declared protected by separate certificates at different times, the eldest male heir must exercise his choice of resignation or adoption in respect of all or none of such villages; there can be in my opinion no splitting up of the estate or tenure into different parts having distinct entities. To permit of such a severance of the estate would be destructive of what appears to me to be the governing intention of section 65A, viz., the concentration of the ownership of the entire protected Gauntia tenure in one person only. Section 65A, clause (4) (b), expressly says that the eldest male heir shall be at liberty at the time of succession to resign his rights in favour of another heir. I take the words "his rights" in that section to mean all the rights which have devolved upon such eldest male heir, and not merely some of them. Therefore, even if there was a resignation proved by Mohan in favour of Kuber of the village of Sargipali, only when the entire protected interest that devolved on Mohan was comprised of the two villages of Bandipali and Sargipali n my opinion such attempted resignation by Mohan would have been invalid and inoperative in law to extinguish the rights of Mohan in the village of Sargipali.

Karuna died in August 1900. Thereupon the rights of the plaintiff accrued in succession to the protected estate which devolved upon him. Upon the death of Karuna it is admitted that there was mutation of names in the landlord's rent register and books; and that Mohan was recorded by the landlord as the Gauntia in respect of Bandipali and Sargipali. This, in my opinion, was an unequivocal act of adoption by Mohan of his intention to accept the estate which had devolved upon him. But irrespective of this the evidence by no means satisfies me that Mohan ever at any time resigned his rights in the village of Sargipali in favour of Kuber. The onus is on Kuber and those who derive title through him to establish as an indisputable fact the factum of resignation by Mohan. In my opinion the defendant No. 1 has utterly failed to discharge this onus. I would just desire to add that though section 65A speaks of "resign" this in legal phraseology really means "release", which has an accepted legal meaning. The best proof of resignation would be the production of a deed of release, but no document in the nature of a deed of release has been produced to establish the fact of resignation by Mohan in favour of Kuber. We are asked to infer as an inference of fact from the evidence, documentary and oral, adduced by the defendant No. 1 that Mohan in or about the year 1902 resigned his rights in village Sargipali in favour of his brother Kuber. I for one unhesitatingly refuse to draw any such conclusion from the evidence; nor do I think that the facts relied upon by Mr. Justice Roe warrant the deduction that he deduces therefrom. But even if evidence had been adduced from which the inference could be fairly drawn that in or about the year 1902 the plaintiff resigned his rights in respect of the village of Sargipali in favour of defendant No. 2, it would be of no avail inasmuch as any such resignation would have occurred long subsequent to the time when the succession opened and the right to resign accrued, there having been in the meantime after the death of Karuna a deliberate adoption by Mohan showing an intention on his part to succeed to the lands in suit.

I agree, therefore, that the suit was rightly decreed and that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

IMAM, J.—I am in entire agreement with the view expressed by my learned brothers that this appeal should be dismissed with costs. I, however, wish to add that I find nothing in section 65A of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act to show that the protection afforded to the tenure of a Gauntia is to extend to a group of tenures. In the present case Karuna had two Gauntiaships vested in him, namely, one for Sargipali and the other for Bandipali, and in my opinion on his death it was open to Mohan to resign at the time of his succession in favour of his brother Kuber either both the Gauntiaships or one of them. On the evidence I hold that he did not do so. Upon the evidence on the record it is quite clear that upon the death of Karuna, Mohan succeeded to the Gauntiaship of the two villages; that his name was recorded as Gauntia in the Zemindar's books and that he continued as Gauntia all along. The position of his brother Kuber, after the death of the father, was, in my opinion, that of an agent of Mohan. There having been no valid resignation by Mohan in favour of Kuber at the time of the death of Karuna, Kuber had no right whatever to the Gauntiaship of the village of Sargipali. I am also of opinion that Kuber had no title whatever to make the surrender in favour of the Zemindar. I agree, therefore, with the decision of my learned brothers.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. S. Srinivasa Iyengar (Advocate-General) and Mr. S. Desikachariar, for the Respondents.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 29th of November 1916 and having stood over for consideration till the 8th December 1916, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs-appellants are members of the Muppan caste and sued for a declaration, injunction and damages, because defendants, members of other castes, prevented their taking a marriage procession by the street along which it is, they alleged, customary to take them. The lower Appellate Court in the decree appealed against confirmed the District Munsif's decision, dismissing the suit in toto.

An attempt was made to support this decision on the ground that the lower Appellate Court erred in finding that the procession was prevented. It is true that it did not start and that its progress was not actually obstructed. But, as the lower Appellate Court found, it did not start owing to defendants' hostile attitude and we agree that so far as plaintiffs proved, (sic) sufficient proof of actual obstruction or the use of violence being unnecessary.

The next question raised was whether the road, the use of which was disputed, is public. But the lower Appellate Court did not decide it, holding as we understand that plaintiffs could not in any case succeed in the absence of proof of special damage and dealing with the question of special damage on the sole ground that their procession could in fact have gone by another route and that the postponement of the marriage was not entailed. This, it is urged, is too restricted a view, firstly, because proof of special damage is not necessary, secondly, because the lower Appellate Court should have found that proof of it was forthcoming.

As regards the first position we have been referred to a very recent unreported decision of this Court, Subbayya Nadan v. Aiyavoo Reddi (1) (Second Appeal No. 2315 of 1914), in which Napier, J. (Ayling, J., expressing general concurrence) doubted the validity of the contention that mere obstruction to a procession was insufficient to justify grant of an injunction without proof also of loss of property or personal injury, his doubts being founded on the apparent inconsistency between certain observations in Andi Moopan v. Muthuvirama Reddy (2) and Baslingappa v. Dharmappa (3) and the decision in Kandasawmy Mudali v. Sabraya Mudali (4). But firstly it is not clear that the learned Judge was dealing with the necessity for proof of special damage and not with the different question, to which I return, whether any had in fact been established. And next the three cases mentioned are distinguishable from the case which was before the learned Judge and from that now before us, because in each of the former there was a magisterial order obtained by the defendants forbidding the procession, whilst in the latter such orders were either not relied on or not established. This distinction being available, it is unnecessary to consider the ground of decision in these cases more closely and it is sufficient that in Kandasawmy Mudali v. Sabraya Mudali (4) and Andi Moopan v. Muthuvirama Reddy (2) the necessity for proof of special damage in the absence of a magisterial order was fully recognised. Such proof must, therefore, be required in this case.

The remaining question is whether the lower Appellate Court's finding that the postponement of the marriage was not rendered necessary exhausted the matter. It no doubt was conclusive as regards one head, under which plaintiffs claimed pecuniary damages, the loss incurred in consequence of their preparation on the day fixed becoming useless. But proof of actual pecuniary loss is not essential. Vide, Abzul Miah v. Nasir Mahommed (5), Siddeswara v. Krishna (6) and the judgment of Sundara Aiyar, J., in Khaji Syyad Hussain Saheb v. Ediga Narasimhappa (7). The true principle is that laid down in a case, which has been followed frequently in this country, Winterbottom v. Derby (Earl), (8) that "he only can maintain an action for an obstruction who has sustained some damage peculiar to himself, his trade or calling." The points for consideration in the present case are accordingly whether defendants' conduct caused plaintiffs only such damages as any member of the public would have suffered through loss of time or having to go by a way other than the one he preferred; or whether plaintiffs were, as they alleged, debarred, because they were Mooppans, from taking their procession by the road customarily used for that purpose by that community and, therefore, suffered damage peculiar to themselves as members of it.

We, therefore, call on the lower Appellate Court for a finding in the light of the foregoing on the issue "whether plaintiffs suffered any special damage?"; and we also ask it to return a finding on the District

GANAPATHY MOOPPEN v. SUBBA NAYAKKAN.

Munsif's issue No. 1, "whether the street is a private street?" Findings shall be returned on the evidence on record within six weeks and seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment the District Judge of Madura submitted the following

FINDING.—The High Court has remanded this appeal to me for a finding as to (1) Whether the street is a private street, and (2) Whether plaintiffs suffered any special damage.

2. As to whether the street is a private street. The onus is clearly on the defendants to show it is not, as under the Local Boards Act all streets are presumed to be public streets, unless the contrary is shown. This particular street is shown in the survey plan, Exhibit J, as a cart-track, and that plan is more than 30 years old. Exhibit H, the Settlement Register, shows that 20 per cent. has been deducted for roads, channels, streets, etc., from all Pattas, and the Pattadars have no rights in such roads and channels merely because they happen to be shown in their Pattas. Kandasawmy Mudali v. Subraya Mudali (4) sets out the law on the point. In Exhibit B, the defendants all say that they are determined not to allow processions to pass. In a criminal case, Exhibit 1, they did not set up that it was a private road. D. W. No. 1's evidence before the Magistrate was that it was a public street. D. W. No 3, the Karnam, says that the street is partly Poramboke and partly a Patta land. The defendants have produced no Pattas to show that this street is private, and even if they did do so, Exhibit H would show that deduction had been made for the cart-track as it then was and that it was not a part of the Pattadar's private land.

My finding is that the street is a public street.

3. Issue No. 2.—The plaintiffs did not set up any special damage. They claimed that it is a public street and as such they were entitled to use it. It is not open to the public to file a suit for an injunction and declaration with reference to the obstructing of a street, unless special damage is proved. The plaintiffs have got to show that they have suffered special damage. Originally, they set up losses owing to the marriage being adjourned, also costs of the criminal cases and also loss of reputation making Rs. 536-4-0 in all and they sued for Rs. 350. In appeal, they claimed Rs. 200 only on the first two items, but in the High Court, they claimed only Rs. 10 as damages. As nothing is shown as to how this Rs. 10 is arrived at, presumably it is based on the lower Court's finding that had it had to assess damages, it would have fixed Rs. 10. Plaintiffs are certainly not entitled to damages for costs of the criminal cases and they have withdrawn their claim for loss of reputation.

Therefore, presumably they claim only on the first ground of losses owing to the marriage being adjourned in that they had to pay Rs. 25 for horses, Rs. 12 for flowers and Rs. 25 for a piper; but it is in evidence that they could have gone on horseback with the piper and with the flowers to the second temple by another route as they had already visited the first. Therefore, I do not consider that these items of expenditure can be regarded as special damages. The only damage that apparently they suffered was not being allowed to go on horseback through this particular street. I find it difficult to fix any monetary value on this obstruction.

I would, therefore, find that no special damage has been made out.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court on the issues referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—Defendants' objection to the finding that the street in question is public is not pressed. We accept the finding.

On the other point remanded we understand the District Judge to have found that plaintiffs suffered special damage in consequence of their not being allowed to ride on horseback through the street, although that damage was not assessable in money. We dissent only from the latter portion of this, for we can see no reason why compensation cannot be awarded on an estimate of the moral damage suffered. It is not, however, necessary for us to ask the District Judge to make such an award or to make one ourselves, since appellants do not press for damages and their right to them is material only as justifying their claim to the other reliefs asked for, a declaration and injunction. As the street is public and special damage has been sustained, their right to these reliefs is established. We, therefore, allow the appeal to the exent that the lower Court's decisions are set aside; that plaintiffs will have a decree for declaration that they have a right to pass through the street lying east of the Tirumangalam road on horseback on the occasion of marriages and to a corresponding injunction.

The parties will pay and receive proportionate costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Musammat AMIR BEGAM—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s 49—Unregistered sale-deed, admissibility of, to prove dower.

An unregistered sale-deed purporting to convey certain property of the value of Rs 1,000 to the plaintiff in lieu of her dower is admissible in evidence to prove two collateral purposes: (1) that the dower was fixed at Rs. 1,000 in cash and (2) that a certain person stood surety for the payment of the sum. [p. 838, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated the 11th May 1916.

Mr. Gobind Das, for the Appellants.

Mr. Abdur Rashid, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are contained in the judgments of the Courts below and need not be repeated here at any length. Musammat Amir Begam, the plaintiff, instituted a suit on 8th November 1915 against Fazal Ilahi, her husband, and Muhammad Bakhsh, her father-in-law, for Rs. 1,000, alleging that this sum had been fixed as her dower at the time of her marriage with Fazal Ilahi, but had not been paid. Muhammad Bakhsh was stated to have stood surety for this amount.

The primary Court decreed the claim, and on appeal by the defendants, the decree was maintained by the learned District Judge.

Against the said decree the defendants have preferred this second appeal through Mr. Gobind Das and I have heard Mr. A. Rashid on behalf of the respondent Musammat Amir Begam. The marriage took place on 30th December 1906 at Gujrat. The plaintiffs' case was that Rs. 1,000 was fixed as dower in cash, while the defendants alleged (1) that the dower fixed was that prescribed by Muhammadan Law, viz., Rs. 32, and (2) that in lieu thereof immoveable property to the value of Rs. 1,000 was agreed upon, but as this document was not registered the claim for dower was not maintainable.

It was also pleaded that the suit was barred by the Statute of Limitation.

The Courts below have held that the suit is within limitation and it will be as well to consider this question first. According to the plaintiff the demand was made and refused shortly before the institution. According to the defendants the time commenced to run in January 1907, when the registration of the document relating to the dower (of which more later) was finally refused. The limitation for a suit of this nature is 3 years as prescribed by Article 103 of the Indian Limitation Act—the question, however, is as to when the dower was demanded. It seems to me that so long as the plaintiff was living with her husband the likelihood of a demand being made was exceedingly remote. In the plaint it was averred that the plaintiff was turned out $1\frac{1}{2}$ years prior to suit. The plea of the defendants was that the plaintiff had not been turned out but had gone on a visit to her parental home, and had been prevented from returning.

The period of her departure, viz., $1\frac{1}{2}$ years prior to suit was not contested or questioned. In these circumstances I see no reason for discrediting the plaintiff's assertion that no demand was made (or refused) until she left (or was turned out of) her husband's home and the suit must, therefore, be held to be within time.

The allegation in the plaint was that Rs 1,000 had been fixed as the dower in cash, and this is what has been held by the Courts below. In arriving at this finding reliance has been placed on a deed of sale. This deed of sale was executed on the date of the marriage (30th December 1906), and purported to convey a shop and two houses situate in Rawalpindi to the plaintiff in lieu of the Rs. 1,000 fixed as dower.

The principal party to this sale was the father-in-law. The deed not having been registered objection was taken to its admissibility for any purpose whatsoever. The Courts below, however, held that it was admissible to prove two collateral purposes, (1) the fact that the dower was fixed at Rs. 1,000 in cash, and (2) that the father-in-law had undertaken to be surety for the payment of this sum. After a careful consideration of the document and Mr. Govind Das' arguments with regard to it, I am of opinion that the Courts below have rightly held that it was admissible for the purposes stated above. Mr. Govind Das referred me to Pool v. Secretary of State (1), Ghansham Das v. Hemraj (2) and Buta Singh v. Gurdit Singh (3), but these rulings are clearly distinguishable. The deed of sale in question was clearly written after the marriage ceremony had been performed. It follows, therefore, that it was executed after the dower had been fixed, and this is borne out by the deed itself, which recites that the dower had been fixed at Rs. 1,000 and then goes on to say that in lieu of this sum the property specified therein was sold to the plaintiff. It seems to me clear that the intention of the executants was to convey the said property as payment of the dower agreed upon and in that way to discharge the liability incurred at the time of the marriage. In other words, instead of paying the dower in cash they professed to pay it in immoveable property of equivalent value. As, however, this contract was not carried out the liability was not discharged, and it seems to me indisputable that this document can be used as evidence to show the amount of dower that had been agreed upon. Mr. Govind Das, however, contended that the dower had been fixed at one house and two shops as was entered in the marriage register. I see no reason for differing from the conclusion arrived at by the Courts below on this point, even if it were possible for me to go into this question. As to this it seems to me that the question is one of fact and is one that cannot be challenged in second appeal. No doubt under Muhammadan Law immoveable property may be fixed as dower but according to general practice a sum of money is usually fixed, and I see no reason to doubt that the general practice was followed in the present case as alleged by the plaintiff.

I have, therefore, no hesitation in holding that the Courts below are right in the view they have taken on this point and that Rs. 1,000 were fixed as dower payable in cash.

The next point for consideration is the liability of the father-in-law, and to this I have given most anxious thought. The house and shops mentioned in the sale-deed belong to the father-in-law. There seems to be no doubt that the question of dower was one of considerable importance at the time. Fazal Ilahi was obviously (and practically admittedly) not in a position to pay the sum fixed, viz., Rs. 1,000. There is, therefore, nothing strange in the allegation that his father bound himself to pay the sum. The deed of sale is a strong piece of evidence that this was the case, for otherwise it is difficult to understand why the father should have executed this sale-deed.

Further the question whether or not he stood surety for the payment is one of fact and has been found in favour of the plaintiff.

I am unable to see any reason to differ from the Courts below as to this and the appeal must, therefore, fail. I accordingly dismiss it with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 388 of 1914, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Tiruvadi, in Original Suit No. 223 of 1913.

Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. Narasimha Iyengar, for the Respondents.

The second appeal coming on for hearing on 28th March 1917, the Court (Spencer and Srinivasa Aiyangar, JJ.) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The facts are somewhat complicated, but when once they are apprehended it appears to be clear that there is no finding on the point now in dispute. The suit was for rent of certain lands for the years 1910-1911, 1911-1912, and 1912-1913. The defendant's plea was that he was dispossessed of the land by one Ramasami Mooppan who was the real owner and was not, therefore, bound to pay rent after the date of his dispossession to the plaintiff, who is the assignee of his landlord Subramania Josier. As regards the first two years there is a concurrent finding of fact by both the lower Courts that the defendant was not evicted by any body and we accept that finding. As regards the third year which began in March 1912, and ended with March 1913, it is said that evidence clearly proved eviction at least in May 1912 by Ramasami Mooppan. The first Court found it was not proved by the defendant that there was any eviction. In appeal the lower Appellate Court does not find definitely one way or the other. A certain amount of confusion has arisen owing to the history of the title to this property. The lands originally belonged to a Mahratta gentleman, who mortgaged them with possession to Chithambaram Chetty or to a predecessor of his in title. While Chithambaram was in possession as mortgagee, a suit was instituted against him for money by one Srinivasa Aiyangar who got the mortgage right attached before judgment, which he brought to sale in execution after obtaining a decree and purchased it himself. The attachment appears to have been made in 1904. The mortgagee Chithambaram Chetty leased the lands to one Alagiri, who in his turn leased to Subramania Josier, the landlord of the defendant. After the lease to Alagiri, Chithambaram appears to have sold the othi right to Kandasami Mooppan. Ramasami Mooppan had become the owner of the equity of redemption of the Mahratta gentleman and appears to have redeemed Kandaswami, the assignee of the mortgage, and appears to have claimed actual possession of the property from the lessees of Chithambaram on the ground that after redemption by him, there was no subsisting title in the mortgagee Chithambaram to sustain any lease by him. On this claim, Ramaswami Mooppan appears to have obstructed the defendant in cultivating the land and on his complaint his landlord Subramania Josier applied to a Magistrate under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code to protect the possession of his lessee, the defendant. This petition was, however, dismissed in August 1912 on the ground that the property had been delivered to Srinivasa Aiyangar who took certain proceedings in execution as purchaser against Chithambaram, the mortgagee. Ramasami Mooppan claimed the land against Srinivasa Aiyangar, the purchaser. The merits of that claim it is unnecessary to specify now. Ramasami Mooppan's claim was disallowed and he filed a suit to establish his claim. In the meantime the execution-purchaser Srinivasa Aiyangar applied to be placed in possession of the lands as purchaser of the mortgage interest of Chithambaram. That application appears to have been opposed by Subramania Josier, the landlord of the defendant, but Srinivasa Aiyangar was according to the language of the receipt placed in possession in August 1912 (Exhibit V). Whether he was actually placed in physical possession of the land, who was then in possession, whether it was the defendant or Ramasami Mooppan who is said to have obstructed the defendant and taken possession in May 1912 is not found. The Pleader for the appellant contends that the defendant was evicted by Ramasami Mooppan at any rate by the end of May 1912 and that Ramasami Mooppan was the real owner as his title was established against Srinivasa Aiyangar, the purchaser, and if Srinivasa Aiyangar did get possession in August 1912 he got it from Ramasami Mooppan and so far as he the defendant was concerned, when once he was evicted by the real owner, (that is) Ramasami Mooppan, it did not matter to him, whether the real owner was subsequently ejected or not. The respondent's Pleader contends that the defendant was not ejected at all, and if he was ejected by Ramasami Mooppan, Ramasami must be considered to be a trespasser as he had agreed with Subramania Josier to allow him to continue in possession as lessee during the whole period of his lease. Whether this is so or not is again not found. Further it is not found whether as a matter of fact Srinivasa Aiyangar dispossessed any body when he is said to have obtained possession under Exhibit V. It is said he obtained symbolical possession. We must point out that symbolical possession is given only in cases where the party in actual possession is entitled to remain in such possession as in cases of delivery under Order XXI, rule 96, of the Code of Civil Procedure and should not be confounded with cases where a party is entitled to actual possession, but obtains only what is called a paper delivery, (that is), where he gets no possession at all. It is clear from the above statements of facts that there must be a finding on the following points:—

(1) Whether the defendant was actually ousted from the lands in May 1912 by Ramasami Mooppan.

(2) If he was, whether Ramasami Mooppan had a title paramount to that of Subramania Josier, the landlord of the defendant. The effect of the alleged agreement Exhibit C must also be considered.

(3) If the defendant was not evicted by Ramasami Mooppan, was he evicted in August 1912 by Srinvasa Aiyangar by reason of the delivery evidenced by the receipt Exhibit V? And if he was so evicted, had Srinivasa Aiyangar a paramount title?

(4) Did the defendant remain in possession without being evicted by anybody during the year 1912—1913?

The finding must be on the evidence on the record, except as to issue (2) on which any adjudication between Srinivasa Aiyangar and Ramasami Mooppan may be admitted. Finding is to be returned before the 17th July 1917 and seven days are allowed for objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the Subordinate Judge of Tanjore submitted the following

FINDINGS.

The four issues remitted to this Court for finding are :—

"I. Whether the defendant was actually ousted from the lands in May 1912 by Ramaswami Mooppan?

"II. If he was, whether Ramaswami Mooppan had a title paramount to that of Subramania Josier, the landlord of the defendant?

"III. If the defendant was not evicted by Ramasami Mooppan, was he evicted in August 1912 by Srinivasa Aiyangar by reason of the delivery evidenced by the receipt Exhibit V? and if he was so evicted, had Srinivasa Aiyangar a paramount title?

"IV. Did the defendant remain in possession without being evicted by any body during the year 1912-1913?"

2. The findings were directed to be on the evidence on record, except as to issue No. 2 in which any adjudication between Srinivasa Aiyangar and Ramaswami Mooppan was allowed to be received. The defendant produced a number of documents under that provision and Exhibits X to XIII were filed as they alone related to adjudication between Srinivasa Aiyangar and Ramaswami Mooppan.

3. Chidambara Chetti leased the lands while he was in possession as usufructuary mortgagee to Alagiri Chetti in 1905 and the latter is said to have leased the same to Subramania Josier in 1907. Subramania Josier leased to the defendant's father Perumilu Pillai for 3 years under Exhibit A, dated 2nd March 1910. Although the documents relating to the leases to Alagiri and Josier are not filed, it appears that the former obtained a lease for 10 years from 1905 and that the latter obtained his lease for 8 years under a registered deed, dated 10th August 1907 (vide, Exhibits IV and C). The lease would, therefore, expire in April 1915.

4. The plaintiff derived his interest from Josier on 21st March 1911. A mistake has been made by the first Court and also my predecessor in reading this document as one of transfer of lease. It appears to be a transfer of debt in favour of the plaintiff, because the assignee merely gets the right to recover the rent due under the lease Exhibit A and nothing more.

5. The date of the sale of the equity of redemption in Original Suit No. 372 of 1906 under which Muthayya Chetti the decree-holder purchased it is not in evidence, but Ramaswami Mooppan purchased it from him on 21st April 1911. The agreement Exhibit C was made on 29th May 1911 between Subramania Josier and Ramaswami Mooppan, under which the latter agreed that Josier should enjoy his lease-hold for the remaining 4 years according to the lease in his favour and deliver it to Ramaswami Mooppan on 13th April 1915. The sale of the mortgage interest of Chidambara Chetti in favour of Kandaswami Mooppan was on 25th September 1910. Ramaswami Mooppan purchased this interest on 2nd September 1911. Upon the strength of it he filed a claim petition in Original Suit No. 234 of 1904 on the 30th of September 1911, which was dismissed on 11th October 1911 on the ground that the attachment was in 1904 and the claim was made late. There was no investigation. The purchase under the Court sale in Original Suit No. 324 of 1904 which followed upon this was on 6th December 1911. Immediately Ramaswami Mooppan filed his suit, Original Suit No. 6 of 1912, on the 18th December 1911. In April 1912 Ramaswami Mooppan and Subramania Josier were parties to some obstruction proceedings in respect to the delivery of property as per this sale (see Exhibits VI*a* and VI*b*). The obstruction was evidently overruled, because delivery was made to Srinivasa Aiyangar on 23rd August 1912 (Exhibit V).

6. On the 1st June 1912 Subramania Josier applied under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code against Ramaswami Mooppan complaining of disturbance of possession and for establishing him in possession of the property free from interference of Ramaswami Mooppan. Ramasawmi Mooppan on the other hand applied to the Court in Execution Appeal No. 1088 of 1912 in Original Suit No. 234 of 1904 that his possession may not be disturbed by Srinivasa Aiyangar, the purchaser in Original Suit No. 234 of 1904, pending disposal of the suit Original Suit No. 6 of 1912 (Exhibits II). The petition to the Criminal Court was dismissed on 31st August 1912 on the representation of the petitioner Subramania Josier that the properties had gone into the possession of a third party under a Civil Court sale. The delivery receipt Exhibit V shows that Srinivasa Aiyangar obtained delivery of possession on 23rd August 1912.

7. Ramaswami Mooppan failed to obtain a decree (in Original Suit No. 6 of 1912) in his favour in the first and second Courts, but their Lordships of the High Court set aside those judgments and remanded the suit for disposal on the other issues which were raised in the case. The contention of Ramaswami Mooppan in that suit was that the attachment (in Original Suit No. 234 of 1904) made in 1904 was invalid and had ceased to exist when Chidambara Chetti transferred his interest in the mortgage to Kandaswami Mooppan in 1910. Their Lordships held that the attachment was invalid as not having been made under section 268 of the old Civil Procedure Code, and a payment to the mortgagee or his representative by the person who held the equity of redemption was not in contravention of any attachment validly subsisting.

8. The further trial was held by the District Munsif of Tiruvadi who raised another question, that the validity of the attachment did not invalidate the subsequent sale held upon it and that the bona fides and validity of the transfer to Kandaswami Mooppan should be decided before the Court sale in favour of Srinivasa Aiyangar could be held null and void as against Ramaswami Mooppan, the assignee from Kandaswami Mooppan. He held that the transfer was not void or in fraud of creditors and upheld the plaintiff's contention in the revised judgment in Original Suit No. 6 of 1912 (Exhibit XII). That decision was confirmed in appeal by the Sub-Court of Kumbakonam (Exhibit XIII). The position, therefore, is that Ramaswami Mooppan became the owner of the property free of all incumbrances on the 2nd September 1911.

9. The case of the defendant in the present suit is that Ramaswami Mooppan disturbed his possession in 1911. The evidence of D.W. No. 1, Ramaswami Mooppan, shows that the sub-lessees of defendant obstructed him when he went to take possession in Purattasi of 1911, that Sundarappayyar (co-owner with or agent of Subramania Josier) also claimed title and obstructed him and that they carried away the crops. But in the Masi following he took possession of the land and defendant or his father did not enjoy it afterwards. He raised Cumbu in Vaikasi of 1912 and harvested the crops. His surety Govinda Mooppan raised it and it was harvested in the presence of the Police Inspector. Evidently this refers to the possession proceedings which took place about that time. D. Ws. Nos. 2 and 3 state that from Chitrai 1912 Ramaswami Mooppan was in possession and that though Subramania Josier claimed from the cultivator Govinda Mooppan, he did not get any share of the crops. P. Ws. Nos. 2 and 3 also admit that from Chitra 1913 Ramaswami Mooppan was in possession.

10. From the several judicial proceedings referred to above it is clear that Ramaswami Mooppan would have no locus standi if he had not possession. He gave security and had delivery to Srinivasa Aiyangar stayed. It is unlikely that he would not have taken possession in order to substantiate the case which he was then fighting against Srinivasa Aiyangar. He had no doubt undertaken under Exhibit C in May 1911 that he would allow Subramania Josier to continue in possession till the expiry of the term of the lease in his favour and it was argued on plaintiff's behalf that it is unlikely that he would have broken his agreement so soon after. It was pointed out that defendant's case was that Ramaswami Mooppan trespassed upon the land in Purattasi 1911 and dispossessed defendant and that there is a change of case now about dispossession in Chitrai 1912 The explanation about the change of case is found in the evidence of Ramaswami Mooppan as D. W. No. 1. As to his breaking the agreement so shortly after it was made, a reference to the dates of the proceedings recited above clearly shows the motive and renders his action in taking the matter into his own hands, instead of leaving Subramania Josier to fight out Srinivasa Aiyangar and perhaps to jeopardise his interests, quite intelligible. When he made the agreement Exhibit C Srinivasa Aiyangar was not in the field. So long as it was a matter between himself and the tenant Subramania Josier, Ramaswami Mooppan might have been quite willing to continue the lease, because in putting an end to the lease there may be questions of re-payment of premium and so forth and Ramaswami Mooppan actually appears to have paid Rs. 400 for certain improvements effected by Subramania Josier. But when Srinivasa Aiyangar came forward with his claim under an old attachment of 1904, which if substantiated would render invalid the transfer of mortgage by Chidambara Chetti in favour of Kandasami Mooppan, he could not be expected to sit idle and let Subramania Josier continue in possession throwing suspicion on the sale to himself by leaving room for the argument that Ramaswami Mooppan was not even in possession of the land, as he ought to be if he was a real purchaser.

11. On the 1st issue, therefore, I find, that Ramaswami Mooppan actually dispossessed the defendant in May 1912.

12. On the 2nd issue, I find that Ramaswami Mooppan had a title paramount to that of the landlord of the defendant, because in him had become vested in September 1911 both the usufructuary mortgage and its equity of redemption.

13. Turning now to the effect of the agreement Exhibit C upon this title, I have to point out that it is an agreement entered into between Subramania Josier and Ramaswami Mooppan. Plaintiff became a transferee in March 1911, while this agreement was made in May 1911 to enure beyond the period of defendant's interest. The defendant or his father was not a party to this agreement. There was, therefore, no privity of contract between the two and I cannot see how defendant can claim the benefit of that agreement. It rested on defendant to show that he was ousted by a person having a paramount title and Exhibit C is put forward in answer by the plaintiff to depreciate it. If he is not bound by the agreement I cannot see how he could claim benefit under it.

14. It was suggested by the defendant's Vakil in argument that when the paramount title was proved, it mattered little whether the holder of such title actually dispossessed the defendant or not, because an incumbrance created by the usufructuary mortgagee had come to an end when the mortgage was redeemed. Leases created by him would not stand on any higher footing. It may be that a tenant will have the right to emblements or there may be an apportionment of the rent, but apart from such rights and liabilities specially created by the law for the current agricultural year, the tenant holding over was at the best but a trespasser who would be liable to pay the mesne profits to the person who was entitled in ownership Subramania Josier's title to recover rent terminated with the redemption and, therefore, the assignee of Josier could be in no better position. It is unnecessary to say anything about this argument, because I have found that Ramaswami Mooppan did as a matter of fact take possession of the land from the tenant. I refer to this argument only because the Vakil further argued that Exhibit C was inoperative or ineffective, because it was entered into by Ramaswami Mooppan at a time when he was not the owner of the mortgage rights. He was only the owner of the equity of redemption and had, therefore, no title to immediate possession. Any agreement entered into by him in respect of future possession was, therefore, invalid. I am unable to accept this argument because the owner of the equity of redemption, as he is called, is in reality the owner of the land. The mortgage is only a subsidiary interest and subordinate to ownership. The owner could always enter into agreements with tenants in possession holding under precarious titles so as to confirm them in their possession at his pleasure. Moreover, even if Ramaswami Mooppan was not full owner capable of giving effect to the agreement into which he entered, it is clear that when the estate came into possession he would be bound by such agreement. The argument, moreover, contains a fallacy that the agreement was not to have future effect. Ramaswami Mooppan could not have entered into any agreement about present possession but only about the future and what he did was, therefore, perfectly valid. I, therefore, find on the 2nd issue that Ramaswami Mooppan had a paramount title.

15. The Vakil for defendant informed me that he did not press issues Nos. 3 and 4, that it was not his case that he was dispossessed by Srinivasa Aiyangar and that no findings need, therefore, be recorded upon them.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing after the return of the findings of the lower Appellate Court upon the issues referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—On the findings now returned the decrees of the lower Courts must be modified. It is argued, however, that the finding that Ramaswami Mooppan had a title paramount is not correct, because it is alleged that he having obtained the equity of redemption took an assignment of the usufructuary mortgage right from the mortgagee and as such assignee he was bound by the lease in respondent's assignor's favour which had been created by the mortgagee prior to the assignment of the mortgage itself. This argument depends entirely on the position that Ramaswami Mooppan was an assignee; but this is not clear. The appellant states that he, the Mooppan, redeemed the mortgage and thus became the full owner, in which case, of course, the lease created by the mortgagee will not bind the Mooppan. Respondent has raised this question for the first time now; as the facts are not clear in his favour, we cannot allow him to take it. If he had intended to rely on the point he should have laid a proper foundation for it by proving the necessary facts at the proper time.

Accepting the findings, the decree of the lower Court must be modified by substituting Rs. 1,152-4-0 and interest on it for Rs. 2,041-8 0 and interest on it. Parties will pay and receive proportionate costs throughout.

Decree modified.

Common land– Shamilat abadi—Co-sharers, rights of—Co-sharer building on shamilat—Injunction, suit for—Damage.

The mere circumstance of a building being erected on common land without the consent of the co-sharers and even despite their protest, is not sufficient in itself to entitle the aggrieved co-sharers to claim the demolition of the building so erected, unless it can be shown that the erection of the building has caused such material and substantial injury as cannot be remedied on a partition of the joint land. [p. 845, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 18th January 1917.

Mr. Brij Lal, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Sant Ram and Tek Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a decree of the District Judge of Gurdaspur reversing a decree passed by the Munsif, 1st Class, in that District It appears that the land in suit is Abadi Shamilat of Patti Bakhta, and the proprietors of this Patti are the two appellants Majju and Ishar Singh and defendants-respondents Nos. 1—14. The total area of this Abadi Shamilat is 18 Kanals 19 Marlas, of which the two appellants claim to be entitled to a half. On the 12th May 1909 defendants respondents Nos. 1—14, the other co sharers in this Patti, executed a mortgage deed of 4 Kanals 3 Marlas of this common land. The appellants sought to get this mortgage set aside, but failed. They now have instituted the suit out of which this appeal has arisen, alleging that the respondents- mortgagees have erected a wall round the land mortgaged to them which they have no right to do and praying that a mandatory injunction be issued directing the removal of the said wall. The first Court decreed the plaintiffs' claim, but, as has been stated above, on appeal the learned District Judge reversed that decree and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

On behalf of the appellants I have heard Mr. Brij Lal and Mr. Tek Chand has addressed me on behalf of the respondents. Mr. Brij Lal referred me to paragraphs 225 and 235 of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law and contended that inasmuch as the appellants were co-sharers, the mortgagees were not entitled to alter the condition of the joint property without their consent, and further that the appellants were entitled to restrain the mortgagees from appropriating the vacant site to their own exclusive use. Mr. Tek Chand, while admitting the force of paragraphs 225 and 235 above referred to, referred me to Explanations 2 and 3 to paragraph 225, more particularly laying stress on Explanation 3. Now, the mere circumstance of a building being erected on common land without the consent of the co-sharers and despite their protest even, has been held not sufficient in itself to entitle the aggrieved co-sharers to claim the demolition of the building so erected, unless it could be shown that the erection of that building had actually caused such material and substantial injury as could not be remedied on a partition of the joint land. This proposition is amply supported by authority, and my attention was drawn to Sodhi Jowala Singh v. Sodhi Nagar Singh

(1), Ghulam Muhammad Khan v. Buta (2) and Hidayat Ali Khan v. Basit Ali Khan (3). The last of these rulings appears to me to be directly in point. In that case one of the proprietors in the village had erected a Pakka building on a portion of the abadi deh; the moment the building was commenced objection had been taken to it and it was completed in spite of protest, and the objecting co-sharers had moved the Revenue Authorities for assistance. It was thus evident that there had been no acquiescence on the part of the objecting co-sharers who were 16 in number. They instituted a suit asking, as in the present case, to have the building demolished but they failed to prove any substantial damage from the building, and it was held that no substantial mischief having been satisfactorily established from the completed building the lower Court had exercised a wise discretion in refusing to order its demolition. It seems to me that the present case is very similar to the case of 1892. Here this piece of land was taken on mortgage by the mortgagees for a sum of Rs. 1,200, clearly with a view to erecting a walled enclosure, which they have now erected on it, in which to keep their cattle. The appellants had a perfectly simple and obvious remedy at their disposal, viz., they could move the Revenue Authorities to partition the common land. Instead of doing this they attempted to have the mortgage set aside as stated above. Having failed in this up to this Court, they have now attempted to gain their object in this roundabout manner. They have entirely failed to show that any appreciable injury has been occasioned to them by the erection of this walled enclosure, and certainly no injury has been shown which could not be remedied on a partition of the joint land.

In these circumstances I am of opinion that the learned District Judge has exercised a wise discretion in refusing to order the demolition of this walled enclosure. I, therefore, reject this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

C. P. Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), s. 2 (3)—Landlord and tenant—Tenancy of undefined land, whether permissible.

There can be no tenancy within the meaning of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act of a share of land, if that share is not defined by metes and bounds. [p. 847, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge Chhindwara, dated the 30th June 1915, in Appeal No. 57 of 1915.

Messrs. M. Gupta and S. Ramdass, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. G. Misra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff Sumera, appellant, brought the suit out of which this appeal arises in the Court of a Subordinate Judge who was a Revenue Officer, to recover possession of land from which he had been ejected, alleging that he was the ordinary tenant of the land in suit and that he had illegally been dispossessed by the defendants who were his landlords. The first Court held that the perpetual lease on which the plaintiff based his tenancy was not for the benefit of the first defendant, Pemchand, who was a minor at the time of the execution of the lease by his mother Sunderia, the 2nd defendant, and dismissed the suit. The learned District Judge dismissed the plaintiff's appeal on the sole ground that the plaintiff's suit as framed does not lie since, whatever rights the plaintiff may have as against the defendants, he is not the ordinary tenant of the land in suit. The only question raised in appeal to this Court is whether the District Judge was right in holding that the plaintiff is not a tenant. The plaintiff bases his claim to tenancy on a deed, dated the 6th April 1908, executed by the 2nd defendant on behalf of herself and of her minor son, the 1st defendant, the consideration mentioned in the deed being Rs. 1,500. The deed purports to be a perpetual lease. It states that the lessors have 7 sir fields with an area of 23·29 acres and 3 Khudkaskt fields with an area of 13·99 acres. The area of each field is also given. But the whole of the fields are not leased out; of the total area of 37·28 acres, 24·42 are given on lease, i.e., 15·55 acres of the 23·29 acres of sir and 8·87 acres of the 13·99 acres of Khudkasht. The area leased in each individual field is also given, amounting, as the District Judge observes, to about two-thirds of each field. The deed recites: "We have for the above Nazrana of Rs. 1,500 leased 24 42 acres of the undermentioned fields in perpetuity to Sumera on an annual rental of Rs. 9 and have put him in joint possession with us. The tenant has the right either to allow the 24·42 acres of sir and Khudkasht to remain in joint possession with us, or to get the same partitioned." It is not alleged that a partition was effected, and the dispossession complained of is dispossession from joint possession.

The learned District Judge has dealt with the subject as follows: —

"The question regarding tenancy is the real crux of the case. The plaintiff bases his claim to tenancy rights upon the lease of the 2nd April 1908. No definite piece of land was leased out, but only a certain undefined area out of a larger area. The terms of the lease gave the lessees two alternatives. Either he could apply for partition, in which case the area leased would be delineated by metes and bounds, and he would become an ordinary tenant of the land so delineated, or he could remain in joint possession of the whole with the lessor. As already stated there is no evidence that such a partition was effected. We must, therefore, assume that, if effect was given to the lease at all, Sumera remained in joint possession with the defendants of the entire home-farm. No single square yard of land did Sumera hold from the defendants, but in respect of each and every square yard of the home-farm he was in cultivating partnership with them. Sumera may have been in physical possession of the entire home-farm, but if so he was in possession partly as manager of Pemchand and Sunderia and partly on his own behalf as partner. Be this as it may, it is clear that he was never in possession of the area mentioned in the plaint as a separate entity. It follows that there was a cultivating partnership of the sort contemplated in Kisan Sukal v. Jaiwant Rao Misar (1) and Khoshal Chowdhry v. Nanhu (2) and that the plaintiff was not thereby constituted a tenant. There is a further question whether Pemchand as a 5 annas 4 pies co-sharer was competent to create a tenancy, into which it is not necessary to go. From what has been written above it is clear that no tenancy right was created in the plaintiff's favour. Whatever other rights he might have against the defendants, it follows that he could not maintain a suit in the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge in the capacity of a tenant who had been ejected by the landlord.....The question whether the appellant has any, and if so, what remedy against the defendants is one with which I have now no concern. It suffices for the determination of this appeal to decide that the appellant had not the remedy of suing as a tenant to recover possession of a holding from which he had been dispossessed by the landlord."

It is to be noted that no notification under section 62 (2) of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act has been made for the Chhindwara District, and the appellant does not contend that he is a tenant because he cultivated in partnership with the defendant. Nor is it argued for the respondents that the Court of first instance had no jurisdiction to entertain a suit of any character since, under the proviso to section 97 of the Tenancy Act, while only a Revenue Officer can entertain a suit between landlord and tenant as such, the jurisdiction of a Civil Court presided over by a Revenue Officer is not expressly restricted to suits between landlords and tenants. The suit has been dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff claims as a tenant, and is not a tenant, and the sole question before me is whether the District Judge is right in holding that the plaintiff is not a tenant. It is argued for the appellant that he was made a tenant of 42·42 acres by the deed of lease, and that, therefore, he is an ordinary tenant of that area.

The problem may be simplified without any essential alteration by considering only one of the fields. Khudkasht Field No. 91 measures 20 acres, of which only an area of 14 acres was leased, or roughly speaking three-quarters. Does a lease of an unspecified ¾ share of a field constitute the lessee an ordinary tenant of that share within the scope of the Tenancy Act? To answer this question we must look to the definitions in the Act. With reference to the definition of tenant we have to see whether the plaintiff is a person, who, under the deed, holds "land" from the defendants. To be a tenant a person must be the holder of land; that is to say, the land of which he claims to be the tenant must be a "holding." A "holding" means a parcel of land held by a tenant from a landlord under a lease. I do not see how a share, not defined by metes and bounds, can be described as a "parcel" of land. A "parcel" of land must be a definite piece of land. To parcel means to divide into portions and what is not divided off cannot be a parcel. For these reasons I am of opinion that there can be no tenancy, within the meaning of the Tenancy Act, of a share of land if that share is not divided off by metes and bounds, and that the learned District Judge has taken a correct view of the law. As the plaintiff claims to be a tenant within the meaning of the Tenancy Act, and as he is not such a tenant, his suit has rightly been dismissed.

(2) 6 C. P. L. R. 117.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), s. 7, order under—Suit to set aside order, maintainability of—Appeal.

No suit lies to set aside an order passed under section 7 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. The proper remedy for the party aggrieved is to appeal against the order.

Appeal from the following judgment of Mr. Justice Wallis, in Civil Suit No. 206 of 1911 :—

"The order was made by the Insolvency Court exercising jurisdiction under section 7, which corresponds to section 102 of the Bankruptcy Act. No case has been cited in which it was ever attempted to set aside an order under the English section by a suit. No right to set aside the order by suit is given as in the case of claims under the Civil Procedure Code. The proper remedy, in my opinion, is by way of appeal and this is the remedy resorted to in the English cases. I hold that the plaint discloses no cause of action and dismiss it with costs."

Messrs. M. D. Devadoss and M. K. Ramasami Ayyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants made an application in the insolvency of A. S. Mahomad Oosman Sahib and Co. and asked for a declaration that certain goods, which had been seized by the Official Assignee after adjudication, were their property and not the property of the insolvents. This application was dismissed on the merits. The appellant then brought a suit against the Official Assignee for the declaration which he had asked for in his application in the insolvency. No authority has been cited in support of the contention that such a suit will lie. In our opinion it will not.

We see no reason for interfering with Wallis, J.'s order refusing leave to amend the plaint.

Where a fixed deposit receipt issued by a Bank which has since gone into liquidation is in the name of several persons and is not payable to "either or survivor", the liquidator is not bound to pay the dividend on the receipt to any one or more of the joint holders of the receipt without obtaining a discharge from all the holders.

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the Additional Judge, Lahore, dated the 27th April 1917.

Mr. Madan Gopal, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. K. Mukerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order of the Additional Judge, Lahore, refusing to pass an order for payment of dividends to the applicants, the present appellants, on monies due by the Doaba Bank, Limited, in liquidation.

The facts of the case are as follows:—

The Doaba Bank, Limited, in liquidation, was liable to pay Messrs. Gokal Chand, Bishen Das, Daya Ram, Jaikishen Das and Sunder Singh monies on a fixed deposit receipt in their favour. This fixed deposit receipt is in the name of all the five persons named, and is not payable to "either or survivor." Of these five persons Messrs. Bishen Das and Jaikishen Das have died and Sunder Singh has been declared an insolvent. The liquidator of the Bank objected to pay a second dividend that has fallen due, and which amounts to a sum of Rs. 23,000, on the ground that the deposit is in the joint names of the five persons and that a payment to Messrs. Gokal Chand and Daya Ram would not be a valid discharge, the representatives of the deceased persons having failed to produce any succession certificate or Probate of Wills said to be executed by the deceased gentlemen. Further, in the case of the insolvent the Official Receiver has not as yet joined in the application for payment of the dividend. Finally, it was objected that against some of these five persons the liquidator had a counter-claim on account of monies due by them as partners of a concern known as the Phagwara Mills. The liquidator claims an equitable set-off in connection with this claim. Neither Mr. Madan Gopal for the appellant nor the liquidator Mr. S. K. Mukerji has been able to give me sufficient material as regards the equitable set-off claimed to enable me to express any opinion whether it can be allowed or not. Mr. Madan Gopal, however, referred me to Order XXI, rule 15, Civil Procedure Code, by way of analogy and argued that his clients could insist on being paid these dividends on their furnishing the liquidator with an indemnity bond indemnifying him against all claims that might be made by any of the representatives of the deceased gentlemen or the Official Receiver. No authority has been cited in support of this contention and I am unable to accede to it. In Mathra Das v. Nizam Din (1) it was held by a Full Bench of this Court that payment of the mortgage-money to one of several co-mortgagors without the consent of the other co-mortgagors is not a complete discharge of the mortgage-debt binding on all the mortgagees, and it seems to me that the liquidator is not bound to pay this dividend to any one or more of the joint holders of these fixed deposit receipts without obtaining a discharge from all of the said holders of the fixed deposit receipts. Apparently the heirs or legal representatives of the deceased gentlemen object to take out Probate of the Wills executed, admittedly, by Messrs. Bishen Das and Jaikishen Das. In these circumstances I am unable to say that the order of the learned Additional Judge is illegal or incorrect, and I accordingly reject this appeal, leaving it to the parties to come to such an arrangement as may be possible and legal subject to the sanction of the District Judge in charge of the liquidation proceedings. Parties will pay their own costs in this Court.

Appeal rejected.

Execution—Decree, assignment of, pending appeal—Assignee, right of, to execute decree in appeal—Hindu Law—Joint trading family—Power-of-attorney granted by two members, whether terminates on death of one—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s 253 (10).

When a decree is assigned, what is transferred is not the decree itself but the interest of the decree-holder in the decree as may be finally determined. [p. 849, col. 2.]

An assignment of a decree, therefore, during the pendency of an appeal against it carries with it the right to execute the decree passed in appeal. [p. 849, col. 2.]

A power-of-attorney granted to a person by two or more members of a Hindu trading family is not terminated by the death of one of them where the interest of the deceased member passes to the surviving member. The analogy of section 253 (10) of the Contract Act does not apply to such cases. [p. 849, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Court of the District Judge, Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 375 of 1915, preferred against that of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Kumbakonam, in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 1125 of 1913, in Original Suit No. 40 of 1911.

Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The first question to be decided in this appeal is whether the assignment pendente lite of the decree of an original Court carried with it the right to execute whatever decree may be passed in appeal. We hold that it did in this case, under the present Code of Civil Procedure at any rate.

The change of language in Order XXI, rule 16 compared with section 232 in the old Code is significant. It evidently arose out of the decision in Muthunarayana Reddi v. Balakrishna Reddi (1).

It shows that what is really transferred when a decree is assigned is not the decree itself but the interest of the decree-holder in the decree. The word 'interest' must mean interest as finally determined' Order XXII, rule 10 (1), contemplates such an assignment of interest being made during the pendency of a suit (suit including appeal, vide sub-clause 2 and rule 11) and the continuance of the suit or appeal by the assignee. The mention in Exhibit A, the deed of assignment, of the fact that the decree was under appeal clearly indicates the intention of the parties that all rights under the decree should pass. The assignees (respondents Nos. 2 to 23 in this Court) in this case, having in fact been brought on record as parties to the appeal, must be deemed to have succeeded to all the rights and liabilities of their assignors [see Chunni Lal v. Abdul Ali Khan (2)]. In this view it is unnecessary to invoke the doctrine of lis pendens which applies under section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act to immoveable property, a class of property into which a simple money-decree cannot be treated as falling.

The next question is whether a power-of attorney given by two members of a Hindu trading family must be deemed to be terminated by the death of one of the members.

Section 253 (10) of the Indian Contract Act declares that a partnership is dissolved by the death of the partner. There is no principle of Hindu law that a joint family is extinguished by the death of one member, but if one member dies without effecting a partition, his undivided share passes by survivorship to the surviving members of the family. In the present case the uncle Venkatachallam Chetty died without other heirs than his nephew Chidambaram Chetty, with whom he was joint till the day of his death. The whole of his interest, therefore, devolved on the survivor whose authority to the agent contained in the power-of-attorney remained unaffected by the death of one of the principals [see Re Sital Prosad v. Raja Brijnarain Roy (3)]. It is not suggested that the surviving principal (first respondent) has revoked or attempted to revoke his authority under Exhibit B. The objection is a technical one coming only from the judgment debtors. The 1st respondent, after being made a party to these proceedings, has taken no part in supporting this objection. On both points the District Judge's decision was right. We must, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Provincial Insolvency Act III of 1907, ss. 6 (3), 15, 47—Petition of insolvency, dismissal of, on ground that debtor is able to pay debts—Revision.

Where a debtor, who fulfils either of the conditions laid down in section 6 3 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, presents a petition to be adjudged an insolvent, the Court is not entitled to dismiss the petition on the ground that the petitioner is well able to pay his debts and that the application is made really to defraud creditors. [p. 851, col. 1.]

Revision from the order of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 13th January 1917.

Mr. Bhagwan Das, for the Petitioner.

Messrs Tek Chand, M. N. Mukerji and Mohsin Shah, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This petition for revision has arisen out of an application filed by Bhai Mehr Singh to be adjudicated an insolvent. The insolvent alleged his liabilities as amounting to Rs. 3,450 and available assets totalling a sum of Rs. 1,580. His application was dismissed on the 10th June 1916 by the Insolvency Judge, on the ground that he was well able to pay his debts and that the application was made really to defraud creditors. He preferred an appeal against this order to the District Judge, Lahore, who on the 13th January 1917 upheld the decision of the primary Court, holding that the application was made falsely and that the Court had power to refuse adjudication. Against this decision Bhai Mehr Singh has preferred this petition of revision through Mr. Bhagwan Das and I have heard Messrs. Tek Chand, Mohsin Shah and Mukerji on behalf of the principal creditors.

Mr. Bhagwan Das has referred me to Rattan Malik v. Tirath Ram (1) and Nga Naing v. Mi Bu (2) and he has also pointed out a fact that has a very material bearing on the question which has been apparently entirely overlooked by both the Courts below, namely, that the petitioner had actually been arrested in execution of a decree passed against him in favour of the D. A. V. College and at the instance of Mr. Tek Chand's client. Counsel for the creditors referred me to Girwardhari v. Jai Narain (3), Samir-ud-Din v. Kadar Moyee Dassi (4), Dial Shah v. Miran Bukhsh (5), Malchand v. Gopal Chandra Ghoshal (6) and Nathu Mal v. District Judge, Benares (7), and it has been urged that Rattan Malik v. Tirath Ram (1) is distinguishable and that even if it is not, the law laid down in it is not sound. With regard to this I may say at once that Rattan Malik v. Tirath Ram (1) has been followed by other judgments of this Court and that in my opinion the law laid down in it is perfectly sound. It has been urged that section 47, Insolvency Act, read with section 151, Civil Procedure Code, gives the Courts power to reject a petition in insolvency made by a debtor when that petition is found to be entirely false or to have been made for improper objects. Doubtless, there are authorities which mention the possibility of the Courts having this power, but it seems to me that it is unnecessary to consider this question in the present case inasmuch as it seems to me that on the facts the petitioner is entitled to present an application. Under section 4 (f) a debtor commits an act of insolvency if he petitions to be adjudged an insolvent under the provisions of this Act. In section 6 (3) of the Insolvency Act it is provided that a debtor shall not be entitled to present an insolvency petition unless—

(a) his debts amount to five hundred rupees; or (b) he has been arrested or imprisoned in execution of the decree of any Court for the payment of money.

From the petition it is clear that the petitioner was entitled to present an insolvency petition on both the grounds (a) and (b), for he certainly owes more than Rs. 500 and he has been arrested in execution of a decree for the payment of money. In these circumstances the Courts below acted with material irregularity in the exercise of their jurisdiction in dismissing the petitioner's insolvency petition and I accordingly accept this revision and setting aside the orders of the District and Insolvency Judges return the case to the Insolvency Judge for disposal in accordance with law. In the circumstances I leave the parties to pay their own costs in this Court.

Revision accepted.

Mr. Coyaji (with him Mr. G. S. Mulgaokar), for the Appellants.

Mr. Jayakar, (with him Messrs. K. H. Kelkar and R. A. Jahgirdar), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The first point urged in support of these appeals relates to the share of the plaintiffs in the cash allowance in dispute The plaintiffs contend that they are entitled to three-fourths of the whole allowance and the defendants contend that the plaintiffs are entitled only to one-half. This point entirely depends upon the question whether the plaintiffs' father Gururao was adopted by Bhimrao in the dvyamushyayana form or in the ordinary (i.e., kevala) form. The trial Court found that he was adopted in the simple form and not in the dvyamushyayana form. The Appellate Court, however, came to the conclusion that he must be presumed to be the dvyamushyayana son of Bhimrao and Kattapa. The learned District Judge, however, has pointed out that there is no evidence of any stipulation that Gururao was to be treated as the son of both fathers made at the time of the adoption; but he relied upon a certain observation in Sarkar's Hindu Law and the case of Krishna v. Paramshri (1), cited by the learned author, in support of his observation. This observation and the case referred to by the lower Appellate Court were considered in the case of Laxmipatirao Shrinivas v. Venkatesh Tirmal (2), and for the reasons given there we are of opinion that in the absence of any express agreement to the effect that the adoption was to be in the dvyamushyayana form it must be presumed to be an ordinary adoption. It is clearly stated by the lower Court that there is no evidence of any such stipulation. It is urged in support of the view taken by the lower Appellate Court that the property has been enjoyed in a manner which would show that Gururao was treated as a dvyamushyayana son. There is no evidence, however, to that effect; and it is not denied that the allowance in question has never been divided before on the footing of Gururao being a dvyamushyayana son. The lower Appellate Court has proceeded on a certain admission supposed to have been made by the defendant No. 1 (Exhibit 105). But the statement of the defendant is clear that the property has been enjoyed half and half. In any case it is sufficient that there is no evidence whatever of the adoption of Gururao having been in the dvyamushyayana form. The conclusion of the lower Appellate Court on this point cannot be accepted.

(1) 25 B. 537; 3 Bom. L. R. 73.

The result is that the plaintiffs are entitled only to a half share in the cash allowance.

The second point relates to the arrears of the allowance. The plaintiffs claim arrears for six years and the defendants contend that the arrears for three years only should be allowed. Both the lower Courts have allowed arrears for six years. It is clear that the plaintiffs were jointly entitled to sue and that plaintiff No. 1 was in a position to give a discharge on behalf of himself as well as his minor brother, plaintiff No. 2, within the meaning of section 7 of the Indian Limitation Act. The minority of plaintiff No. 2, therefore, cannot help the plaintiffs. Mr. Kelkar has not been able to cite any authority in support of the view that an elder brother, who is in the position of a manager of a joint Hindu family, cannot give a valid discharge without the concurrence of his minor brother, who is joint with him in interest. The case of Ganpat v. Sheshgiri (3) referred to by the lower Courts is a case of joint decree-holders, which stands on a somewhat different footing. It follows that the plaintiffs are entitled to arrears for three years only.

The result, therefore, is that the decree of the lower Appellate Court is reversed and that of the trial Court restored, subject to the modification that the defendants are to pay Rs. 243 instead of Rs. 486 as arrears of cash allowance.

The parties to bear their own costs throughout.

A suit was brought for specific performance of a contract to sell certain property against the vendor and on his death pending the suit, his widow, daughter-in-law and mother were impleaded as legal representatives. The daughter-in-law did not appear or contest the suit, which was decreed by ordering the widow as legal representative to execute a conveyance. The other defendants being exonerated, the suit was dismissed as against them. In a subsequent suit for mesne profits of the property which remained in the possession of the daughter-in-law after the date of the first suit, she contended that she was in possession as legatee under a Will of the vendor and that as the first suit was dismissed as against her she was not liable:

Held, (1) that having been a party to the first suit she should have raised her contentions in that suit; [p. 853, col. 1.]

Messrs. T. V. Venkatrama Iyer and R. Rajagopala Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. Ramesam, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, who is the appellant in the second appeal, had brought a suit against the husband of the first defendant for specific performance of an agreement to sell the property in dispute. The husband of the first defendant died pending the suit, and the 1st, 2nd and 3rd defendants were brought on record by the plaintiff as the deceased's legal representatives, the 1st defendant being the widow, the 2nd defendant the daughter-in-law, and the 3rd defendant the mother of the deceased. The plaintiff, in making the application, stated that he was informed that there had been a Will executed by the deceased owner of the property in favour of the 2nd and 3rd defendants. The 2nd defendant, however, did not appear and the 1st and 3rd defendants alleged in their written statement that they were not liable to any decree inasmuch as the property had been bequeathed solely to the 2nd defendant. The District Munsif who tried the suit, however, held, that it was not proved that the 2nd defendant derived the property under the Will of the deceased, and, as we gather, no Will was in fact put into evidence. There was a decree given to the plaintiff for specific performance as against the 1st defendant as representative of the deceased and the 2nd and 3rd defendants were exonerated, the suit against them being dismissed with costs. The present suit is brought against all these persons for mesne profits.

Against the 2nd defendant the suit has been dismissed on the ground that the decree obtained by the plaintiff in a suit for specific performance gave no relief against the 2nd defendant who in fact was exonerated, and the Subordinate Judge says that, as the plaintiff adduced no evidence independently of the decree of his right to the property, he is not entitled to mesne profits. It ought to be mentioned that the mesne profits claimed are subsequent to the suit for specific performance, and the 2nd defendant, it is admitted, has been in possession of the property. The argument on behalf of the 2nd defendant is that she was the proper legal representative of the deceased as she was the sole legatee under the Will, and as the suit for specific performance was dismissed against her, the decree which the plaintiff obtained for specific performance did not bind her. We cannot hold this contention to be sound. She was brought on record and it was for her to claim that she represented the estate of the deceased, but she failed to do so and a decree was passed against the widow of the deceased as representing his estate in that suit. The decree for specific performance was with respect to this very property in a suit which had been instituted against the owner of the property, and we are of opinion that the decree will bind all persons claiming through the owner. The principle of law laid down in Kadir Mohideen Marakkayar v. Muthulrishna Ayyar (1) applies to the facts of this case, and we do not think that the decision in Khiarajmal v. Daim (2) of the Privy Council has any application. In the last case the person who successfully contended that he was not bound by the decree had not in fact been properly brought on the record in the suit. We hold, therefore, that the second appeal must succeed, and there will be a decree as against the 2nd defendant also for the amount claimed in the plaint with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Custom — Succession — Self-acquired property—Daughters versus collaterals—Gariwal Jats of Ludhiana District.

Among Gariwal Jats of the Ludhiana District there is a special custom, contrary to general custom, whereby daughters are excluded from succession to self-acquired property by collaterals. [p. 854, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 30th June 1913, dismissing the suit but directing the parties to bear their own costs.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. C. Mehra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment disposes of the two connected appeals Nos. 3455 and 3471 of 1916. The suit out of which the appeals arise was brought by the plaintiffs Achal Singh and others for the land of Fateh Singh, whose collaterals they claimed to be. Besides them there were two other sets of claimants, (1) Musammat Mohan Kaur, defendant No. 1, daughter of Fateh Singh, and (2) defendants Nos. 2 to 31, Hazara Singh and others, who alleged that the land in suit was gifted to Fateh Singh's grandmother Musammat Chandan by her brother Bhanga Singh. They say that they are collaterals of Bhanga Singh and as the male line of the donee, Musammat Chandan, is now extinct they are entitled to succeed as reversionary heirs of the donor. The case was tried by Lala Shibbu Mal, District Judge of Ludhiana, who on the 30th of June 1913 dismissed the plaintiffs' suit holding that they had no right to succeed to non-ancestral property in the presence of Fateh Singh's daughter, but that they had a superior right to defendants Nos. 2 to 31 who, in his opinion, were not proved to be the collaterals of Bhanga Singh. From this order both plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 2 to 31 filed appeals which were decided by Mr. Craik, District Judge of Ludhiana, on the 17th March 1915. This Court by its order of the 21st October 1916 in Civil Appeal No. 1968 of 1915 set aside Mr. Craik's order, holding that it had been passed without jurisdiction having regard to Meugens v. Sutlej Flour Mills, Ferozepore (1). The appeals of the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 2 to 31 from the order of Lala Shibbu Mal have, therefore, been now argued before me.

Out of defendants Nos. 2 to 31 Hira Singh and Musammat Nandi have died, and Mr. Manohar Lal on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants says that there is no necessity to bring their legal representatives on the record in the plaintiffs' appeal as their dispute is only with Musammat Mohan Kaur, the lower Court having held that his clients' rights are superior to those of defendants Nos. 2 to 31. I agree with him that Hira Singh and Musammat Nandi were not necessary parties in his clients' appeal.

The appeal filed on behalf of defendants Nos. 2 to 31 may be disposed of in a few words. Dr. Nand Lal who appears for them frankly admits that the only evidence in support of their contention that they are collaterals of Bhanga Singh is that of the Hardwar Prohat, who has been disbelieved by the lower Court. He has not shown any reason why I should disagree with the finding of that Court in regard to this man's evidence. I think it would be extremely unsafe to hold upon the uncorroborated evidence of this single witness that the alleged relationship is proved. Dr. Nand Lal also admits that the alleged gift by Bhanga Singh to Musammat Chandan of the land in suit is not proved. Under these circumstances his client's appeal must fail and is hereby dismissed with costs to Mr. Manohar Lal's clients.

With regard to the plaintiffs' appeal Mr. Manohar Lal relies upon Partab Singh v. Panjabu (2), in which it was held that among Gariwal Jats of the Ludhiana District there is a special custom, contrary to general custom, whereby daughters are excluded from succession to self acquired property by collaterals. The Court followed in this decision the case of Musammat Ishar Kuar v. Raja Singh (3), which has been reported as 29 Punjab Record 1911. These authorities were not quoted in the lower Court, but they are clearly applicable to the present case. Mr. Nihal Chand on behalf of Musammat Mohan Kaur is unable to cite any authority to the contrary. His contention is that had Partab Singh v. Panjabu (2) been shown to the lower Court, the onus should have been shifted and his client would have produced evidence in proof of a special custom in her favour. He, therefore, asks that the case should be remanded for further enquiry. The onus was placed upon the plaintiffs by the lower Court and they discharged that onus partly by oral evidence and partly by citing authorities. The mere fact that a particular ruling was not cited in the lower Court does not, in my opinion, give the defendant any right to claim a remand. In her pleas Musammat Mohan Kaur relied generally on custom and did not allege that there was any special custom in the family of the parties. In the case reported as Musammat Ishar Kuar v. Raja Singh (3) the question was gone into exhaustively, and it is extremely unlikely that Musammat Mohan Kaur could prove any special family custom in her favour.

I, therefore, accept plaintiffs' appeal and give them a decree for possession of the land and the house in suit with costs throughout against all the defendants.

Appeal accepted.

N. KRISHNAMACHARIAR AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss 60, 88, 89—Mortgage, suit on—Decree, sale under, not in compliance with Transfer of Property Act—Redemption, right of—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 244—Questions arising between auction purchaser at sale under mortgage decree and mortgagor, whether to be decided in execution—Suit, maintainability of.

In a mortgage suit for sale the decree made did not specify a day for payment as prescribed by sections 86 and 88 of the Transfer of Property Act. In execution of the decree the mortgaged property was attached, sold and purchased (with the permission of the Court) by the decree-holder. The sale was confirmed. The mortgagor thereafter sued for redemption:

Held, that as the property and all right, title and interest of the defendants in the suit for sale had in fact been sold under the decree of a competent Court, and such decree had not been appealed against, it was immaterial whether or not the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act were complied with and that even though such provisions had not been complied with, the mortgagor was debarred from a right to redeem ; [p. 858, col. 2.]

Held, also, that the present suit was barred by section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, inasmuch as the questions now raised could and should have been raised before the sale was confirmed and, if so raised, would have been decided by the Court executing the decree. [p. 859, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Madras High Court (Miller and Tyabji, JJ.), dated February 17, 1914, reported as 24 Ind. Cas. 187, affirming that of the District Judge, North Arcot, dated February 9, 1910.

FACTS.—One Kumaraswami Mudaliar, a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara Law, executed three mortgages of ancestral property: (1) in 1876 in favour of Varadappa, (2) in 1879 in favour of a Vakil named Vijayaraghavachariar and (3) on the 10th May 1881 in favour of Narasingha. Subsequently two sons were born to the mortgagor, namely, the plaintiff-appellant and his brother since deceased, in 1881 and 1882 respectively. The first and third mortgages were assigned to the Vakil. Subsequently the Vakil sued on the third mortgage for sale of the mortgaged property and made the father and his two sons defendants. At the trial the father objected that he was not the guardian of his two sons, but the Judge overruled the objection and made a decree dated 15th April 1886 for sale of the mortgaged property. On the 16th August 1886 the decree-holder applied for execution by attachment and sale of the mortgaged property. On the 28th September 1886 Govindaraju, an uncle of the minors, applied to be appointed guardian of the minors and for an order setting aside the decree, on the ground that the minors were not represented. The Court granted the application and ordered a new trial. But Govindaraju did not file any written statement and the case was heard ex parte and the Court made a decree, dated 15th November 1886, against the defendants for sale of the mortgaged property. On further proceedings under the application of the 16th August 1886 the properties were subsequently sold in execution and were purchased by the decree holder with the leave of the Court. The plaintiff's father died in 1894 and in 1904 the plaintiff obtained the release of his brother's rights and instituted the present suit in 1907 to redeem all the three mortgages in suit. The District Judge held that the plaintiff was properly represented and was bound by the decree and by the execution proceedings and that the suit was barred by section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882. Plaintiff's appeal to the Madras High Court was dismissed. He thereupon preferred the present appeal to the Privy Council.

Sir W. Garth, for the Appellant.

Sir Erle Richards, K. C., and Mr. Kenworthy Brown, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 5 (representatives of the mortgagee who had died).

The remaining respondents, who had purchased portions of the mortgaged property from the mortgagee, did not appear.

Sir W. Garth, for the Appellant.—The minors here were not parties to the sale proceedings. The sale was in execution of the decree dated April 15, 1886; it was only under that decree that attachment was made on the application of August 14, 1886. But that decree was set aside; and in the subsequent proceedings the minors were described as under the protection of their father; they were not properly on the record and are not bound: Khiarajmal v. Daim (1) and Rashid-un-nisa v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (2).

In any case the right to redeem has not been extinguished. Under section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act that right continues until it is extinguished by act of the parties or by order of a Court. The right can only be barred if certain steps are taken under the Act, and those steps have not been taken. Transfer of Property Act, (Act IV 1882), sections 58, 60, 85, 86, 88 and 89. There is no authority for the proposition that the mere sale under a decree bars the right to redeem, even though the provisions of the Act have not been complied with.

Reference was made to Mallikarjunadu v. Lingamurti Pantulu (3)

Sir Erle Richards, K. C., for Respondents Nos. 1 to 5.—A sale of ancestral property in execution of a decree conveying the right, title and interest of the father of a joint family is binding on the sons. Sripat Singh v. Prodyot Kumar (4).

The minors were properly represented and the second decree of the 15th November was substituted for the first decree on the 15th April. The attachment and sale really took place under the second decree. Govindaraju was fully aware of the pending sale. In any case the plaintiff was a party to the re-trial of the suit, and is bound by the decree and the execution proceedings therein. A separate suit is barred by section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882. Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (5) is conclusive on the point. The questions now raised could and ought to have been raised before the sale was confirmed under that section.

Sir W. Garth in reply.—The sale really took place under an attachment made under the first decree In order to see what was sold at a judicial sale the Court must look at the proceedings which culminated in the sale. Raja Thakur Barmha v. Jiban Ram Marwari (6).

Section 244 of the Code has no application, because the minors were not parties to the execution proceedings and were not properly represented therein.

JUDGMENT.

SIR JOHN EDGE.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court at Madras, dated the 17th February 1914,* which affirmed a decree, dated the 9th February 1910, of the District Judge of North Arcot, by which the suit was dismissed. The plaintiff is the appellant.

The suit was brought in the Court of the District Judge of North Arcot on the 16th November 1907, to redeem three mortgages dated respectively the 12 h December 1876, the 7th January 1879 and the 10th May 1881. The mortgages were of ancestral property, and were made by the father of the plaintiff before the plaintiff or his brother, since deceased, were born. The mortgage of the 7th January 1879 was in favour of N. Vijayaragavachariar, Vakil, to whom their Lordships will refer as the Vakil. The mortgages of the 12th December 1876 and the 10th May 1881 vested by assignment in the Vakil. The plaintiff in this suit was born in September 1881; his brother was born in May 1882.

On the 19th March 1886 the Vakil brought in the District Court of North Arcot, a suit for sale on the mortgage of the 10th May 1881, against the plaintiff's father, the plaintiff, aged 4 years, and his brother, aged 3 years, the brothers being described as "maintained by the first defendant," who was their father. The suit was entered on the files of the Court as Original Suit No. 5 of 1886. Their father, who had not been appointed as their guardian for the suit, objected that he was not their guardian, but the District Judge overruled the objection, and on the 15th April 1886 made a decree in the following terms:—

"It is ordered that plaintiff do recover Rs. 10,891 together with further interest at 6 per cent. per annum from date of plaint to date of payment and costs, to be recovered from the 1st defendant personally, and by sale of the mortgaged property."

That decree was doubtless intended to be in compliance with the provisions of "the Transfer of Property Act, 1882," but it did not comply with those provisions.

On the 16th August 1886 the Vakil presented to the District Court his petition, under section 230 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, for execution of the decree of the 15th April 1886. The petition was entered on the files of the Court as "Execution Petition No. 57 of 1886 in Original Suit (Original Suit) No. 5 of 1886," and by it the petitioner prayed "that the amount may be recovered with further costs, together with further interest, by the attachment and sale of immoveable property set out in the schedule herewith filed." In that petition the present plaintiff and his brother were described as minors, defendants "by their guardian the first defendant." In the schedule the Vakil disclosed the fact that there existed the mortgages of the 12th December 1876 and the 7th January 1879. On the 18th August 1886 the warrant of attachment was issued, and on the 13th September 1886 a notice of sale was issued.

On the 28th September 1886 one Govindaraju Mudali, who was a maternal uncle of the present plaintiff and his brother, applied to the District Court to be appointed their guardian and to have the decree of the 15th April 1886 set aside on the ground that their father was not their proper guardian. Govindaraju Mudali apparently contended in support of his application that the debt in respect of which the mortgage of the 10th May 1881 had been given was not one which the minors or the properties were liable to discharge. On the 10th November 1886 the District Judge held that the appointment of the father as guardian had been illegal, and in his place appointed Govindaraju Mudali as guardian of the minors, and set aside the decree of the 15th April 1886 as against them. Govindaraju was ordered to put in a written statement on the 15th November 1886 on behalf of the minors, but he failed to do so and did not appear. On the 15th November 1886 the District Judge made a decree that the plaintiff (the Vakil) "do recover 10,891 rupees, together with further interest at 6 per cent. per annum from date of plaint to date of payment, and costs, to be recovered from the first defendant personally and by sale of the mortgaged property." That decree did not comply with the provisions of "The Transfer of Property Act, 1882," but it was not appealed and it became final. It was obviously intended to be in supersession of the decree of the 15th April 1886 and must be regarded as having superseded that decree.

On the 24th January 1887 the Court of the District Judge caused a proclamation of the intended sale to be made under section 287 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882. The proclamation is described on the face of it as in Original Suit No. 5 of 1886, Application No. 57 of 1886, and proclaimed that—

"Whereas the immoveable property mentioned in the list attached hereto and belonging to the said defendants (the father and his two sons) has been attached upon a petition being presented for execution of the decree passed in the above suit. Take notice that if the amounts specified below be not paid into this Court, or if no other steps be taken to satisfy the decree, the said property shall be sold in public auction in this Court on the 19th September 1887, and that in that sale the right, title and interest possessed by the above defendants alone in respect of that property shall be sold."

So far as appears from the documents in the record, the only attachment which had issued was that of the 18th August 1886.

It appears that Govindaraju Mudali, as the guardian of the minors, had appealed to the High Court at Madras from some order which the District Judge had made on the 20th December 1886 in Original Suit No. 5 of 1886. What the order appealed from was does not appear, nor is there anything in the record which suggests what the nature of the order was. However, that appeal not having been disposed of, Govindaraju Mudali, at some time between the 24th January 1887 and the 2nd March 1887, applied to the High Court for an order to stay the sale of the property attached in execution of the decree of the District Court of North Arcot in Original Suit No. 5 of 1886. That application was dismissed by the High Court on the 1st August 1887.

On the 28th February 1887, the District Court made an order permitting the Vakil to bid at the sale. On the 19th September 1887, the immoveable properties in question were sold, subject to incumbrances, by public auction, and the Vakil became the purchaser.

The sale was confirmed by the District Judge on the 13th December 1887, and he, on the 1st February 1888, gave the sale certificate under his hand and the seal of the Court. The Vakil died before this present suit; the first respondent is his son. The other respondents are purchasers from the Vakil. The father of the present plaintiff died in May 1894. The plaintiff's brother died in September 1904. The present plaintiff, his brother and their father had constituted a Hindu joint family.

On behalf of the appellant here it was contended that the sale took place in execution of the decree of the 15th April 1886, and not in execution of the decree of the 15th November 1886, and that under such circumstances only the right, title, and interest of the father were sold. That contention is based on the fact that the attachment of the 16th August 1886 was made under the decree of the 15th April 1896. The sale must have been under the decree of the 15th November 1886. No one was or could have been misled as to the decree under which the sale was taking place. The proclamation of sale of the 24th January 1887 was made subsequent to the decree for sale of the 15th November 1886, and must have been made consequent on that decree, with the knowledge of all parties and without challenge, and that proclamation shows that what was to be sold by auction was the right, title and interest in the property of the defendants to the suit of the 19th March 1886, and the certificate of sale shows that the right, title and interest in the property of the defendants to that suit were sold to the Vakil. The present plaintiff and his brother were defendants to that suit, under the guardianship of Govindaraju Mudali, at the time when the decree of the 15th November 1886 was made and at the time when the sale took place, and thence until the sale was confirmed and the certificate of sale was made.

It has also been contended on behalf of the appellant here that as the provisions of "The Transfer of Property Act, 1882," were not complied with in the suit for sale of the 19th March 1886, and as no day was fixed by the Court on which payment might be made within six months from the date of declaring in Court the amount due, the defendants to the suit of the 19th March 1886 were not debarred from a right to redeem. It appears to their Lordships that the answer to that contention is that whether or not the provisions of "The Transfer of Property Act, 1882," were complied with, the property and all right, title and interest of those defendants in it were in fact sold to the Vakil in execution of a decree of a Court which had jurisdiction to entertain the suit in which the decree was made, and that decree was not appealed.

By section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, it was enacted that:—

"244. The following questions shall be determined by order of the Court executing a decree and not by a separate suit (namely):—

"(c) Any other question arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge, or satisfaction of the decree, or to the stay of execution thereof."

This Board decided in Prosumno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (5) that section 244 had been rightly held in India to apply in a case in which the question raised concerned the auction-purchaser at an auction sale as well as the parties to the suit. In this case the Vakil was the auction-purchaser and was also a party to the suit. The questions raised in the present suit could have been raised before the sale was confirmed, and, if so raised, would have been determined by the Court which was executing the decree of the 15th November 1886.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal fails, and should be dismissed.

The appellant must pay the costs of this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Matter expressly excluded from decision, whether res judicata*—Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17 (1) (d)—Lease, parol—Subsequent memoranda, whether compulsorily registrable Landlord and tenant · Tenant holding over—Suit for damages for use and occupation—Damages, measure of.*

In deciding the validity or otherwise of the defence of res judicata, the Court is concerned with what was actually decided and not with what ought to have been decided in the previous suit. [p. 860, col. 2; p. 861, col. 1.]

Plaintiffs let the ground floor of their house to defendants from 1st January 1909. In the summer of 1911, a dispute arose between the parties with regard to the term of the tenancy and the extent of the property leased and the plaintiffs brought a suit for ejectment of the defendants from the house as well as two plots of land which, according to the plaintiffs, did not form part of the property leased. The defendants thereupon instituted a counter-suit for the specific performance of an agreement to lease the property for a period of 3 years. The litigation dragged on till the defendants vacated the premises on the 7th March 1912 and informed the Court accordingly, which consequently declined to adjudicate upon the various issues arising between the parties and simply granted the plaintiffs a decree for possession of the property, expressly stating that the said issues might be determined in the suit for damages which was to be instituted by the plaintiffs The present suit was then brought for damages for use and occupation on the allegations that the defendants were monthly tenants, that their tenancy was determined at the end of June 1911 by a notice to quit served on them in April 1911 and that thereafter they were in wrongful possession of the demised premises. It appeared that the parties had written to each other on the 15th and 22nd January 1909 with regard to the matter of the lease and it was contended that these letters amounted to a lease for a term exceeding one year and not having been registered were inadmissible in evidence:

Held, (1) that inasmuch as the Court dealing with the former suit expressly refused to adjudicate upon any of the matters covered by the issues in the subsequent suit, the plaintiffs could not avail themselves of the doctrine of res judicata and the Court was competent to determine the issues on the merits between the parties: [p. 861, col. 1.]

(2 that the contract between the parties was entered into orally and the letters subsequently exchanged between the parties were merely memoranda of a fait accompli and could not, therefore, be excluded from evidence on the ground of want of registration; [p. 861, col. 2.]

(3) that the tenancy was for three years from 1st February 1909 to 31st January 1912 and the plaintiffs had no right to eject the defendants from the premises before the expiry of that period. [p. 861, col 2.]

(4) that the defendants were liable to pay damages for use and occupation for the period subsequent to 31st January 1912. [p. 862, col. 2.]

In the case of a tenant holding over wilfully and contumaciously damages for use and occupation are assessed at double the ordinary rent. [p. 862, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Delhi, dated the 20th June 1914, decreeing Rs. 921 2 0 in plaintiffs' favour and directing the plaintiffs to pay the defendants' costs on the amount disallowed, viz., Rs. 13,074-5-6.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are the owners of a house situate on the Lothian Road inside the Kashmiri Gate, Delhi. It is common ground that the ground floor of the house was let to the defendants, Messrs. B. Borooah and Company, from 1st February 1909 at a monthly rent of Rs. 111-11-6; and that in the summer of 1911 the parties fell out, the dispute relating to the term of the tenancy and the property compromised in the lease. The plaintiffs thereupon brought an action for the ejectment of the defendants from the house as well as two plots of land which, according to the plaintiffs, did not form part of the property leased to the defendants and had been wrongfully taken possession of by them. The defendants replied by instituting a counter-suit for the specific performance of an agreement to lease the property for a period of three years. This suit was obviously a counterblast, the object being clearly to prevent the decision of the plaintiffs' suit before the commencement of the Coronation Durbar held in December 1911. In this object the defendants were successful, the litigation dragged on until after the Durbar, with the result that they themselves vacated the premises on the 7th March 1912 and then informed the Trial Judge accordingly. The latter consequently declined to adjudicate upon the various issues arising between the parties, and simply granted the plaintiffs a decree for possession of the property, expressly stating that the said issues might be determined in the suit for damages which was to be instituted by the plaintiffs.

The present suit is for damages for use and occupation on the allegations that the defendants were monthly tenants, that their tenancy was determined at the end of June 1911 by a notice to quit served on them in April 1911 and that thereafter they were in wrongful possession of not only the two plots of land referred to above and a verandah constructed by the plaintiffs in November 1910, but also of the house itself. The plaintiffs consequently claimed about Rs. 14,000 by way of damages from the defendants. The Trial Judge has given his decision against the plaintiffs upon all the matters in controversy between the parties, and has passed a decree for Rs 921 2-0, the rent due from 1st July 1911 to 7th March 1912, which rent was tendered by the defendants but was not accepted by the plaintiffs.

Against this decree the plaintiffs have preferred an appeal to this Court, and we have listened to the elaborate arguments advanced by Mr. Raj Narain for the appellants and Mr. Moti Sagar for the respondents. Upon the question of res judicata we have no hesitation in endorsing the opinion of the learned Divisional Judge, upon the short ground that the Court dealing with the former suit expressly refused to adjudicate upon any of the matters which are covered by the first three issues framed in this case.

As observed already, the decree for possession was passed in that suit, because the defendants stated that the period of tenancy had expired on the 31st January 1912 and that they had consequently vacated the premises. In these circumstances the Court held that it was unnecessary to determine the points relating to the nature of the tenancy, the property actually leased to the defendants, and the property alleged to have been trespassed upon by them; and expressed its opinion that these matters might be determined in the subsequent suit. Nor did the Appellate Court, to which the plaintiffs went upon appeal, accede to their request for a decision on the merits. The judgment delivered by that Court shews that it confined itself to the question of costs, and that the remarks made therein apportioning the blame between the two parties were made with the sole object of deciding that question.

There is considerable force in the contention that the Court, which tried the former suit, should have, before decreeing possession, determined whether the plaintiffs had a cause of action on the date of the institution of that suit, and that it should not have awarded possession merely upon the strength of the circumstances which came into existence subsequent to that date. Now, the ground upon which the Court proceeded may be wrong, but there can be no manner of doubt that in deciding the validity or otherwise of the defence of res judicata we are concerned with what was actually decided in the previous litigation, and not with what ought to have been decided. The following observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Parsotam Gir v. Narbada Gir (1) are pertinent here :—

"The question is not whether the judgment of the High Court in 1886 was right, but whether it did or did not finally decide the present question as between Nipal Gir and Narbada Gir. It would be a contradiction in terms to say that the Court had finally decided matters which it expressly left 'untouched and undecided.'"

Mr. Raj Narain for the appellants relies upon Explanation IV to section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, which prescribes that any matter, which might and ought to have been made ground of defence or attack in the former suit, shall be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit. But the explanation does not place a constructive issue referred to therein upon any higher footing than the issues actually drawn in the case, and does not do away with the necessity of due compliance with the essential requirements of the rule of res judicata laid down in the section itself. There is, however, no scope for the application of this explanation to the present case, because it is clear that the parties had put forward all the grounds of attack and defence, which were duly embodied in clear and distinct issues. But the Court not only did not decide them but expressly excluded them from decision. It is, therefore, manifest that nothing was decided in that case which can be treated as res judicata.

We accordingly hold that the plaintiffs are not entitled to avail themselves of the doctrine of res judicata, and we proceed to determine the issues on the merits. The first question, which requires decision, is the term of the tenancy. Now, we may say at once that there is no reliable evidence in support of the plaintiffs' contention that the tenancy was a monthly one; indeed, all the evidence oral and documentary goes to show that it was for a period of three years. The plaintiffs, however, contend that the letters, dated 15th January and 22nd January 1909 respectively, exchanged between the parties amounted to a lease for a term exceeding one year, and were consequently compulsorily registrable under section 17 of the Registration Act. The documents not having been registered are inadmissible in evidence; and oral evidence relating to the terms of the contract, which was reduced to writing, is shut out by the Evidence Act. We have examined this contention in the light of all the circumstances of the case, and we are of the opinion that it has been satisfactorily established that the parties entered into a parol contract with respect to the lease of the property for three years, and that the letters in question should be regarded as merely memoranda of a fait accompli. It appears that negotiations in connection with the lease of the property began some six months before the letters in question were written, and the evidence of Colonel Z. Ahmad shows that it was the plaintiff Madan Mohan Lal who wanted the tenancy to last for three years and that it was at his request that the witness suggested that period to the defendants. Further, B. K. Borooah, the manager of the defendants' firm, who settled the matter with the plaintiff Madan Mohan Lal, swears that the contract between the parties was an oral one and that the letter of confirmation was taken with the object of forwarding it to their Head Office at Calcutta. It will be observed that Madan Mohan Lal, who was the only other person cognizant of the affair, has not gone into the witness-box; and in these circumstances we see no valid reason why we should not accept the version given by B. K. Borooah. Accepting his testimony, which receives support from other circumstances of the case, we hold that the contract between the parties was entered into orally, and that the letters cannot be excluded on the ground of want of registration.

These documents and the oral evidence make it absolutely clear that the tenancy was for three years from 1st February 1909 to 31st January 1912, and that the plaintiffs had no right to eject the defendants from the tenement before the expiry of that period. We are equally clear that the only property let to the defendants was the ground floor of the house described variously as a square or oblong consisting of ten rooms and two verandahs, and that the defendants were not entitled to occupy either the vacant plot of land on the north or the triangular area on the east marked M. N. P. on the plan. They were no doubt entitled to a passage to the building, but this could have been easily secured without any interference with the two plots. As regards the verandah on the north, constructed in November 1910, it is true that it was not expressly included in the premises let to the defendants; but this omission was due to the obvious reason that it did not exist at the time the tenancy was created. It is, however, clear that the verandah could not be separated from the main building, and any attempt to let it to another tenant would have resulted in shutting up the rooms of the building on the northern side and in materially interfering with the proper enjoyment thereof. The verandah, when constructed, became an integral part of the building, and the defendants were, in our opinion, justified in occupying it.

A comparison of the pleadings in the previous suit leaves no doubt whatsoever that the defendants claiming both the plots of land as forming part of the premises leased to them not only brought them under their occupation but prevented the plaintiffs from making any use of them, vide, inter alia, the defendants' written statement, paragraphs 1, 3 and 5 (page 19 of the paper-book). This act of theirs, which was wholly unwarranted, prevented the plaintiffs from utilising the property for Durbar purposes. There can be little doubt that the plaintiffs could have easily let the plots either as building sites or after erecting shops thereon, and realised a handsome rent. There is a mass of evidence on the record that there was considerable demand for business premises in this part of the town, and that shops were fetching from ten to fifteen times their ordinary rent. The learned Pleader for the respondents argues that the damages, if any caused to the plaintiffs, were not the direct consequence of his clients' act, as there is nothing to show that the Municipal Committee would have granted permission to build on the plots in question. We are unable to accede to this argument, which proceeds upon an assumption that the Municipal Committee would have refused an application for permission to build, an assumption for which there is no foundation. It is clear that the defendants prevented the plaintiffs from having access to these plots, and it would, therefore, have been a useless formality on the part of the latter to make such an application. As already observed, there was a great demand for business premises, and the evidence also shows that the shops and sites in the neighbourhood fetched very high rents. At the same time we consider that the amount of Rs. 8,000 claimed by the plaintiffs in respect of the plots is excessive Upon the record there is some evidence to the effect that certain prospective tenants or their agents were prepared to pay fairly large sums of money for acquiring the lease of the sites or the buildings if constructed thereon, and though we are not inclined to accept these offers at their face value, we are not prepared to hold that they must all be characterised as bogus offers. The learned Divisional Judge was inclined to think that the verandah and the shed on the northern plot of land would have realised about Rs. 2,500 and we consider that Rs. 2,000 would probably be a fair estimate of the rent, which the plot alone would have fetched. As regards the triangular plot M. N. P., we would, in view of the evidence adduced by the plaintiffs, assess damages at the round figure of Rs. 1,000.

Upon our finding as to the period of the tenancy, it is clear that the defendants were entitled to occupy the ground floor of the house up to the 31st January 1912, and for the period subsequent to that date they are liable to pay damages for the use and occupation, which in the case of a tenant holding over wilfully and contumaciously is usually assessed at double the ordinary rent, Vide, Ganga Singh v. Musammat Shib Devi (2) and Pirbhu Dial v. Ram Chand (3). The learned Divisional Judge takes the 7th March 1912 as the date on which the premises were vacated; and in view of the plaintiffs' notice, dated the 3rd February 1912, asking the defendants to quit the building, and of other evidence, we are inclined to concur in that view. Further, we agree with him that the fans and lamps removed by the defendants at the time of vacating the house were not the property of the plaintiffs.

(3) 5 P. R. 1904; 42 P. L. R. 1904.

The result is that we grant the plaintiffs a decree for

(c) damages for the wrongful occupation of the two plots of land ...	3,000	0	0

We accordingly accept the appeal, and modifying the decree of the lower Court direct that the defendants do pay to the plaintiffs the aforesaid sum. In the circumstances we leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout the litigation.

Cause of action, accrual of, after suit—Relief, whether can be granted.

Courts have power, in certain circumstances, to grant a decree in a case, where the cause of action arose subsequently to the filing of the plaint.

In a suit for money, where the money becomes payable to the plaintiff only after the filing of the suit the Court should pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff and not compel him to institute another suit, for the purpose.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the District Judge of Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 874 of 1915, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Valangiman at Kumbakonam, in Original Suit No. 71 of 1913.

Mr. M. D. Devadoss, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. O. Parthasarathy Aiyangar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the finding of the District Judge it is clear that the defendant did receive the money. The learned Judge has, however, found that the suit was premature because of the terms of the unregistered mortgage bond. Granting that the terms of the bond are binding on the parties, having regard to the fact that immediately after the suit the money became payable, we think that it is undesirable that the plaintiff should be compelled to institute another suit for the money. The principle of Chinta Hararan Das v. Radha Charan Poddar (1) and of the decision of this Court in Sethrucherla Rama Chandra v. Maharajah of Jeypore (2), in which it was held that Courts have power to grant a decree where a cause of action arose subsequent to the suit, is applicable to this case. Following these decisions and having regard to the special circumstances of this case, we reverse the decree of the District Judge and restore that of the District Munsif, except as to costs. Each party will bear his own costs throughout.

[p. 864, col. 1.]

The making of the contract is part of the cause of action within the meaning of section 20 (c) of the Civil Procedure Code.

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ambala, dated the 15th January 1915.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Beni Parshad Khosla, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On 27th April 1914, the plaintiffs-appellants instituted this suit claiming Rs. 14,000 from the defendants-respondents as due and payable under a contract made and registered in Jagadhri. The contract was to be performed at Tehri or in any case outside the jurisdiction of the Ambala Courts, and the breach or breaches alleged in the plaint occurred also outside the Ambala District.

The Senior Subordinate Judge ordered that "the plaint "and enclosures be returned to the plaintiff to be presented at the proper Court", holding that the Ambala Courts had no jurisdiction to try the suit, the mere execution or making of the contract at Jagadhri not giving him jurisdiction. The plaintiffs-appellants have appeared and for them I have heard Mr. Manohar Lal, while Mr. Khosla has addressed me on behalf of the defendants-respondents. In my opinion the matter is perfectly clear. It is admitted that under Explanation III to section 17 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ambala, had jurisdiction because the contract was made at Jagadhri. This explanation has not been re-enacted in the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, but owing to the addition of the words "wholly or in part" in section 20 (c) no change has been made in the law.

The making of the contract clearly is a part of the cause of action and Salig Ram v. Chuba Mal (1) is clearly in point. Mr. Khosla argued that the suit was for a refund of monies advanced at Chakrata, but it is clear that these advances were made in pursuance of the contract entered into at Jagadhri. I accordingly accept this appeal and return the case to the Trial Court for disposal.

Costs in this Court will be costs in the cause.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent attached the suit property as the property of his judgment-debtor. A third party put in a claim that the property was his and succeeded. The judgment-debtor sued to set aside the settlement by virtue of which the claimant had succeeded in his claim and for possession and obtained a decree. This was not a suit under Order XXI, rule 63, of the Civil Procedure Code, which confers a right of suit only on the party against whom an order has been made rejecting his claim or his objection to another's claim. The person who objects to a claim is the attaching decree-holder. He (the judgment-debtor) then sold the suit property to the appellant. The respondent then again attached the property and the appellant put in a claim petition, and having failed in it, brought the present suit. It is practically admitted that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that the suit was barred by section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. See Arasayee Ammal v. Sokkalinga Mudali (1). Nor can we agree with Mr. Menon's contention that the first attachment was revived by the result of the judgment-debtor's suit above referred to.

Mr. V. R. Pandit, for the Appellant.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—One Balaji obtained from the defendant, a Wahiwatdar of Walgaon Jagir, a lease of Survey No. 68 of the village, for 15 years, in 1886. During the period of that lease Balaji planted between 1887 and 1889 some 48 mango trees in the field. About 1893 Mr. Francis, the Director of Land Records in Berar, who was settling the village, declared that this field belonged to one Bhagwan, and declared him to be an ante-Jagir tenant. The lease which was in Balaji's favour was not, however, disturbed but Bhagwan was to get possession on expiry of the same. Balaji died some two years after his lease expired and on the 6th October 1906 the present plaintiff appellant took a sale-deed from Balaji's brothers, Nathoo and Ramchandra, conveying an 8-annas share in the mango trees. The appellant now sues for possession of 24 out of the 48 trees on the strength of this sale-deed. He states that the defendant had obstructed him in collecting the fruit of his trees.

The defence is that the trees having been planted by Balaji as the defendant's lessee he had no ownership over them and that the defendant had been in possession of the trees claimed for over 12 years prior to the institution of the suit in his own right. The plaintiff's case is that the person planting on another's land is by customary right entitled to a half share in the trees, the other half share going to the owner of the soil. The Trial Court has held that the plaintiff has failed to establish the special custom set up and that where a lessee plants fruit trees, the property in this is by the general law vested in the proprietor of the land. The Judge held that Balaji merely by reason of his having planted the trees in suit could not be the owner of the trees. On expiry of the lease in his favour, the owner of the soil became the owner of the trees.

It is unnecessary for the purposes of this appeal to enter into the other questions decided by the first Court.

Against the decisions of the first Court the plaintiff appealed to the Court of the Additional District Judge, Amraoti, and the defendant filed cross-objections. The defendant inter alia objected to the finding of the first Court that the kararnama filed by him was a forgery. The lower Appellate Court has confirmed the finding of the first Court that Balaji was joint with his brothers, the plaintiff's vendors, and also agreed in the finding that there was no evidence in support of the allegation that by a custom in Berar the tenant may plant trees on his tenancy land and acquire a right to the trees for ever afterwards. The Judge held that though Bhagwan was an ante-Jagir tenant, yet the land primarily belonged to the defendant and so also the property in the trees and that the plaintiff had no title, as his vendors had no title to sell the trees. The Judge, though finding that the kararnama relied on by the defendant was a very suspicious document, came to no express decision that it was a forgery and held that it was immaterial for the present case. He confirmed the dismissal of the suit.

I cannot support the lower Appellate Court's opinion as to the position of an ante-Jagir tenant. An ante-Jagir tenant is the owner of his land subject to the payment of the rent to the Jagirdar. As long as this is paid the Jagirdar cannot evict him. Any trees planted in his ante-Jagir holding by such tenant or planted with his permission by any one else is not a question that affects the Jagirdar who, as long as the rent is regularly paid, cannot claim either the land or the trees.

In the present case it is admitted that Bhagwan was the ante-Jagir tenant, but it is shown that his tenancy was not declared until after the Jagirdar had been in possession and had leased the fields to Balaji. When the lease expired, those fields with the trees thereon would go to the ante-Jagir tenant.

Both the lower Courts have held that the plaintiff has failed to prove the special custom alleged, whereby a lessee planting trees in the leased land, at the expiry of his lease, has a half share in the trees. The contention is absurd. In some 25 years' experience of the Province from which the case comes, I have never heard such contentions advanced before. I do not say that a lessee by express agreement with his lessor could not claim a half right in the trees but until that express agreement is established, the general law that proprietorship of the land carries with it ownership of the trees thereon must prevail. Unless Balaji had a right to the half share claimed, it is obvious that his brothers had no right to sell it. Balaji might during the lease take the fruit and the defendant may have allowed him to take such share in the produce until his death. It is obvious that the period between the expiry of the lease and the filing of the present suit is insufficient to give Balaji or his brothers the right of ownership by adverse possession. Whether Bhagwan or his representatives at his death or the Jagirdar are the real owners of the trees is immaterial in the present suit. What is clear is that Balaji had no right to half the trees and his brothers, therefore, could not sell that share to the present appellant. This short ground disposes of the appeal.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Appellant.

Messrs. C. Bevan Petman and Santanam, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the order of the District Judge of Delhi directing an agreement to be filed in Court under paragraph 17 of the Second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code. The appeal was first argued before a single Judge of this Court who has referred it to a Division Bench, the particular question referred being whether an agreement to refer to arbitration becomes ipso facto inoperative by the death of an arbitrator before the agreement is made a rule of Court. In the present case there were five arbitrators named in the agreement and two of them had died before an application was made for the filing of the agreement in Court. Counsel for the respondents relied upon Jones v. Ledgard (1), Bala Pattabhirama Chetti v. Seetharama Chetti (2) and Sadik Husain v. Kaniz Zeohra Begam (3). In our opinion these authorities are distinguishable. Jones v. Ledgard (1) had reference to an application to file an award in Court. In Bala Pattabhirama Chetti v. Seetharama Chetti (2) one of the arbitrators refused to act after the agreement had been filed in Court, whereas in the present case two of the arbitrators died before even the application to file the agreement in Court was made. In Sadik Husain v. Kaniz Zeohra Begam (3) there was no application for the filing of the agreement in Court; it was already in Court, being incorporated in a compromise upon which a decree had been passed, and it was subsequent to this that one of the arbitrators refused to act.

For the appellant Brooke v. Surdyal (4) and Ma Ba U v. Maung Pe Lan (5) were relied upon.

Brooke v. Surdyal (4) was a case in which there had been an agreement for reference to three arbitrators, one of whom had refused to act and the other two had decided to go on with the reference. Pontifex, J., remarked:—"After an agreement such as that now before me has been executed, any person who is a party to it is entitled to apply to the Court to have such agreement filed, and no party to such an agreement could hope successfully to oppose such application if all the arbitrators named in it were alive and willing to act. But it is quite a different thing when, upon making such an application, a party to the agreement is able to come in and show that before the application was made, one of the arbitrators named in the deed had in fact died or as in this case had refused to act in the matter. In such a case I think the contention is right that the reference to the arbitration agreed upon between the parties no longer exists so as to enable the Court to direct that it should be filed, and if it were filed, I do not think the Court could exercise the powers of appointing a new arbitrator, because the arbitrator, who has refused to act, refused before the order of reference, directed by section 326, was made by the Court."

That ruling was under the Code of Civil Procedure of 1859, but the provisions of that Code in regard to an application to file an agreement were not materially different from those of the present Code. The case reported as Ma Ba U v. Maung Pe Lan (5) is a decision of the Lower Burma Chief Court under the present Code, in which it was held that apart from any enactment an agreement to refer a matter to certain specified arbitrators becomes void and of no effect if one or more of the arbitrators die or refuse to act, and thus make the agreement incapable of performance. It was held that in such a case the Court had no jurisdiction under clause (4) of paragraph 17 of Schedule II of the Civil Procedure Code to make a reference to the arbitrators. In our opinion the reasoning contained in this ruling is sound. Sub-clause (4) of clause (17) of the 2nd Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code is as follows :—

"Where no sufficient cause is shown the Court shall order the agreement to be filed and shall make an order of reference to the arbitrator appointed in accordance with the provisions of the agreement."

In the present case certain specified arbitrators are named in the agreement and we fail to see how an order of reference could be made to those arbitrators if one or more of them had died before the agreement was filed in Court. The actual agreement to refer the matter in dispute to five specified arbitrators became incapable of performance when one of those arbitrators died. This, in our opinion, is a sufficient reason for refusing to file the agreement in Court. Clause 19 has been referred to by Counsel for the respondents, but as pointed out by the Burma Chief Court, clause 19 only comes into operation when an order of reference has been made under clause 17. Mr. Petman for the respondents has not cited any authority in support of the proposition that an agreement should be filed in Court if one or more of the arbitrators named therein have died prior to the making of the application.

We, therefore, accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the lower Court reject the application for filing the agreement with costs in both the Courts.

Appeal accepted.

Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 24, ill. (d)—Public paths—Dedication, nature of—Easement, indeterminate body of persons, whether can claim—Public path closed—Right of deviation, extent of.

Public rights of way are not easements. Public, differing from private, rights of way originate from a dedication to the public by the owner of the soil over which they pass. Dedication means a gift not necessarily by a deed or any written document, and it is more often implied from custom and user than from any definite act of the owner of the land. Even when no such overt act can be shown, if the public use a way for some time to the knowledge of a land-owner and without resistance, dedication will be inferred and a right gained. [p. 869, col. 1.]

There can be no right of easement in favour of an indeterminate body of persons. [p. 869, col 2.]

If a person encloses a public path over his land and allows a new one to be opened in its place, he must be presumed to have made a fresh grant to the public of the new path. [p. 870, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—Appeal by the plaintiff. The plaintiff brings this suit against three persons, as representing the village of Hingni under Order I, rule 8 of the first Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code, to get an injunction preventing the use of a footpath through his field. The plaintiff's field lies between two villages and the plaintiff objects to foot passengers going through his field. The First Court wrongly treated the case as one of easement, that is, of a private right of way. The District Judge has looked at the case from a right point of view. He has held that the evidence shows that the public have been passing through the plaintiff's field for many years by immemorial village custom. The law as to public rights of way has been summed up in the Encyclopædia of the Laws of England* as follows —

"Public rights of way are rights, belonging to the public and exercisable by every member of the community of passing over land. They are not easements, though they are sometimes so called in error....These ways sometimes take the form of highways and public roads.....At other times they are merely footways or bridle paths leading across fields.....Public, differing from private, rights of way originate from a dedication to the public by the owner of the soil over which they pass. Dedication, as the word implies, means a gift, not necessarily by a deed or any written document, and it is more often implied from custom and user than from any definite act of the owner of the land.....Even when no such overt act can be shown, if the public use a way for some time to the knowledge of the landowner and without resistance by him, dedication will be inferred and a right gained".

It is a well-known fact that there are public foot-paths through fields in the villages of the Central Provinces. On this subject I may quote an extract from the instructions recently issued by the Chief Commissioner under section 62 of the Land Revenue Act, 1917, regarding the preparation of the wajib ul-arz:—

"Village roads, paths and rights of way. There are usually to be found in every village certain general principles which form part of the almost universal communal rights and liabilities of village life. These are the rights of every cultivator to pass along the boundaries of any field or area in the village, taking with him his plough, cattle and agricultural implements on the way to his own field, and the obligation on the Malguzar and villagers to keep all village roads in order, and the right of passage to and from ploughing and threshing, grazing and water. In some districts the custom prevails that at certain seasons of the year the field embankments are cut so as to allow access with carts across the fields. In some cases these communal rights are exercisable at all times and in some cases only during certain seasons of the year. Enquiry should be made into the customs which prevail regarding all these points and the result should be carefully recorded.

"A schedule showing the Khasra numbers of existing roads, permanent or seasonal, or where such have no separate Khasra number, the Khasra numbers of the areas across which they pass should be included.

"All recognised public rights of way, including footh-paths for men only, where such paths are permanent and recognised should be entered, and a note should be made where a special Goha or road for cattle exists, showing which of the roads scheduled constitutes the Goha.

"At the checking of the village map, care should be taken that all roads are surveyed and shown, not only where they cross areas occupied for cultivation, but also where they cross unoccupied areas and especially the village waste."

In this case there is no mention of the path in question in the wajib-ul-arz nor is it marked in the village map. But no presumption against the defendants can arise from this, as the instructions had not been issued at the time of settlement. The sole question in this case is whether the defendants have proved that there is a public path across the plaintiff's field by immemorial village custom. The District Judge has not expressly referred to the principles of law enunciated in the first of the above quotations, but nevertheless his judgment proceeds upon correct lines. Even the plaintiff admits that a public right of way can exist through a private field, for his case is that the public right of way, the existence of which he does not deny, lies not through his field No. 41, but through the neighbouring field No. 42 belonging to the first defence witness Radhakisan. The learned District Judge has held on the evidence adduced by the defendants that there has been a public foot path through field No. 41 since time immemorial. This foot-path was obstructed by the plaintiff about 7 years ago, and the direction of the path was, therefore, somewhat changed into the position which it occupied at the time the suit was brought.

The case having been decided on proper lines I will proceed to discuss the grounds of appeal. It is correctly contended in the first ground that there can be no right of easement in favour of an indeterminate body of persons, but the case has not been decided on these lines by the learned District

Judge who has dismissed the plaintiff's suit because the path is public path. The 2nd ground that the question is one of license has not been argued. In the 3rd ground of appeal it is urged that the defendants in their pleadings stated that the existing right of way had been in existence over 60 years while their evidence is that the direction of foot path was changed 7 years ago and it is alleged that the findings are, therefore, not in accordance with the pleadings. On examining the record I find there is no genuine cause of complaint on this score. The pleadings of the parties could not be understood until the Commissioner went to the spot to make a map and the defendants made it clear in their representations to the Commissioner, which in these circumstances must be taken to be part of the pleadings, that the original path had been shifted 7 years ago into a new position because the then existing path was blocked by the plaintiff. The positions of the two paths are marked in the plans prepared by the Commissioner. In the 4th ground of appeal it is urged that even if the public had a right to use the old path, they have lost their right by abandonment and have no right to use the new path. There is a double answer to this contention. The first is that under the principles of law applying to public paths the plaintiff must be presumed by his action in enclosing the old path and allowing a new one to be opened in its place to have made a fresh grant to the public of the new path. Also under the principles recognised in illustration (d) to section 24 of the Indian Easements Act, when the owner of the land renders a way impassable, the persons entitled to use the way may deviate from it and pass over adjoining land of the owner provided that the deviation is reasonable. This principle has been clearly set out in Selby v. Nettlefold (1). The 5th ground says that the lower Court should have made a distinct finding as to exactly how many years the public had used the path. There is a finding that it has been in use for over 60 years. The 6th ground of appeal is not very clearly worded, but it has been argued on the assumption that it means that the defendants have not proved that the public used the path as of right. The nature of the evidence shows that the foot-path has always been recognised as a public foot-path.

A cultivator prima facie has a right to the exclusive use of his own field and very strong evidence is necessary before it can be held that other people have a right of way, public or private, over his land. This seems to have been recognised by the learned District Judge who has held that the evidence adduced by the defendants is insufficient. I may add that the suit appears to be the outcome of a quarrel between the plaintiff and Radhakisan. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 35—Costs—Appellate Court, power of, to interfere with costs awarded by Trial Court—Appeal on question of costs, maintainability of.

Under section 35, Civil Procedure Code, the costs of, and incident to, all suits are in the discretion of the Court and where the primary Court has exercised its discretion in dealing with the costs, it is an unusual course for the Appellate Court to interfere with that discretion of the primary Court. [p. 871, col. 2.]

Where costs are in the discretion of the Judge, the Court of Appeal will assume that the Judge exercised his discretion unless it is satisfied that he has not exercised it. The Appellate Court will not interfere with an exercise of the discretion of the primary Court unless it has proceeded on a manifestly wrong ground [p 871, col. 2.]

It was never intended by the Legislature that the award of costs by a Court should form the subject of an appeal, unless some question of principle is involved on which that Court failed to exercise its discretion. [p. 871, col. 1; p. 872, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal from a decision of the learned Additional District Judge of the Twenty-four Pergannas, dated the 5th February 1914, reversing the decision of the Subordinate Judge of the same place. The appeal before the learned Additional District Judge involved only one question on the merits, namely, as to the manner in which the Judge in the primary Court had dealt with the costs of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The learned Judge in the primary Court, considering all the circumstances, in the exercise of his discretion made a partial award to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 of their costs in the suit. As to the remainder of their costs, he made no order and left them to bear them themselves. Against that decision, an appeal was preferred to the learned Additional District Judge, who reversed the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge and awarded to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 the whole of their costs. The present appeal is preferred against that decision. The facts are these so far as they are material:—One Suresh Chunder Gangully died in February 1907, having by his Will, made a few days before his death, dedicated the whole of his properties to a goddess to be installed at Benares. The form of the bequest which formed the subject of judicial decision has been held to be valid. The defendants Nos. 5 and 6 on the 29th September 1908, alleging that they had a 2/5th share of the properties left by Suresh Chunder, mortgaged it to the predecessor of the present plaintiff. That mortgage was transferred subsequently on the 27th September 1909 to the plaintiff who obtained a mortgage decree against the defendants Nos. 5 and 6. Then the plaintiff brought the present suit and the Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff under his mortgage decree was entitled only to the benefit of certain annuities that had been given to the mortgagors and that the rest of the property had been validly dedicated to the deity which was to be installed at Benares; and taking into consideration all the facts, the learned Judge made a partial award of costs to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Against that award, the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 appealed to the learned Additional District Judge and the learned Additional District Judge decreed the appeal. The learned District Judge has altogether overlooked the provisions of section 35 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 35, Civil Procedure Code, provides that the costs of and incident to all suits shall be in the discretion of the Court; and where the primary Court has exercised its discretion in dealing with the costs, it is an unusual course, to say the least of it, for the Appellate Court to interfere with that discretion of the primary Court. This, I think, is well laid down by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, Chief Justice of Bombay, and Mr. Justice Candy in the case of Parshram Bhawoo v. Dorabji Pestonji (1), where, having stated the general rule, the learned Chief Justice states that, where costs are in the discretion of the Judge, the Court of Appeal will assume that the Judge exercised his discretion unless it is satisfied that he has not exercised it and, secondly, that the Appellate Court will not interfere with an exercise of the discretion of the lower Court unless it has proceeded on a manifestly wrong ground. Those two propositions are amply established by the cases in England and, so far as I know, it is the general rule that has been consistently followed in this country. There are grounds of public convenience which render such a rule as one which ought to be adhered to. In many cases, it is an extremely difficult thing for a Judge to review all the circumstances to say how and in what manner the costs ought to be borne by and between the parties and, if the discretion of the Court in such a matter is interfered with by the Appellate Court, the number of appeals that would be preferred to the Appellate Court would be stupendous. It was never intended that a matter of that nature should form the subject of an appeal. Some question of principle must be involved on which the Judge failed to exercise his discretion. I think in this case that the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court was not justified in interfering with the discretion of the primary Court in the award of costs.

The other question that has been urged as to the suit being barred by limitation is an interesting point. It is not necessary for us to decide that matter in the present appeal. A matter of such importance ought not to be decided unless it is necessary for the decision of the case. I always have a strong objection to decide a point that is not necessary for the purpose of the decision of the case before the Court. It tends to tie the hands of the Court on subsequent occasions when the matter becomes perhaps of more importance and perhaps the only question to be considered. I think the learned Judge was altogether wrong in allowing the appeal from the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge with reference to this question of costs only, which had been fully dealt with by the learned Subordinate Judge in the exercise of his discretion. In my opinion, therefore, the present appeal should be allowed, the decree of the learned District Judge should be set aside and the decree of the Subordinate Judge restored. The respondent must pay to the appellant his costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court.

SMITHER, J.— I agree.

Appeal allowed.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA — DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Khoti lands Survey and revised settlements—Kabuliyats passed by khots—Khots, right of, to trees on varkas land Bombay Survey and Settlement Act (I Bom of 1865), ss. 37, 38—Bombay Land Revenue Code (Act V of 1879), s. 40.

Certain villages to which Dunlop's Proclamation of 1824 applied were originally surveyed about 1855 and the survey settlement was introduced into them in 1865-66. In the settlement register the land in dispute was described as Varkas and particular Survey and Falni Numbers were given to it. A revision survey settlement was introduced in 1902. After 1870 the Khots passed annual kabuliyats to the Government. The Khots had to pay a certain fixed amount in respect of the Varkas lands of these villages every year to the Government and they used to recover the customary dues from those who used or were in occupation of the Varkas lands prior to the settlement of 1865-66. After the settlement the dues payable to the Khots by the occupants in respect of the Varkas land were the fixed assessment and the Fayda. Under one of the clauses of these kabuliyats the Khots were entitled to one-third of the value of teak trees standing on the Varkas lands. The Government sold certain teak trees to the Khatedars and the Khots sued to establish their right to the entire value of the trees under Dunlop's Proclamation or alternatively to one-third of the value under their kabuliyats:

Held, (per Heaton, J.), that as between the Khots and the Government the matter in dispute was concluded by the kabuliyats and that the Khots could not, therefore, obtain more than one-third of the proceeds of the sale of the trees. [p. 875, col. 1.]

Per Shah, J.—(1) That Dunlop's Proclamation may apply even to Varkas lands, provided the person who claims the benefit of the Proclamation can prove that the land, on which the trees stand, is his in a popular sense, i. e., it is sufficiently marked out as being in his permanent occupation in his own right so as to make it properly describable as his land; [p. 877, col. 1.]

(2) that the Khots in this case were not in permanent occupation of the lands in question nor did they have such interest in the lands as would enable them to obtain the benefit of Dunlop's Proclamation; [p. 878, col. 2.]

(3) that if the Proclamation applied to the lands in question, the Khot's rights to the trees were not affected by the kabuliyats, inasmuch as the kabuliyats regulated only such rights to trees as a Khot enjoyed only as a Khot and which would come to an end if he ceased to be a Khot; [p. 878, col. 1.]

(4) that the Khots had no claim to the teak trees under section 40 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code [p. 879, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Thana, in Suit No. 9 of 1912.

Mr. P. V. Nisure, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—This suit relates to the right to some teak trees which grew on certain Khata lands in the Khoti villages of Girne and Nanavali in the Mangaon Taluka of the Kolaba District. These trees were sold by the Government to the Khatedars and were cut and removed by the latter. The Khots claimed the proceeds on the ground that they were the owners of the trees. They also claimed alternatively one-third of the proceeds on the strength of a clause in the Kabuliyats which they signed year by year. They made the Secretary of State for India in Council the sole defendant, having previously unsuccessfully brought suits against some of the Khatedars.

The two villages of Girne and Nanavali are Khoti villages. In 1865-66 a survey settlement was introduced into these villages and under the provisions of sections 37 and 38 of Bombay Act I of 1865 the position of the tenants was secured. A Kabuliyat for the period of the settlement was not given to the Khots who as before signed annual Kabuliyats. Later, in 1902, when a revised settlement was made, the position of the tenants continued to be secured and Kabuliyats continued to be signed annually by the Khots. These Kabuliyats are, except as to details, substantially the same as that set out in the report of the case of the Secretary of State v. Sadashiv Abaji Bhat (1) and contained a clause similar to clause 10 there set out. It is under this clause that the Khots claim in the alternative one-third of the proceeds. The Government Pleader who appeared for the respondent-defendant admitted that this alternative claim was in itself irrefutable, though he argued that it must in this case be dismissed on the technical ground that due notice of the claim was not given as required by section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Prior to the Settlement of 1865-66 annual Kabuliyats were signed which were materially different from those subsequently approved and which did not contain any clause relating to trees. When the first of the Kabuliyats was signed we do not know, but they were an annual incident for a good many years prior to the settlement. I have spoken of the lands on which the trees stood as Khata lands, because at the settlement they appear as Falni Numbers incorporated in Survey Numbers, each Falni Number bearing a consecutive number, being of a stated area and bearing a definite assessment: and each Falni Number was entered in the name of a particular person. Prior to the settlement, except possibly for a short period between the survey and the settlement, the lands in question formed part of what is still described as Varkas land. This Varkas land was then unsurveyed and not assessed at any definite rate. The Khots paid a lump assessment for the whole Varkas land year by year, for there was, and for long had been, a certain amount of cultivation of the land; and in respect of it the cultivators paid to the Khots the customary share of the produce.

The facts I have so far stated are either admitted or so clearly appear from the record as to be really outside the field of controversy.

Another important circumstance equally incontrovertible is that the villages of Girne and Nanavali were included in the area to which Dunlop's Proclamation of 1824 applied.

The case made for the plaintiffs in the trial Court is thus stated in the District Judge's judgment:—"The plaintiffs claim title to the timber or to the portion of the sale-proceeds of the timber on four different grounds. First, they say that as Vatandar Khots of the village they are entitled to all the timber trees in occupied or waste land not being Government forest. Secondly, they are entitled to them by virtue of Mr. Dunlop's Proclamation. Thirdly, they aver that the trees having been once felled in 1862 they are entitled to the aftergrowth under certain Resolutions of Government by which the right to aftergrowth has been conceded to the occupants, and fourthly, that under the Kabuliyats they passed to Government they are entitled to one-third of the sale-proceeds of the timber for doing duty in connection with the watching of the jungle." The District Judge held that the first contention failed as the Khots are not proprietors of the soil. That is indubitably true in this case, as the Khots do not occupy a position better than that of the Khot in the case of Tajubai v. Sub-Collector of Kulaba (2).

He held on the evidence that the third contention was not made out. I think that the evidence is almost conclusive that there was not a previous cutting in the lands in suit in or about 1852 or at any other not very remote date. This part of the case was realized by the appellant's Pleader to be very weak and was not, for it could not be, strenuously pressed.

(1) 14 Ind. Cas. 434; 14 Bom. L. R. 77; 36 B. 290.

(2) 3 B. H. C. R. A. C. J. 132.

The main contest both in the Court below and here turned on the application and effect of Dunlop's Proclamation. In the trial Court the decision was against the Khots.

The alternative claim also was rejected not, as I gather, on the merits but on the technical ground that due notice of the claim was not given.

So the suit was dismissed, with costs and one of the Khots has appealed.

As I have already indicated, the only matters which demand our further serious consideration are: (1) the application and effect of Dunlop's Proclamation; (2) the effect of the Kabuliyats both as to the main claim and as to the alternative claim; and (3) the question of notice.

I will deal with the second contention first and will assume that the appellant has a reasonable chance of establishing that in virtue of Dunlop's Proclamation the right to the trees was his. Nevertheless the right was not an established but an uncertain right and in any event was a right which the Khots could bargain away. It seems to me that they did for the time being bargain it away or surrender it when they signed the Kabuliyat; for the legal relations between the Khot and the Government for the time being are those established by the Kabuliyat. It is, however, said on behalf of the appellant (the Khot), as was said in the case of Collector of Ratnagiri v. Antaji Lakshman (3), that "the Kabuliyats... can only be regarded as formal agreements by which the Khot engages to make good the fixed sum at which the revenue is assessed."

There may be cases in which the Kabuliyats are mere formal documents, but there are others in which they are not: witness the case of Nagardas Sanbhagyadas v. Conservator of Forests, Bombay (4), which went up to the Privy Council, and also the case of Secretary of State v. Sadashiv Abaji Bhat (1). The latter seems to me to be a case of the greatest importance, though it is not reported in the Indian Law Reports* and was not referred to in argument until we ourselves called attention to it.
